 Whose glorious course through this Horizon runn
 All one great Eye, all drown'd in one great Teare.
 Whose rare industrious Soule led his free thought
 Through Learning's Universe, and (vainly) sought Room for her spacious Self; untill at length
 She found y^e way home: with an holy strength

Snatcht herself hence to Heav'n; fill'd a bright place
 Midst those immortal Fires, and on the face
 Of her Great MAKER, fixt a flaming eye,
 Where still she reads true, pure Divinitie.
 And now y^e graue Aspect hath deign'd to shrink

 Look on the following leaues & see him breath.

TO HIS MOST SACRED MAJESTIE CHARLES,

By the grace of God, King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, DEFENDER
OF THE FAITH, &c.

Most Gracious and Dread SOVEREIGNE:

Here present to Your most SACRED MAJESTY, a book of Sermons. We need not tell whose they are, the Sermons are able to speak their Author. When the Author dyed, Your Majesty thought it not fit his sermons should die with him. And though they could not live with all that elegancy which they had upon his tongue;
yet you were graciously pleased to think a paper- life better than none. Upon this Your Majesty gave us a strict charge, that we should over-look the Papers (as well Sermons as other Traſſates) of that Reverend and Worthy Prelate, and print all that we found perfect. There came to our hands a world of Sermon-notes, but these came perfect, Had they not come perfect, we should not have ventured to adde any limbe unto them, lest mixing a Pen farre inferiour, we should have disfigured such compleat bodies.

Your Majesty's first care was for the Presse, that the work might be publike. Your second was for the work it self, that it might come forth worthy the Author; which could not be, if it came not forth as he left it. In pursuance of these two, we have brought the work to light, and we have done it with care and fidelity; for as the Sermons were preached, so are they published. When he preached them, they had the general approbation of the Court, and they made him famous for making them.
Now they are printed, we hope they will have a general liking of the Church, and in-large and indear his name, to them that knew not him.

The EPISTLE

WE know there is a great prejudice attends the after-printing of dead mens works. For the living may make the dead speak as they will, and as the dead would not speak, did they live. And many worthy Authors in all professions, have had such unsuitable peeces stitched to their former workes, as make them speak contrary to themselves, and to their known judgments while they lived. As if they had seen some vision after death, to cross or recall their judgment in their life. WE would be loth to suffer under the suspicion of this. And therefore in a full obedience to Your Majesties Command, as we have printed all that we could find perfect and worthy his Name: so have we not added or detracted in the least, to alter or divert his sense. That so the work may not onely be his, but as himself made it: And the honour Your Majesties, that so carefully commanded it: And the faithfulnesse ours in our obedience to Your Majesty, and our love to his memory.

And now will Your Majesty graciously be pleased to give us leave, to commend this work to Your Protection, which would have needed none, had not Your Majesty commanded it to be publike. For, publike view is as great a search as many eyes can make. And many eyes can see what two cannot, be they never so good. And among many eyes, some will ever look askint upon worth, and maligne that which they cannot equal. And if ever any mans patience and temper could prevent this evil Eye, we hope his may: And yet, even whilst we hope the best, we humbly begge Your Majesties protection against the worst, because the dayes are evil.

WE have but two things to present to Your Majesty. They are the Person to Your memory, and this his work to Your eye. For the Person, we can add nothing to him. To name him, is enough to all that knew him, and to read him, will be enough to them that knew him not. And though Vertue have but its due, when tis commended, yet we conceive not how praise may make Vertue better than it is, especially when the person in whom it was, is dead to all encouragement or comfort by it. And yet though Vertue cannot thus be bettered, it may be righted thus. For, Vivorum ut magna admiratio, ita censura difficilis. Tis easie to admire the living, and we do it, but it's hard to censure them any way. Both because there will be no preferring one before another without offence: And because, as we know not what may come upon them before death, so the celestiall may be so good, as they will ne're deserve, or so bad, as though they do deserve, they will not bear. 'Twas Bibulus his case. The admiration of men, had carried him up to Heaven; no lower place would serve him. Yet when it came to a Wise mans censure, he professed, He knew no ground for that admiration, and less worth in him for such a height. But when men have payed all their rights of nature to death, and are gone into their silence; then where admiration ceaseth, censure begins. Now, if the censure be heavy (as it is too oft upon the best) yet then it should be sparing for Humanities sake. For that humanity, which forbids the rising of a grave; bids forbear him that is shut up in it, and cannot answer. But if the censure be good, you may be bold with the grave: And you cannot praise any so safely as the dead; for you cannot humour them into danger, nor melt away your self into flattery.

Cicer. 2. ad Attic Ep. 19.
Bibulus hominum admiratione in Caelo est, nec quare scio.

The Person therefore, whose workes these are, was from his youth, a man of extraordinary worth and note. A man, as if he had been made up of Learning and Vertue. Both of them so eminent in him, as tis hard to judge, which had precedency and greater interest. His Vertue (which we must still judge the more worthy in any man) was comparable to that which was wont to be found in the Primitive Bishops of the Church. And had he lived among those ancient Fathers, his Vertue would have shined, even among those vertuous men. And for his Learning, that was as well, if not better known abroad, than respected at home. And take him in his Latitude, we which knew him well, knew not any kind of Learning to which he was a stranger; but in his profession admirable. None stranger than he, where he wrestled with an Adversary. And that Bellarmino felt, who was as well able to shift for himself, as any that stood for the Roman party. None more exact, more judicious than he, where he was to instruct and informe others. And that, as they knew, which often heard him preach, so they may learn, which will read this which he hath left behind him.

DEDICATORY.

him. And yet this fulnesse of his Material Learning, left room enough in the temper of his brain, for almost all Languages, learned and moderne, to seat themselves. So that his Learning had all the helps Language could afford, and his Languages learning enough for the best of them to expresse. His Judgment in the mean time, so commanding over both, as that neither of them was suffered idly, or curiously to start from, or fall short of, their intended scope. So that we may better say of him, than 'twas sometimes said of Claudius Drusus; He was of as many, as great vertues, as mortal nature could receive, or industry make perfect. And since we are both taught, and see it by experience, that wise men also die, and perish together, as well as the ignorant and foolish, and though they leave their riches, yet cannot dispose their wisdom to others: 'tis fit we should be conversant in the writings of wise and religious men, that we may in part learn that in their works, which the dying Authors had not power to bequeath unto us.

Pater. Hist. lib. 2. Psal. 49. 10.

These works then comming from so Grave, Learned, and Religious an Author, have but two things to do, in their publishing to the World. The one is, to teach the world What a treasure they have of them. And the other, to tell this Church, what a jewel she lost, when she lost their Author. The work is a Body of Sermons. To them he had been most bred, and in them he most excelled. And he was not a greater Preacher in his age, than he was both great and frequent, in his younger and stronger time. As for the body of the work it self, were it not that we like not to disparage any mans endeavours by comparing, we would say, the Christian world hath not many such Bodies of Sermons, as we here present, under Your Majesties favor, to the view, and use of this Church. And if another Nation had them, they would as highly value them.

And here we humbly beg leave to tell Your Majestie, that these Sermons are in this, like their Author, mixed, of Religion and Wisdom. It is an excellent thing for a man to speak wisely, and eloquently, both at once: but where these perfections meet not, there saith S. Augustine, Dicit sapienter, quod non potest eloquenter. Let the Preacher (of all men) speak that wisely, which he cannot utter eloquently. And if S. Augustine in his time found that fit, out of all doubt it is necessary now, that men of our profession, set themselves to preach with more wisdom, than eloquence. With Christian and religious wisdom; which alone knows how to preserve Truth and Peace together. For as all other Churches in the world, are most happy when these meet; so is this too. But too many among the people, choose rather to have their humor fed, than their souls edified. And carry partial cares even to the house of that God, who is no acceptor of persons. To seale therefore the peace of the one, and to abate the humor of the other, nothing certainly under God, would be of greater efficacy; than Conciones sapientes, wise, and discreet Sermons, which yet may be as zealous and devout as any other. For he that is zealous according to knowledge, is not lesse zealous for his knowledge sake. And true wisdom, which is not true, if it be not Christian, carries no water about it to quench zeal, but onely to sprinkle it, that it may burn within compasse, and not fire that house which it intended but to warm.

Alt. 10. 34.

We have neither purpose nor Commission to step aside here, and complain of the Times. All times have somewhat amiss in them, else Preachers should have the lesse work. And if these times have more than many others, which our Fore-fathers have seen, we must needs be sorry there is so much work for Preachers: and more, if they which live by the Gospel of Peace, should make any. For after the building up of the Faith of Christ, their chief work should be, to beat down those strong Holds, which any sins have built up in the hearts of men, to pollute or defame Christianity. And true Preachers indeed are, as S. Ierome speakes, Maxilla Ecclesia, the jaw-bones of the Church, which by preaching, beat down the carnal life of man. Now all hatred, contention, variance, all sedition and disobedience to Lawful Authority is (as 'tis reckoned by the Apostle) among the works of the flesh. And therefore since all Preachers are the lawes of the Church, and the sinnes of the people are, as it were, to be ground inter Maxillas, between these Lawes, before the People themselves can be made fit to nourish the Church, or the Church them: How can this be done, (especially done as it ought) if the Lawes be weak or fallen, and cannot do their office.

The EPISTLE, &c.

15. ad Ar.

But our hope is that God will so blesse your Majesty in your government, Your people in their loyalty, the Preachers in their wisdom added to zeal and diligence, that the hearts and hands of all sorts of men, shall be joyn'd together to preserve Gods worship in truth, Your Majesties throne in honour, the Church in religious devotion, and all Your People in obedience and union; the onely means to make both your Majesty, and your People happy in this life, and blessed in that which is to come. And we humbly desire men of all sorts to think seriously of this; that if the Publike suffer either in Church or State, no mans private pleasure, or profit can stand firme unto him. No mans. And Cicero had reason enough to laugh at the folly of those men, Qui amissa Repub. Piscinas suas fore salvas sperare videntur, which in his time seemed to conceive such a windy hope, that their fish-ponds and places of pleasure, should be safe, when the Common-wealth was lost.

These Sermons, when they were preached, gave great contentment to the religious, and judicious ears of Your Royal Father, of ever blessed memory, the most able Prince that ever this Kingdome had; to judge of Church-work. And therefore we hope that the printing of them shall be as acceptable to Your Majesty, as the preaching of them was both to yourself and him. We conceive, if your liking had not continued to them, Your Majesty would not have commanded us the printing of them. And we assure our selves, since the Lines are the same, the Presse which hath made them legible, hath made no blot upon your gracious favours. We have been only Servants, as we are many wayes bound to be, to Your Majesties command, in making them ready for the Presse, but Authors of nothing in them. And we heartily pray that the publishing of them, may be Honour to Your Majesty, Good to the Church; and meanes of Comfort and Salvation, to them which read them. And in these, and all other prayers for your Majesties long life, and happy Government, we humbly beseech You to conceive of us, as we are, and shall ever be

and humbly devoted

CHRISTMAS Day.

H E B. Chap. II. Ver. XVI.

For, He in no wise took the ANGELS: But, the Seed of ABRAHAM He took.

AND, even because, this day, He took not the Angels Nature upon Him, but took our Nature, in the seed of Abraham: therefore hold we this Day, as a high Feast: therefore meet we thus, every year, in a holy Assembly; even, for a solemn memorial, that He hath, as this Day, bestowed upon us a dignity, which, upon the Angels, He bestowed not. That He (as in the Chapter before, the Apostle setteth Him forth) that is the brightness of His Fathers glory, the very Character of His substance, the Heir of all things, by whom he made the World: He, when both needed it, (His taking upon him their Nature:) and both stood before Him, Men and Angels: the Angels He took not, but Men He took: was made Man, was not made an Angel: that is, did more for them, than

He did for the Angels of Heaven.

Elsewhere the Apostle doth deliver this very Point positively: (and that) not without some vehemency. Without all question great is the mystery of Godliness, God is manifested in the flesh. Which is in effect, the same, that is here said; but that, here it is delivered by way of comparison. For, this speech is evidently a comparison. If He had thus set it down: Our Nature He took; that had been Positive. But, setting it down thus; Ours He took, the Angels He took not, it is (certainly) comparative.

1. Now, the Masters of speech tell us, that there is power in the Positive, if it be given forth, with an earnest asseveration. But nothing to that, that is in the Comparative. It is nothing so full, to say; I will never forget you: as, thus to say it; Can a mother forget the child of her own womb? Well, if she can, yet will not I forget you. Nothing so forcible, to say thus; I will hold my word with you: as thus, Heaven and Earth shall pass, but my word shall not pass. The Comparative expressing is (without all question) more significant: And this here is such. Theirs, the Angels, nusquam, at no hand He took: but, ours He did.

2. Now, the comparison is, as is the thing in nature, whereunto it is made: If the thing be ordinary, the comparison is according: But, then is it full of force, when it is, with no mean or base thing, but with the chief, and choice of all the Creatures: as, here, it is: even with the Angels themselves. For then, it is at the highest. 1. That of Elihu, in Job: That God teacheth us more than the beasts, and giveth us more understanding than the fowles of the aire; (that is) that G O D hath been more gracious to us, than to them, being made of the same mould that we are; that (yet) He hath given us a privilege, above them; this is much: 2. That of the Psalmist, He hath not dealt so with every Nation; nay, not with any other Nation, in giving us the knowledge of His heavenly truth and Laws: even, that we have a Prerogative, if we be compared with the rest of mankind: (More than the beasts, much more than all men besides, much more:) 3. But this here, Nusquam Angelos, &c. that he hath given us a preeminence above the Angels themselves; granted us that, that he hath not granted the Angels; that is a Comparison at the very highest, and further we cannot go.

3. One degree yet more: and that is this. As, in comparisons making, it skilleth much, the excellency of the thing, wherewithal it is compared; so doth it too, the manner, how the comparison is made. The pitch that is taken in it. It is one thing to make it in tanto; another, in pro. One thing, when it is in degrees; (that more, this less, this not so much as that, yet that, somewhat thought) Another, when one is, the other is not at all. So is it here: Assumpsit, non assumpsit: Us He did take; the Angels, non, not in any wise; not, in a less, or a lower degree than us: but them, not at all. So, it is with the highest, and at the highest. So much is said here; and more cannot be said.

The only exception that may be made to these comparisons, is; that, (most what,) they be odious: it breedeth a kind of disdain in the higher, to be matched with the lower; Especially, to be over-matched with Him. We need not fear it, here. The blessed spirits, (the Angels) will take no offence at it; they will not remove Jacob's ladder for all this; or descend to us, or ascend for us, ever a whit the slower, because He is become the Son of man. There is not, in them, that envious mind, that was in the elder brothers, in the Gospel, when the younger was received to grace after his riotous course.

When the Apostle tells us of the great mystery, that God was manifested in the flesh; immediately after, he tells, that He was seen of the Angels: And (lest we might think, they saw it, as we do many things here, which we would not see) St. Peter tells us, that desiderant proficere; that with desire, and delight, they saw it; and cannot be satisfied with the sight of it, it pleaseth them so well. And, even this day, the day that it was done, an Angel was the first that came to bring news of it to the shepherds; and he no sooner had delivered his message, but presently there was with Him a whole Quire of Angels, singing and joying, and making melody, for this evangelium ad homines, this Good-will of God towards men. So that without dread of any disdain or exception on the Angels parts, we may proceed in our Text.

1. OF the parties compared; Angels and Men. These two we must first compare, that we may the more clearly see the greatness of the grace and benefit, this day vouchsafed us. No long process will need, to lay before you, how far inferior our Nature is, to that of the Angels; it is a comparison without comparison. It is too apparent, if we be laid together, or weighed together, we shall be found minus habentes, far too light. They are in express termes, said, (both, in the Old, and in the New Testament) to excell us in power: And as in power, so in all the rest. This one thing may suffice, to shew the odds: That our Nature; that we, when we are at our very highest perfection, (it is even thus expressed, that) we come near, or are therein like to, or as an Angel. Perfect beauty, in St. Stephen: They saw his face, as the face of an Angel. Perfect wisdom, in David: My Lord the King is wise as an Angel of G O D. Perfect eloquence, in St. Paul: Though I speak with the tongues of Men, nay, of Angels. All our excellency, our highest and most perfect estate, is but to be, as they: therefore they above us far.

But, to come nearer: What are Angels? Surely they are spirits; Glorious spirits; Heavenly spirits; Immortal spirits. For their Nature or substance, Spirits: For their Quality, or property, Glorious: For their Place, or abode, Heavenly: For their Duration, or continuance, Immortal.

And, what is the seed of Abraham, but, as Abraham himself is? And, what is Abraham? Let him answer himself; I am dust and ashes. What is the seed of Abraham? Let one answer, in the persons of of all the rest; Dicens putredini, &c. saying to rottenness, thou art my mother, and to the worms, ye are my brethren. 1. They are spirits; now, what are we, what is the seed of Abraham? Flesh. And what is the very harvest of this seed of flesh? What, but corruption, and rottenness, and worms? There is the substance of our bodies. Job. 17. 14. Gal. 6. 8.

2. They, glorious spirits: We, vile bodies (bear with it, it is the Holy Ghost's own term, Who shall change our vile bodies.) And not only base and vile, but filthy and unclean: ex immundo conceptum semine, conceived of unclean seed: There is the metal. And, the mould is no better: the womb, wherein we were conceived, vile, base, filthy, and unclean. There is our quality. Phil. 3. 11. Job 14. 4. Psal. 51. 6.

3. They, heavenly spirits, Angels of Heaven: that is, their place of abode is in heaven above, Ours is here below, in the dust; inter pulices, & culices, tineas, araneas, & vermes; Our place is here among fleas, and flies, mauls, and spiders, and crawling worms. There is our place of dwelling.

4. They, immortal spirits; that is their durance. Our time is proclaimed in the Prophet: Flesh, All flesh is grass, and the glory of it, as the flower of the field; (From April to June.) The Sisbe cometh; nay, the wind but bloweth, and we are gone. Withering sooner than the grass, which is short: nay, fading sooner, than the flower of the grass, which is much shorter: nay, (saith Job) rubbed in pieces more easily, than any moth. Ely. 40. 6. Job 4. 19.

This we are, to them, if you lay us together. And if you weigh us upon the ballance, we are altogether lighter than vanity it self: there is our weight. And if you value us; Man is but a thing of nought: there is our worth. Hoc est omnis homo; this is Abraham; and this is Abraham's seed: And who would stand to compare these with Angels? Verily, there is no comparison; They are, incomparably, far better than the best of us. ME N, by themselves: Psal. 62. 11. Psal. 144. 14. Rom. 4. 17.

Now then: this is the rule of reason, the guide of all choice, Evermore to take the better, and leave the worse. Thus would man do; Hec est lex hominis. Here then cometh the matter of admiration: notwithstanding these things stand thus, between the Angels and Abraham's seed: (they Spirits, glorious, heavenly, immortal;) yet took He not them; yet, in no wise, took He them; But the seed of Abraham. The seed of Abraham, with their bodies, vile bodies, earthly bodies of clay, bodies of mortality, corruption, and death: These He took, these He took for all that. Angels, and not men; So, in reason, it should be: Men, and not Angels; So it is: And, that granted to us, that denied to them. Granted to us, so base; that denied them, so glorious. Denied, and strongly denied; Ou, id est; Not, not in any wise, not at any hand, to them. They, every way, in every thing else, above, and before us; in this, beneath and behind us. And we (unworthy, wretched men that we are,) above and before the Angels, the Cherubim, the Seraphim, and all the Principalities, and Thrones, in this dignity: This being beyond the rules and reach of all reason, is surely matter of astonishment: Toto, &c. (saith Saint Chrysostome,) this, it casteth me into an extasie, and maketh me to imagine, of our Nature, some greater matter, I cannot well express what. Thus it is: It is the Lord, let Him do what seemeth good in His own eyes. 1 Sam. 3. 18.

And, with this, I pass over to the second point. This little is enough, to shew what odds between the Parties here matched. It will much better appear (this) when we shall weigh the word ἐπὶ λαμβάνειν, that, wherein they are matched. Wherein, two degrees we observed: 1. Apprehendit, and

2. Apprehendit Semen.

1. Of Apprehendit, first. Many words were more obvious, and offered themselves to the Apostle (no doubt,) Suscepit, or Assumpsit, or other such like: This word was sought for (certainly,) and made choice of (saith the Greek Scholiast: And he can best tell us, It is no common word, and tell us also what it weigheth;) ἀνέβη (saith he) ἐπὶ ἡμῶν ἐπὶ τῶν ὁρίων, ὅθεν ἔδωκε, καὶ δὲ τὸν ἐπὶ τῶν, καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν ἐπὶ τῶν: This word supposeth a flight of the one party, and a pursuit of the other: A pursuit eager, and so long, till he overtake; and when he hath overtaken, ἐπὶ λαμβάνειν, apprehendens, laying fast hold, and seizing surely on him. So two things it supposeth; 'a flight of the one; and 'a hot pursuit of the other. II. Wherein they are compared. I. In apprehendit, He took. Occumen. in locum.

It may well suppose a flight. For, of the * Angels there were that fled, that kept not their original, but forsook and fell away from their first estate. And Man fell, and fled too; and bid himself in the thick trees, from the presence of GOD. And this is the first issue. Upon the Angels flight, He stirred not; sate still; never vouchsafed to follow them: Let them go whither they would; as if they had not been worth the while. Nay, He never assumed ought, by way of promise, for them: No promise in the Old, to be born and to suffer; No Gospel, in the New Testament, neither was born nor suffered, for them. * Jude v. 6. Gen. 3. 8.

But, when Man fell, He did all. Made after him presently, with Ubi es, sought to reclaim him, What have you done? Why have you done so? Protested enmity to him, that had drawn him thus away: Made his assumptio of the Woman's seed. Gen. 3. 9.

And (which is more,) when that would not serve, sent after him still, by the hand of His Prophets, to solicit his return.

And (which is yet more,) when that would not serve neither; went after him (Himself) in person: left His ninety and nine in the fold, and got Him after the lost sheep: Never left, till He found him, laid him on His shoulders, and brought him home again. Luk. 15. 7.

It was much, even but to look after us; to respect us, so far, who were not worth the cast of His eye: Much, to call us back, or vouchsafe us an Ubi es.

But more, when we came not for all that, to send after us, For, if He had but only been content to give us leave, to come to Him again; but given us leave to lay hold on Him, to touch but the hem of His garment ; (Himself sitting still, and never calling to us, nor sending after us ;) it had been favour enough : far above that we were worth. But not only to send by others, but to come Himself after us ; to say, Corpus apta mihi, Ecce venio ; Get Me a body, I will My self after him : this was exceeding much. That we fled, and He followed us flying.

Of the NATIVITY.

But yet, this is not all ; this is but to follow. He not only followed, but did it so, with such eagerness, with such earnestness, as, that is worthy a second consideration. To follow, is what ; yet that may be done faintly, and afar off : but to follow thorow thick and thin ; to follow hard, and not to give over ; never to give over, till he overtake : that is it.

2 Pet. 1. 4.

And, He gave not over His pursuit, though it were long and laborious, and He full weary ; though it cast Him into a sweat, a sweat of blood. Angelus suus non pepercit (saith St. Peter,) The Angels offending, He spared not them : Man offending, He spared him ; and to spare him (saith St. Paul) He spared not His own Son : Nor His own Son spared nor Himself ; but followed His pursuit, through danger, distress, yet, through death it self. Followed, and so followed, as nothing made Him leave following, till He overtook.

And when He had overtaken (for those two are but presupposed, the more kindly to bring in the word ἡμάρτην :) When (I say) he had overtaken them, cometh in fully and properly, ἐπὶ λαμβάνειν. Which is not every taking ; not suscipere, or assumere : But, manum injicere, arripere, apprehendere ; to seize upon it with great vehemency, to lay hold on it with both hands, as upon a thing we are glad we have got, and will be loath to let go again. We know, assumpsit, and apprehendit, both, take ; but apprehendit, with far more fervour and zeal than the other. Assumpsit, any common ordinary thing ; apprehendit, a thing of price, which we hold dear, and much esteem of.

Gen. 12. 1.

Now, to the former comparison, of what they, and what we, (but specially, what we,) add this threefold consideration : 1. That He denied it the Angels, Quia : denied it peremptorily, Ostendit ; Neither look'd, nor called, nor sent, nor went after them : Neither took hold of them, nor suffered them to take hold of Him, or any promise from Him : Denied it them, and denied it them thus. 2. But, granted it us ; and granted it, how ? That He followed us first ; and that, with paine : and seized on us, after ; and that with great desire : We flying, and not worth the following : and lying, and not worth the taking up. That He gave not leave for us to come to Him : or, stay still, and suffered us to return, and take hold : (yet, this He did.) That He did not look after us, nor call after us, nor send after us only : (yet, all this He did, too.) But, Himself rose out of His place, and came after us ; and with hand and foot, made after us : Followed us, with His feet ; and seized on us, with His hands ; and that per viam, non assumptionis, sed apprehensionis, (the manner, more than the thing it self.) All these, if we lay toge ther, and, when we have done, weigh them well, it is able to work with us. Surely, it must needs demonstrate to us, the care, the love, the affection, He had to us, we know no cause why, being but (as Abraham was) dust, and, (as Abraham's seed (Jacob) saith) less ; and not worthy of any one of these : no, nor of the meanest of his mercies. Especially, when the same thing so graciously granted us, was denied to no less persons than the Angels, far more worthy than we. Sure, He would not have done it for us, and not for them : if He had not esteemed of us, made more account of us, than of them.

In apprehendit
Semen.

Verse 14.

Eph. 5. 28, 29.

Verse 17.

And yet, behold a far greater than all these : Which is, apprehendit semen. He took not the person, but He took the seed, (that is) the Nature of man. Many there be, that can be content to take upon them the persons, and to represent them, whose natures, nothing could hire them once to take upon them. But, the seed is the Nature ; yea, (as the Philosopher saith) natura inimum, the very internal essence of nature is the seed. The Apostle sheweth, what his meaning is, of this taking the seed, when (the verse next afore, save one) he saith, that Forasmuch as the children were partakers of flesh and blood, He also would take part with them, by taking the same. To take the flesh and blood, He must needs take the seed : for, from the seed, the flesh and blood doth proceed : which is nothing else but the blessed apprehension of our Nature, by this daies Nativity. Whereby, He, and we, become not only one flesh ; (as man and wife do, by conjugal union :) but, even one blood too, (as brethren, by natural union :) Per omnia similis (saith the Apostle, in the next verse after again) sim only set aside : Alike and futable to us in all things : flesh, and blood, and nature, and all. So taking the seed of Abraham, as that He became (Himself) the seed of Abraham : So was, and so is truly termed, in the Scriptures. Which is it, that doth consummate, and knit up all this point, and is the head of all. For, in all other apprehensions, we may let go, and lay down, when we will ; but, this taking on the seed, the nature of man, can never be put off. It is an Assumption, without a deposition. One we are, He and we, and so we must be ; One, as this Day, so forever.

Gen. 15. 7.

Acts.

Luk. 22. 62, 63.

And, emergent, or issuing from this, are all those other apprehendings, or seisures of the persons of men, (by which, G O D layeth hold on them, and bringeth them back from error to truth, and from sin to grace,) that have been, from the beginning, or shall be to the end of the world. That, of Abraham himself, whom G O D laid hold of, and brought from out of Ur of the Chaldeans, and the Idols, he there worshipped. That of our Apostle St. Paul, that was apprehended in the way to Damascus. That, of St. Peter ; that in the very act of sin, was seized on with bitter remorse for it. All these : and all these, whereby men daily are laid hold of in spirit, and taken from the by-paths of sin, and error, and reduced into the right way ; and so their persons recovered to God, and seized to His use. All these apprehensions (of the branches,) come from this apprehension (of the Seed :) they all have their beginning and their being, from this daies taking, even Semen apprehendit. Our receiving His Spirit, for His taking out flesh. This seed, wherewith Abraham is made the Son of G O D, from the seed, wherewith C H R I S T is made the son of Abraham.

And,

And, the end, why He thus took upon Him the seed of Abraham, was, because He took upon Him to deliver the seed of Abraham. Deliver them He could not, except He destroyed death, and the Lord of death, the Devil. Them He could not destroy, unless He Died: Die He could not, except He were Mortal: Mortal He could not be, except He took our Nature upon Him, that is, the seed of Abraham. But taking it, He became mortal, died, destroyed death, delivered us; was (Himself) apprehended, that we might be let go. Verse 14.

One thing more then, out of this word Apprehendit. The former toucheth His love, whereby He so laid hold of us, as of a thing very precious to Him: This (now) toucheth our danger; whereby, He so caught us, as, if He had not, it had been a great venture, but we had sunk and perished. One and the same word - [Apprehendit] setteth well, to express both His affection, whereby He did it; and our great peril, whereby we needed it. We had been (before) laid hold of, and apprehended, by one, mentioned in the 14. verse, he that hath power of Death, even the Devil: We were in danger to be swallowed up by him; we needed one to lay hold on us fast, and to pluck us out of his jaws. So He did. And I would have you to mark: It is the same word that is used to St. Peter, in like danger, (Mat. 14. 13.) when, being ready to sink, invasit, CHRIST caught him by the hand, and saved him. The same here, in the Greek; that in the Hebrew is used (Gen. 19. 16.) to Lot and his daughters, in the like danger, when the Angels caught him, and by strong hand plucked him out of Sodom. One delivered from the water; the other, from the fire.

And it may truly be said, (inasmuch as all GOD'S promises, as well touching temporal, as eternal deliverances; and as well corporal, as spiritual; be in CHRIST Yea and Amen: Taa, in the giving forth; Amen, in the performing) that even our temporal delivery, from the dangers that daily compass us about; even from this last, so great, and so fearful, as the like was never imagined before; all have their ground from this Great apprehension: are fruits of this Seed, here, this blessed Seed, for whose sake, and for whose truths sake, that we (though unworthily) profess, we were by Him caught hold of, and so plucked out of it: And, but for which Seed, falsi essentus sicut Sodoma, We had been even as Sodom, and perished in the fire; and the powder there laid had even blown us up all. 1 Cor. 1. 10. Rom. 9. 29.

And may not I add to this [apprehendit, ut liberaret], the other (in the eighth Chapter following) apprehendit, ut manu duceret: to this [of taking us by the hands, to deliver us,] that, [of taking us by the hand, to guide us:] and so, out of one word, present Him to you, not only as our Deliverer, but as our Guide too? Our Deliverer, to rid us from him, that hath power of death; Our Guide, to Him, that hath power of life. To lead us, even by the way of truth, to the path of life; by the stations of well-doing, to the mansions of His Fathers house. Seeing, He hath signified, it is His pleasure not to let go our hands, but to hold us still, till He have brought us, that, where He is, we may also be. This also is incident to apprehendit; but, because it is out of the compass of the Text, I touch it only, and pass it. Heb. 8. 9. Joh. 14. 2. Joh. 14. 3.

And, can we now pass by this, but we must ask the question, that St. John Baptists Mother sometime asked, on the like occasion? Unde mihi hoc? (saith she:) Unde nobis hoc? (may we say:) Not, quod mater Domini; but, quod Dominus ipse venit ad nos: Whence cometh this unto us, that the LORD Himself thus came unto us, and took us, letting the Angels go? Angels are better than the best of us; and, reason would, ever, the better should be taken: how then were we taken; that were not the better? The reasons of this apprehendit * Luk. 1. 43.

Sure, not without good ground, (say the Fathers,) who have adventured to search out the Theologie of this point: such reasons, as might serve for inducements, to Him, that is, pronus ad miserendum, naturally inclined to pity; why, upon us, He would rather have compassion. And, divers such I find: I will touch only one or two of them.

First, Mans case was more to be pitied, than theirs, because man was tempted, by another; had a Tempter. The Angels had none. None, tempted them; None, but themselves. Et levius est aliena mente peccasse, quam propria (saith St. Augustin.) The offence is the less, if it grow from another, than if it breed in our selves: And, the less the offence, the more pardonable.

Again, of the Angels, when some fell, other some stood; and so, they (all) did not perish. But, in the first man, all men fell; and so every mothers child had died, and no flesh been saved; For, all were in Adams; and so, in, and with Adams, all had come to nought. Then cometh the Psalmists question; Nunquid in vanum, &c? What hast thou made all men for nought? That cannot be: So great wisdom cannot do so great a work, in vain. But in vain it had been, if God had not shewed mercy; And, therefore was mans case rather, of the twain, matter of commiseration. This is Leo. Psal. 87. 47.

And thus have they travelled, and these have they found, why He did apprehend us rather than them. It may be, not amiss. But, we will content our selves, for our Unde nobis hoc? Whence cometh this to us, with the answer of the Scriptures: Whence, but from the tender mercies of our God, whereby this day hath visited us? Zelus Domini (saith Esay) The zeal of the Lord of Hosts shall bring it to pass: propter nimiam charitatem (saith the Apostle) Sic Deus dilexit (saith He, He, Himself;) And we (taught by him) say, Even so Lord, for, so it was thy good pleasure thus to do. Luk. 1. 78. Esay. 9. 7. Ephes. 2. 4. Joh. 3. 16. Luk. 10. 1.

All this while are we about taking the seed: the seed in general. But now, why Abrahams seed? Since it is Angels, in the first part, why not Men, in the second, but seed? Or, if seed to express our nature; why not the seed of the Woman, but the seed of Abraham? It may be thought, because he wrote to the Hebrews, he rather used this terme of Abrahams seed, because so they were, and so loved to be stiled; and he would please them. But, I find, the ancient Fathers go further; III. The CHOICE why Abrahams Seed.

further ; and out of it, raise matter, both of comfort, and of direction : and that, for us too.

1. Of Comfort, first ; with reference to our Saviour, who taking on him Abrahams seed, must withall take on him the signature of Abrahams seed, and be, as he was, circumcised. There is a great matter dependeth even on that. For, being circumcised, he became a debtor to keep the whole Law of God : which bond we had broken, and forfeited, and incurred the curse annexed, and were ready to be apprehended, and committed for it. That so, he, keeping the Law, might recover back the chirographum contra nos, the hand-writing that was against us ; and so, set us free of the debt. This Bond did not relate, to the seed of the Woman ; it pertained (properly) to the seed of Abraham : therefore, that term fitteth us better. Without fail, two distinct benefits they are : * Factus homo, and * Factus sub lege ; and, so doth St. Paul recount them. Made man ; that is, the seed of the Woman : and, made under the Law ; that is, the seed of Abraham. To little purpose, he should have taken the one, if he had not also undertaken the other, and as the seed of Abraham, endured bonds for us, and taken our debt upon him. This first.

2. And, besides this, there is yet another ; referring it to the Nation, or People, whom he took upon him. It is sure, they were, of all other people, the most untoward ; both, of the hardest hearts, and of the stiffest necks ; and (as the Heathen man noeth them) of the worst natures. G O D himself telleth them so ; it was, for no virtue of theirs ; or for any pure naturals in them ; that he took them to him, for they were that way, the worst of the whole earth. And so then, the taking of Abrahams seed amounteth to as much, as that of St. Paul, (no less true than worthy of all men to be received ;) that he came into the world to save sinners ; and that, chief sinners, (it is certain) they were ; even the seed of Abraham, of all the seed of Adam.

But, not for comfort only, but for direction too, doth he use Abrahams name here. Even to entaile the benefit coming by it, to his seed ; that is to such as he was. For, for his sake were all Nations blessed. And Christ though he took the seed of the Woman, yet doth not benefit any but the seed of Abraham ; even those that follow the steps of his faith. For, by faith Abraham took hold of him, by whom, he was in mercy taken hold of : Et tu mitte fidem & tenuisti (saith St. Augustine.) That faith of his, to him, was accounted for righteousness. To him was, and to us shall be (saith the Apostle) if we be in like sort apprehensive of him. Either, as Abraham ; or, as the true seed of Abraham (Jacob) was, that took such hold on him, as he said plainly, Non demittam te ; nisi benedixeris mihi ; without a blessing, he would not let him go. Surely, not the Hebrews alone ; nay, not the Hebrews at all, for all their carnal propagation : They only are Abrahams seed, that lay hold of the word of promise. And, the Galatians so doing, though they were meer heathen men, (as we be,) yet he telleth them, they are Abrahams seed, and shall be blessed together with him.

But, that is not all ; there goeth more to the making us Abrahams seed, (as Christ Himself, the true seed, teacheth both them and us.) Saith he ; if ye be Abrahams sons, then must ye do the works of Abraham. Which the Apostle well calleth, the steps, or impressions of Abrahams faith ; Or, we may call them, the fruits of this seed, here. So reasoneth our Saviour : Hoc non fecit Abraham ; This did not he ; if ye do it, ye are not his seed : This did he ; do ye the like, and his seed ye are. So, here is a double apprehension : * one of St. Paul ; * the other of St. James ; Work, for both hands to apprehend. Both, * Charitas ; qua ex fide ; and * fides qua per charitatem operatur. By which we shall be able (saith St. Paul) to lay hold of eternal life ; and so, be Abrahams seed here, at the first ; and come to Abrahams bosome there, at the last. So have we a brief of Semen Abrahæ.

Now what is to be commended to us out of this Text, for us to lay hold of ? Verily first, to take us to our meditation ; the meditation, which the * Psalmist hath, and which the Apostle (in this Chapter,) voucheth out of him (at the sixth verse ;) When I consider (saith he) the Heavens, (say we, the Angels of Heaven) and see those Glorious Spirits passed by, and man taken, even to fight with him, and say, Lord, what is man, (either Adam, or Abraham) that thou shouldst be thus mindful of him, or the seed, or sons of either, that thou shouldst make this do about him ? The case is here far otherwise, far more worth our consideration. There, Thou hast made him a little lower : Here, thou hast made him a great deal higher, than the Angels. For they, this day first, and ever since, daily have, and do adore our Nature, in the personal Union with the D E I T Y. Look you (saith the Apostle) when He brought His only begotten Son into the World, this He proclaimed before Him, Let all the Angels worship Him : and so they did. And upon this very daies taking the seed, hath ensued (as the Fathers note) a great alteration. Before in the Old Testament, they suffered David to sit upon his knees before them : Since (in the New) they endure not, St. John should fall down to them, but acknowledge, the case is altered, now ; and no more superiority, but all fellow-servants. And even in this one part, two things present themselves unto us : * His humility, Qui non est confusus (as, in the eleventh verse, the Apostle speaketh) who was not confounded, thus to take out Nature. * And withall, the Honour and happiness of Abrahams seed, ut digni haberemur, that were counted worthy to be taken, so near unto him.

The next point : That, after we have well considered it, we be affected with it ; and that, no otherwise, than Abraham was. Abraham saw it, even this day, and but afar off, and He rejoiced at it : And so shall we, on it, if we be his true seed. It brought forth a Benedictus, and a Magnificat, from the true seed of Abraham ; If it do not the like, from us, certainly it but flotes in our brains ; we but warble about it : But we believe it not, and therefore, neither do we rightly understand it. Sure I am, if the Angels had such a feast to keep, if he had done the like for them, they would hold it with all joy and jubilee. They rejoyce of our good ; but, if they had one of their own, they must needs do it after another manner ; far more effectually. If we do not, as they would do, (were the case theirs,) it is because because we are short, in conceiving the excellency of the benefit. It would have (surely) due observation, if it had his due and serious meditation.

Further, we are to understand this: That is man which is given, of whom will much be required; Luk. 12. 48. and (as Gregory well saith) Cum crescent domus, crescat & rationis habitum. As the house grows, the accounts too: Therefore, that by this new dignity befall us, Necessitas quadam nobis innotuit (saith St. Augustine,) there is a certain necessity laid upon us, to become, in some measure, suitable unto it; in that we are one, one flesh; and one blood, with the Son of God. Being thus in honor, we ought to understand our estate, and not fall into the Psalmist's reproof, that we become like the beasts that perish. Psal. 49. 13. For, if we do (indeed) think, our Nature is ennobled by this so high a conjunction, we shall henceforth hold our selves more dear, and at a higher rate, than to prostitute our selves to sin, for every base, trifling, and transitory pleasure. For tell me, men that are taken to this degree, shall any of them prove a Devil (as Christ said of Judas;) or ever (as these with us, of late) have to do with any devilish or Judasish fact? Shall any man after this assumption, be as Horse, or Mule, that have no understanding; and, in a Christian profession, live a brutish life? Nay then, St. Paul tells us further, that if we henceforth walk like men, like but even carnal and natural men, it is a fault in us. Somewhat must appear, in us, more than in ordinary men, who are toucht for extraordinary favour. Somewhat more, than common, would come from us, if it were but for this Daies sake.

To conclude, not only thus to frame meditations and resolutions, but even some practice too out of this act of apprehension. It is very agreeable to reason, saith the Apostle, that we endeavor and make a proffer, if we may by any means to apprehend Him, in His, by whom we are thus, in our Nature, apprehended, or, as he termeth it, comprehended, even CHRIST JESUS; and be united to Him, this day, as he was to us, this day, by a mutual and reciprocal apprehension. We may so, and we are bound so: verè dignum & iustum est. And we do so, so oft, as we do, with St. James, lay hold of, apprehend, or receive in ipsum verbum, the word which is daily grasped in us. Jam. 1. 22. For, the Word he is, and, in the Word, he is received by us. But, that is not the proper of this day, unless there be another joyned unto it. This day, verbum caro factum est; and so must be apprehended, in both. But especially in his flesh, as this day giveth it, as this day would have us. Now, the bread which we break, is it not the partaking of the body, of the flesh, of JESUS CHRIST? It is surely; and by it, and by nothing more, are we made partakers of this blessed union. A little before, he said, because the children were partakers of flesh and blood, he also would take part with them; May not we say the same? 1 Cor. 10. 16. Because he hath so done, taken ours of us, we also ensuing his steps, will participate with him, and with his flesh which he hath taken of us. It is most kindly, so take part with him, in that, which he took part in, with us; and that to no other end, but that he might make the receiving of it by us a means, whereby he might dwell in us and we in Him, He taking our flesh, and we receiving His Spirit; by his flesh, which he took of us, receiving his Spirit, which he imparteth to us; That, as he, by ours, became conformis humane nature; so we, by his, might become conformis divine nature, partakers of the Divine nature. Verily, it is the most streight and perfect taking hold that is. No union so kniteth, as it. Not consanguinity; Brethren fall out: Not marriage; Man and wife are severed. But, that which is nourished, and the nourishment, wherewith, they never are, never can be severed; but remain one for ever. With this Act then of mutual taking, taking of his flesh, as he hath taken ours, let us seal our duty to him, this day, for taking not Angels, but the seed of Abraham, Almighty God grant, &c.

For Practice.

A SERMON

A SERMON PREACHED

Before the
Kings Majesty

At WHITE-HALL, on Wednesday the XXV. of Decem.
Anno Domini, MDCVI. being
CHRISTMAS Day.

Ex. Chap. IX. Ver. VI.

For unto us a Child is born, and unto us a Son is given; and the Government is upon His shoulder; and He shall call His Name WONDERFUL, COUNSELLER, THE MIGHTY GOD, THE EVERLASTING FA-THER, THE PRINCE OF PEACE.

THE words are out of Esay: and if we had not heard him named, might well have been thought, out of one of the Evangelists, as more like a Story than a Prophecie. Is born, is given, sound, as if they had been written at, or since the birth of Christ: yet were they written more than six hundred years before.

There is no one thing so great a stay to our Faith, as that we find the things, we beleeve, so plainly fore-told, so many years before. Is born, is given Nay, shall be; speak like a Prophet: Nay, is; loquens de futuro per modum propheti; speaking of things to come, as if they were already past. This cannot be, that GOD, who calleth things that are not, as if they were, and challengeth any other, to do the like. It is true; miracles move much: but yet even in Scripture, we read of lying miracles: and the possibility of false dealing leaveth place of doubt, even in those that be true. But, for one, six hundred years before He is born, to cause Prophecies, plain direct prophecies to be written of Him: that passeth all conceit; cannot be imagined, how possibly it may be, but by God alone. Therefore Mahomet, and all false Prophets came, (at least boasted to come) in signs. But challenge them, at this; not a word, no mention of them in the world, till they were born. True therefore, that St. John saith: The Testimony (that is, the great principal testimony) of JESUS, is the spirit of Prophecie. It made St. Peter, when he had recounted what he himself had heard, in the Mount, (yet, as if there might be, even in that, deceptio sensus) to add, Habemus etiam firmiorem sermonem prophetiae, ut habetis a verbis Of Prophecie besides; and that firmiorem: the swer of the twain.

This prophecie is of a certain Child. And if we ask, of this place, (as the Eunuch did, of another, in this Prophet) Of whom speaketh the Prophet this? We must make the answer that there Philip doth; of Christ; and the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of Prophecie. The ancient Jews make the same. It is but a fond shift, to draw it (as the latter Jews do) to Ezechias: it will not cleave. It was spoken to Ahaz, Ezechias father, now King: and that after the great overthrow he had, by the King of Syria and Israel, in the fourth of his reign. But, it is deduced, by plain supputation, out of 2 King. 18. Ezechias was nine years old, before Ahaz his Father came to the Crown. It was by that time, too late to tell it for tidings, (then) that he was born: he then, being thirteen years of age.

Beside, how senseless is it, to apply, to Ezechias, that in the next verse; that, of his government and peace there should be none end, that his throne should be established from henceforth for ever: whereas his peace and government (both) had an end within few years?

To us it is sufficient, that the fore-part of the Chapter is, by St. Matthew, expressly applied to our Saviour: and that, this verse doth inseparably depend on that, and is alledged as the reason of it; For, unto us. Of Him therefore, we take it, and to Him apply it, that cannot be taken, of any, or applied to any other, but Him.

But, how came Esay to speak of Christ to Ahaz? Thus: Ahaz was then in very great distress; he had lost in one day eighty thousand of his people; and two hundred thousand of them (more) carried away captives. And now, the two Kings were raising new power against him: The times grew very much overcast. And, this you shall observe: The chiefest prophecies of Christ came ever, in such times: That St. Peter did well, to resemble the word of prophecy to a candle, in loco caliginoso, a dark room. Jacobs of Shilo, in Egypt, a dark place: Daniel's of Messias in Babylon; a place as dark, as Egypt: This of Esay, when the ten Tribes were on the point of carrying away, under Hoshea. That of Jeremy (A Woman shall inclose a man) when Juda, in the same case, under Jechonias. Ever, in dark times, who therefore needed most the light of comfort.

But, what's this to Ahaz case? He looked for another message from him; How to escape his enemies. A cold comfort might he think it, to be preached to of Immanuel. Indeed, he so thought it; and therefore he gave over Esay, and betook him to Shebna, who wished him to seek to the King of Assur for help, and let Immanuel go. Yet for all that, even then to speak of Christ, being looked into, it is neither impertinent, nor out of season. With all the Prophets it is usual, in the calamities of this people, to have recourse still, to the fundamental promise of the Messias. For that, till He were come, they might be sure they could not be rooted out; but must be preserved, if it were but for this Child's sake, till He were born. And yet, if they could believe on Him, otherwise it is no match: Nisi credideritis. Then, thus the Prophets argue: He will not deny you this favour, for He will grant you a far greater than this, even His own Son; and by Him a far greater deliverance; and, if He can deliver you from the devouring fire of Hell, much more, from them: and if give you peace with God, much more with them. So, teaching those that will learn, the only right way to compass their own safety, is by making sure work of Immanuel, God with us. To the true regard of whom, GOD hath annexed the promises as well of this, as of the other life. All are, as lines drawn from this center; all in Him, yea and Amen. Which all serve, to raise Ahaz up, and his people, to receive this Child, and to rejoice in His day, as their Father Abraham did.

Thus, the Occasion you have heard. The parts, ad oculos evidently, are two, 'a Child's birth: and a 'Baptism: 'The Child's birth, in these: For unto you, &c. 'The Baptism, in these: His name, &c.

In the former; 1. First, of the main points, The Natures, Person, and Office; 'Natures, in these: Child and Son. 'Person, in these: His shoulders, His name. 'Office, in these: His Government. 2. Then of the deriving of an interest to us, in these [To us,] two times. And that is of two sorts: 'By being born; a right, by his birth. 'By being given: a right, by a deed of gift.

In the latter, of His Baptism, is set down His title consisting of five peeces, containing five uses, for which He was thus given: each to be considered in his order.

IT is ever our first care, to begin with, and to settle the main points of the mystery; 'Nature, 'Person, 'Office: and after, to look to our own benefit by them. To begin with the Natures, of GOD and Man: They be 'super hanc petram: upon them lyeth the weight of all the rest; they are the two shoulders whereon this Government doth rest.

We have two words, Child, and Son: neither, wast. But, if no more in the second, than in the first, the first, had been enough: if the first enough, the second superfluous. But in this Book, nothing is superfluous. So then, two diverse things they import.

Weigh the words: Child is not said, but in humanis, among men. Son may be in divinis: from heaven, God spake it, This is my Son: May; and must be, here.

Weigh the other two; 'born, and 'given. That, which is born, beginneth then (first) to have His being. That, which is given presupposeth a former being: for, be it must, that it may be given.

Again, when we say born; Of whom? Of the Virgin His Mother: when we say Given; By whom? By GOD, His Father.

Esay promised, the sign, we should have, should be from the deep here beneath, and should be from the height above: both, a Child, from beneath; and a Son, from above. To conclude: it is an exposition decreed by the Fathers assembled in the Council of Sevil: who, upon these grounds, expound this very place so: The Child, to import His Humane; The Son, His Divine Nature.

All along His life, you shall see these two. At His birth: A Cratch for the Child; a Star for the Son: A company of Shepherds viewing the Child; A Quire of Angels celebrating the Son. In His life: Hungry Himself, to shew the nature of the Child: yet feeding five thousand, to shew the power of of the Son. At His death: dying on the Cross, as the Son of Adam; at the same time disposing of Paradise, as the Son of God.

If you ask, why both these? For that, in vain had been the one, without the other, Somewhat there must be born (by this mention of Shoulders:) meet it is every one should bear his own burden. The nature, that sinned, bear his own sin; not, Ziba make the fault, and Mephibosheth bear the punishment. Our nature had sinned, that therefore ought to suffer: The reason, why a Child. But that which our nature should, our nature could not bear; not the weight of Gods wrath due to our sin: But, the Son could: the reason why a Son. The one ought, but could not: the other could, but ought not. Therefore either alone would not serve; they must be joyned, Child and Son. But that He was a Child, He could not have suffered. But that He was a Son, He had sunk in His suffering, and not gone through with it. God had no Shoulders; Man had; but, too weak, to sustain such a weight. Therefore, that He might be lyable, He was a Child; that He might be able, he was a Son: that He might be both, He was both.

2. His Person.
Gen. 3. 22.
Gen. 3. 5.
Col. 2. 3.
John 1. 4.

This, why God. But why this person, the Son? Behold, Adam would have become one of us; the fault: Behold, one of us will become Adam, is the satisfaction. Which of us would He have become? Sicut Dii, scientes; the person or knowledge. He therefore shall become Adam: A Son shall be given. Desire of knowledge, our attainder; He, in whom all the treasures of knowledge, our restoring. Flesh, would have been the Word, as wise as the Word; the cause of our ruine: meet then, the Word become flesh, that so, our ruine repaired. There is a touch given, in the name COUNSELLOR, to note out unto us, which person; as well, the SON.

3.
Chap. 7. 14.
Luk. 3. 31. 38.
Verle 7.

One more; if these joyned, why is not the Son first, and then the Child; but, the Child is first, and then the Son. The Son is far the worthier, and therefore to have the place. And thus too it was, in His other name Immanuel, (Chap. 7.) It is not Elimam; not Deus Nobiscum; but, Nobiscum Deus. We, in His name, stand before God. It is so in the Gospel: the Son of David, first; the Son of God after. It is but this still, zelus Domini Exercituum fecit hoc: but to shew His zeal, how dear He holdeth us, that He preferreth, and setteth us before Himself; and in His very name, gives us the precedence.

Eph. 2. 14.

The Person, briefly. The Child and the Son: these two make but one Person, clearly, for both these have but one name, His name shall be called: and both these have but one pair of shoulders, Upon his Shoulders. Therefore, though two natures, yet but one Person, in both. A meet person, to make a Mediator of God and Man, as symbolizing with either God and Man. A meet person, if there be division between them (as there was, and great thoughts of heart for it) to make an union: Ex utroque unum, seeing He was unum ex utroque. Not man only; there lacked a shoulder of power: Not God only; there lacked the shoulder of justice: But, both together. And so have ye the two Supporters of all, Justice, and Power. A meet person, to cease hostility, as having taken pledges of both heaven and earth; the chief nature in heaven, and the chief on earth: To set forward commerce between heaven and earth, by Jacobs ladder, one end touching earth, the other reaching to heaven: To incorporate either to other: Himself, by His birth, being become the Son of man, by our New birth giving us a capacity, to become the Sons of God.

Gen. 23. 12.

3. His Office.

His Office: The Kingdom on his shoulders. For, He saw, when the Child was born, it should so poorly be born, as (lest we should conceive of Him too meanly) He tells us, He cometh cum Principatu, with a Principality; is born a Prince: and beautifieth Him with such names, as make amends for the Manger? That he is not only Puer, a Child; and Filius, a Son, but Princeps, a Prince.

Deut. 18. 18.

Truth is, other Offices we find besides. But this you shall observe, that the Prophets speaking of CHRIST, in good congruity ever apply themselves, to the state of them they speak to; and use that Office and Name, which best agree to the matter in hand. Here that which was sought, by Ahaz, was protection: that, we know, is for a King: As a King therefore he speaketh of him. Elsewhere He is brought forth by David, as a Priest: and again else-where by Moses, as a Prophet. If it be matter of sin, for which sacrifice to be offered, He is a Priest for ever after the order of MELCHIZEDEK. If the Will of GOD, if His great counsel to be revealed, A Prophet will the Lord raise, &c. Hear Him. But here is matter of delivery (only in hand: here therefore, he represented Him, cum Principatu, with a Principality.

Luke 2. 7.

A Principality not of this world. Herod need not fear it, nor envy it. If it had, His Officers, as they would have seen Him better defended at His Death, so would they have seen Him better lodged at His Birth, than in a stable with beasts: for, if the Inns were full, the stable (we may be sure) was not empty. Of what world then? Of that, He is Father; Futuri seculi. Of that He is Father; and He is a Prince of the government, that guideth us thither.

Yet, a Prince He is, and so He is styled; born, and given, to establish a government: That none imagine, they shall live like Libertines under Him: every man believe, and live, as he list. It is CHRIST, not Belial, that is born to day: He bringeth a government with Him: they, that be His, must live in subjection under a government: else neither in Child, nor Son; in Birth, nor Gift, have they any interest.

And this Government is by name a Principality: Wherein, neither the popular confusion of many; nor the factious ambition, of a few, bear all the sway; but, where one is Sovereign. Such is the government of heaven: such is CHRIST'S government.

With a Principality, or Government; and that upon His Shoulders: Somewhat a strange situation. It is wisdom that governs: that is, in the head; and there is a Crown worn: What have the Shoulders to to do with it? Certainly, somewhat by this Description. The Shoulder (as we know) is the bearing member: and unless it be for heavy things we use it not. Ordinary things we carry in our hands, or lift at the arms end: It must be very heavy, if we must put shoulders and all to it. Beside; Governments have their weight; be heavy; And so they Be: they need not only a good head, but good shoulders that sustain them. But that not so much, while they be in good tune and temper; then they need no great carriage: but when they grow unweildy, (be it weakness or waywardness of the governed;) in that case they need: And in that case, there is no Governour, but, at one time or other, he bears his government upon his shoulders. It is a moral, they give, of Aarons Apparel: He carved the twelve Tribes in his Breast-plate, next his heart; to shew, that in care he was to bear them: But he had them also engraven in two Onyx Stones, and those set upon his very shoulders; to shew, he must other-while bear them in patience too. And it is not Aarons case alone; it was so with Moses too. He bare His government as a Nurse doth her child, as He saith, Numb. X. I. that is, full tenderly. But, when they fell a murmuring (as they did often) he bare them upon his shoulders, in great patience, and long suffering. Yea, he complained, Non possum portare; I am not able to bear all this people, &c.

It were, sure, to be wished, that they, that are in place, might never be put to it. Bear their people only in their arms, by love; and in their breasts by care. Yet if need be, they must follow CHRISTS example and patience, here, and even that way, bear them, not only bear with them; but even bear them also.

Yet is not this CHRISTS bearing, though this he did too: There is yet a further thing, He hath a patience paramount, beyond all the rest. Two differences I find between him and others. 1. The faults and errours of their government, others do bear and suffer, indeed, suffer them; but, suffer not for them. He did both: endured them, and endured, for them, heavy things: A strange superhumeral, the print whereof was to be seen on his shoulders. The Chaldee Paraphrast translateth it thus, The Law was upon his shoulders. (And so it was too:) A burthen, saith St. Peter, neither He, nor the Apostles, nor their Fathers were able to bear. This he did, and bear it so evenly, as he brake, nay bruised not a Commandment. But, there is another sense, when the Law is taken for the punishment due by the Law. It is that which our Prophet meaneth (in the 53. Chap.) when he saith, Posuit super humeros, He hath laid upon His shoulders, the iniquity of us all. And, not against his will: Come (saith he) you that are heavy laden, and I will refresh you, by loading myself; take it from your necks, and lay it on mine own. Which his suffering, though it grew so heavy, as it wrung from him plenty of tears, a strong cry, a sweat of blood, (such was the weight of it;) yet would he not cast it off, but, there held it still, till it made him bow down his head, and gave up the Ghost. If he had discharged it, it must have light upon us; (it was the yoke of our burden, as in the fourth verse he termeth it:) If it had light upon us, it had pressed us down to Hell; so insupportable was it. Rather than so, he did it still, and bare it; and did that which never Prince did, died for his Government. It was not for nothing, we see, that, of the Child born, no part but the shoulders is mentioned: for, that, we see, in this Child, is a part of special employment.

John 19. 30.

The other point of difference between him and other Governours. When we say, [On His shoulders] this we say; on no other shoulders, but His. For, others, (by Moses example, upon Jethroes advice, and Gods own allowance,) may, and do lay off, and translate their burthen, (if it be too heavy) upon others, and so ease it, in part: Not so, he: it could not be so in his. He, and He alone: He, and none but he: Upon His own shoulders, and none but his own, bare he all. He trod the wine-press, and bare the burthen Solus alone; Et vir de Gentibus, and, of all the Nations there was not a man with him. Upon His only shoulders did the burthen only rest.

Exod. 18. 33.

Esay 63. 3.

Now from these two doth the Prophet argue to a third: to the point (here) to principal intendment. That if, for his government sake, he will bear so great things; bear their weaknesses, as the lost Sheep; bear their sins, as the Scape-goat: He will, over the government itself, as in Deut. 32. he maketh the Simile, stretch forth his wings as the Eagle over her young ones, and take them, and bear them between his Pinions; bear them, and bear them through. They need take no thought: No man shall take them out of his hands; no man reach them off his shoulders. He had begun so to carry them; and thorow he would still carry them: at least, while, till this Child Immanuel were born. Till then, he would: and not wax weary, nor cast them off. And (like the Scape-goat) bear their sins; and (like the Eagle) bear up their estate, till the fulness of time came, and he, in it, with the fulness of all grace and blessing. And this point I hold so material; as Puer natus, nothing, and Filius datus, as much, without Principis operatus: For, that is all in all, and, of the three the chief.

And now, what is all this to us? Yes; to us, it is; and that, twice over, for filling. We come now to look another while into our interest to it, and our benefit by it. Nobis is acquisitivus positus: We get by it; we are gainers by all this.

II.

The second

main point.

The benefit,

To us.

Heb. 2. 16.

To us; not to himself. For a far more noble Nativity had he, before all worlds, and needed no more birth. Not to be born at all; specially, not thus basely to be born. Not to him therefore; but to us, and our behoof.

To us, as in bar of himself, so likewise of his Angels. Nusquam Angelos, not to the Angels was he born, or given; but, to us he was born. Not an Angel in heaven can say Nobis, Vobis they can: The Angels said it twice, Nobis natus or datus, they cannot; but we can, both.

& 2. 11.

Nobis exclusivè, and Nobis inclusivè. Esay speaks not of himself only, but taken in Ahaz. Both are in Nobis; Esay an holy Prophet, and Ahaz, a worse than whom you shall hardly read of. Esay includeth himself, as having need, though a Saint; and excludeth not Ahaz, from having part, though a finer. Not only Simcon the Just; but Paul the sinner, of the Quorum, and the first of the Quorum.

Inclusive: not only of Esay, and his Country-men the Jews; It is of a larger extent. The Angel so interpreteth it, this day, to the Shepherds: Gaudium quod erit omni populo, Joy that shall be to all people, Not the people of the Jews; or the people of the Gemites; but simply to all people. His name is JESUS CHRIST, half Hebrew, half Greek: Jesus, Hebrew; Christ, Greek; So sorted, of purpose, to shew, Jews and Greeks have equal interest in Him. And now, so is His Fathers name too, Abba Father; To shew the benefit equally intended by Him; o them, that call Him Abba, that is, the Jews; to us, that call Him Father, that is, the Gemites.

But yet, it is inclusive of none, but those that include themselves; that believe, and therefore say, Nobis, to us He is born, to us He is given. Which excludes all those, that include not themselves. S. Ambrose saith well: Facit multorum infidelitas, ut non omnibus nasceretur, qui omnibus natus est: Want of faith makes, that He, that is born to all, is not born to all though. The Turks and Jews can say, Puer natus est: The Devil can say, Filius natus est, too: But neither say, Nobis; but, Quid nobis & tibi? They have not to do with Him; and for lack of it, of this, neither Child, nor Son, birth nor gift doth avail them: We must make much of this word, and hold it fast; for, thereby our tenure and interest groweth. Which interest groweth by a double right, (and therefore is Nobis twice repeated:) 'The one, of His birth, natus; the other, by a deed of gift, Datus. Of which, the one (His Birth) referreth to Himself: the other (the gift) to His Father: To shew the joynt consent and concurrence, in both, For our good. So Christ loved us, that He was given: So God loved us, that He gave His Son.

By His very birth there groweth to us an interest in Him, thereby partaker of our nature, our flesh, and our blood. That which is de nobis, He took of us, is ours: flesh and blood is our own; and, to that is our own, we have good right.

His Humanity is clearly ours; good right to that. But, no right to His Deity. Therefore His Father (who had best right to dispose of Him,) hath passed over that by a deed of gift. So that, what by participation of our nature, what by good conveyance, both are ours. Whether a Child, He is ours: or whether a Son, He is ours. We gave Him the one; His Father gave us the other. So, both ours: and He ours, so far as both these can make Him. Thus, God, willing more abundantly to shew to the heirs of promise the stability of His Counsel, took both courses; that, by two strong titles, which it is impossible should be defeated, we might have strong consolation, and ride (as it were) at a double Anchor.

I want time, to tell of the benefit which the Prophet, Verse 3. calleth the harvest, or booty of His Nativity. This it is in a word: If the tree be ours, the fruit is: If he be ours, his Birth is ours; his Life is ours; his Death is ours; his Satisfaction, his merit, all he did, all he suffered is ours. Further, all that the Father hath in his, he is heir of all; then, all that is ours too. St. Paul hath cast up our account: Having given him, there is nothing; but he will give us with him: So that, by this Deed, we have title to all, that His Father, or he is worth.

And now, shall we bring forth nothing for Him that was thus born? No Quid retribuam, no giving back, for him that gave him us? Yes, thanks to the Father, for his great bounty in giving. Sure, so good a giving, so perfect a gift there never came down from the Father of Lights. And to the Son, for being willing to be born, and so to be burthened as he was. For Him to condescend to be born, as Children are born; To become a Child; great humility: great, ut verbum, infans; ut sonans, vagiens; ut immensus, parvulus: that the Word, not be able to speak a word; He, that thundred in heaven, cry in a Cradle; He, that so great and so high, should become so little as a Child, and so low as a Manger. Not to abhor the Virgins womb, not to abhor the Beasts Manger, not to disdain to be fed with butter and honey; All, great humility. All great, and very great: But, that is greater, is behind. Puer Natus, much; Princeps operatus, much more: That which He bare for us: For, greater is Mors crucis, than Nativitas praesepis: Worse to drink vinegar and gall, than to eat butter and honey; worse, to endure an infamous death, than to be content with an inglorious birth.

Let us therefore sing to the Father (with Zachary) Benedictus: and to the Son (with the blessed Virgin) Magnificat: and (with all the Angels) Gloria in excelsis, To the Prince with His government on his shoulders.

Nothing but thanks? Yes; by way of duty to, to render, unto the Child, confidence; Puer est ne metuas: To the Son, reverence; Filius est, ne spernas: To the Prince, obedience Princeps est, ne offendas. And again; to Natus; is He born? then cherish Him. (I speak of His Spiritual birth, wherein we by hearing and doing His word, are (as Himself saith) His Mothers. To Datus; is He given? then keep Him. To Oneratus, is He burthened? favour Him; lay no more on, than needs you must.

This is good moral counsel. But, S. Bernard gives us poliitick advice; to look to our interest, to think of making our best benefit by Him, De nobis nato & dato faciamus id, ad quod, natus est & datus; ut sumus nostro, in utilitatem nostram; de servatore nostra, salutem operemur: With this born and given Child, let us then do that for which He was born and given us: Seeing He is ours, let us use that, that is ours, to our best behoof; and even work out our salvation, out of this our Saviour. His counsel is to make our use of Him: but, that is not to do with Him what we list; but, to imploy Him to those ends, for which He was bestowed. Those are four:

He is given, (saith St. Peter) ut exsequatur for an example, to follow. In all; but (that which is proper to this day,) to do it, in humility. It is that, which the Angel set up, for a sign and sample, upon this very day. It is the vertue appropriate to His birth. As saith, to His conception, (Beata qua credidit): So humility to his birth, (& hoc erit signum): Fieri voluit in vita primum, quod exhibuit in ortu vite, it is Cyprian; That, he would have us to express in our life, that he first shewed us, in the very ontry entry of our life. And to commend to us this vertue the more, Placuit Deo majora pro nobis operari, It hath pleased Him to do greater things for us, in this estate, then ever He did, in the high degree of His Majesty: as, (we know) the work of Redemption passeth that of Creation, by much.

He is given us in pretium for a price. A price, either of ransom to bring us out of de loco caliginoso: or a price, of purchase, of (that, where, without it, we have no interest,) the kingdom of heaven. For, both he is given; offer we Him for both. We speak of Quid retribuam; We can never retribute the like thing. He was given us to that end, we might give him back. We wanted, we had nothing valuable that we might have, this He gave us, as a thing of greatest price, to offer for that, which needed a great price, our sins, so many in number, and so foul in quality. We had nothing worthy GOD; this he gave us, that is worthy him, which cannot be but accepted, offer we it never so often. Let us then offer Him; and, in the act of offering, ask of him what is meet: for we shall find him no less bounteous, than Herod, to grant what is duely asked upon his birth-day.

He is given us (as himself saith) as the living bread from Heaven: which bread is his flesh, born this day, and after given for the life of the world. For look how we do give back that he gave us, even so doth he give back to us that which we gave him, that which he had of us. This he gave for us, in Sacrifice; and this he giveth us, in the Sacrament; that the Sacrifice may, by the Sacrament, be truly applied to us. And let me commend this to you; he never bade, Accipite, (plainly, take,) but in this only: and that, because the effect of this Daies union is no waies more lively represented, no way more effectually wrought, than by this use,

And lastly, He is given us in præmium: (Not now to be seen, only in hope;) but hereafter, by his blessed fruition, to be our final reward; when, where he is, we shall be; and what he is, we shall be; In the same place, and in the same state of glory, joy, and blifs, to endure for evermore.

At his first coming, you see, what he had on his shoulders. At his second, he shall not come empty, Ecce venio, &c. Lo I come, and my reward with me; that is, a kingdom on His shoulders. And it is no light matter; but as St. Paul calleth it, et æterno & æternæ gloriæ an everlasting weight of glory, Glory, not (like hers here) feather-glory; But, true; that hath weight and substance in it: And that not transitory, and soon gone; but everlasting, to continue to all eternity, never to have end. This is our state in expectancy. St. Augustine put all four together, so will I, and conclude: Sequamur exemplum; offeramus pretium; sumamus viaticum; expectemus premium: let us follow him for our pattern, offer him for our price, receive him for our sacramental food, and wait for him as our endless and exceeding great reward, &c.

Before the

Kings Majesty

At W H I T E - H A L L, on Thursday the xxv. of Decem.
Anno Domini, MDCVII. being
C H R I S T M A S Day.

I T I M. Chap. III. Ver. XVI.

And without controversie great is the Mystery of Godliness, which is, G O D is manifested in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of Angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, and received up in glory.

THE Mystery (here mentioned) is the mystery of this Feast; And this Feast, the Feast of this Mystery: for, as at this Feast, GOD was manifested in the flesh. In that it is a great Mystery, it maketh the Feast great. In that it is a Mystery of Godli-ness, it should make it likewise a Feast of Godliness. Great, we grant, and godly too, we trust: Would GOD, as godly, as great; and no more controversie of one, than of the other.

The manifestation of God in the flesh, the Evangelists set down by way of an Hi-story: the Apostle goeth further, and findeth a deep mystery in it; and for a my-stery, commends it unto us. Now there is difference between these two; Many: This, for one; that a man may hear a Story, and never wash his hands; but a mystery requireth both the hands, and heart to be clean, that shall deal with it.

The Division

I.

Speaking of it then, as a mystery, the Apostle doth here propound two things: 'First, that it is one: Without controversie, &c.' Then, what it is: God manifested, &c.' And out of these, a third will grow necessarily; (Because Mysteries will admit a fellowship,) how to order the matter, that we may have our fellowship in this mystery.

Eph. 3. 9.

In the first part, four things he affirmeth: 'That it is a Mystery: 'A Mystery of Godliness: 'That it is a great one: 'A great one, without controversie.

II.

Then doth He (as it were) rend the veil in sunder, and shew us, what it is: 'G O D, manifested:

III.

Which Mystery, how it may concern us, will be our third, and last consideration. And that two waies: 'by the Operation of it, in us: 'by the Initiation of us, into it.

I.

A Mystery it is.

A Mystery it is: presented to us in that terme, by the Apostle, to stir up our attention. Omnes ho-mines naturâ scire desiderant. All men, even by nature, love to be knowing. The Philosopher hath made it his ground, and set it in the front of his Metaphysicks. So saith Philoſophy.

Gen. 3. 6.

And even to this day (saith Divinity,) doth the Tree of knowledge still work in the sons of Eve; we still reckon the attaining of knowledge, nothing to be desired, and, be it good, or evil, we love to be know-ing, all the sort of us. Knowing, but what? Not, such things as every one knoweth, that goeth by the way; vulgar, and trivial. Tush, Those are nothing. But, Metaphysicks, that are the Aræna of Philosophy; Mysteries, Mysteries, that are the Secrets of Divinity; such as few besides are admitted to: Those be the things we desire to know. We see it in the Babylonians; they longed to be prying into the Mysteries of GOD; 1 Sam. 6. 19. They were Heathen. We see it in the People of GOD too; they pressed too near the Manner of Rites were fain to be set, to keep them back. It is, because it is held a point of a deep wit, to search out secrets; as, in Joseph. At least of special favour, to be received so far, as Vobis datum est, nosse Mystera. All desire to be in credit. The mention of Mysteries will make us stand attentive: why then, if our nature like so well of Mysteries, Ecce ostendo vobis Mystrium. Behold I shew you a Mystery (saith the Apostle). Exod. 19. 12.

A Mystery of Godliness. The World hath her Mysteries in all Arts, and Trades, (yea, Mechanical, pertaining to this life;) which are imparted to none, but such as are filii scientia, apprentices to them. A Mystery of godliness. So they delight to stile themselves by the name of such and such a Mystery. Now, Pietas est quasius, (Chap. 6. Ver. 6.) and (in the next Chap.) ad omnia utilis, a Trade of good return; to be in request with us; whether we look to this life present (saith he) or to that to come. Therefore to be allowed her Mysteries: at least, as all other Trades are. The rather, for that there is Mysterium iniquitatis: And, it were somewhat hard, that there should not be Mysterium pietatis, to encounter and to match it: That Babylon should be allowed the name of a Mystery, and Sion, not. It were an evident Non sequitur, that there should be profunda Satana, deep things of Sathans; and there should not be deep and profound things of GOD and godliness, for the Spirit to search out. But, such there be; Mysteries of Godliness. And we will (I trust) stand affected, as in all other Trades, so in this, to be acquainted with these; and (as the Apostle speaketh) to pierce ad interiora Ve-laminis, to that which is within the veile; to the very Mystery of Godliness. 2 Thel. 2. 7. Apoc. 17. 7. 1 Cor. 15. 31. 1 Cor. 2. 10; H. 5. 6. 19.

It is not only a Mystery of Godliness; but a Great one. The Apostle (where he saith, * If I knew all mysteries) giveth us to understand, there be more than one; there is a plurality of them: And, (here in this place) telleth us; they be not all of one scantling; there is magis and minus in them: some little, some great. * Some great; (if you still) according to all the dimensions, length and breadth, &c. * Or, great Virtute, non mole, of greater value, more precious than other: * Or great, a third way, that is, gravi-da Mysteriis; one Mystery, but hath many Mysteries with it. That such there are, and that this here is one of them: Great. Now that which leadeth us to make account of Mysteries, will likewise lead us to make Great account, of Great Mysteries; such, as this is. A great My- stery. 1 Cor. 13. 3. Eph 3. 18. 2 Pet. 1. 4.

Yet have we not all, one point further. It is a great one; a great one, Without controversy. For, even of those Mysteries, that are great, all are not great alike. Many great there are; yet is not the great-ness of all generally acknowledged, in confesso. Doubts are made, questions arise about them: all are not manifeste magna. We see, in our daies how men languish about some points, which they would have thought to be great; and great controversies there be, and great books of controversies about them. Well, howsoever it is with other, it is not so with this. This is quodammodo, taken pro confesso, Great; Great without controversy: the manifesting of GOD in the flesh, is a mystery manifestly great. Being then one of the Mysteries of Religion; a great one among them; so great, as though questions grow about the great-ness of others, none may about this: I hope there will be no more question, or controversie of our account, and our great account of it, than there is of the Mystery it self, and the Greatness of it. 2. A great one, without con- troversie.

But, before we go any further, to remove the veile, and shew what it is, let us pause here a while, till we have rendred thanks to GOD, and said with Naxianzene, Χριστός ὁ ἀγαθὸς ΘΕΟΣ, &c. Now yet, blessed be GOD, that among divers other Mysteries, about which there are so many mists and clouds of controversies raised in all Ages, and even in this of ours, hath yet left us some clear, and without controversy; manifest, and yet great; and again, great, and yet manifest. So great, as no exception to be taken: so manifest, as no question to be made about them.

Withall, to reform our judgements in this point. For a false conceit is crept into the minds of men, to think the points of Religion, that be manifest, to be certain petty points, scarce worth the hearing: Those, yea, those be great, and none but those, that have great Disputes about them. It is not so: Ταῦτα ἀπαραίτητα, &c. Those that are necessary He hath made plain: those, that not plain, not necessary. What better proof, than this here? This here, a Mystery, a great one, (Religion hath no greater,) yet Manifest, and in confesso, with all Christians. Zacharias Prophecie, and promise, touching CHRIST, wherewith he concludeth his Benedictus, (we hear it every day,) shall not deceive us; for this Mystery: He came to guide our feet into the way of peace. A way of peace then, there shall be, whereof all parts shall agree, even in the midst of a world of controversies. That, there need not such ado in complaining, if men did not delight, rather to be treading mazes, than to walk in the waies of peace. For, even still, such a way there is, which lyeth fair enough, and would lead us sure enough to salvation; if leaving those other rough labyrinths, we would but be shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace. Luk. 1. 79.

Yea further, the Apostle doth assure us, that if, whereunto we are come, and wherein we all agree, we would constantly proceed, by the Rule, those things, wherein we are otherwise minded, even them would GOD reveal unto us. That is, He maketh no controversie, but controversies would cease, if conscience were made of the practice, of that which is out of controversie. And I would to GOD it were so; and that this here, and such other manifeste magna were in account. With the Apostle himself it was so. He sheweth plainly, what reckoning he made of this plain Mystery; in that, having been ravished in spirit up to the third heavens, and there heard wonderful high Mysteries, past mans utterance; yet reckoned he all those nothing, in comparison of this plain Mystery here, nay; esteemed himself not to know any thing at all, but this. Eph. 6. 19. Phil. 3. 19.

And as he esteemed it himself, so would he have us. It is his exprefs charge, we see (in the Verse next before) where he tells his Bishop Timothy, how he would have him his Priests and Deacons occupy themselves, 1 Cor. 12. 2. 1 Cor. 2. 2.

themselves, in his absence : This he commends to them ; wils them to be doing with this Mystery. That you may know what to do (saith he,) What ? do but deal with this point ; thoroughly, deal with it. Howsoever it is manifest, it is great : Great regard to be had of it, great pains to be bestowed about it. And, even so then let us do, and see now another while, this Mystery, what it is.

II.
What this Mystery is,
God is manifested in the flesh, &c.

GOD is manifested in the flesh. Being one of the Mysteries of Godliness, it cannot be, but God must be a part, and a chief part of it. And, Gods being a part maketh it great. For great must that needs be, whereof He is a part, of whose greatness there is no end. And, mark first, that it is not aliquid Dei, but Deus ; not any thing divine, or of God, but God himself. Divers things, divers invisible things of God had been formerly made manifest : * His eternal Power, Wisdom, Providence ; in, and since the Creation. They be no mysteries : But, this is ; that, not the things of God, but Gods own self : not the eternitas, the beams of His brightness ; but, the very Character of His substance, the very Nature and Person of God. This is a great Mystery.

Of God, the Prophet Esay saith (Chap. 45, Ver. 15.) Vere Deus absconditus es tu : God is, of himself, a Mystery, and hidden ; and (that which is strange) hidden with light, which will make any eyes pass looking on Him. But, a hidden GOD our nature did not endure. Will you hear them speak it plainly ? Fac nobis Deos, Make us visible Gods, who may go before us, and we see them. Mystical, invisible Gods we cannot skill of. This we would have God to be manifested. Why then, God is manifested.

Manifested ; Wherein ? Sure, if GOD will condescend to be manifested, there is none but will think, it is meet to be, and it would be, in the most glorious Creature, that is under or above the Sun : None good enough. Yea, in what thing soever, be it never so excellent, for God to manifest himself in, is a disparagement too. What say you to flesh ? Is it meet GOD be manifested therein ? Without controversie it is not. Why, what is flesh ? It is no Mystery to tell what it is : It is dust (saith the Patriarch Abraham.) It is grass (saith the Prophet Esay) ; Fenum, grass cut down, and withering : It is corruption, not corruptible, but even corruption it selfe, (saith the Apostle Paul.) There being then (as Abraham said to him, Luke 16.) Xatqua uspa, so great a gulf, so huge a space so infinite a distance between those two, between GOD, and dust ; GOD and hay ; GOD and corruption ; as no coming of one at the other ; sileat omnis caro, talk not of flesh. Were it not a proud desire, and full of presumption, to wish things so remote to come together ? To wish, that the Deity, in the flesh, may be made manifest ? Yee we see, wished it was, by one in a place (Cant. 8.) in reasonable exprets terms : O that thou wert as my brother, that sucked the breasts of my mother ! That is, O that I might be manifest in the flesh. O that He might be ! and so He was, not only manifest at all ; (that is great :) but manifest in the flesh ; (that is greater.) For, if gold mixed, though it be with silver, is abased by it ; what if it be mixed with the rust of Iron or dross of Lead ? This must needs be great, in it self : But greater, with us : With us especially, that make such a doe at any, though never so little disparagement ; and that, if any, (though not much our inferior) be ranked with us, take our selves mightily wronged. We cannot choose, but hold this Mystery for Great : and say (with St. Augustine,) Deus : quid gloriosius ? Caro : quid vilius ? Deus in carne : quid mirabilius ? GOD : what more glorious ? Flesh : what more base ? Then, GOD in the flesh : What more marvellous ?

But, I ask further : manifested in the flesh ; what flesh ? Or, how manifested ? In what flesh ? What, in the pride and beauty of our Nature ? No : but in the most disgraceful estate of it that might be. And, how manifested ? Ad gloriam, for His credit or glory ? No : but ad ignominiam, to His great contempt and shame. So to have been manifested, as in the holy Mounn, (His face as the Sun, His garments as lightning, between Moses and Elias, in all glory, and glorious manner :) This had not been so great an impeachment. Was that the manner ? no : But how ? In clouds, in a stable, in a manger. The GOD, whom the heavens, and the heaven of heavens cannot containe, in a little Childs flesh not a span long : and that flesh of a Child not very well conditioned, as you may read in the 16 of Ezekiel.

So, to day : but after, much worse. To day in the flesh of a poor Babe crying in the Cratch, in medio animalium : after in the rent and torn flesh of a condemned person, hanging on the Cross, in medio latronum, in the midst of other manner persons, than Moses and Elias : That, men even hide their faces at Him ; nor, for the brightness of His glory, but for sorrow and shame. Call you this manifesting ? Nay, well doth the Apostle call it, the Veile of his flesh ; as whereby He was rather obscured, than any way set forth ; yea, eclipsed, in all the darkest points of it. Verily, the condition of the flesh, was more than the flesh it selfe : and the manner of the manifestation, far more, than the manifestation it self was. Both still make the Mystery greater and greater.

And now, to weigh the word manifested, another while ; because, that may seem to be terminus diminiens, a qualified terme, rather abating than any way tending to make great the Mystery ; In that, a thing may be manifested, and not be that, for which it is manifested ; be manifested for one thing, and be another. Would to GOD, we had not too plain examples of these, even in that we are about, in godliness it self : That there were not, that manifested themselves in wisdom, in the visor, or mask of godliness, but be nothing less. Well, this, how or howsoever it may be with men, with GOD it is not : He is not like to us : And howsoever, not here in this. For first, it is not in the shadow, shew, or shape of flesh : but, in very flesh it self. Then, it is not (saith the Greek Scholiast) phantasia, but, phantasia, phantasia, which importeth but an apparition, transitory, for a season, and then vanisheth again ; phantasia, a manifestation ; such, as is (say they) permanent, which passeth not, but lasteth for ever. And to put all out of question, (that here is nihil personarum, but even persona;) He that here is said to be GOD manifested in the flesh, is, in another place, said to be Verbum caro factum, the Word made flesh. So manifested, that made: so taking our nature, as his; and it are grown into one person, never to be severed, or taken in sunder any more. And in sign thereof, that flesh wherein he is manifested, (in the beginning of the Verse; in the end of the Verse,) in the very same flesh, he is received up into glory; And in the same, shall appear again, at his second manifestation.

And yet, to go further; I say, that this word [manifested] is so far from being Terminus diminuens, that it doth greatly amplate and enlarge the Mystery yet still. To be, manifested; Esse, and videri; Dici de, and esse in, Are two things. And, as, in some cases, it is more to be, than to be manifested; so, in some other, it is more to be manifested, than to be: And namely in this here. More, for GOD to be manifested; than to be in the flesh. It is well known when a great high Person doth fall into low estate, he careth not so much for being so, as for appearing such: Manifest him not, and you do him a pleasure. More it is for Him, to be made known, than to be, that He is. O it is naturally given us, to hide our abasing, what we can. Our misery must be kept in a mystery, and that mystery is not manifested in any wise: Blow a Trumpet in Sion, if any good come to us, But, whilst, let it not be heard in Gath, nor in Ascalon, if any evil fall upon us. Not so much as Naomi (we see;) but when she was fallen into poverty, he could not endure to be called by that name: No, her name was Mara; as if she had been some other party: So loth she was, to have her misery made manifest. Humility intrinsecal is not so much: it is the manifesting our humility that poseth us. That David should have been humble in heart before GOD and his Arke; that Michael could have born well enough: This was the grief; that David should make it manifest, uncover himself, wear an Ephod, and thereby (as the thought) mightily disgrace, and make himself vile in the eyes of his servants. That was it, she took so ill: Not, to be, so much; as, to be manifest: That same manifesting marred all. And, why would Nicodemus come to CHRIST, but not by Candle light; but that to be seen manifestly to come, was (with him) a far greater matter, than to come. By all which it appeareth, that in case of abasement, to seem, is more than to be; dici de, than esse in: And so (here) nosci, more than nasci. And I make no question, but we may reckon these two, as two distinct degrees: 'He abhorred not to become flesh': 'He abhorred not to have it manifestly known. It was not done (this) in a corner, in an out-corner of Galilee; but, in the City of David. His poor clouts manifested, by a Star: His shameful death published by a great Eclipse: Yea, that it might be manifest indeed, (as it followeth after in the Verse) he would have it preached over all the world.

But, when we have done and said all that ever we can, if we had all Mysteries, and no love, the Apostle tells us, it is nothing. We can have no Mystery, except Love be manifest. So is it. Two several times doth the Apostle tell us. '(Tit. II.) apparuit gratia: (Tit. III.) apparuit Amor erga homines: At the opening of this mystery, there appeared the Grace of God, and the Love of God toward mankind. Velatio Deitatis, revelatio charitatis: As manifest as GOD was in the flesh, so manifest was his love unto flesh. And then, because great love, a great mystery, Dilexit goeth never alone, but with Sic; (so, CHRIST:) Eccē quantam charitatem; (io, St. John.) Sure, how great and apparent Humility, so great and apparent love. And his humility was too apparent. So, we have GOD manifested in the flesh, Dei charitas: for, if ever he were Love, or shewed it; in this, he was it, and shewed it both. GOD, (that is Love,) was manifested in the flesh.

To make an end, one question more. To what end? Cui bono? Who is the better for all this? GOD, that is manifested; or the flesh, wherein he is manifested? Not GOD: To him, there groweth nothing out of this manifestation. It is for the good of the flesh, that GOD was manifested in the flesh. 1. For the good present: for, weter go that of the Psalmist, now, [Thou that hearest the prayer, to thee shall all flesh come:] and much better and more properly say; Thou that art manifest in the flesh, so Thee shall all flesh come: With boldness entering into the holy place, by the new and living way prepared for us, through the veil, that is, his flesh. 2. And, for the good to come; For we are put in hope, that the end of this manifesting God in the flesh, will be the manifesting of the flesh in him, even as he is: And, that which is the end of the verse, be the end of all, The receiving us up into his glory. To this haven ariveth this Mystery, of the Manifestation of it.

The end of this Second part is but the beginning of the third. For, hearing that it is so great, and of so great avail rising by it, that it is quasius multo uberrimus, a trade so beneficial; it makes us seek, how to incorporate ourselves (as in the III. of the Ephesians he speaketh;) how to have our part and fellowship, in this Trade, or Mystery. And that may we do (saith he, in the same place) * si operatur in nobis, (that is) if it prove to us, as it is in it self, a Mystery. I know, it were a thing very easie, for a speculative Divine, to lead you along, and let you see, that this Mystery is the Substance of all the Ceremonies, and the fulfilling of all Prophecies: That all Moses veiles, and all the Prophets visions, are recapitulate in it. But it is a point of speculation; We hear those points too often, and love them too well: Points of practice are less pleasing, but more profitable for us; namely, how we may get into the partnership of this Mystery.

There is this difference, between a Ceremony and a Mystery: A Ceremony represents and signifies, but, works nothing: A Mystery doth both. Besides that it signifieth, it hath his operation; and, work it doth; else, Mystery is it none. You may see it, by the Mystery of iniquity; That doth operari; was at work in the Apostles time; and it is no way to be admitted, but that the Mystery of godliness should have like operative force.

If you ask, what it is, to work? It is to do, as all other Agents; Ut assimulet sibi passum, to make that, it works on, like it self; to bring forth in it the very same quality. This, the rather, for that, this day being a Birth day, and the Mystery of it, a Birth, or generation; in that, (we know) the natural and most proper work is, Sui simile procreare, to beget and bring forth the very like to itself. And what should the Mystery of godliness beget in us, but godliness? What, the Mystery of Godliness (in this Chapter,) but the Exercise of godliness (in the next?) To shew, we must make St. Basil's Address of it: For, his Address, and St. Paul's Epistle, I take to be all one.

First, Within, (after the manner of a Mystery,) by entering into our selves, and saying (with S. Peter) Seeing then, GOD hath dealt so with us, what manner of persons ought we to be, in all holy conversation and godliness? How ought we to esteem him, that so esteemed us? How to esteem our selves, whom he hath so esteemed? How, without soil, or spot, to keep that flesh, wherein GOD hath manifested himself, that nothing come from it but such as may become that flesh, which is now all one with the flesh of the SON of GOD.

Provided, that it be not all Within: For, we deal not with a Mystery alone, but with a Manifestation too. That therefore our godliness be not only mystical, but manifest, as GOD was. As the Mystery, so the Godliness of it; Great and conspicuous both. For, that is the complaint; that, in our godliness, now adays, we go very mystically to work indeed; we keep it under a veil; and nothing manifest, but opera Carnis. Which maketh St. James cry, Offende mihi, show it me: and St. Paul tells us, that the life of JESUS must not only be had in our spirit, but manifest in our flesh. For, Godliness is not only Faith, which referreth to the Mystery (as we have it directly, at the IX. Verse, the Mystery of Faith;) But, it is Love too; which referreth to the Manifestation. For, in hoc cognoscimus (saith St. John,) By this, we know, our selves; and, in hoc cognoscimus omnes (saith CHRIST,) By this shall all men know, that we are His. And if Faith work by Love, the Mystery will be so manifest in us, as we shall need no prospective glasses, or other optick instruments, to make it visible; all men shall take notice of it.

tion of us into it.

1 Cor 4. 1.

And yet remaineth there one point; than which, there is not one more peculiar to a Mystery. That which the Apostle (Heb. 10. 20.) calleth Initiating: whereby we grow into the fellowship of this, and what Mysteries forever. For, this we are to understand, that Mysteries go not all, by hearing; no, they be dispensed also: And men are to esteem of us (saith he) not only, as of the Unfolders; but, as of the Stewards (or Dispensers) of the mysteries of GOD. Operari Mysteriorum, is a phrase well known to the very Heathen themselves: That Mysteries, as they work, so they are to be wrought. That they are to be handled, and that our hands are to be clean washed, ere we offer to touch them.

By which, I understand the Mystery of godliness, or Exercise of godliness (call it whether ye will,) which we call the Sacrament: the Greek hath no other word for it, but Mysterion: whereby the Church offereth to initiate us into the fellowship of this daies Mystery. Nothing sorteth better than these two Mysteries one with the other; the Dispensation of a Mystery, with the Mystery of Dispensation. It doth manifestly represent; it doth mystically impart what it representeth. There is in it, even by the very institution, both a Manifestation, and that visibly to set before us this flesh; and a mysticall Communication, to inesse us in it, or make us partakers of it. For the Elements: What can be more properly fit, to represent unto us the union with our Nature, than things that do unite themselves to our Nature? And, if we be to dispense the Mysteries in due season; what season more due than that His flesh and blood be set before us, that time, that He was manifest in flesh and blood for us. Thus we shall be initiate.

Apoc. 10. 7.

You look to hear of a Consummation of it too; and consummate it shall be, but not yet: not till the daies of the voice of the Seventh Angel. Then shall the Mystery of GOD be finished. So we find it directly, but not before. When, He that was, this day manifested in the flesh, shall manifest, to the flesh, the fulfillment of this Mystery, His eternity, glory, and bliss. So, still it remaineth a mystery in part; a part thereof there still remaineth behind, to be manifested. What He is, appeareth; what we shall be, doth not yet appear; but shall, at the second appearing. Two veils we read of: 'The veil of His flesh, (Heb. 10. 20.)' And the veil where our hope hath cast anchor, even within the veil, meaning heaven it self. The first is rent; these mysteries are remembrances of it. The second also shall be, as we also with it; and as he, (in the end of the Verse) so we, with Him, in the end, shall be received up into glory. To the consummation of which great Mystery, even that Great Manifestation, He vouchsafe to bring us all, that was, this day, for us all, manifested in the flesh, Jesus Christ the Righteous, &c.

A SERMON PREACHED

Before the

Kings Majesty

At WHITE-HALL, on Munday the XXV. of Decem.
Anno Domini, MDCIX. being
CHRISTMAS Day.

GAL. Chap. III. Ver. IV, V.

*When the fulness of time was come, God sent His Son, made of a woman, made under the Law.
That He might redeem them that were under the Law, that we might receive the Adoption of Sons.*

When the fulness of time cometh, God sent His Son: then, when God sent His Son, is the fulness of time come. And at this day, God sent His Son. This day therefore (so oft as by the revolution of the year it cometh about) is to us a yearly representation of the fulness of time. So it is: and a special honour it is to the Feast, that so it is. And we our selves seem so to esteem of it. For we allow for every month a day, (look how many months, so many daies,) to this Feast, as if it were, and we so thought it to be, the full recapitulation of the whole year.

This honour it hath, from Christ, who is the substance of this, and all other Solemnities. Peculiarly, a Christi missa, from Christ's sending. (For, they that read the ancient Writers of the Latine Church (Tertullian, and Cyprian) know, that Missa, and Missio, and Remissa, and Remissio, with them, are taken for one. So that, Christi missa, is the sending of Christ.) And when then hath this Text place so fit, as Now? Or what time so seasonable to intreat of it, as This? Of the sending of his Son; as when God sent his Son: Of the fulness of time; as, on the yearly return and memorial of it.

To intreat of it then. The Heads are two: 1. Of the fulness of time. 2. And of that, wherewith it is filled. 1. Times fulness, in these, When the fulness of time came. 2. Times filling, in the rest, GOD sent His Son, made of a woman, made under the Law, &c.

In the former, (Quando venit plenitudo temporis;) there be four Points: 1. Plenitudo temporis: That, time hath a fulness; or, that there is a fulness of time. 2. Venit plenitudo: That that fulness cometh, by steps and degrees; not all at once. 3. Quando venit: That, it hath a Quando, (that is,) there is a time, when time thus cometh to this fulness. 4. And when that When is? And that is, When God sent His Son. And so pass we over to the other part, in the same Verse, Missi DEUS; GOD sent His Son.

For the other part (touching the filling of time.) There be Texts, the right way to consider of them, is to take them in pieces. And this is of that kind. And if we take it in sunder, we shall see, as it is of fulness, so a kind of fulness there is in it: every word, more full than other: every word, a step in it, whereby it riseth still higher, till by seven several degrees it cometh to the top, and so to the measure is full, 1. GOD sent, the first. 2. Sent his Son, the second. 3. His Son made, the third. 4. And that twice made, Made of a woman, the fourth. 5. Made under the Law, the fifth; every one fuller than other, still.

And all this, for some Persons, and some Purpose; The Persons, Ut nos, that we. The purpose, Resipere, that we might receive. Nay, (if you mark it) there be two Ut's, Ut ille, Ut nos, that He might, and, that We might. He might redeem; and We might receive: that is, He, pay for it, and, We reap the benefit. 6. A double benefit; of Redemption (first) from the state of persons cast and condemned, under the Law, which is the sixth. 7. And then, of Translation into the state of adopted children of God, which is the seventh, and the very filling up of the measure.

Of the NATIVITY. Sermon 4.

III.

All which, we may reduce to a double fulness. Gods, as much as He can send. Ours, as much as we can desire, GODS, in the five first. 1. God sent. 2. Sent his Son. 3. His Son made. 4. Made of a Woman. 5. Made under the Law. And Ours in the two latter; 6. We are redeemed, the sixth. 7. We receive adoption, the seventh.

In that of Gods, every point is full. The thing sent, full. The sending, and the manner of sending, full. The making, and the two manners of making, 'Of a woman, and 'under the Law, both full. And our fulness in the two latter, (the effects of these two Acts; or makings, 'of a woman, 'under the Law,) Redemption and Adoption, which make up all. That when we were strangers from the Adoption; and not that only, but lay under the Law, as men whom sentence had passed on: From this latter, we are redeemed, (He under the Law, that we from under the Law,) That, (being so redeemed) we might further receive the adoption of children, (and as He the Son of man: so we might be made the Sons of God.) Which two are as much as we can wish. And this is Our fulness.

IV.

And to these; I will crave leave to add another fulness of Ours, rising out of these, and to make a motion for it. That, as it is the time, when we from GOD, receive the fulness of His Bounty: so it might be the time also, when He from us, may likewise receive the fulness of our Duty. The time of His Bountyfulness, and the time, of our Thankfulness: that it may be Plenitudo temporis, quâ ad illum, quâ ad nos; downward and upward; from Him to us, and from us to Him again: and so be, both waies, The fulness of time.

Plenitudo tem-
poris.
Sap. 11. 17.
Eph. 4. 13.

First, there is a fulness in time. The Terme, [Fulness,] carrieth our conceit to Measure, streight, from whence it is borrowed: which is then said to be full, when it hath as much as it can hold. Now, God hath made all things in Measure: and if all things, then Time. Yea, Time it self is by the Apostle called, Mensura temporis, the Measure of Time. As then, all other Measures have theirs; so the measure of time also hath his fulness, when it receiveth so much, as the capacity will contain no more. So, time is a measure: it hath a capacity: that hath a fulness. That, there is such a thing as the fulness of time.

Alcuius.

But, nothing is full at first: no more is time by and by. Venit plenitudo, it cometh, not at once, or straightwaies, but by steps and paces, nearer and nearer: Fils, first a quarter, and then half, till at last it come to the brim. And degrees there be, by which it cometh. Eccc palmares posuisti dias meos, (Psal. 39. 6.) From which word [palmares] it is an observation of one of the Fabers, a man may read his time: In his own hand, visibly, there is an ascent, the fingers rise still, till they come to the top of the middle finger; and when they be come thither, down again by like descent, till they come to the little, which is the lowest of all. So is it in our time. It riseth still by degrees, till we come to the full pitch of our Age, and then declineth again, till we grow to the lower end of our daies. But howsoever it may be (as it oft falls out) the descent is sudden, we go down headlong without degrees, go away in a moment; yet ever this holdeth; to our fulness we come not but by degrees.

b Joh. 13. 23.

Now thirdly, this coming hath a Quando venit, a time, when it cometh thither. As a time there is a great while, when we may say, (a) Nondum venit hora, the time is not yet come, while the measure is yet but in filling: So at the last a time too, that we may say, (b) Venit hora, the time is now come, when the measure is full: that is, a time there is, when time cometh to the full. As in the day, when the Sun cometh to the Meridian Line: in the month, when it cometh to the point of opposition with the Moon: in the year, when to the Solstice: In man, when he cometh to his full years: for that is the fulness of time the Apostle alledge: h in three verses before.

And when is that When, that time thus cometh to his fulness? Quando misit Deus, when GOD sends it: for time receives his filling from GOD. Of it self, time is but an empty measure, hath nothing in it: Many daies and months run over our heads, Dies inanet, (saith the Psalmist:) Menses vacui, (saith Job:) Empty daies, Psal. 78. Ver. 33. Void months, without any thing to fill them, Job 7. ver. 3.

Quando.

That which filleth time, is some memorable thing of GOD pouring into it, or (as it is in the Text) of His sending, to fill it withal. Misit Deus is it: and so cometh time to be more or less full; thereafter as that is, which God sends to fill it.

Now, many memorably missions did God make before this here; whereby in some measure, He filled up certain times of the year under Moses, and the Prophets: all which may well be termed, The implements of time.

But for all them, the measure was not yet full: filled perhaps to a certain degree, but not full to the brim: full it was not (seeing it might be still fuller) till God sent That, than which a more full could not be sent.

And, That He sent, when He sent His Son, a fuller than whom He could not send, nor time could not receive. Therefore, with the sending Him, when that was, Time was at the top, that was the Quando venit, then it was plenitudo temporis, indeed.

Col. 3. 9.
John 3. 34.
John 1. 14.
John 1. 16.

And, well might that time be called the fulness of time. For when He was sent into the world, in whom the fulness of the Godhead dwelt bodily: in whom the Spirit was not by measure: in whom was the fulness of grace and truth: of whose fulness we all receive: when He was sent, that was thus full, then was time at the full.

And well also might it be called the fulness of time, in another regard. For till then, all was but in promise, in shadows, and figures, and prophecies only, which fill not, God knows. But when the Performances of those promises, the body of those shadows, the substance of those figures, the fulfilling, or filling full of all those prophecies came, then came the fulness of time, truly so called. Till then it came not: then it came.

And, well might it be called the fulness of time, in a third respect. For then the Heir, (that is, the world)

World) was come to his full age : and so that the fittest time for Him to be sent. For to that, compareth the Apostle their estate then ; that the former times under Moses and the Prophets were as the Non-age of the world ; sub Pedagogo, in the third Chapter, Vers. 24. sub disciplina, as their A.B.C. or rudiments, (as in the very last words before these.) Their estate then, as of Children in their minority, non differens from servants. For all this while, nondum venit, the fulness of time was not yet come. But a time there was, as for man, so for mankind to come to his full years : that time came with Christ's coming, and Christ's coming with it, and never till then was the fulness of time ; but then it was.

And let this be enough for this point ; more there is not in the Text. But if any shall farther ask, why then, at that age of the World, the World was at his full age, just then, and neither sooner nor later ? I know many heads have been full of devices, to satisfy mens curiosity in that point. But I hold it safest to rest with the Apostle (in the second verse) on GODS condescensio. Let that content us. Then was the time, for that was Tempus praeinitium a Patre, the time appointed of the Father. For, even among men, though (the Father being dead) the Law setteth a time, for the Son to come to His heritage : yet the Father living, no time can be prefixed, but only when it liketh Him to appoint ; and the Father here liveth ; and therefore let this apodictica stay us. The times and seasons He hath put in His own power. It is not for us to know them. This is for us to know, that with His appointment, we must come to a full point. So doth the Apostle, and so let us, and not busie our selves much with it, time is but the measure or cask, that wherewith it is filled, doth more concern us. To that therefore let us come.

The degrees are seven (as I said.) To take them as they rise. Misit Deus, God sent. That standeth first ; and at it, let our first stay be. That will fall out to make the first degree. For, even this, that GOD sent at all, Ipsium misere Dei, this very sending it self, is a degree. It is so ; and so we would reckon of it, if we knew the Sender and who He is ; the Majesty of His presence how great it is, and how glorious, how far surpassing all we can see on earth.

For Him, for such an one as He, to condescend, but to send ; is sure a degree. For enough it had been, and more than enough for Him, to be sent to ; and not to send Himself. To have sit still, and been content, that we might send to Him, and have our message and petition admitted, and not He send to us. That had been as much as we could look for, and well, if we might have been vouchsafed but that. But it was He that sent : not we to Him first, nay, not we to Him at all, but He to us.

He to us ? And what were we, that He to us ? Alii, (as elsewhere He termeth us) meer Aliens from Him, and His household : Not that only, but we, in case of men, whom the Law had passed upon (so is our estate described in the end of the Text.) For Him, to send to us, so great as He, to such as we ; to think us, tantis, so much worth, as to make any mission, or motion, or to defende any about us ; This may well be the first. Be it then so ; that to us, or for us, or concerning us, GOD would trouble Himself to make any sending : A fulness there is in this. Full He was, a fulness there was in Him, (even the fulness of compassion in His bowels over our estate) else such a Sender would never once have sent.

GOD sent, Sent, and sent His Son : That, (I make no question,) will bear a second. Others He might have sent ; and whosoever it had been He had sent, it might well have served our turns. If sent by the hand of any His Servants, any Pastor, or Prophet, any ordinary messenger, it had been enough. So, hitherto had been His sending. So, and no otherwise, ever till now.

Then if to send by any may seem sufficient ; to send His SON, must needs seem full. For ever the more excellent the Person sent, the more honourable the sending : the greater He, the fuller it. Now, greater there is not than His Son, His first, His only begotten Son, in whom the fulness of the Godhead dwelt ; In sending Him, He sent the greatest, the best, the fullest thing He had.

To heap the measure up yet more, with the cause of His sending, in the word Examine : It was voluntary. He sent Him not for need ; but for meer love to us, and nothing else. There was no absolute necessity that He should have sent Him. He might have done what He intended, by the means and ministry of some besides. GOD could have enabled a Creature ; a Creature enabled by GOD, and the power of His might, could soon have trod down Satan under our feet. But if it had been any other He had sent, His love and regard to us had not shewed so full. It had been, Offendit Deus charitatem, but not, Eccae quantum charitatem ostendit Deus. Whomsoever He had sent besides, His love had not been full : at least, not so full as it should have been, if He had sent his Son. That therefore it might be full, and so appear to us for full, Misit Deus filium suum. Enough it was, in compassion of our estate, to have relieved us by any : Men that are in need to be relieved, care not who they be that do it. Enough then for compassion : but not enough to manifest the fulness of His love, unless to relieve us, He sent His own Son.

This is full one would think : Yet, the manner of his sending him, is fuller still, Misit filium ; Filium suum. Sent his Son ; His Son made. Sent him, and sent him made : This is a third. For if he would have sent him, he should not have sent him made : but as he was, neither made nor created, but like himself in his own estate, as was meet for the Son of God, to be sent. To make him any thing, is to mar him, be it what it will be. To send him made, is to send him marred, and no better. Therefore I make no doubt, Christ's sending is one degree, his making is another : So to send, as withall to make, are two distinct measures of this filling. As he is, he is a Maker, a Creator : If GOD make him any thing, He must be a thing made, a Creature ; and that is a great disparagement. So that, howsoever the time is the fuller, for this ; He is the emptier : Abieci vas vas, et non habui, the fulness of time, is his emptiness ; the exalting of that, his abasing : And this very Exinanivit seipsum, emptying himself, for our sake, is a pressing down the measure : and so, even by that, still the measure is more full.

Yet, the very manner of this making, hath his increase too, addeth to it still. In the word factum : which is not every making, but making it his Nature. To have made Him a body, and taken it upon him

Him for a time, till He had performed His Embassy, and then laid it off again, that had been much : But so to be made, is once made, and ever made ; so to take it, as never lay it off more, but continue so still factus, it to become His very Nature ; so to be made, is to make the union full. And to make the union with us full, He was content, not to be sent alone, but to be made ; and that factus, to be made so, as never unmade more. Our Manhood becoming His Nature, no less than the Godhead it self. This is Filium Factum indeed.

Made, and twice made, (for so it is in the Verse) ' Factum ex, and ' Factum sub ; made of, and made under : Of a Woman, under the Law. So, two makings there be ; either of them, of it self, a filling to the measure, but both of them maketh it perfectly full.

Made first of a woman : that, I take clearly to be one. For, if He, if the Son of God must be made a Creature : it were meet he should be made the best Creature of all. And if made of any thing, (if any one thing better than another) of that : made some glorious Spirit, some of the orders of the Angels. Nay, made, but made no Spirit ; Verbum caro factum est, the Word became flesh : made, but made no Angel ; Nusquam Angelos, he in no wise took Angels nature upon him.

But made man. First, I will ask with David, Domine, quid est homo ? Lord, what is man ? And then, tell you his answer : Homo quasi res nihili, Man is like a thing of nought. And this he was made, this he became, made man, made of a woman : did not abhor the Virgins womb, (as we sing daily, to the high praise of the fulness of his humility, to which His love brought Him for our sakes.) For, whatsoever else He had been made, it would have done us no good. In this then was the fulness of His Love, as before of His Fathers, that He would be made, and was made, not what was fittest for Him, but what was best for us : not, what was most for His glory, but what was most for our benefit and behoof.

Made of a woman. For, Man He might have been made, and yet have had a body framed for Him in Heaven, and not made of a Woman. But when He saith, Factum ex muliere, it is evident, He passed not thorow her, as water thorow a Conduit Pipe, (as fondly dreameth the Anabaptist.) Made of, Factum ex : Ex dicit materiam. Made of her ; She ministered the matter, Flesh of her flesh. Semen mulieris, the seed ; and Semen incommutabile, that is, the principal and very inward chief part of the substance. Made of that, made of her very substance.

And so have we here now in one, both twain His Nature. God sent His Son, there His Divine : Made of a woman, here His humane Nature. That, from the bosom of His Father, before all worlds ; this from the womb of his mother in the world. So that, as from eternity, GOD His Father might say that verse of the Psalm, Filius meus es tu, hodie genui te, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee : So, in the fulness of time, might the Virgin his mother, no less truly, Filius meus es tu, hodie peperisti te, Thou art my Son, this day have I brought thee into the world.

And here now, at this word, made of a woman, He beginneth to concern us somewhat. There groweth an alliance between us : For, we also are made of a woman. And our hope is, as, He will not be confounded, to be counted inter natos mulierum ; no more will He be, (saith the Apostle) to say, in medio fratrum ; to acknowledge us his Brethren. And so by this time he groweth somewhat near us.

This now is full for the union with our nature, so to be made of a woman. But so to be made of a woman, without he be also made under the Law, is not near enough yet. For, if He be out of the compass of the Law, that the Law cannot take hold of Him, Factum ex muliere will do us small pleasure. And He was so born, so made of a woman ; as the verity of His conception, is in this factum ex muliere : So the purity is in this, that it is but ex muliere, and no more ; of the Virgin alone, by the power of the Holy Ghost, without mixture of fleshly generation. By virtue whereof, no original soil was in Him. Just born He was, and Iusto non est lex posita, no law for the just, no law could touch Him. And so we, never the better, for factum ex muliere.

For if one be in debt and danger of the Law, to have a Brother, of the same blood, made of the same woman ; both (as we say) lying in one belly, will little avail him, except he will also come under the Law, that is, become his Surety, and undertake for him. And such was our estate. As Debtors we were, by virtue of Chirographum contra nos, the hand-writing that was against us. Which was our Bond, and we had forfeited it, And so, factus ex muliere, to us, without factus sub lege, would have been to small purpose.

No remedy therefore, He must be new made ; made again once more. And so He was, cast in a new mould ; and at his second making, made under the Law ; under which if he had not been made, we had been marred ; even quite undone for ever, if this had not been done for us too. Therefore, he became bound for us also, entered bond anew, took on him, not only our Nature, but our Debt ; our Nature, and Condition both. Nature, as men ; Condition, as sinful men ; expressed in the words following, Them that were under the Law : for that was our Condition. There had indeed been no capacity in him, to do this, if the former had not gone before factum ex muliere ; if he had not been, as we, made of a Woman : But the former was for this ; Made of a Woman he was, that he might be made under the Law : being ex muliere, he might then become sub Lege, which before he could not, but then he might, and did : And so this still is the fuller.

And when did he this ? When was He made under the Law ? Even then, when he was circumcised. For this doth S. Paul testify, in the third of the next Chap. Behold, I Paul testify unto you, whosoever is circumcised, Factus est debitor universa Legis, He becomes a debtor to the whole Law. At his Circumcision then, he entered Bond anew with us ; and in sign that so he did, he shed then a few drops of his blood, whereby he signed the Bond (as it were) and gave those few drops then, tantum artham universi sanguinis effundendi, as a pledge or earnest, that when the fulness of time came, he would be ready to shed all the rest ; as he did. For I would not have you mistake, though we speak of this, [sub Lege] being under the Law, in the the terms of a Debt sometimes: yet the truth is, this debt of ours was no money debt; we were not sub lege pecuniaria, but Capital: and the debt of a Capital Law is Death: and under that, under Death He went, and that the worst death Law had to inflict, even the death of the Cross, the most bitter, reproachful, cursed death of the Cross. So that upon the matter, factus sub lege, and factus in Cruce, come both to one; one amounts to as much as the other. Well, his he did undertake for us at his Circumcision: and therefore then, and not till then, he had his name given him, the Name of Jesus a Saviour. For then took he on him the Obligation to save us: And look what then at his Circumcision he undertook, at his Passion he paid even to the full: and having paid it, delicti Chirographum, cancelled the sentence of the Law, that till then was of record, and stood in full force against us.

Col. 2. 14.

Howbeit, all this was but one part of the Law: but he was made sub lege universa, under the whole Law; and that not by his death only, but by his life too. The one half of the Law, (that is, the Directive part,) he was made under that, and satisfied it, by the innocency of his Life, without breaking so much as one jot or tittle of the Law: and so answered that part (as it might be the Principal.) The other half of the Law, which is the Penalty: he was under that part also, and satisfied it, by suffering a wrongful death, no way deserved, or due by him; and so answered that (as it might be the forfeiture.) So he was made under both, under the whole Law. Satisfying the Principal, there was no reason he should be liable to the forfeiture and penalty: yet, under that He was also. And all, that the whole Law might be satisfied fully, by His being under both parts; and so no part of it light upon us.

These two then, (Made of a Woman, made under the Law), ye see, are two several makings, and both very requisite. Therefore, either hath a several Pass, they divide this Solemnity between them: six daies apiece, to either; as the several moities of this fulness of time. This day, Verbum caro factum, the Word made flesh: that day, Him that knew no sin, He made sin, (that is,) made him undertake to be handied as a sinner, to be under the Law, and to endure what the Law could lay upon him. And so now, the thing sent is full: and fully sent, because made: and fully made, because made once and twice over: fully made ours, because fully united to us. Made of a Woman as well as we: Made under the Law as deep as we: both ex muliere, and sub Lege. So of our nature (of a woman,) that of our condition also (under the Law.) So, fully united to us in nature, and condition both.

2 Cor. 5. 21.

And so we are come to the full Measure of his sending. And, that we are come to the full, ye shall plainly see, by the overflowings, by that which we receive from this fulness; which is the latter part of the verse, and is our fulness, even the fulness of all that we can desire. For, if we come now to ask, for whom is all this ado, this sending, this making, over and over again. It is for us. So is the conclusion, ut nos, that we might from this fulness, receive the full of our wish. For in these two behind, Redemption, and Adoption; to be redeemed, and to be adopted, are the full of all we can wish our selves.

Verse 5.

The transcendent Division, of Good and Evill, is it, that comprehendeth all. And here it is. Our desire can extend itself no farther than to be rid of all evill, and to attain all that good is. By these two, (being redeemed, and being adopted) we are made partakers of them both: To be redeemed from under the Law, is to be quit of all Evill. To receive the adoption of children, is to be staid in all that is Good. For, all Evill is, in being under the Law, from whence we are redeemed; and, all Good, in being invested in the heavenly Inheritance, whereunto we are adopted. Thus stood the case with us: Aliens we were from GOD, His Covenant, and His Kingdom: More than that, Prisoners we were, fast layed up under the Law. From this latter we are freed: of the former we are seized: and what would we more?

Eph. 2. 12.

Only, this you shall observe, that in the Idiom of the Scriptures it is usuall; two points being set down, when they are resumed again, to begin with the latter, and so end with the former. So is it here, at the first, made of a woman, made under the Law. At the resuming, he begins with the latter, made under the Law, that he might redeem them that were under the Law. And then comes to the former, made of a woman, made the Son of man; that we by adoption might be made the Sons of GOD. But, this we are to mark, it is He that is at all the cost and pain: and we, that have the benefit by it. At the redeeming it is, He ills: at the receiving it is, He nos.

Briefly of either: and first, of our Redeming. Redeeming (as the word giveth it) is a second buying, or buying back of a thing, before aliened or sold. Ever, a former sale is presupposed before it. And such a thing there had gone before. A kind of alienation had formerly been, whereby we had made away our selves, (for, a sale I cannot call it, it was for such a trifle:) Our Nature aliened in Adam, for the forbidden fruit; a matter of no moment. Our Persons likewise, dayly we our selves alien them, for some trifling pleasure, or profit; matters not much more worth. And, when we have thus passed our selves away, by this selling our selves under sin, the Law seizeth on us, and under it we are αυτῶν δουλοὶ, (Chap. 3. v. 23.) even lock'd up, as it were, in a Dungeon, tied fast with the cords of our sins, (Prov. 5. 22.) The sentence passeth on us, and we waiting but for execution. What evill is there not, in this estate, and on every soule that is in it? Well then, the first He, the first end is, to get us rid from under this estate.

That He redeems them that were under the Law.

Rom. 7. 14.

He did it: not by way of entreaty, step in and beg our pardon: that would not serve. Sold we were, and bought we must be; a price must be laid down for us. To get us from under the Law, it was not a matter of Intercession, to sue for it, and have it. No, he must purchase it, and pay for it. It was a matter of Redemption.

And, in Redemption or a Purchase, we look to the Price. For if it be at an easie rate, it is so much the better. But with a high price, he purchased us; it cost him dear to bring it about. Non auro, nec argento; Neither of them would serve; At an higher rate it was, even Preioso sanguine. His precious blood was the price we stood Him in. Which He payed, when He gave His life a ransom for many.

1 Pet. 1. 18, 19.
Mat. 20. 28.

It stood thus between Him and us, in this point of Redemption. Here are certain malefactors under the Law.

Law,

Law, to suffer to be executed: What say you to them? Why, I will become under the Law, suffer that they should, take upon me their execution, upon condition, they may be quit. In effect so much, at His Passion, He said, Si ergo me queritis (Joh. 18.6.) If you lay hold on me, if I must discharge all, Since has abire, Let those go their way, Let the price I pay be their Redemption: and so it was. And so we come to be redeemed from under the Law.

And this is to be marked, that them that were under the Law, and we that are to receive, are but one, one and the same persons both: but being so redeemed, then we are ourselves. Till then, the Apostle speaks of us, in the third person, (Them that were under the Law), as of some strangers, as of men of another world, none of our own. But now being redeemed, the stile changeth. He speaketh of us in the first person, we Nos, that We: For, till now, we were not our own, we were not our selves; but now we are: Till this, it was the old year still with us; but with the new year cometh our new estate.

That we might
Children.

Being thus redeemed, we are got from under the Law: and that is much. Till a party come to be once under it, and feel the weight of it, he shall never understand this aright; but then he shall. And if any have been under it, he knows what it is, and how great a benefit to be got thence. But is this all? No, He leaves us not here; but to make the measure compleat, yea, even to flow over, He gives us not over, when He had rid us out of this wretched estate, till He have brought us to an estate, as good as he himself is in. After our Redemption, we stood but as Prisoners enlarged; that was all: But still we were as strangers; no part nor portion in God, or His Kingdom: nor no reason, we should hope for any, He now goeth one step further, which is the highest and furthest step of all. For further than it he cannot go.

That we might receive the adoption, (that is) from the estate of Prisoners condemned, be translated into the estate of Children adopted. Of Adoption: for, of natural, we could not: That is His peculiar alone, and He therein only above us, but else, fully to the joynt fruition of all that He hath, which is fully as much as we could desire. And this is our Fieri out of His Factum ex muliere. We made the Sons of God, as He the Son of Man; We made partakers of His Divine, as He of our Humane nature. To purchase our pardon, to free us from death, and the Laws sentence, this seemed a small thing to Him: yet this is Lex hominis. Mans goodness goeth no farther; and gracious is the Prince that doth but so much. For, who ever heard of a condemned man, adopted afterward; or that thought it not enough and enough, if he did but escape with his life? So far then to exalt His bounty, to that fulness; as pardon and adopt both, Non est Lex hominis hac; no such measure amongst men; Zelus Domini exercituum. The zeal of the Lord of Hosts, was to perform this: The fulness of the Godhead dwelt in Him, that brought this to pass.

Heb. 1.3.
Mat. 17.5.
Heb. 2.10.

For, (to speak of adopting:) We see it daily, no father adopts, unless he be Orbe, have no child; or if he have one, for some deep dislike have cast him off. But GOD had a Son, The brightness of His glory; The true Character of His substance. And no displeasure there was: No, In quo complacuit est. In whom He was absolutely well pleased: yet would He, by adoption, for all that, bring many Sons to Glory. Is not this full on His part?

Heb. 1.3.
Rom. 8.17.

We see again, no Heir will endure to hear of Adoption, nay, not divide his Inheritance, no, not with his natural Brethren. Then, that the Heir of all things, should admit joynt Heirs to the Kingdom He was born to; and that admit them not out of such, as were near Him, but from such as were strangers, yea, such as had been condemned men under the Law; Is not this full on His part? To purchase us, and to purchase for us, both at once? And not to do this for us alone, but to assure it to us: For as his Father, in this Verse, sends Him; So, in the next Verse, He sends the Spirit of his Son, to give us possession of this our Adoption: whereby we now call Him, the Jews Abba, the Gentiles Pater, as Children all, and He our Father, which is the privilege of the Adoption, we here receive.

And now we are come to the fulness indeed. For this Adoption, is the fulness of our option: we cannot extend; we, our wish; or He, His love and goodness any further. For, what can we ask, or He give more, seeing in giving this, He giveth all he is worth? By this time, it is full Sea: All the banks are filled: It is now as Ezekiels waters that he saw flow from under the threshold of the Temple: that took him to the ankles first, then to the knees, after to the loynes; at last so high risen, there was no more passage.

1. From the fulness of his Compassion, he sent to release us: 2. From the fulness of his Love, He sent his Son: 3. In the fulness of Humility, He sent him made: 4. Made of a Woman, to make a full union with our Nature: 5. Made under the Law, to make the union yet more perfectly full with our sinful condition: 6. That we might obtain a full deliverance, from all Evil, by being redeemed: 7. And a full estate of the joy and glory of his heavenly inheritance, by being adopted. So, there is fulness of all hands, and so much for the fulness of the benefit, we receive.

Now, for the fulness of the Duty, we are to perform this day. For, in the fulness of time, all things are to be full. Plenitudo temporis, tempus plenitudinis. And seeing God hath suffered us to live, to see the year run about, to this plenitudo temporis: if it be so on Gods part; meet also, it be so on ours: and that we be not empty, in this fulness of time. It is not fit, if He be at the brink, that we be at the bottom. But that we be willing, to yield him of ours again; of our duty (I mean:) that it, to Him, in a measure and proportion be like full, as his Bounty hath been full above measure toward us. That so from us, and on our parts, it may be plenitudo temporis, or tempus plenitudinis, the fulness of time, or time of fulness, chuse you whether.

1. And a time of fulness it will be, I know, in a sense: of fulness of bread, of fulness of bravery, of fulness of sport and pastime: and this it may be. And it hath been ever a joyful time in appearance, for it should be so. With the joy, (saith Esay, a verse or two before, Puer natus est nobis, unto us a child is born) that men rejoyce with in harvest: Nor to go from our Text here, With the joy of men that are come out of prison, have escape the Law; with the joy of men that have got the reversion of a goodly heritage, Only, that we forget not the principal ; that this outward joy eat not up, evacuate not our spiritual joy, proper to the Feast : that we have in mind in the midst of our mirth, the cause of it, Christ's sending and the benefits that come thereby. And it shall be a good sign unto us, if we can thus rejoyce, if this our joy can be full, if we can make a spiritual blessing the object of our mirth. Beatus populus, qui scit jubilationem, Psal. 89. 15. Blessed is the people, that can rejoyce on this manner.

And after our joyfulness, or fulness of joy, our fulness of thanks, or thankfulness, is to ensue : For with that fulness, we are to celebrate it likewise. Our minds, and then our mouths, to be filled with blessing, and praise, and thanks to Him that hath made our times not to fall into those empty ages of the world, but to fall within this fulness of time, which so many Kings and Prophets desired to have lived in, but fell short of ; and lived then when the times were full of shadows, and promises, and nothing else. How instantly they longed to have held such a Feast, to have kept a Christmas, it is evident by David's Inclination Calos, by Esay's Illinam dirumpas Calos, Bon the heavens, and break the heavens: How much (I say) they longed for it ; And therefore, that we make not light account of it.

To render our thanks then, and to remember to do it fully, To forget none : To him that was sent, and to him that sent ; Sent his Son in this, the Spirit of his Son, in the next verse. To begin with osculamini Filium, it is the first duty enjoined us this day, to kiss the babe newly born, that when his Father would send him, said, Ecce venio, so readily ; and when he would make him, was content with, Corpus apasti mihi, to have a body made him, meet for him to suffer in : who willingly yielded to be our Shilo ; to this apaste here ; yea, to be not only Christ, but an Apostle for us, Heb. 3. 1. even the Apostle of our profession. And not to him that was sent and made alone, but to the Father that sent him, and to the Holy Ghost that made him, (as by whom he was conceived.) To the Father for his mission ; the Son, for his redemption ; The Holy Ghost, for his adoption ; For, by him it is wrought. He that made him the Son of man, doth likewise regenerate us, to the state of the Sons of God. And this for our thankfulness.

3. And to these two, (to make the measure full) to joyn, the fulness of duty, even whatsoever dutiful minded persons may yield to a bountiful minded, and a bountiful handed Benefactor. And with this to begin, to consecrate this first day of this fulness of time, even without service to him at the full ; which is then at the full, when no part is missing : when all our duties of preaching, and praying, of hymns, of offering, of Sacrament ; and all meet together. No fulness there is of our Liturgy, of publick solemn service without a Sacrament. Some part, yea, the chief part is wanting, if that be wanting. But our thanks are surely not full, without the holy Eucharist, which is by interpretation, Thanksgiving in itself. Fully we cannot say, Quid retribuam Domino ? But we must answer, Calicem salutaris accipiam, we will take the cup of Salvation, and with it in our hands give thanks to him, render him our true Eucharist, of reall thanksgiving indeed. In which Cup is the Blood, not only of our redemption, of the Covenant, that freed us from the Law, and makerh the Destroyer past over all ; but of our Adoption, of the New Testament also, which entitles us, and conveys unto us (Testament-wise, or by Way of Legacy) the estate we have in the joy and blisse of his heavenly Kingdom, whereto we are adopted. We are then made partakers of him, and with him of both these his benefits. We there are made to drink of the Spirit, by which we are sealed to the day of our redemption and adoption both. So that, our freeing from under the Law, our investiture into our new adopted state, are not fully consummate without it.

And what ? Shall this be all ? No, when this is done ; there is allowance of twelve daies more, for this fulness of time : that we shrink not up our duty into this day alone, but in the rest also remember, to redeem some part of the day, to adopt some hour at the least, to bethink our selves of the duty, the Time calleth us for : that so, we have not Jobs dies vacuas, no day quite empty in this fulness of time. Hereof assuring our selves, that what we do in this fulness of time, will have full acceptance at his hands. It is the time of his Birth, which is ever a time, as accepted, so of accepting ; wherein, what is done, will be acceptably taken to the full : Fully accepted, and fully rewarded by him, of whose fulness we all receive : With this condition, of grace for grace, ever, one grace for another.

And so, growing from grace to grace, finally, from this fulness, we shall come to be partakers of another yet behind, to which we aspire, For, all this is but the fulness of time : But that, the fulness of eternity, when time shall be run out, and his glass empty, Et tempus non eris amplius ; which is, at his next sending. For yet once more shall God send him, and he come again. At which coming, we shall then indeed receive the fulness of our redemption, not from the Law (that we have already) but from Corruption, to which our bodies are yet subject ; and receive the full fruition of the Inheritance, whereto we are here but adopted. And then it will be perfect, complear, absolute fulness indeed, when we shall all be filled with the fulness of him that filleth all in all. For so shall all be, when nothing shall be wanting in any : for God shall be all in all. Not as here he is, something (and, but something,) in every one ; but then omnia in omnibus. And then, the measure shall be so full, as it cannot enter into us, we cannot hold it : We must enter into it ; Intra in gaudium Domini tui.

To this we aspire, and to this, in the fulness appointed of every one of our times, Almighty God bring us, by Him, and for His sake, that in this fulness of time, was sent to work it for us, in His person ; and work it in us, by the operation of His Blessed SPIRIT. To whom, &c.

A SERMON PREACHED

Before the

Kings Majesty

At WHITE-HALL, on Tuesday the xxv. of Decem.
Anno Domini, MDCX. being
CHRISTMAS Day.

LUKE Chap. II. Ver. X, XI.

The Angel said unto them, Be not afraid, for behold, I bring you good tydings, of great joy which shall be to all people.

That there is born unto you, this day, a SAVIOUR, which is CHRIST, the LORD, in the City of David.

Heb. 3. 13.

Here is a Word in this Text, and it is hodie, by virtue whereof this Day, may seem to challenge a special property in this Text, and this Text in this Day.
CHRIST was born, is true any day: but this day CHRIST was born, never, but to day only. For, of no day in the year can it be said, Hodie natus, but of this.
By which word, the HOLY GHOST may seem to have marked it out, and make it the peculiar Text of the day.

Then, it will not be amiss, Domine cognominatur hodie, (as the Apostle speaketh) while it is called, to day, to hear it. To morrow, the word hodie will be lost: This day, and not any day else, it is in season. Let us then hear it this day, which we can hear no day besides.

IT is then the first report, the very first news, that came (as this day) of that, which maketh this day, so high a Feast; the birth of Christ.

1. It came by an Angel then: No Man was meet to be the messenger of it. And look how it came then, so it should come still; and none but an Angel bring it: as, more fit for the tongues of Angels than of men. Yet since, GOD hath allowed sinful men, to be the Reporters of it at the second hand; and the news never the worse; for that good news is good news and welcome, by any, though the person be but even a foul Leper that brings it. Yet that the meanness of the messenger offend us not, ever we are to remember this; Be the party who he will, that brings it, the news of CHRIST'S birth, is a message for an Angel.

2. This had been news for the best Prince on the Earth. That these Ills here, these parties were Shepherds, that this Message came to them, needs not seem strange: It found none else (at the time) to come to: The Angel was glad to find any to tell it to; even to tell it the first he could meet withal: None were then awake, none in case to receive it, but a sort of poor Shepherds; and to them he told it.

Yet, it fell not out amiss, that Shepherds they were; the news fitted them well. It well agreed, to tell Shepherds of the yeaving of a strange Lamb: such a Lamb, as should take away the sins of the World:
such a Lamb, as they might send to the Ruler of the World for a Present, Mitte Agnum Dominatori terrae: Esay's Lamb. Or (if you will) to tell Shepherds, of the birth of a Shepherd; Ezechiel's Shepherd;
Ecce

John 1. 29.
Esay 16. 1.
Ezcc. 34. 23.

Ecce suscitabo vobis Pastorem; Behold, I will raise you a Shepherd: the (a) Chief Shepherd, the (b) Great Shepherd, and the (c) Good Shepherd that gave his life for his flock. And so, it was not unfit news, for the Persons to whom it came. a 1 Pet. 5. 4.
b Heb. 13. 20.
c John 10. 11.

For the Manner: the Angel delivereth it Evangelizando, Church-wise, (and that was a sign this place should ever be the Exchange for this news:) Churchwise (I say) for he doth it by a Sermon: here at this Verse: and then by Hymn or Antheme after, at the 14. v. A Sermon: the Angel himself calls it so, Evangelizo vobis, I come to Evangelize, to preach you a Gospel: that first. And presently after he had done his Sermon, there is the Hymn, Gloria in excelsis, taken up by the Quire of Heaven. An Angel makes the one: A multitude of Angels sing the other. The whole service of this day, the Sermon, the Antheme, by Angels, all.

Now, the end of both Sermon and Antheme, and of the Angels, in publishing it, and of the Shepherds, and us, in hearing it, is gaudium, joy for the Benefit, and Honour; Gaudium magnum, great joy for the great Benefit, and great Honour vouchsafed our Nature, and us this day. Joy is in the Text, and if joy be in the time, it is no harm: We keep the Text, if we hold the Time with Joy, For so the Angel doth warrant us to hold it.

Of this Angelical, or Evangelical message, or (as not I, but the Angel calleth it) Sermon; these two Verses, I have read, are a part. Whereof the former is but an Ecce, exciting them to hear it, by magnifying the message, as well worth their hearing. Be not afraid, for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. The latter, is the very message it self, That, there is born unto you, this day a SAVIOUR, which is CHRIST the LORD, in the City of David.

In the former, are these points: 1. Fear not. (It is no ill News I bring you) 2. Nay, it is good news. 3. God, for it is news of joy. 4. Joy, and that no ordinary, but great joy. 5. Not to some few, but to the whole people. 6. And not toti populo, to all one people, but omni populo, to all people whatsoever. 7. And them, not for the present, but Quod erit omni populo, that is, and so shall be, to all, as long as there shall be any people, upon earth. And, by vertue of this [Quod erit] to us, here this day. Ecce, Behold, such is the news I bring.

In the latter, the Message it self. (The sum whereof is) the birth of a Child. A Child is born. Three things are proposed of Him. 1. This Child is a SAVIOUR. 2. A Saviour which is CHRIST. 3. Christ the Lord, Christus Dominus. For every Saviour is not CHRIST, nor every Christ, Christus Dominus, CHRIST the LORD, or the LORD CHRIST. He is all three.

Then have we besides, three circumstances, of the Persons, Time, and Place. 1. The Persons, for whom all this is: twice repeated: Evangelizo vobis, in the first Verse, Natus vobis is the second. But this, I make some doubt of, whether it be a Circumstance or no: I rather hold it a principal part of the Substance, as, the word of conveyance, whereby it passeth to us. And sure, there is no joy either in Evangelizo, the Message; or Natus, the Birth, without it; without Vobis. But, if the Message, and the Birth it self both, be ours; then it is Gaudium magnum indeed. Specially, if we add (2.) the Time when, not many daies hence, but even this very day. And (3.) the Place where, that it is in no remote Region far hence, but in the City of David, even here hard by.

And then lastly in a word, what our parts are to perform, to these two parts, this daies Message, and this daies Birth of our SAVIOUR, CHRIST, the LORD.

Be not afraid.

Here is a stop, that the Message cannot proceed: For the sight of the Messenger, hath almost marred the hearing of the Message. The parties to whom it comes: be in such fear, as they be not in case to receive it. They were afraid, and that sore afraid (as is said in the Verse before) at the sight of the Angel, that came with the news.

And this was not the case of these poor men only: Others, and other manner of people were so, as well as they. This Gospel of S. Luke is scarce begun; we are yet but a little way in the second Chapter; and we have already, three Nolite timere's in it: and all, as here, at the coming of an Angel. Fear not Zachary, (Chap. 1. 13.) So, he was afraid. Fear not Mary, (Chap. 1. 30.) So, she was afraid. And now, Fear not these here, That it seems to be general, so fear, at an Angels appearing.

What was it? It was not the fear of an evil conscience: They were about no harm. Zachary was at Church at his Office: The blessed Virgin (I doubt not) blessedly employed. These here, doing their duty; watching over their flocks by night: Yet feared, all. What should the matter be? It is a plain sign, our nature is fallen from her original: Heaven, and we are not in the terms, we should be: not the best of us all.

Angels are the messengers of Heaven. Messengers ever come with tidings; but whether good or bad we cannot tell. Here comes an Angel with newes from heaven: what news he brings, we know not, and therefore we fear, because we know not. Which shews, all is not well between Heaven and us; that upon every coming of an Angel, we promise our selves no better news from thence; but still are afraid of the messages, and messengers that come from that place.

That the message then may proceed, this fear must be removed. In a troubled water, no face will well be seen: nor by a troubled mind, no message received, till it be settled. To settle them then for it; no other way, no other word to begin with, but Nolite timere, fear not, and that is ever the Angels beginning. Such is our infirmity, ever he must begin with these two words, Nolite timere, fear not: And so he doth seven times in this Gospel.

1. But, fear will not be cast out with a couple of words, till they see some reasons to quiet them. And no better reason, than to shew they have no reason to fear. For, fear is the expectation of evil, and there is no evil toward them : and so they have no reason to fear ; quod trepidaverunt timore, ubi non erat timor. As if he should say ; Angels have come with weeping news, as Jud. 2. v. 5. If I were such an one, if I came with sad tidings, ye had reason, ye might fear. But now your terror, groweth out of error. You are mistaken in me, I am no such Angel ; I am Angelus Evangelizans, an Angel with a Gospel, one that comes with no bad news. Fear not then. There is no evil toward.

2. No evil : and that were enough for fear not. But here is a further matter ; Not only privative, I bring no ill ; but positive, I bring you good news. And good news, is, Nolite timere, and somewhat besides, (that is,) Fear not, but be of good cheer. They be two degrees plainly, though one be inferred of the other. Fear no ill, there is none to fear ; there is no ill, nay, there is good towards. For, good news is good, in that it represents the good it self to us before it come. It is but words : true : But such words made Jacob revive again, when he was more than half dead, even the good news of Josephs welfare. If I might but hear good tidings (saith David, when his bones were broken) it would make me well again : That Solomon said well, A good messenger is a good medicine.

Specially, this here which is to good, as it carrieth away the name from the rest, to be called The Gospel, or, the glad tidings, as if none to glad, nay, none glad at all without it. It is (saith the Apostle) odor suavitatis, a comfortable sweet savour. It is (saith the wise man) dulcedo animæ, & sanitas ossium, the sweetness of the soul, the very health of the bones. It is such (saith the Prophet) as the lips are precious, and the feet beautiful, of them that bring it, that a Saviour is born, as by whom, things in heaven, and things in earth, Men and Angels (which were in fear one of another) are set at peace and love : and Love casteth out fear, giveth the true Nolite timere.

3. Good news of joy : For, of good news, there are more sorts than one. Good news it had been, if it had been but Evangelizo vobis spem. News of good hope : that had been enough, for Nolite timere. This is more, it is of joy. I wor well, there is a joy in hope ; Spe gaudentes, saith the Apostle : But that joy is not full, till the fulness of time come. Nor it is not perfect, for it is allayed somewhat, with an unpleasing mixture, which is spes differens, and that (as the wise man saith) affligit animam : Hope deferred afflicteth the soul. Gaudium Spei is nothing to Gaudium rei : the hope of future, of a thing to come hereafter, nothing to the actual fruition of a thing present.

And indeed, this daies news, it was ever Evangelium spei : ever in the future tense, before. Even the very last before this, to the blessed Virgin, Ecce concipies, Thou shalt conceive : Shalt. So it was yet to come. This is the first in the present tense : Not, is to be born, is to be sent, is to come, but, Natus est, Missus est, Venit, is born, is sent, is come, Hodie, even to day, takes no time : In the City of David, not far hence, but even hard by. This is Evangelizo gaudium : This is joy indeed.

4. But even in Joy, there be divers degrees : all are not of one size : Some there are lesser : some (as this here) Gaudium magnum. The fire is, as the fuel is ; and the joy is as the matter is. There is not like joy to a Shepherd, when his Ewe brings him a Lamb, as when his Wife brings him a Son ; (yet that of a Lamb, is a joy, such as it is.) But then, if that Son should prove to be Princeps Pastorum, the Chief Shepherd in all the Land, that were somewhat more : But then, if he should prove to be a Cyrus, or a David, a Prince, then certainly it were another manner of joy, Gaudium magnum indeed. As the matter is, so is the joy. If great the Benefit, great the Person, then great the joy. And here the Benefit is great ; none greater, as much as the saving of us all, as much as all our lives and soules are worth ; therefore great. And the Person great, none so great : (it is the LORD Himself) therefore primum magnitudinis, great even as He is. Indeed so great it is, that the Prophet bids us plainly, remember no more former things, nor regard matters of old : This passeth them all, the joy of it puts them all down : so that none of them shall once be mentioned with it. Therefore well said the Angel, Evangelizo gaudium magnum.

5. And great, it may be intense, in the parties themselves : yet not great extensive, nor extend it self to many, not be gaudium magnum Populo. Yes, even that way also it is great ; it is publike joy, it is joy to the people. And, well fare that joy where it is merry withall. It is added purposely, this, that they might not mistake, when he said, Evangelizo vobis, he brought them good news ; That though he brought it them ; yet not them only, it was not appropriate to them, it was common to others : They had their parts in it, but so should others have no less than they. And every good Shepherd, will like it the better for that ; will be pro grege, and still prefer the joy of the whole flock.

6. In other joys, it falls out as Esaie tells, Multiply the Nation and ye shall not increase their joy : for, that which one wins, another loses : But this joy, the joy of Puer natus est nobis, in it, they shall all rejoyce before Thee, as men make merry in harvest, and be joyful as men that divide the spoyle. In harvest ; And a good Harvest all the Country is the better for. As a spoyle ; wherein every one hath his share. That is gaudium populi, and such is this. Well figured, in the place of His birth, an Inne, which is domus populi, open to all Passengers that will take it up : curia publica, wherein every one hath right. Yea, and the most common part of the Tune. For, though they fort themselves, and have every one their several Chambers ; in the stable all have interest ; that is common. And as the Place publike, so is the benefit, and so is the joy publike of His Birth : Christmas joy right ; All fare the better for this day. Salus populi is the best ; and so is Gaudium populi too ; and every good mind will like it so much the better, that All the people have their part in it.

7. And this were much, toti populo, to the whole people, if it were but one : but it is omni populo (say Theophylact and Beda) that is to all people ; which is a larger extent by far. And if ye speak of great joy that is great indeed, for it is universal, it is as great as the world is great : when, not the Jews only, but the Gentile, nor the Gentile, but the Jew, nor one people, but all, kept a Feast, and at this word, omni populo, Nec vox hominum sonat. It is not man that speaketh now, whose good commonly, when it is at the greatest, extendeth no further but to one Nation: But with GOD it is never great, till it come to omni populo. It is but a small thing (saith he by Esay) to raise the Tribes of Jacob, or to restore the duties of Esay 49.6. Israel: I will give thee a light to the Gentiles, and a salvation to the end of the World.

As we said of the Inne, even now, the place of His Birth: So say we here, of the time of it, it is well set down by S. Luke, to have been at the Description of the whole World; for, that was a meet time for the SAVIOUR of the whole world to be born: The dew of whose birth is of the morn of the morning, (the Psalmist in passion of joy misplacing his words,) the meaning is, His birth from the womb, is as the morning dew, which watereth and refresheth the face of the whole earth: Not Gideon's fleece, alone, but the whole earth. Not one part, nor the Jews only: No partition now, but (a) unragnum, one of two: Jud. 6.37. Nay, one of all: (b) all recapitulate in Himself, and from Him as a Center, lines of joy drawn to all; and Eph. 2.14. every part of the Circle. 1.10.

And we may not pass by Quod erit, which shall be; which not only is, but shall be. For by this word, we hold; it is our best tenure. Not only to All that then were; (then had we been out: But that were, To all people that shall be. or ever should be, to the worlds end. Omni populo, all people is the latitude or extent: Quod erit, that shall be, in the longitude or continuance of the joy, Quod erit, that it shall be a Feast of joy, so long as any people shall be, to hold a feast on the face of the earth. In a word, That same Evangelium aeternum, that S. John saw in the Angels hand, we now hear from the Angels mouth, to be preached to every nation kindred, Apo. 1.6. tongue, and people, that be, or shall be, while the world endureth.

So, if we read Quod erit, with omni populo. But some read gaudium, with quod erit: gaudium quod erit; and make a note of that: The joy, quod erit, that is, and shall be. For commonly, all our earthly joy, is gaudium quod est, & now erit, that is, for the present, but continueth not; is, but shall not be: like the blaze of a brush faggot, all of a flame, and out again suddenly; in a moment. Gaudium quod erit, the joy that so is, as it shall be still; is grounded upon the joy of this day, CHRIST, and His Birth. Without which, our joy is as the joy of men in prison, merry for a while, but within a while, sentence of death to pass upon them. Without which, Extrema gaudii luctus occupat, the end of all our mirth, will be but mourning. All joy else is, but shall not be within a while: At leastwise erit, quando non erit, A time shall be when it shall not be. Sed gaudium Aeternum nemo tollet a vobis; But my joy, mine, grounded on Me, none shall ever take from you; nor death it self. Other it shall, this it shall not; but now ye shall, this Day, and evermore ye shall rejoice in the holy comfort of it. Eccle. 7.8. Prov. 14.13. John 16.22.

And this is the magnifying of the Message. 1. No evil news, Fear not. 2. Nay, good, Be of good cheer. 3. Good news of joy. 4. Of great joy. 5. Publike joy, soci populo. 6. Universal joy, omni populo. 7. Joy to all, qui erit or shall be; And again joy, which now is, and shall be so for ever.

Now, upon all these He is utter an Ecc, and well He may, And, that is never set by the Holy Ghost, but super res magnas emittitur, upon matters of great moment. But upon this hill, upon the top of it, that hath so many ascents, a Beacon would do well. For look, how many Ecc's in the Scripture, so many Beacons; and between them, as between these, ye shall observe a good correspondence still. This Ecc here, to the last (a) Ecc conceives of the blessed Virgin; That, to Esay's, (b) Ecc conceives Virgo; That, to David's, (c) Ecc de fructu ventris tui; That, to Abraham's, (d) Ecc in semine tuo; and so up, till ye come to Semem mulieris. There they first begin, and take light one from another, till they come to the Ecc nam est hodie, the Ecc of all Ecc's, the last and highest of them all. And as a Beacon serveth to call and stir up men to have regard, so is this here to excite them (and in them, us all) with good attention to hear, and to heed these so great good tidings. And indeed, who is not excited with it? whose eye is not turned to behold this Ecc? whose ear standeth not attente, to hear this Evangelizo? whose heart doth not muse, what manner of message this should be? Chap. 1.29. Chap. 1.31. Esay 7.14. Psal. 132.11. Gen. 22.18. 3.15. Chap. 1.29.

This it is then, Quod natus est. The birth of a Child: this there is one born this day, the cause of all this joy.

There is a joy at every birth. Sorrow in the travail (saith our SAVIOUR;) but after the delivery, the anguish is no more remembered, for joy that a man is born into the world.

But the greater he is that is born, and the more beneficial his birth, the greater ado is made. And among men, because there are none greater than Princes, and great things are looked for at their hands, their Births are ever used to be kept with great triumph. Pharaoh's, in the Old; Herod's, in the New: both their Natus est's, times of feasting.

Now of Him that is born here, it may truly be said, Ecc major hic, Behold a greater is born here, One, whose Birth is good news, even from the poorest Shepherd, to the richest Prince upon the earth.

Who is it? Three things are said of this Child by the Angel. 1. He is a SAVIOUR. 2. Which is CHRIST. 3. CHRIST the LORD. Three of His Titles, well and orderly inferred one of another by good consequence. We cannot miss one of them; they be necessary all. Our method, on earth, is to begin with great: In Heaven, they begin with good first.

First then a SAVIOUR, that is his Name: JESUS, Soter; and in that name, His benefit, Salus, A SAVIOUR; saving health, or Salvation. Such a name as the great Orator himself saith of it, Soter, hoc quantum est? In Vetrum. IV. Ita magnus est, ut latine non verbo exprimi non possit. The name SAVIOUR is so great, as no one word can express the force of it.

But we are not so much to regard the Ecc, how great it is, as gaudium, what joy is in it; that is the point we are to speak on. And for that; men may take what they will, but, sure, there is no joy in the world, world, to the joy of a man saved: no joy so great, no news so welcome, as to one ready to perish, in case of a lost man to hear of one that will save him. In danger of perishing by sickness, to hear of one will make him well again. By sentence of the Law, of one with a pardon to save his life. By enemies, of one that will rescue and set him in safety. Tell any of these, assure them but of a Saviour, it is the best news he ever heard in his life. There is joy in the name of a Saviour. And even this way, this Child is a SAVIOUR too. Potest hoc facere, sed hoc non est opus ejus, This He can do, but this is not his work: a further matter there is, a greater Salvation He came for. And it may be, we need not any of these; we are not presently sick, in no fear of the Law, in no danger of enemies, and it may be if we were, we phantasie to our selves to be relieved some other way. But that which he came for, that saving we need all; and none but He can help us to it. We have therefore (all) cause to be glad for the birth of this SAVIOUR.

I know not how, but when we hear of saving, or mention of a Saviour, presently our mind is carried to the saving of our skin, of our temporal state, of our bodily life, and further saving we think not of. But, there is another life, not to be forgotten; and greater the danger; and the destruction there, more to be feared than of this here; and it would be well, sometimes we were remembered of it. Besides our skin and flesh, a soul we have, and it is our better part by far; that also hath need of a Saviour; that hath her destruction, out of which; that hath her destroyer, from which she would be saved; and those would be thought on. Indeed our chief thought and care would be for that; how to escape the wrath, how to be saved from the destruction to come, whither our sins will certainly bring us.

Sin it is, will destroy us all. And (to speak of a Saviour) there is no person on earth hath so much need of a Saviour as hath a sinner. Nothing so dangerous, so deadly unto us, as is the sin in our bosome, nothing from which we have so much need to be saved, whatsoever account we make of it. From it cometh upon us all the evil of this life: and from it all the evil of the life to come: in comparison whereof, these here are not worth the speaking of. Above all then we need a Saviour, for our souls, and from our sins; and from the everlasting destruction, which sin will bring upon us in the other life, not far from us, not from him of us, that thinketh it farthest off.

Then if it be good tidings to hear of a Saviour, where it is but a matter of the loss of earth, or of this life here: how then, when it cometh to the loss of Heaven; to the danger of Hell, when our soul is at the stake, and the well-doing or undoing of it for ever? He that could save our souls from that destroyer, were not the birth of such an one good news trow? Is not such a Saviour worth the hearkening after? Is he not? It is then because we have not that sense of our souls, and the dangers of them, that we have of our bodies: nor that fear of our ghostly enemies, nor that lively apprehension of the eternal torments of that place, and how near we are to it, (nothing being betwixt us and it, but this poor puffe of breath which is in our nostrils:) Our carnal part is quick, and sensible: our spiritual is dead and dull. We have not the feeling of our sins, that we have of our sickness: if we had, we would hear this news with greater cheerfulness, and hold this Day of the Birth of such a Saviour, with joy indeed. We cannot conceive it yet, this destruction is not neer enough to affect us. But, in novissimo intelligeris plane, in the end, when the Destroyer shall come, and we shall find the want of a Saviour, we shall plainly understand this, and value this benefit and the joy of it, as we ought; and find, there is no joy in the earth to the joy of a Saviour.

* John 6. 27.

There is born a Saviour, is the first. The Angel addeth further, A Saviour which is Christ. For many Saviours had been born, many had God sent them, that diverse times had set them free from divers dangers of their enemies; Moses, from the Egyptians; Joshua, from the Canaanites; Gideon, from the Madianites; Jephtha, from the Ammonites; Samson, from the Philistines. And indeed, the whole story of the Bible is nothing else, but a Calender of Saviours; that God from time to time still stirred them up.

But these all were but petty Saviours; there was one yet behind, that was worth them all. One, that should save His people from their sins; save, not their bodies for a time, but their souls for ever, which none of those Saviours could do. One therefore much spoken of, wished for, and waited for, a SAVIOUR which was CHRIST: when He came they looked for great matters, as said the woman at the well-side: for He was the most famous and greatest Saviour of all. And this is He, A Saviour which is Christ. He, of whom all the Promises made mention, and He the performance of them all: of whom all the Types under the Law were shadows, and He the substance of them all: Of whom all the Prophecies ran, and He the fulfilling of them all: He, of whom all those inferiour Saviours were the figures and fore-runners, and He the accomplishment of them all, that in them was wanting. This is He: Jacobs (a) Shilo, Esay's (b) Immanuel, Jeremies (c) Branch, Daniels (d) Messias, Zacharies (e) Oriens ab alto, Aggies (f) Desideratus cunctis Gentibus. The desire of all the Nations, then; and now the joy of all Nations, A Saviour which is CHRIST.

And what is meant by this term CHRIST? A Saviour Anointed, or, (as in another place it is said, more agreeable to our phrase of speaking) a Saviour sealed, a Saviour under Gods Great Seal. That is, not as those other were, Saviours raised up of a sudden, upon some occasion; to serve the turn for the present, and never heard of till they came? but a Saviour in GODS fore-counsel resolved on, and given forth, from the beginning; promised and foretold, and now signed and sent, with absolute commission and fulness of power, to be the perfect and compleat SAVIOUR of all.

And to be it, ex officio; His Office, His very profession; to be one, that all may have right to repair unto Him, and find it at His hands. Not a Saviour incidentally, as it fell out: but one, ex professo, anointed to that end, and by vertue of His Anointing appointed, set forth and sent into the world, to exercise this function of a Saviour: Not for a time, but for ever, not to the Jews (as did the rest) but even to all the ends of the earth. So runs His Bill, (a) Venite ad me omnes, Come all: and (b) Qui ad me venerit non esuriam for as of them that come to me, I will cast none out: (c) Salvator omnium hominum, the Saviour of all men (and as the Samaritan said of Him, (d) Servator mundi, The Saviour of the world,) of Samaritans, Jews, Gentiles: of Kings, of Shepherds and all.

And yet there is more particularity in this word CHRIST: Three Offices did GOD from the beginning erect to save His people by, and that by three acts, (The very Heavhen took notice of them,) ¹ Purgare, ² Illuminare, ³ Perficere. ¹ Priests, to purge or expiate: ² Prophets, to illuminate or direct them; ³ Kings, to set all right, and keep all right, in that perfection, which this world admitteth. And all these three had their several Anointings. Aaron the Priest, Lev. 8. 12. Elisha the Prophet, 1 Reg. 19. 16. Saul the King, 1 Sam. 10. 1. In the Saviour which is Christ, his will was, all should meet, that nothing in him might want to the perfecting of this work, that he might be a perfect Saviour of all, He was all. A Priest after the order of Melchizedek, Psal. 110. 4. A Prophet to be heard when Moses should hold his peace, Deut. 18. 18. A King to save His people, whose name should be JEHOVAH Iustitia nostra, Jer. 23. 6. Davids Priest, Moses Prophet, Jeremies King.

And these formerly had met double, two of them in some other; Melchisedek, King and Priest; Samuel, Priest and Prophet; David, Prophet and King. Never all three, but in Him alone; and so, no perfect Christ but He: but He all and so perfect. By His Priesthood, to purge, expiate, and save us from our sins, being a propitiation to God for them: By His Prophecie, to illuminate, and save us from the by-paths of error, guiding our feet in the way of peace: By His Kingdom, protecting and conducting us thorow the miseries of this life, till He perfect us eternally by Himself in the joyes of His heavenly Kingdom. Rightly then, a Saviour which is Christ.

Now, as in the Name Saviour there was, so is there likewise joy in this Name Christ; and that, many waies: 1. First, that we shall hang no more in expectation; We shall be no longer Vindicti, Hopes prisoners. He that should come is come. The promised Saviour, The Saviour which is Christ, is now born, and when spes becomes res, then our joy is full. 2. That now, there is a saving Office erected; one Anointed to that end, a professed Saviour, to whom all may resort. We shall not be to seek; there is a Name given under Heaven, whereby we may be sure of salvation, the Name of Christ. 3. That to this out saving we have the joyned consent and good will of all parties; in this name Christ. Christ (that is Anointed), what person is He? The Son, the second Person. Anointed, by whom? By the Father: Quem unxit, (Act. 4. 27.) the first Person. Anointed, with what? With the Holy Ghost, Act. 10. 38. the third Person. So a concurrence of all Persons in this Name; all willing and well-pleased, with the work of our salvation. 4. If we would be saved, we would be saved, unctione, by Oyle, not by Vinegar. Et unguentum effusum, Nomen. Ejus: And His Name is Christ, one that saveth by anointing. 5. And if by Oyle, (there be hot Oyles) with a gentle linitio Oyle. And the Oyle which He useth, wherewith He is anointed, is the Oyle of gladness. Gladness therefore must needs go with this Name. Which Oyle of gladness is not for Himself, but for us: not for His use, but for ours. So He saith Himself in His first Sermon at Nazareth, upon His text out of Esay 61. 2. The anointing (this oyle of gladness) was upon Him to bellow it upon us, and of us: Upon them especially, that through a wounded conscience, were troubled with the spiritus of heaviness, to turn their heaviness into joy. Glad then; that He is come; that by His Office is to save: and to come with the good liking of all: to save us by Oyle, and that, the Oyle of gladness.

And yet to make our joy more full, the Angel addeth the third, A Saviour which is Christ; Christ the Lord. For neither is this all. He is not Christ only. We must not stay there. For the name Christ will agree, hath been, and may be imparted to others besides. Many a King in Scripture, hath had the honour to carry the Name of Christ; But with a difference. The King, Christus Domini, the Lords Christ; He Christus Dominus, the Lord Christ, or Christ the Lord. Consider then how great this Child is, whose anointed, Kings themselves are. For if they be Christi Domini, the Lords Anointed; His they are, for He is the Lord. The Lord absolute without any addition; ye may put it to what ye will, Lord of men and Angels, Lord of Heaven and Earth, and all the Host of them, Dominus Christorum, and Dominus Davidorum, LORD put amount over all.

But why the Lord? Because this Name of Christ will sort with men. Nay, as He is Christ (that is Anointed) He is Man only. It is His name as Man, for God cannot be anointed. But He that should save us would be more than Man, and so more than Christ. Indeed, Christ cannot save us: He that must save us must be the Lord. For, such a Saviour it behooveth us to have, as might not begin the work of our Salvation, and leave it in the midst, but go through with it, and make an end too; which the former Saviours could not do. Formerly, ever their complaint was, that their Saviours, their Christs died still, and left them to seek: their Kings, and Priests, and Prophets dropt away still; for they were not suffered to endure by reason of death. But this Saviour, this Christ, because He is the Lord, endureth for ever, hath an everlasting Priesthood, Kingdom and Prophecie, and so is able perfectly to save them, that come to God by Him. This is one reason, why, hither we must come at the last to Christ the Lord; and till we be at it, we be, not where we should, Else, our Saviours will die, and leave us destitute.

But the main reason is set down by Esay, Ego sum. Ego sum, (saith God Himself) & præter me non est servator: It is I, I that am the Saviour, I am, and besides Me there is no Saviour. None indeed, no true Saviour, but the Lord. All other are short, Vana salus hominis, saith the Psalm, Mans salvation is vain, any salvation is vain, if it be not the Lords. 1. Those Christs, that were not the Lord, could not save but the body, and not one of them quicken his own soul: Christ, that is the Lord, can save souls and bodies, His own and others both. 2. Those Christs, that were not the Lord, could save but from carnal enemies, with arms of flesh: He, from our ghostly enemies, even spiritual wickednesses in heavenly places, from Abaddon the great destroyer destroyer of the bottomleſs pit. 3. They, that were not the Lord, could ſave but from worldly calamities, could but prune and take off the twigs, (as it were;) He, from ſin it ſelf, and ſo plucked it up by the roots. 4. They, that were not the Lord, put it off but for a time, & after it came again, ſemporal only. He for ever, once for all : and is become Author of eternal ſalvation, to all that depend on Him. And mark that word [eternal]: For none but the Lord can work eternal ſalvation. 5. They all had need of a Saviour themſelves, and of this Saviour : He needs none, receives of none, imparts to all ; as being not a Saviour only, but Salus ipſa in abstracto, Salvation it ſelf, (as Simion calleth Him) of whoſe fulneſs we all receive. To ſave, my agree to man : To be ſalvation, can agree to none but to Chriſt the Lord. To begin and to end ; to ſave ſoule and body, from the bodily and ghottly enemies ; from ſin the root, and miſery the branches ; for a time, and for ever ; to be a Saviour, and to be Salvation it ſelf, Chriſt the Lord is all this, and can do all this. Now then we are right, and never till now. A Saviour which is Chriſt the Lord.

But the name [Lord] goeth yet further : not only to ſave us, and ſet us free from danger, to deliver us from evil ; but to ſtate us in as good and better condition, than we forfeited by our fall ; or elſe though we were ſaved, we ſhould not ſave by the match. To make us then ſavers, and not ſavers only, but gainers, and that great gainers by our ſalvation, He doth further impart alſo the eſtate annexed of this liſt title, even whatſoever He is Lord of Himſelf. And He is Lord of life, (ſaith S. Peter, Acts 3:15.) Life then He imparts. And He is Lord of glory, (ſaith S. Paul, 1 Cor. 2:8.) Glory then He imparts. And He is Lord of joy, (Imra in gaudium Domini, Enter into the joy of the Lord, Mat. 25:21.) Joy then He imparts. Life, and Glory, and Joy, and makes us Lords of them, and of whatſoever is within the Name, and title of Lord. For having thereto a double right, 'by Inheritance, as the Son, (Heb. 1:2.) 'And by Purchase, as a Redeemer (for therefore He died, and roſe again, that He might be Lord of all, Rom. 14:9.) contenting himſelf with the former ; He is we'll pleaſed to ſet over the latter to us, and admit us with Himſelf into His eſtate of joyn't purchase of Heaven, or whatſoever he is owner of ; that, in right of it, we may enter into the Life, Glory, and Joy of our Lord, and ſo be ſaved, and be ſavers, and more than ſavers every way. This alſo, is in the word Lord : this benefit further we have by it.

And now if we will put together, Natus and Servator, Servator and Chriſtus, Chriſtus and Dominus, Dominus and Natus : Born and Saviour, Saviour and Chriſt, Chriſt and the Lord, the Lord and Born : take them which way you will in combination, any of the four, then have we his two Natures in one perſon. In Servator, his Godhead, None but God is a Saviour. In Chriſtus, his Manhood : God cannot be Anointed, Man may. In Dominus, his Divine again, the Lord from heaven. In Natus, his humane Nature, directly, born of a woman : Both (ever) carefully joyned and to be joyned together. When S. Matthew had begun his Goſpel thus : The Book of the generation of Jeſus Chriſt the Son of David, one Nature, his humanity ; S. Mark was careful to begin his thus : The beginning of the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt the Son of God, the other Nature his Divinity. But S. John, he joynes them, Verbum caro factum eſt, the Word became fleſh. Verbum, the Word, there is Dominus ; and Caro the fleſh, that is, Natus.

And even this very conjunction is a new Joy. For, that ſuch an one, that the Lord would condeſcend to be born, beſides the benefit there is alſo matter of Honour. Even that he, ſo great a Perſon, would become ſuch as we are, would ſo eſteem our Nature, as to take it upon him ; This certainly it is a great dignity and exaltation of our nature ; And it is a matter of new joy : That he would ſo highly value it, as to aſſume, aſſociate, and unite it into one Perſon, with the Son of God. By this we ſee, why a Saviour, why Chriſt : why the Lord. A Saviour, his name of benefit, whereby he is to deliver us. Chriſt, his name of Office, whereby he is bound to undertake it. The Lord, his name of Power whereby he is able to effect it. We ſee alſo why Man, and why God : Firſt, So it ſhould be ; for of right none was to make ſatisfaction for man, but man, And in very deed, none was able to give ſatisfaction to God, but God. So that being to ſatisfie God for Man, He was to be God and Man. Secondly, So we would wiſh it our ſelves : If we would be ſaved, we would be ſaved by one of our nature ; not by any ſtranger. He is born, and ſo one of our own nature. Again, if we would be ſaved, we would be ſaved by no inferior, but by the beſt : he is the Lord, and ſo the very beſt of all, And ſo, our deſire is ſatisfied every way.

This bleſſed Birth of this Saviour, which is Chriſt the Lord, thus furniſhed in every point, to ſave us thoroughly, body and ſoul, from ſin, the deſtruction, and Satan the deſtroyer of both, and that both here, and for ever ; this bleſſed, and thrice bleſſed Birth is the ſubſtance of this Daies ſolemnity, of the Angels Message, and of our joy.

The Circum-
ſtance of the perſons to whom.

And now to the Circumſtances : and firſt of the Perſons, vobis, I bring, you good tydings : That to you is born, &c.

Mar. 8. 9.

We find not any word through all, but there is joy in it : and yet all is ſuſpended, till we come to this one word [vobis] : this makes us all. This word therefore we ſhall do well ever to look for, and when we find it, to make much of it. Nothing paſſeth without it ; it is the word of application. But for it, all the reſt are looſe ; this girds it on, this faſtens it to us, and makes it ours. But for it, we are but in their caſe, Quid nobis & tibi, what have we to do with thee ? This Saviour Chriſt the Lord, in this good time and fit place, quid ad nos ? what are we the better ? Omni populo, is ſomewhat too general, and the hundreth part of them ſhall not be benefited by him. We would hear it in more particularity. Why, vobis, for you it is, Born for you ; Yea, now ye ſay ſomewhat.

bis and Natus
vobis.
have of it.

And twice it is repeated for failing, in every verſe once. Evangelizo vobis, and natus vobis, that ye may know the Message is yours, and the birth is yours ; therefore the message is ſent to you, becauſe the birth concerneth you. But yours they be, both.

May we then be bold to change the perſon, and utter it in the firſt, which he doth in the ſecond, and ſay say Nobis! We may sure, Puer natus est nobis; * Esay hath said it before us. And thereby, lyeth a myſtery: the Angels they ſay, Vobis; The Prophets were men: men ſay, Nobis. Bid the Angel ſay, Nobis, he cannot, neither ſing nor ſay it; Angelis he cannot, to Angels, Nuſquam Angelos: but Homini unto men, he can and doth. And this is a ſpecial high prerogative; that which the Angels can neither ſing nor ſay, we can do both.

* Eſay 9. 6.
Heb 2. 16.

Luk. 15. 31.

If then He be born to us, it is to ſome end. Eſay tells us, what it is, when he expoundeth Natus, by Datus, born to us, by given us. Born, to be beſtowed upon us. And if given us, beſtowed upon us, then He is ours. Ours His benefit, His Office, His Power: His benefit, to ſave us; His Office, to undertake us, His power, to aſſure us. Ours His ſalvation, as Jeſus; His anointing, as Chriſt; His Dominion, as the Lords. And if He be ours, then all His are ours: Omnia Ejus noſtra ſunt: His Birth ours, and if His Birth, all that follow His Birth, ours too.

Now then, ſeeing He and they be ours, will it not be well done, to make our entry, to take ſeiſin of Him and them, and diſpoſe them to our beſt benefit? And how can we do that better, Than as God hath offered Him to us this day, that He was born for us: ſo we reciprocally this day, that He is born, offer Him again to God, as the beſt pleaſing Oblation that we can offer Him. To day, as in the Temple alive, for our morning Oblation: And when the time cometh of His death, offer him as on the Croſs, ſlain for our evening Sacrifice. So ſhall we, as Bernard wiſheth us, ui noſtra, in uſilitatem noſtram, & de ſalvatore ſalutem operari, Imploy or make uſe of Him for our beſt behoof: draw His proper extract from him, and work ſalvation out of this our Saviour.

Now, a word only, what is to be done on our parts, and that reſpectively to theſe two points, what we are to return to them; what to this Message, and what to this Birth.

To the Message, Evangelizo vobis, this we are to return, this is due to a message, to hear it. And that we do, and that is all: we come to the Sermon, we hear it, and little we do beſides. But we hear it but heavily, with a faint affection (God knoweth:) we hear it not as an Ecce, as matter of high admiration: we hear it not as Gaudium magnum, with that alacrity and cheerfulness we ſhould. We hear it not as nobis, as if it nearly touched us, but as a matter that little concerned us, it ſkilled not much whether we heard it or no. Many meaner things affect us more, but this ſhould be the joyfulleſt hearing that we ever heard.

To hear the Message.

And ſhall we not likewise perform ſome duty to Natus est? yes, even to that alſo. And not hear of Him, and let Him alone: hear his ſayings, and let Himſelf go.

To receive him,

He was born for us, and given us, Natus nobis, and Donatus nobis (both go together in the Prophet.) To a gift the duty that belongeth properly, is to receive it. If He be Natus nobis, and Donatus nobis, I truſt we will take order, He be Acceptus a nobis. If born for us, and given us, it is our part then, we can do no leſs than receive him. We evacuate the gift, diſgrace both the Giver and it, if we vouchſafe not to accept of it.

How is that? how ſhall we receive Him? who ſhall give him us? That ſhall one, that will ſay unto us within a while, Accipe, Take, This is my body, by the offering whereof ye are ſanctified. Take, this is my Blood, by the ſhedding whereof ye are ſaved. Both, in the holy Myſteries ordained by God, as pledges to aſſure us, and as Conduit-pipes to convey into us, this; and all other the benefits, that come by this our Saviour.

Heb. 10. 10.

Verily, upon His memorable daies, (of which this is the firſt) we are bound to do ſomething in memory, or remembrance of Him; What is that? Will ye know what it is? Hoc facite, Do this in remembrance of me.

Something would be thought on, to return Him for all His benefits, and this day for this firſt, the foundation of all the reſt; His Birth. Some thanks would be rendered him for it. And how can we do that better, than as we are taught by him, that ſtudied the point of Quid retribuam, and reſolved it thus, no way ſo well, as by Accipiam Calicem: I will take the cup of ſalvation. And ſo do it: So, with it taken into our hands, give thanks to the name of the Lord. And when better, than to day; Hodie, as we are here directed. What better day than on this day? the very day He was beſtowed on us. To defer Him no longer, than He did us. He deferred not us at all, but as ſoon as He was born, ſent us word the ſame inſtant: and ſhall we defer Him to hear of us another time; and not be as ready on our part to receive him inſtantly, as he was on his, to beſtow Himſelf; even preſently, as ſoon as He was born? Sure, ſomewhat would be done more than ordinary this day of His Birth; the day it ſelf is more than ordinary.

Pſal. 116. 13.

And let this move us. If ever there be a day of ſalvation, Ecce hic est dies ſalutis, Behold this is it, when a Saviour is born unto us. If ever an accepted time, Ecce tempus acceptum, Behold, now it is, this is that time. The Birth-day hath ever been a time accepted. Then, one King forgave the treſpaſs of his Servant, and received him to Grace. Another, being pleaſed, was ready in his bounty to have given away the one half of his kingdom. Our Saviour Chriſt; Our Lord, on His Birth-day, will be no worſe than they. His bounty, then, no leſs than theirs.

Gen. 40. 21.
Mar. 6. 23.

Let us then make this ſo accepted a time in it ſelf, twice acceptable, by our accepting: which, he will acceptably take at our hands. Let us honour this day, with our receiving: which he hath honoured by his firſt giving: Yielding him evermore, (but this day, the day of it, chiefly,) our unfained hearty thanksgiving for this ſo good news; for this ſo great a Gift; both of them this day vouchſafed us: in Him and for Him, who was himſelf the gift, our Saviour, Chriſt, the Lord. To whom with the Father and the Holy Ghoſt, three Perſons, One Immortal, Everliving, Inviſible, only Wiſe God; be all honour, glory, bleſſing, praiſe, and thanksgiving, this day and for ever.

and Truth.*

Luke 17. 37.

Here is, in the Old Testament (in the tenth of Ezekiel) and in the New (in the 4. of the Revelation), a Vision of four sundry shapes, A Man, a Lion, an Oxe, and an Eagle. It hath been usually received, to apply these four to the four Evangelists, and of them, the Eagle, to S. John. The nature of the Eagle is, by GOD himself, described (Job 39.) by two properties; 'Elevare ad ardua, no fowl under heaven towreth so high: ' and ubique fuerit cadaver, statim adest. None so soon or so suddenly down upon the body, as he. Both these do lively express themselves in S. John: and no where more lively than in this Gospel. Wherein, as an Eagle in the Clouds, he first mounteth wonderfully high, beyond Moses and his In principio, with an higher In principio than it; beyond Genesis and the Worlds Creation: That the Word was then with GOD, and was GOD. This may well be termed the Eagle's flight; so exceeding high, as the clearest eye hath much ado, to follow him. Yet so far as they can follow him, the very Philosophers have been driven to admire the penning of this Gospel. But after this, as an Eagle again, (Ubi corpus, ibi Aquila;) down he cometh directly from the heights of heaven, and lights upon the body of his flesh, the mystery of his Incarnation: and tells us, that he that in the beginning, was apud Deum, and Deus. He, in the fulness of time, was apud homines, and Homo. He dwelt not long aloft; he knew, it was not to purpose: Verbum Deus is far above our reach. Verbum caro, that concerns us. No time, but it concerns us: but, this time, above others. This Feast is held, this Assembly mer, for no other end, but to celebrate the contents of the Text, that the Word, being made flesh, this day, came to dwell among us.

1. Job. 1. 2.

Two parts there be in the Text, sensibly parted by a Parenthesis. That without the Parenthesis, is, that he would have us believe, Verbum caro, &c. That, within, is the Affidavit, Vidimus, &c. In the former, three things are affirmed of the Word. 'Factum est nobis; 'habitavit in nobis; 'plenum pro nobis: 'That the Word was made flesh of us; 'dwelt with us; 'was full for us.

Then followeth the Affidavit of these. That S. John (and other more, besides,) saw; and so spake no more than they knew; nor testified no more, than they had seen. The best Proof that can be. They saw (though, not the Word himself, yet) His glory: We saw His glory. And that glory such, as would suit with none but him; and so, every way sufficient, to demonstrate him, the only Son of GOD.

And

And, after all this, one more there is, without which, his Making, Dwelling, and Seeing were to little purpose: That is, that as he came not obscurely, but was seen; so he came not empty, but full of grace and truth. This fulness was not for himself, but for us: Et de plenitudine Ejus omnes accepimus. Verse 16.

There is not any thing, that concerneth this Mystery, but is within this Text. His two Natures, The Word, and Flesh: 'Word, Divine; 'Flesh, Humane. The Union of them in factum est; union into a Person, in Habitavit: Habitare, est Persona. 'Then, his Office also, 'Equivocal, which is not only habitation, but castrametavit in nobis: not only, took a house, but pitched a pavilion in us; Not only, factus Incola, made out Neighbour; but, made a Champion, for us, to undertake our quarrel, and to fight a combat. 'And last, the Benefit: Made, that he might Dwell; and Dwell, that he might impart to us, (and we derive from him) that, whereof he was full, and we were empty; we had need, and he had store; grace and truth.

All reducible to these three: ' Quod Verbum, caro: ' Quid Verbum, Carni: ' Quid Caro, Verbo.
' That the Word became flesh; the Mystery: ' What the Word did for flesh; the Benefit: ' And, what flesh is to do to the Word again; the duty.

We are in a deep point, and a dangerous. It will not be amiss to pause a little on the three termes; Verbum Caro, and factum est. The Word. ' There be, that take this name to be given him, as who should say: He, of whom so many excellent words are spoken, all along this Book; so many words of promise, and prophesie, and all of Him: So, the word Objectivè. ' Others: for that he discloseth to us all GODS counsel, even as the word openeth the mind of man; by whom as his Word we know whatsoever we know of the Fathers mind, So the word Effectivè. ' A third; for that he cometh; not only as JESUS, to save us; but, as the Word, to teach us: We, as to honour him; so learn his Word, as the way to our Salvation. So, the word, Præceptivè.

4. These are all well, and true all: but, all short. We may have use of them; but there is a farther matter than all these. This Word (as we find, in the Affidavit) is the only begotten of the Father. These two are one, and the same; but need to be set in two termes, that what is wanting in the one, may be supplied by the other: (So high is the Divine Nature above our reach, as no one terme is able to express it: It is well, if divers will do it.) In this they agree: as the Son is, to the Father; so is the Word to the Mind. The Son, Proles Parentis; the Word, Proles mentis: They proceed, both: the Son, from the Father; the Word, from the mind: and so note our unto us, a Party proceeding, a second Person, from the first: from him that begetteth, the Son; from him that speaketh, the Word; Against Sabellius.

The word, and the only begotten of the Father.
proceeding.

The Son referreth to a living nature: The Word addeth farther an intellectual nature: Generare est viventium, Loqui intelligentium: That, there is in him, not only the Nature, and Life, but the Wisdom of the Father.

Both Proceed. The Word sheweth the Manner; the Son, the truth of his proceeding. With us the Son is not begot, but by flesh, by propagation: The Word therefore requisite, to shew, his proceeding was after no carnal manner; but, as the word from the mind. A better terme could not be devised. For, there is not in all the World, a more pure, simple, inconcrete procreation, than that, whereby the mind conceiveth the word within it, by dixit in corde. For, in it self, and of it self doth the mind produce it, without help of any mixture of ought, without any passion stirring or agitation at all. Such was the issue of the word eternal. But then, lest we might imagine Gods Word to be, to him, no other than ours is to us, not of our substance; He makes amends for that, and tells us, He is the only begotten, and so of the substance of his Father, (very God, of very God,) as all begotten sons be. The Word, to shew his proceeding pure, and meetly spiritual: the Son, to shew, that for all that, it is true and substantial. Truly consubstantial with the Father, as the Son; but in all clean and pure manner conceived, as the word.

The Son, though he be consubstantial; yet the person of his Father may have a being long before him. The Word makes amends for that. For, the minds conceiving, and the mind cannot be severed a moment; if one be eternal, both are. So then, as the Son, he is consubstantial: as the Word, he is coeternal.

But he begins with the Word. His care being, first to tell us of the pureness of his generation, before of his generation it self: but after, by little and little, unfoldeth himself, and tells, he is so the Word, as the Son also. Indeed, it was best beginning with the Word. That terme the Heavenly Wise-men, the Philosophers would never stumble at, but brook it well enough: As (indeed) they did, not with approbation only, (but with high admiration) read and magnifie the beginning of this Gospel. Witneſs Tert. in Apol. Euf. in prepar. August de Civit. 10. and Theodoret. It was conform to their reason: Quod Deus ab æterno intelligit, and that Nûs and Abg, the conceiving of the mind, and the mind must needs be coeternal: the mind never without it: as the Prophet saith, Egressus ejus à diebus æternitatis. This for the Word, of much more that might be said of it. Mica 5. 2.

' As the Word, and the Only begotten refer to one: so doth Caro, and in nobis, Flesh, and in us; that is, such flesh as is in us, Humane flesh. 1. To express the Union fully, a better word could not be chosen. It is a part, for the whole; and the worse part, for the whole, of purpose. For, in this case, our nature is best set out, by the worse part. For, this we know; if the worse be taken, the better will not be left behind. If he abhor not the flesh, of the Spirit there will be no question. More forcible it is, to say, He was made flesh, than he was made man, though both be true. He vouchsafed to become man, nothing so much, as to become flesh, the very lowest and basest part of man.

2. Besides, from the Flesh (as from Eve) came the beginning of transgression, longing after the forbidden fruit, refused the Word quite; so of all other, least likely to be taken. The Word not refusing it, the rest have good hope.

3. But, there is a kind of necessity, to use the terme flesh. If he had said Man, man may be taken for a Person. He took no Person, but our Nature He took: Flesh is no Person, but Nature only; and so best expresseth it. And if soul, it might have been taken, as if he took not the flesh, but medicaine animæ; but, so he did not, but as immediately, and as soon, the flesh, as the soul: in one instant both.

4. Yet one more. It will not be amiss to tell you; The word, that is Hebrew for flesh, the same is also Hebrew for good tidings, (as we call it, the Gospel :) Sure, not without the Holy Ghost so dispensing it. There could be no other meaning; but that, some Incarnation, or Making flesh, should be generally good news for the whole World. To let us know, this good tidings is come to pass, he tells us, the Word is now become flesh.

Thus, why flesh: now, why the Word, flesh. Caro Verbum was our bane; flesh would be the Word; nay, wiser than the Word, and know what was evill, better than it. If Caro Verbum, our bane; then, Verbum Caro, our remedy.

2. Surely, if the Word would become flesh, it were (so) most kindly. The Word, was pars laesa, the party that was most offended. If he would undertake it; if he, against whom the offence was, would be Author of the reconciliation, there were none to that: it were (so) most proper.

3. But, in another respect, he were fit too. He had said above: All things were made by him: a kind of meetness there were, ut per quem facta omnia, per eundem refecta, he that first made them, should restore them; he that built, repair; So is best, ever.

4. And indeed, Sic oportet implere omnem iustitiam, that were the way to fulfill all justice; if the Word would take flesh, he might make full amends for the fleshes fault, in rejecting the Word. So is justice; that flesh for flesh; and, not the flesh of oxen and sheep; but even that flesh, thine sumus, (our flesh) should suffer for it, and so suffering make satisfaction to Justice.

3. Why then, factum est caro, the Word is made flesh: This makes up all. For, factum est, ergo, est, he is made flesh; therefore, is flesh: Fieri terminatur ad esse, the end of making is being. And per modum naturæ: (so is ἐκ φύσεως, the Greek word :) this being is natural; Et nativitas est via ad naturam, and nativity is the way to nature. So, to be born: as, this day, he was: Venit per carnem, sancti per verbum, that all flesh may see the Salvation of GOD. Made it was; against Manicheus, holding that he had no true body: as if factum had been fictum, or making were mocking. Made it was: but, how made? Not Convertendo, the Word converted into flesh, (as Cerinthus;) or flesh converted into the Word, Verbum caro facta est (as Valentinus;) for, the Deity cannot be changed into any thing; nor any thing, into it. Nor made conciliando, (as friends are made,) so as, they continue two several persons still: and while the flesh suffered, the Word stood by and looked on, (as Nestorius.) That is cum carne, not caro, made with flesh, not flesh: And, never was one person said to be made another. Nor made, by compounding; and so, a third thing produced of both (as Emichus;) For so, he should be neither of both, Word nor flesh, neither GOD, nor man.

But, made he was; St. Paul tells us, homo assumendo, by taking the seed of Abraham (Heb. ii.) his generation eternal; (as Verbum Deus;) is, as the enduring the Word, within the heart. His generation in time (verbum caro) is, as the uttering it forth with the voice. The inward motion of the mind taketh unto it a natural body of clay, and to becometh vitall; it is not changed into it, the Word remaineth still, as it was; yet they two become one voice. Take a similitude from our selves. Our soul is not turned into, nor compounded with the body: yet, they two, though distinct in natures, grow into one man: So, into the Godhead was the man-hood taken; the Natures preserved, without confusion; the Person entire, without division. Take the definition of the fourth General Council: Sic factum est caro, ut maneret verbum: non immutando, quod erat, sed suscipiendo, quod non erat: nostra auxit; sua non minuit; nec Sacramentum pietatis, Detrimentum Deitatis: he was so made flesh, that he ceased not to be the Word; never changing that he was, but taking that he was not: We were the better, he was never the worse; the Mystery of Godliness was no detriment to the Godhead, nor the honour of the Creature wrong to the CREATOR.

And now being past these points of belief, I come to that, which I had much rather stand on, (and so it is best for us;) that which may stir up our love to him, that thus became flesh for us.

1. First, comparing Factum with Dictum. For, if we were so much beholden for verbum dictum, the word spoken, the Promise; how much more for verbum factum, the Performance? If, for factum carni, the Word that came to flesh; how then for factum caro, became flesh?

2. Then, taking factum absolutely. The Word, by whom all things were made, to come to be made it self. It is more for him, fieri, to be made any thing, than facere, to make another World, yea, many Worlds more. There is more a great deal, in this factum est, than in omnia per Ipsum facta sunt: in He made, than in All things by Him were made.

3. Factum est, with what he was made. For, if made; made the most compleat thing of all, that ever he had made: Made a Spirit, for God is a Spirit; some degree of nearness between them: But what is man, that he should be made Him, or the Son of man, that he should take his Nature upon him!

If man, yet the more noble part, the immortal part, the soul: What else? There are some points of His Image in that: it understandeth, it loveth, hath a kind of capacity of the Word. So hath not the flesh: it is res bruta, common to them with us; neither able to understand, or love, or in any degree capable ble of it. Make it the Soule, the precious soul (so calleth it Solomon;) not the body, the vile body (so the Apostle calleth it.) Of the Word he said ever, vidimus gloriam Eius, we saw the glory of it: of the flesh we may say, vidimus sordes eius, we daily see that comes from it, as non est vilis stercusculum, on the dung-hill, worse is not to be seen. Set not so precious a stone in so base metal.

But this is not all. If he must be made, for love of GOD, make him something wherein is some good: For, in our flesh (St. Paul saith) there dwelleth no good: Yea, the very wisdom of the flesh at flat defiance with the Word. Make it somewhat else. For there is not only a huge distance, but main repugnancy between them. Yet, for all this, non potest solvi Scriptura: the Word was made flesh.

I add yet further: what flesh? The flesh of an Infant. What, Verbum infans, the Word an Infant? The Word, and not be able to speak a word? How evil agreeth this? This he put up. How born, how entertained? In a stately Palace, Cradle of Ivory, Robes of estate? No: but a Stable for his Palace; a manger for his Cradle; poor clothes for his array. This was his beginning. Follow him farther, if any better afterwards, what flesh afterward? Sudans & algens, in cold and heat; hungry and thirsty; fatigued and weary. Is his end any better, (that maketh up all:) what flesh then? Cujus livore samai; black and blew; bloody and swollen; rent and torn; the thorns, and nayles sticking in his flesh: And such flesh he was made. A great factum certainly, and much to be made of. To have been made caput Angelorum, had been an abasement: To be (a) minoratus Angelis, is more: But, to be (b) novissimus Virorum, in worst case of all men, nay, (c) a worm and no man: So to be born, so arrayed; and so housed, and so handed; there is not the meanest flesh but is better. So to be made, and so unmade; to take it on, and lay it off, with so great indignity; weigh it, and wonder at it, that ever he would endure to be made flesh, and to be made it on this manner. What was it made the Word thus to be made flesh? Non est lex hominis ista, flesh would never have been brought to it. It was GOD, and in GOD, nothing but Love: Dilexit, with Sic, Charitas, with an Ecce: Fecit amor, as Verbum caro fieret: Zelus Domini exercituum fecit hoc. Love only did it. Quid sit, possit, debeat, non recipit jus amoris: That only cares not for any exinanivit, any humiliavit se, any emptying, humbling, loss of reputation: Love respects it not, cares not, what flesh he be made, so the flesh be made by it.

And dwell. Factum est is the Word of Nature; Habitavit, of Person: Habitare est Persone. And, two there are not. It is not Habitaverunt: therefore, but one Person.

And, habitavit is a Word of continuance: that which was begun in factum, is continued in habitavit. Not only made, but made stay, made his abode with us: Not appeared, and was gone again straight; but, for a time took up his dwelling; Factus caro, Factus incola. And this word concerns this day properly. This is the day, the first day of habitavit in nobis. Incarnate he was in the Virgin womb; his taking flesh could not be seen, but this draweth after it a vidimus; dwell and was seen visibly.

And this leadeth us to a third: conversatus est. Factum, and factum familiare: that he withdrew not himself into some solitary place, but was verbum prope nos, near us, near neighbours to us. Habitavit in ventris ut homo, In his habit, and in his habitation, found us a man. One might ask him (as they, at Ver. 38.) ubi habitas, Sir, where dwell you? And he invited them to come and see.

And habitavit is not every dwelling, but a dwelling in, ovium, a tem, that is, but for a time: Not a house, to stand for ever; but a tent, to be taken down again. Which, as it sheweth his Tabernacle, of the nature of ours, mortal; so wirhal, that he came but of an errand, to sojourn till he had done it: A work he had for which he was sent; that being done, he laid his Tabernacle off again.

And, even that work it self, is in ovium: For, it is a word militare: Souldiers dwell in tents: As if he were now factus caro, incola, miles; as if some battel were toward. And (indeed) from the beginning, (the very third of Genesis;) there was war proclaimed between the Womans seed, and the Serpens. An enemy we had, strong and mighty; had, and have still: not one, but many, a whole camp of them. They had prevailed, and led us away captive under the Law of sin. Dux nobis opus est. A Champion we stood in need of, to rescue us. And here we have one now, even Dux Messias, as Daniel calleth him. He, as this day, came into the camp, set up his pavilion among us. The Tabernacle of GOD was with men. He might not stay eight daies in the camp; but he must take Sacramentum militare: So he did. And the ceremony of it was to be strucken, and to bleed some small quantity: So he was, at his Circumcision: And after, he performed the battel at his Passion. Where, though it cost him his life, yet the victory fell on his side, Captivity was led captive, and we were delivered. His Tent was but a forerunner of his combat. This for his dwelling. Now the Affidavit.

As the word Habitavit pointeth us to this first day of the Feast; and his Tent, to the middle day; when he undertook our quarrel: So vidimus (now) is proper to the last day, the day of Manifestation, or Epiphany. He dwelt; and not invisibly, or obscurely, but so, as he might be (and was) seen. Even, this very first day, vidimus, might the Shepherds say, we saw his Angels, and heard them sing, and then went to Bethlem and saw himself. Vidimus, might the Wise-men say, we saw His star in the East, and we are come to see himself. This they might say, and truly: for these things were not done in obscuris. But (as we said) this clause is the Affidavit, it is inferred, as a proof. You tell us of his making, and his dwelling: Quomodo constat? How shall it appear? Vidimus is the best proof that can be; he saw it; was an eye-witness of what he testified.

And it is not vidi, but vidimus; more eyes than one: Not he alone, others more saw it, besides him. In the mouth (a) of two or three witnesses: Peter, James, and he, (vidimus) were in the Holy Mount a Mat. 17.

Grace first,

Mount together, and saw him transfigured. Nay, a whole (b) cloud of witnesses (CXX.) saw him taken up into Heaven, out of their sight, in the Mount of Olives. Well might he say, vidimus.

And that not per transennam, at a blush, passing by; but had a full sight, looked well upon him, at leisure; did it thoroughly for a good time together. It is not deus but deus deus (the word, whence a Theatre is derived:) As men with good heed behold things there: so did we, intently, all the Acts and scenes of his life.

But I ask: What saw they? The flesh peradventure: The Word, they could not see. He is God; and God hath no man ever seen. True: that, they could not; yet his glory they might, and did. Which glory was an infallible demonstration of his presence, there. Thorow the veil of his flesh, such beams he cast, as behind those clouds, they might know, there was a Sun; as, that way only, could he be made visible to the eyes of flesh, which otherwise could not behold him.

But it may be it was some wrong, this, but such, as was seen in Moses, or in Stephen's countenance. He answers that, and tells us: It was not, quasi servi, like a Servant; nay, nor quasi Filii, like any adopted sons: but, this glory was every way such, as well might it be seen the Word, or Only Son: but could agree to no creature though never so glorious. To none but him: and so being proprium quarto modo, might be a medium terminus, in a demonstration.

And if you ask, what that glory might be? With a word, to say to the wind and storme (a) Obmutescite: and to diseases, (b) Volo mundare: And to Death it self, (c) Tibi dica, surge. His Miracles, they shewed his glory, is expressly said, (in the next Chap. v. 11.) The Star, at his birth; the Eclipse, at his death; the glory, at his changing in the Mount: but above all, his glorious Ascension, and receiving up into heaven. All which they saw; as being in the Theatre all the while, from the Epitaphis to the very Catastrophe: Therefore he tells us here, (and again in his Epistle) he writes nothing, but what he saw and beheld; and even his hands had handled of the Word of Life. We may believe him: He, and his Confessor, suffered many things for the truth of their witness: and the whole world (since) hath believed this their Affidavit. Now are we past the Parenthesis.

But what, is all that a vidimus? Nothing but a mask, to be seen? Came he only to make a glorious show to them all? No: but as he came not obscure, but was seen: so, he came not empty, but full, and was felt of them, that saw him not. Vidimus is not all: a Verse after there is accepimus; To see his glory, they receive of his fulness: They, and we.

Many are the perfections, whereof he is full: Two only here chosen out, as two streams, 'Grace, and 'Truth. With them he cometh, with the fulness of them: Not of one of them, but of both. Grace referreth to the Son: Truth to the word. Grace, is to adopt us: Truth, to beget us anew; for, of his own will he hath begotten us, by the word of Truth.

And these do very fitly follow after glory. Glory of it self terrifies, and makes stand aloof; Grace invites: And his glory is such, as is full of grace. His Mercy, as great as his Majesty full out. A blessed thing it is, when these two meet: and they that are in glory are full of grace too. It is not so with every one, that is in glory: But, though there be Grace, unless there be Truth too, all is nothing. For Grace, because it is plausible, and pleaseth the people, it is affected: there is a taking on grace in face and phrase, but when all is done, it wanteth sound truth. That is right grace, that hath truth joyned to it. Verbum gratia, and Verbum charitatis both, and it is both. Yea, verbum caro, his word is not wind, it hath flesh on it: his Truth is (as it were) the flesh of his Grace. Thus may be the consequence.

But of these two choice is made, as of those, our nature stood most in need of. Out of grace we were; and without grace, as Sinners and in errors, wandering up and down; as even the best of our nature did at his coming into the flesh. This is the state he found us in, when he came among us.

Against the first, gratificavit nos in Dilecto, he brought us in grace again, through his beloved Son: Gratiam pro gratia (he saith after straight,) for the grace his Son had with him, he received us to grace.

Against the later, he brought us truth, to set us in the right way. Via, Veritas, & Vita; Veritas, between both: Via & Veritas, or veritas via, the true way: Vita & veritas, or veritas vita, the true life (that is) Life eternal: VVe cannot be without either.

This for our need. But, within a verse after, I find these two set in opposition to the Law, and the Law to them: as if S. John pointed us whereto we should refer them. The Law full of rigour, many threats, and curses in it: Christ bringeth the word of grace, opposeth to that. The Law full of empty shadows, and Ceremonies; which Truth is set against: Corpus autem Christus, Christ the very body, to Lex habens umbram: So requisite to quit us of the Law; The Law, the word, that married flesh.

The bringing of these two together is a great matter; and together they must be. Grace, take it from truth, and it is fallax, but a vizour, but a meer illusion: Truth, sever it from grace, and it is ingrata, but an unpleasing thing. Grace and truth kept in sunder, and never met before: But, when the word and flesh met, then did they meet and Kiss each other (saith the Prophet, and doth with a whole Psalm celebrate this meeting.)

They must meet, and Grace be first; as here. VVe shall never endure the severity of his Truth, unless Grace come before, and allay it. But, when Grace hath brought us to Him, Truth will hold us with Him. By Grace we shall accomplish, what Truth requireth at our hands: that so, receiving Grace, Grace, and walking in Truth, we may come to the third, the reward of both, Glory.

Full of them; and the word would not be passed. We find others full of grace, as his blessed Mother, and as S. Stephen. Theirs reacheth not to us: None of them have more than serves for themselves. For, the Spirit is given them, but, by measure; but plenitudo vasis, in them, the fulness of a Vessel; if ye take any thing out, to pour into another, it is the less for it. But, his is plenitudo fontis, the fulness of a fountain, which is never drawn dry: qui implet abyssum, & non minoratur, fills a great pool, and it self never the less. Of which fulness they all received, and he never the emptier. We shall not need to go to any other store-house, or help to supply, or fill up Christ with any other, as if He were but half full. He is full, full of both. Our care is to be, to make our selves fit Vessels, and there is all.

Luk. 1. 28.
Joh. 3. 34.

Thus far Quod verbum factum caro. Now, Quid verbum carni, the benefit; and (that which the benefit ever draweth with it) the Duty, Quid caro verbo? 1. Factus caro benefaciet carni, being made flesh He will be a benefactor to it. No man ever hated his flesh, and no more can He us, who are flesh of his flesh, or rather, He of ours. He seeth us daily in Himself; He cannot look upon His flesh, but he must think upon us. And GOD the Father cannot now hate the flesh, which the word is made; which is now taken into one person with His only Son, and united to the Deity it self. If he love the word, he must love it too, for the word is become it; either love both, or hate both. But, love it certainly: for, as this day, when he brought his Son clothed with it, into the world, he gave express commandment, all his Angels should worship him so clothed, and our flesh in him: A new dignity which is this day accrued to our Name, to be adored of the blessed Angels. Our Nature questionless is set in high favour with GOD; GOD send our persons so too, and all shall be well.

II.
Quid verbum carni, The Benefit.
Eph. 5. 29.

Besides, good hope we now have, that he being now flesh; All flesh may come to him, to present him with their requests. Time was, when they fled from him; but ad factum carnem jam venit omnis caro. For, since he dwelt amongst us, all may resort unto him: Yea, even Sinners; and of them it is said, hic recipit peccatores, & comedit cum eis, he receiveth them, receiveth them even to his Table.

Heb. 1. 6.

A second hope; that seeing he hath made our flesh his Tabernacle; he will not suffer this of ours, the same with that of his, to fall down quite and come to nothing; the same, he dwelleth in himself, not to perish utterly; but repair it again, and raise it out of the dust. So that in super Caro nostra requiescet in spe, our very body may rest in hope to be restored again, and made like to his glorious body.

I.
Psal. 6. 2.
Luke 15. 2.

A third; that where it was, flesh and blood shall not inherit the Kingdom of God; it is reversed; flesh and blood shall; for flesh and blood already dorth. It is that S. John is about, to infer the former verse out of this, viz. To them gave he power to be made the Sons of God: For, Ex quo hoc verum est, Filium Dei, Filium hominis fieri potuisse, non est incredibile, &c. Since, sure it is, that the Son of God, is made the Son of man, it is not incredible, but that the Sons of men may be made the Sons of God. Not incredible, nay, Securitas nobis data est, a kind of bond is entred, security given; Seeing this verse is true, so is the last, Dedit potestatem, he gave power; and well might. Why? For the word is made flesh, and therefore flesh may have reciprocal hope to be regenerate by the word, and adopted through grace, and so exalted to the glorious dignity of the Sons of God.

Phil. 3. 21.

And because Grace and Truth do this, we shall fail of neither of them. He is full; and not for himself; he needs them not. He hath them for us, and hath sufficient. Neither shall be wanting, if we be not wanting to our selves. His grace shall prevent us, and his truth follow us, all the daies of our life.

3.
1 Cor. 15. 50.

Psal. 23. 64

So we see Quid verbum carni, what he hath done for us: Now our Duty reciprocal, Quid caro verbo, what we for him again. If the word become flesh, we to take order, that flesh of ours, that the word hath taken, we take it not, and make it una caro with you know whom, or may read (1 Cor. 6.) God forbid: Know you not, the word is become flesh? That flesh is then so to be preserved, that, as he saith, we saw the Glory; so may we, we saw his flesh, as the flesh of the only begotten Son of God. Kept with such care, and in such cleanness, as it might become his flesh to be kept. And as much may be said, for habitavit: the house would be somewhat handsome; as handsome as we could, that is to receive him; we blame them, that this day received him in a stable; take heed we do not worse our selves.

III.
Quid caro verbo, Our Duty.
1 Cor. 6. 16,

But the Fathers press a further matter yet, out of verbum caro factum: that we also are (after our manner) verbum carnem facere, to incarnate the word. We have a word, we may do it too, which is the type or abstract of the very Word, or wisdom on GOD, and that is the Word which is preached unto us. That Word we may, and are to incarnate, according to this daies pattern. That we so do: That Word is then incarnate, quando verbum in opus, Scripturas in operas convertimus, when we do what is spoken, or written, and turn the Vocal Word, into a real Work. The word with us, turneth to nothing but wind: To give it S. Johns flesh, and S. James Vidimus, make it both be felt and seen. Especially, since our Saviour Himself saith, He reckoneth of this as His second birth; and of every one that so doth, esteemeth as his Mother. That is the duty properly belonging to this Day, the Day of His Birth.

Joh. 12. 48, 49,
Jam. 1. 18.

And to look also to habitavit; as well as factum est. Fit sometimes, sometimes somewhat is done; but non habitavit, it vanisheth again, it hath no state in us, it continueth not in us, nor we in it. That it be not only; but remain. By Faith factum est; Dwell, by perseverance, the true free-hold indeed.

4.

And that this we may, to provide for the fourth: To use means, to draw from Him that, where- of He hath such plenty, grace and truth. The breasts, that are full, have as great pleasure in being drawn, as the Child that draweth them. Assure our selves, it is so here. There is maius desiderium deplendi in Him, than replendi in us: more, in Him, to part with, than in us to receive. And what means are those? To go to the Word and flesh together. The Word it self doth well; and, of the twain, the Word hath less cause to complain; But, this, at other times. But, at this now, we are not to content our selves with one alone; but, since He offereth to communicate Himself both waies, never restrain Him to one. The word we hear, is the abstract of Verbum: The Sacrament, is the antitype to Caro, His flesh. What better way, than where these are actually joyned, actually to partake them both? Not, either alone, the word or flesh: but, the word and flesh both, for they are both? If we regard habituavit, this is a sure way, we have a plain text for it; Qui manducat carnem, in me manet & ego in illo, He abides in me, and I in Him. If it be grace and truth we respect; how may we better establish our hearts with grace, or settle our minds in the truth of His Promise, than by partaking these the Conduit pipes of His grace, and seals of His Truth unto us, Grace and Truth (now) proceeding, not from the word alone, but even from the flesh thereto united; the fountain of the word flowing into the cistern of His flesh, and from thence deriving down, to us, this Grace and Truth, to them that partake Him aright.

Joh. 6. 56.

But setting them aside, the day, the word was made flesh, it is most kindly, that a memorial be kept, as well of the flesh as the word. On the Faast of their union; they would be united: The day, they were joyned by Him, they would not be sundred, by any: but we to celebrate both, in honour of both. For, judge with your selves how inconvenient it is, to keep a Faast in honour of His taking flesh, and even that day abandon His flesh, and never once take it. Verbum & caro (if ever) to be joyned, this day, the day of their joyning. Accordingly then, as well by the act, to testify and represent the Words making flesh; as to procure He may dwell in us; and dwelling replenish us with His Grace and Truth. And lastly, that we may hold this Faast aright, and do the duty that properly belongs to it, let us by both do honour to both, that from both we may receive the fruit of both, Grace to enable us; Truth, to guide us, to the hope of glory. Not to that, in the Parenthesis; that is but vidimus quasi: but, to the other, videbimus sicut est, to see Him as He is, and by seeing, to be transformed into the same Image of Glory.

SERMON PREACHED

Before the

Kings Maiefty

At WHITE-HALL on Friday, the xxv. of Decem.
Anno Domini, MDCXII, being
CHRISTMAS Day.

H E B. Chap. I. Ver. I, II, III.

1. At sundry times and in divers manners, God spake in the old time to our Fathers, by the Prophets :
2. In these last daies, He hath spoken to us by His Son, whom He hath made Heir of all things ; by whom also He made the worlds ;
3. Who being the brightness of His glory, and the ingravened form of His Person, and bearing up all things by His mighty word, hath by Himself purged our sins, and sitteth at the right hand of the Majestie in the highest places.

Et erunt novissimi, primi (saith our Saviour,) And the last shall be first. And this Text Mat. 19. 30. tells us of a great Prerogative, of these last daies, above the first. Of which last daies, this is the first day ; the day of CHRISTS Birth. For, make a partition of the two times, Olim, and Dies novissimi ; and this day will be found to end Olim, and to begin Dies novissimi ; to be the first day of these last daies ; the very Kalends of Christianity, from whence, we begin our Era, or Christian computation.

The Dignity of this day, (and ours in it) is here set out two waies : First, by a case of comparison : of comparison, between the times past, and these now ; The Sum and division. between the Fathers and Us. The point, wherein, is Gods speaking, speaking, to both : but, in a more I. excellent manner, and by a far more excellent person, to us, than to them. The end : that so we might F know, know, know and acknowledge, que à Deo data sunt nobis, what God hath done for us, and done for us this day. For all the difference is, in this Day: all the dignity we have above them, is by it: that so we may be highly thankful to God for it, and hold the day it self as an high Feast.

GOD is the same in both; He that speakes to both: 'of old, to them: 'of late, to us. Thus far, even; they and we. One GOD, one speaker, to both. The odds: Both spoken to; but not both spoken to, alike: Not alike in three Points: 'Not in the Matter, or Parts, of which: 'Not in the Form, or Manner, after which: 'Not in the Persons, by whom. 'To the Fathers, He spake πολυμερως, by many pieces; not entirely. 'To them, παραστάς, after sundry fashions; not uniformly. 'To them, by His Servants, the Prophets; not by His Son.

But, when the Apostle cometh to rejoyne upon these three, he repeateth not the two first, but pitcheth only on the Person: That He; that, the Person, by whom, is without all comparison, more honourable, and excellent, than the Prophets, His Servants: (He will do as much, to the Angels by and by after:) that look how much a Son is better than a Servant, so much, our estate above theirs.

II. This, for the Comparative. But then, fearing, it might be, we would not conceive high enough, of this Son, or weigh Him, as He is worthy; He goeth to it, Positive; and (as it were) sets up his Arms, consisting of eight several Coats; or proclaimeth His Title, of as many several Titles. Which we may reduce, to four several combinations. 'Son and Heir; 'the Brightness and Character: 'Maker and Supporter of all things: 'That purgeth our sins, and that is set down in the throne. And these again may be abridged to these two: 'What He is, in Himself; 'and, what, to us. In Himself, all the rest: 2. To us, 'made Heir: 'purgeth our sins, and so cleanseth our Nature; that being so cleansed, He may exalt it. For, it is for us, and not for Himself, He taketh up the place mentioned, at the right hand on high.

III. Then, our duty: Bona si sua norint, If we can skill of our own good, to find our estate greatly dignified by it; and, to honour this day, the beginning of this dignity to us; wherein, God gave His Son, to speak, viva voce unto us; to purge our sins; and to exalt us to His throne on high.

GOD in times past spake to the Fathers; and His speech was πολυμερως, of many several parcels; to several persons; at several times; some at one time, some at another. And as the time grew, so grew their knowledge (piece and piece) of the great mystery, this day manifested.

God in times past, &c. in many parts, spake, concerning His Person. First, one piece: Man, He should be; (a) of the Woman's seed; that, should bruize the Serpent's head; and there was all: Gen. 3. Then another piece: Of what Nation he should be; (b) of the seed of Abraham; (Gen. 22.) Then, another yet: Of what Tribe, (c) of the Tribe of Juda; (Gen. 49.) 2. Then again, a fourth piece, of what Family; (d) of the house of David: (Psal. 132.)

So likewise GOD, in times past spake of His Offices. To Moses, one piece, He should be (e) A Prophet: (Deut. 18.) To David another; He should be (f) A Priest: (Psal. 110.) To Jeremy, a third, He should be (g) A King, and his Name, JEHOVA justitia nostra: (Jer. 23.)

And, (not to hold you long in this) GOD, in times past, in sundry parts, spake concerning this Daies work: That, came by pieces, too. One parcel, to (h) Esay, of His Birth: (Esay 9.) To (i) Mica, the Place of it: (Mica 5.) To (k) Daniel, the Time of it, by weeks: (Dan. 9.) So you see, it was by pieces, and by many pieces, they had it. Well said the (l) Apostle, that, Prophecying is in part: One may now, in a few houres come to as much, as came to them in many hundred years. This for the Matter.

Job 33. 15.

Esay 6. 1.

Dan. 10. 7, &c.

1 Reg. 9. 12.

Now, for the Manner, It was multiformis. GOD, &c. Many manner waies.

One manner, by dreams in the night, (Job 33.) Another manner, by visions, And those again of two manners. 'Either presented to the outward sense, as Esay 6. 'Or, in an extatic, represented to the inward; as Dan. 10. Another yet, by Urim, in the breast of your Priest. And yet another, by a small still voice, in the ears of the Prophet, 1 Reg. 19. And sometime, by an Angel, speaking in him, (Zach. 1.) But, most what, by His Spirit. And, (to trouble you no more) very sure it is; that as, for the matter, in many broken pieces: so, for the Manner, in many divers fashions, spake He to them:

But then, if, in πολυμερως, you understand Tropes, figures; then were they yet many more. The Paschall Lamb: (m) (Exod. 12.) the Scape-goat: (n) (Lev. 16.) The Red Cow: (o) (Numb. 19.) and, I know not how many, even a world of them. Many they were; and tropes they were; shadowed out darkly, rather than clearly expressed. Theirs, was but candle-light, to our day-light; but Vesperina cognitio, in comparison of ours, whom the Day hath visited, sprung from on high. This, for the Matter and Manner: Now, for the Men.

In the Men.

GOD, in times past spake by Prophets: and but by Prophets, He spake not, from Moses, to John Baptist (who was the Horizon of the Law and Gospel.) I will not stand to run through them all. And now, the Apostle, when he is come to us in the last daies; when he should oppose three more, to match the former three, he doth not; but passeth by the two first, the Parts, and the Manner; leaveth out πολυμερως and παραστάς, and so insinuates thereby thus much; that, He hath spoken to us entirely; without reservation; and uniformly, without variation. But, those two he waveth, and insisteth only on this last, (as the fairest mark of difference) the Prophets, and His Son.

The

The Prophets were holy men; but, men. And there is a nature more perfect, than that of man; 2 Pet. 1. 21. even the nature of GOD. And, in the House of God, they were faithful Servants; but yet, servants: Heb. 3. 6. and that (we know) is but an imperfect condition, in comparison of a SON. To us in the last daies is given, that what we have, we have not from any Prophet, though never so excellent; but from the Lord of the Prophets: Not from any Servant, though in never so great place; but, from the SON: Mat. 21. 38. And, not from any of the Sons of men: but, from His own Son, the SON of GOD. From His mouth we have received notice of GODS will: He Himself ore tenus, imparted it to us.

But then, If any ask: Seeing, GOD, in times past, and God, in these last daies, is the same God; He that spoke to the Fathers, and He; that, to us, but one Speaker: why not, by His Son, at first? I will give a reason fit for this place. A Decorum was to be kept, and some kind of correspondence with State. That as, at the proceeding of a great Prince, before He Himself cometh in sight, many there be, that go before Him, and those, of divers degrees; and at last, Himself doth appear: So, this Prince, that sits in the Throne, should not start out at the first, and shew Himself; but be allowed His train of Patriarchs, and Prophets, to be His Anteambulones; and, in the fulness of time, Himself should come Gal. 4. 4. with the fulness of grace and truth, and establish one entire uniform way, to continue for ever. Joh. 1. 14, 16.

From this comparison, these are the points, we learn: We must ferri ad perfectionem. And, these, are notes of imperfection: There be too many parts, and too many manners, in that, to be a perfect, State. If the matter were full, no more would be added: If the manner were perfect, it would no more be altered. Never then, to rest in these. Moses himself pointeth us, to one after him, by his Ipsum audite, Deut. 18. 18. (Deut. 18.) Who is that? God Himself, in the Mount, tells us by His Ipsum audite: And, when God said it, Moses and Elias was there in the Mount, and resigned up both their several audiences: Moses, for himself; and Elias, as well in his own name, as in the name of all the Prophets. Mat. 17. 3.

This, against the Jewes; that will, no further than Moses: that will rest in the Law. For, nihil ad perfectum adducit Lex, the Law brings nothing to perfection: But Finis legis, CHRISTUS. And, Rom. 10. 4. all Prophesie hangs in suspence (as imperfect,) till the fulfilling of it; which was done by Christ, to whom they all give witness. Now, when that is perfect, is come, that, that is imperfect, must away. Not to 1 Cor. 13. 10. rest, in them, then: But to CHRIST; and never rest, till we come to Him.

And, as never to rest, till we come to him: So, there to rest, when we are come to Him: As soon as His voice hath sounded in our ears, that they itch no more after any new revelations. For, in Him, are Col. 2. 3. all the treasures of wisdom, and knowledge.

God spoke once and twice: A third time, He will not speak. This, is His last time: He will speak no more. Look for no more peeces, nor phansie no more fashions: Consummatum est, there are no more Plal. 61. 12. to look for. He is the truth: and, he that hath found the truth, and seeks further, no remedy, he must needs find a lie: he can find nothing else. To get us therefore to Christ; and never be got from him; but, John 19. 30. there, hold us.

We cannot follow a better pattern, than the Apostle here: We see, what haste he makes. For, (as if he were upon thornes, till he were with Christ;) without any Exordium, or preamble, here, in the beginning of his Epistle, he hits on the Point streight; as if all time were lost, till he were there. Yea, having named the parts, and manners of the times past, for very haste to be at him, he forgets both parts and manners, only for desire to be with him, the sooner.

And (so with him) I haste to pass to the second Positive part. VVherein being careful, we should take perfect notice of him; and fearing we would not weigh these words [by His Son] as were meet, but, The Positive hear them slightly, and pass them lightly over; the rest of the Text he spends, in making a commentary part. of this word Son: that we may consider, how great this Party is; and consequently, how much it imports us, to regard his speech, and to esteem of His Feast with no mean accompt. And (to say truth) it was more than needful, considering the means of his birth to day: that he should thus proclaim his stile of eight titles, and over the place of it, stick them up, as so many scutcheons, to give us true notice of the greatness of the Party.

But withall, his meaning was to describe Christ at all points: as (indeed) these eight contain a perfect description, of his Natures, his Person, his Offices, his Agency.

His Natures, in the very beginning: Quem fecit, is Man; Per quem fecit, is GOD. Not, quem only, Man alone, but, Per quem secula, GOD also. But, for His Divine Nature, he is more full yet: That, He is His Son, the Splendor of His Glory, the Character of his Substance, the Maker and Upholder of the world, and all in it.

His Person: in this word semetipso; He did it Himself, (that is,) in his own person. Himself, is ever said of a Person.

His Offices: In his speaking, his Prophecie; by which, he unfoldeth the Mysteries of GOD. In his purging our sins, is his Priesthood: And, his Kingdom, in the throne of Majesty, wherein he sits.

His Agency, (or quid ad nos.) In locutus est nobis. To us, he speaketh: and, purgans peccata nostra, Our sins he purgeth. Nobis, and nostra: To us, and for us, he is, that he is. All his speaking, and doing, propter nos homines, & propter salutem nostram, for us men, and for our salvation; and, our part, in him, and his.

VVe reduced all these eight, to two. * VVhat in himself; * and what, referendo to us. In himself: What Christ is what by Nature; Son and heir: VVhat by excellency; Splendor and Character: VVhat by power: in Himself. Maker and Upholder of all. To us; VVhat in love already performed; he hath purged our sins: In hope yet yet expected; he is set, and in possession of the throne of glory; which is, in our names, and to our behoof, and not his own.

In his Divine Nature.

His Divine Nature hath no less than three, to express it: 'Son,' 'Brightness,' and 'Character': and two, to prove it, the 'making' and 'supporting' of all.

I have heretofore remembred you, that the high perfections of that nature are such and so many, as no one terme will suffice, to set it forth: we are glad to borrow from many to do it; and yet, but brokenly, too. And that though there be not any resemblance translated from the creatures, (though never so excellent,) that will hold full assay, yet withall, this we are to think, that, since the Holy Ghost, hath made choice of these termes, they are no idle speculations, that are drawn from them.

1 Son.

Of these three then: 'Son,' 'Brightness,' 'Character.' 'In Son,' there is a true identity of Nature: upon it is grounded, quasi, being of one substance; even as the Son is with the Father. 'But the Son cometh after the Father, in time, and that a good time: Amends is made for that, in the next terme, (Brightness.) For, it is not to be imagined, that there ever was, or could be a light body, but in the very same instant there must stream from it, a brightness. So, upon this is grounded Coeternal.

3 Character.

'But then, there is some inequality, between the light body itself, and the beam or brightness of it: The beam not full out so clear. This, is the imperfection in the terme Brightness. But, that is supplied, by the next, Character: For, that, is (ever) just equal; neither bigger, nor lesser than the type, or stamp, that made it. Upon this (then) is grounded Coequal, and like per omnia saecula. So like, as, Shew us the Father (saith Philip:) why, He that sees the Character, never desires to see the stamp; if ye see the one, ye see the other: He that seeth me, seeth the Father, whose express form I am.

Joh. 14. 8.
Verse 9.

Agreeable to these three, we beleeve of him, that he is consubstantial, as the SON; Coeternal, as the Brightness; Coequal, as the Character: Against the new heads of the old Hydry sprung up again in our daies.

Joh. 1. 13.

This term (SON of GOD) is sometimes communicated to Saints, sometime to Magistrates. Lest we might understand it, as we do in Saints, or as we do in Magistrates, he addeth two words; 'the one, Glory;' the other, Substance. Of which, Glory is imparted to others: Substance to none but him. His Glory on earth he imparteth to Magistrates; and they are called the Sons of the most High. His heavenly Grace, (which is Glory inchoate) he imparteth to his Saints; and, to them, gave he power to be Sons of GOD.

Psal. 2. 7.

But, his substance is in neither. For, the first (Magistrates) are, by Ego dixi: but he, by Ego genui. And, the second (Saints), to them he giveth privilege or prerogative so to be. So, they, per gloriam; but he, per substantiam: Per gloriam, they; Per substantiam, He.

He, the brightness of his Glory, and Character of his substance: that is, not in glory only, which may be imparted to another; but even in his very substance (too) it self.

And again: not in substance of the Deity alone, but (in that, which belongeth to it,) the glory also, Substance is Deus, Glory is Dei. All, that he is, and all, that he hath; Substance and Glory both.

The brightness of his Glory: He was such a Son, as did no way eclipse his Fathers glory; but (as a beam) made it shine more bright. The Character, the true stamp of his substance: Nor, he rendered not a broken image, as if the stamp had been set on, or driven awry: but, was his very true express form.

John 14. 28.

Another mystery, yet, These three note a proceeding: The Son, from the Father: the Brightness, from a Light: the Character, from the Type: And so, a second person. I proceeded, and came from the Father, (he saith it himself.)

First, a true and natural proceeding from him, as the Son. Secondly, (to take away all conceit of gross or carnal generation,) by a pure and clean proceeding, as De luce, lux; in which there is nothing but pure, and undefiled. Thirdly, Character-wise, from his hypostasis, (it is the word in the Text, mark it well:) Not, from his esse, (that is) not from his substance at large; but, from his determinate Personall-essence; (for, so is hypostasis, properly:) That is, not from the Deity, or essence of it, (which neither begets, nor is begotten,) but, from a Person in the Deity.

Now these three, if we refer them to Olim, the times past; Then, as the Son he is opposed, to his servants (that is) the Prophets. As he is a Beam of light, to the many parts (as it were many sparks:) That, was all the light before. As the Character (or firm impression) to the many vanishing shadows under the Law.

Eph. 1. 5.

Joh. 1. 9.

But if, to the present, we refer them: As he is the Son: we shall find no estate but servitude; no adoption, but in him. As the brightness: no clear light of knowledge, nothing but mysts and darknes, but by him. And, as the Character: no true soundness, or sound truth, but figures and flitting shadows, without him. From him, as the Son, receive we grace, whereby we are adopted: As the Beam, the clearness of faith, whereby lightened: As the Character, the true signature of charity, whereby stamped, to know (our selves) and be known of others, that we have heard him aright, and are his true Disciples.

The two to prove it.
John 1. 3.
John 3. 27.
Psal. 148. 5, 6.

These three express his Divine Nature: Two more, to prove it. In them, his excellency: in these, his Power. Which is set out two waies: 'In the Creation: Omnia per Ipsum facta, & sine Ipso nihil made by him; nothing without him.' And again in the Preservation, (by virtue of his Et ego usque operor) which is his work to this day; to continue and uphold in their being, all that he hath made to be. One, by his word spoken; So made: the other, by his Law given: So made fast to continue. In a word—

all had been nothing, but for him: and all would fall to nothing, without him. Now, in that he thus made all, and makes all to last, the meekest person, he was, to make all new; to restore that he had made. And it was a convenience, that he should; and it was an inducement, that he would undertake the business, and go through with it.

All this he is, in Himself: Yet not so, but in all his splendor and glory, he mindeth us. And that so, as he is desirous to bring us to the joynt partaking of his inheritance, as Son; of his glory, is the brightness; yea, of the very Divine nature, as the Character of his substance. The ground whereof is laid, in [quem fecit heredem] whom he made heir; and that was, as man: For, per quem facta (we said) is God; quem fecit, is man.

Made him heir.] Heirs, are either born, or made: So born, by nature; or so made, by purchase. He was his Son; and, his only Son; and so born his heir. He was born; and yet he would be made. There is a mystery, in this: we are to look to it; It will fall out, to concern us. Heir he was; and so claimeth all, as his inheritance, by due of birth-right. But, it is further (here) said, he was made: What means this? Quem fecit? Nay, quem genuit. That, is true: But, quem fecit is true likewise, Fecit heredem, qui prius fuit heres: So born, and so made too; Hereditatem, and hereditatem. So cometh he to a double right, two titles. How so? He needed but one: He would have two. To what end? Not for himself; for himself, one was enough. Belike his meaning was to have two, that he might set over one to some body else; there, is the point. He was born heir, for himself; but made heir, for us; Hereditatem, that serveth him; that he retains to himself; Hereditatem, that he disposeth of to us. By this, we hold; even by Quem fecit: that, is our tenure, and best hope. He is, and ever was, in the bosom of his Father, as heres naturae: he now is, but on our behalf, and to our behoof, at the right hand of his Father, as Hereditas factus. And now followeth, he purged our sins.

For, he could not bring us to sit with him in his throne, (thus purchased) being so spotted and foul, as we were, by means of the pollution of our sins. He was then to purge and make clean our Nature first, that he might exalt it to partake his purchase, being so cleansed. Where first our case is set down, wherein he found us, and wherein we are, without him. A sinners case (how gloriously, soever he or the glister in the eyes of men) being in GODS eyes, as the case of a foul diseased person: And we thereby taught so to conceive of sins, as of foul spots without; or, of such humors (within) as go from us by purging. Iniquitas carnis & Spiritus (as St. Paul terms them right) defiling both flesh and Spirit: which unless they be purged, there is no entering into the heavenly Jerusalem (where the throne is,) into which, nihil iniquum, ne passum thing shall ever enter.

Exalt us he could not, being in that plight: for love or pity therefore, purge us he would. And here now, is the top, or highest point of elevation in this Text, Who being the brightness (or, though he were the Brightness) that is, a Parry so excellent in Nature, Glory, Person, and Power; Nature as Son, Glory as brightness, Person as Character; Power as maker and supporter of all: who, though he were all this, did not abhor to come, and visit us, being in that foul and wretched case. This will teach us, Domine quid est homo? What is man that thou shouldst visit him? Visit him; not as the day-spring from an high doth the earth; but visit him, as if a great Prince should go into an Hospital, to visit and look on a foul diseased creature.

2. And not only visit him; but not refuse the base office, to look to his purging from that his uncleanness.

3. And thirdly, not cause it to be done by another; but to come and do it in Semet ipso, by his own self, in person.

4. And fourthly, in doing, not to stand by, and prescribe; but himself to minister and make the medicine.

5. And fifthly, to make it himself, and make it of himself; in semet ipso, and de semet ipso; to make the medicine, and be the medicine.

6. And how, or of what? Spots will out with water; Some will not, with any thing but with blood: Without shedding of blood there is no taking away sin; as Chap. 9. ver. 22. And not every blood will serve; but, it must be Lamb's blood: And a Lamb without spot: And not every Lamb neither; but the Lamb of God: or (to speak plainly) a Lamb that is God: His blood, and nothing else will serve to do this.

7. And seventhly, not any blood of his; not of a vein, (one may live still, for all that) but his best, most precious, his heart-blood, which bringeth certain death with it. With that blood he was to make the medicine. Die he must, and his side be opened, that there might issue both the water and the blood, that was to be the ingredients of it. By himself, his own self; and by himself slain: by his death, and by his blood-shedding, and by no other means: Quis autem talis? The Physician slain; and of his flesh and blood a receipt made, that the patient might recover.

And now we may be at our choice, whether we will conceive of sin, as of some outward soil, in the soul; And then the purging of it, to be per viam balnei, needs a bath, with some cleansing ingredients, as the Prophet speaks, of the herb Borith: And, this way purged he us: made a bath of the water that came out of his side, to that end opened, that from thence might flow a fountain for sin and for uncleanness; (Zach. 13. 1.) Water, and mixed with his blood; as forcible, to take out the stains of the soul, as any herb Borith in the world, to take away the soil of the skin.

Or, whether we will conceive of sin, as of some inward pestilent humour, in the soul and conscience, casting us into perill of mortal (or rather, immortal) death: Then, the purging of us, to be by way of some Elestuary, or Potion: (And so, he purged our sins too. To that end he hath made an Elestuary.

Mat. 16. 26, 27. Electuary of his own body [Take, eat it:] and tempered a cup with his own blood, [Drink ye all of it:] which by the operation of his eternal Spirit in it, is able effectually to purge the conscience from dead works (or actual sins) and from the deadly effect of them: No balsome, or medicine in the world like it.

The Sum of all this: There be two defiling sins, and two waies he purgeth them. Clean we are, from the first, as washed from the original uncleanness of our Nature, and that by the Laver of regeneration. And whole we are, as purged within, from the actual sins of our persons; and that, by the Cup of the New Testament, which we blest in his Name. And the blood of JESUS CHRIST purgeth us from our sins. By both, he purgeth us from both. And this, for his Purging.

And is (see down). Of which, we are not to conceive, as of a thing merely touching him; (that, his labour being done, he took his rest; and there is all:) But, that this his sitting down is, taking possession of that his dear made purchase: And that, not in his own Name. He had it before; he was in glory; and in the self-same glory with his Father, before ever the world was.

This Hæretic fallacy pertaineth to us; done for us; not, for himself, who needed it not; nor could have any use of it.

These two (between them) comprehend all, even all we can wish: To be purged of the one; and, to be seized of the other. They follow well: For, to what end purged he us? To leave us, there? No; but for some further matter: which though it be last in execution, was first in intention. Having so cleansed us, not content with that, it was his purpose further, to bring us to glory; that is, to no less matter, than to sit on his throne with him, purchased by him for no other end.

And these two, Purging, and Sitting down in the throne, as the Alpha and Omega, the first and the last of that he doth for us. And so, in them, is all well represented; Purging our sins, the first; Sitting in the throne, the last: To purge our sins, he began, this day, the first day, the day of his birth: wherein he purified, and sanctified, by his holy Nativity, the original uncleanness of ours. And, Sit in the throne, was his last work, on the last day of his Ascension: Then took he possession, in our names, as our forerunner for us.

The degrees of this exaltation be these: First, a throne it is: and that is not every seat; but, a special, and chief, and honourable seat. And secondly, of thrones, there be some inferiour, as the thrones of Justice: This is the highest, for it is a throne of Majesty. Thirdly, It is in excelsis; and that maketh up all. For the thrones here below (even of Majesty) sooner or later, they that sit in them, must come down from them. But the throne on high, Thy seat O God, is for ever and ever: Not fading, and transitory, as ours here. Fourthly, in this throne, sit he is: and sitting is the site or position of rest; that is, rest in glory. Here, where most glory, least rest. And fifthly, on the right hand, which is, on the throne, the best, and next place to God himself. And, by this, are we above the Angels: For, to which of them (as the Apostle after deduceth) said he at any time, sit on my right hand: No, but stand before me, as ministering spirits, all. Or; when they rest, it is on the other hand: the right hand is kept for us, and possessed already by one in our Nature, who in this seat will not sit alone, Sed confedere nos secum fecit in celestibus, (Eph. 2. 6.) Even now, we sit there, in him; and shall there sit with him in the end. So he promisseth, in express terms (Apoc. 3. 21.) that we shall sit with him in his throne, as he doth in his Fathers. And so not in the throne, will He be above us, but only, that, he, in the midst, and we, on his right hand.

Our duty then is, for his excellency, to honour him; for his power, to fear Him; for his love shewed, reciprocally to love him again; for his hope promised, truly to serve him. GOD, for his part, would have his Servants the Prophets well used: but however they, in times past, were regarded by them, this he makes full account of, If he send his Son, we will not fail, but reverence him. Specially such a Son; of such glory, such power, and above all, of such love towards us, to provoke ours again. And again, of such ability, to reward with eternal glory, as he will even buy our service, at who gives more: and pay us for it to the full, with no less wages than a throne of glory.

This in general. More particular: in three termes, he is set out to us (here) in the Text: Speaking, Purging, Sitting: as a Prophet, he speaks; as a Priest, purges; as a King, sits speaking; our duty is to hear him, to lay up his sayings in our hearts. Two marks his word hath here, fecit, sustinet; made and makes continue; Let it have the same, in us. In the Sermon time something is begun to be made in us, but it continueth not: which sheweth, it is not verbum virtutis, to us. Again, let it not be, as a Brightness, only to be seen by us; but as a Character too, to leave a mark behind it, to be seen on us; and then it is right.

Now, Hodie scire vocem, To day if ye will hear his voice, ye can hear none but vagitum infantis, such a voice as useth to come from a new born babe. And even so, he speaks to us, if we can understand. For, even this Verbum to be infans, and Tonans to be vagiens; he, to send forth such a voyce; it speaketh humbly, (I am sure) and great love, that so would humble it self; if we have ears to hear it. When he, that was the brightness of his Fathers glory, should be so eclipsed: he that sits on the throne, thus be thrown in a Manger.

Prophets speak; but purged not. Purging was ever the Priests office. It is true: the word he speaks, hath a mundaying vertue: Jam mundi estis, Now ye are clean. It cleanseth then. But, nor that only only, nor principally. For, the medicine which purgeth ex proprietate, his flesh and blood go to it. By which will we are sanctified even by the offering of the body of Iesus. That blood of Iesus Christ, cleanseth us from all sin, (1 Joh. 1.7.) These, the true ingredients into this medicine. But better yet, if both go together. And, this day, they first came together, the Word, and Flesh: therefore, (of all daies,) this day they would not be parted. For, will you sever the Flesh from the Word, that day, on which GOD joyned them? GOD forbid. There is a correspondency, between the Word, and his Brightness; and between the Sacrament, and his Character. The Word giveth a light, and his brightness sheweth in it adoration, and not much longer. The parts of the Sacrament, they are permanent, and stick by us: they are a remembrance of the Characters made in his skin and flesh. And, if ye seek to be rid of your sins, this was broken for you, and this was shed for you, for that very end, for the remission of sins. And so, ye receive his Person; even Semetipsum: And, in Semetipso, in his Person it was, he purged our sins. And so, that, a sure way.

Lastly, for sitting: that, is his Kingdom; that is kept for dies novissimorum novissimus, the last day indeed. That, is yet in hope only. The same flesh that cleansed our sins, the same now sitteth on the throne: and so, hath both virtues: for the present, a power to purge; for the future, a power likewise to exalt. The same blood, is the blood of sacrifice for remission of sins; and, the blood of the New Testament, for the passing to us the bequest, which is, the right of his Purchase, for which, he was made Heir. And the very Angels, who (this day) adored him in our flesh; and it in him; thereby shewed plainly, not the purging only, but the exalting of it also, by this daies work. And that, to day, wherein they sang aloud in the sky, we have cause, to make much of, and to rejoyce in it; the Day of the greatest glory to GOD, peace to the earth, and good will towards men, that ever rose upon the World.

GOD grant, that we may so hold this first feast with Christian joy, as we may hold that last, with like joy: and be found as cheerful in it.

Anno Domini, MDCXIII. being
CHRISTMAS Day.

JOHN Chap. VIII. Ver. LVI.

ABRAHAM Pater vester exultavit ut videret Diem meum : & vidit, & gavifus est.

Your Father Abraham rejoyced to see my Day : and he saw it, and was glad.

Ere is joy, joy at a sight, at the sight of a Day, and that day Christ's. It is CHRIST that calleth it, here, Diem meum, his day : And, no day, so properly his, as his Birth day. So, the Text comes full upon the day.

But, to reduce it point by point.

First, CHRIST hath a Day, proper to him, which in expresse terms, he calleth (here) diem meum, my day.

Secondly, This Day, to be seen, is a day of Joy. Double joy ; ' Exultavit, and ' Gavifus est : both, in the Text.

And, thirdly, (which is somewhat strange.) It was so, to the Patriarch Abraham. Him we find (here) doing that, which we now are about ; Seeing, and rejoycing, at the sight of CHRIST'S Day : taking notice of it ; and taking joy in it.

Lastly, all this nothing displeasing to our Saviour Christ : for it is spoken by him, to the praise of Abraham that did it ; and, to the dislike of the Jews, that did it not. To them is this speech : Christ tells them of Abrahams doing it : and blames them, for not doing the like.

And, what are we (now) disposing our selves to do, but even the very same, that is in the Text here, to rejoyce, to see CHRIST'S Day ?

And a threefold warrant we have, in this verse, to do, as we do. 1. The Patriarchs doing it. 2. Christ's allowance of the doing of it. 3. And his dislike of the Jews for not doing it.

VVe have Abraham for our example ; we do but as he did. In his time, Christ's Day was a Day of joy ; and a Day of joy is a Feast, and so holden by him, we see. VVhich falls out much to our content. For, the same Feasts, the same Religion. So, we find by this, that he and we are of one Religion. One, in substance, which is Christ : One in circumstance, which is his Day. Christ himself, Abrahams joy ; Nay, his Day Abrahams joy too. The same meum ; that is Christ : the same Diem ; that is, Christmas.

Then

Then (which is another degree) Abraham's example approved of, by Christ; and that, after somewhat a strange manner: For, it is not here (if you mark it) Exultavit, ut videret Me; but, ut videret Diem meum: He makes His Day the object of all this exultation and joy. His day (I say) and not Himself: commends him, that he rejoiced at the sight, not of Himself, but of it. Verily, this speech of His is much to the honour of His Day; and the very solemnity of the Feast, and all the joy and gladness thereon, may well be thought to have been founded upon this speech of His. Always, if Exultavit ut videret, were a praise to Him; we may be sure, Exultavit cum videret, can be no disparage to us.

Add thirdly: Abraham's example approved by CHRIST. Not so approved, as he leaves it at liberty: They that will, may do the like. But that, He reproves them that do it not. For, He blames the Jews here, for not doing herein as Abraham: Your father Abraham did it, you do it not. Which is against them that have a spleen at this Feast: that think they can joy in Him well enough, and set His Day by; nay, and abrogate it quite; and in so doing, they joy in Him all the better. Nay, love Him love His feast, joy not in it, nor in Him neither.

You shall see, how they are mistaken. Therefore they do so (they tell us,) lest observing days and times, they should seem to Judaize. It falls out quite contrary. For, who are they whom Christ here blameth? are they not Jews? And, wherefore blameth He them? for not doing as Abraham: And, what did Abraham? Rejoice on his Day. So, upon the point, it will fall out, that, not to rejoice on His day, that, is indeed to Judaize. and they little better than these Jews, that follow them in it.

Nay, here is another thing yet, will grieve them more: Jews they shall be; but none of Abraham's Children; no more, than these were. Observe it well. It is the Occasion of this speech, the very issue Christ takes with them: Pater noster Abraham, was still in their mouths (in the 33, 39, 53. Verses:) If (saith Christ) you were his Children (mark that If,) ye would persequere, desire what he desired, and joy what he joyed in. Now, My Day he so highly esteemed; as glad he was, that he might see it: And you, that would so fain father your selves, upon him, are so far from that, as what he desired absent, ye despise present: what he would have been the better to see, ye are the worse, that ye see it. Now then, how are these Abraham's Children, that have nothing of Abraham in them? Before (at the 40. Ver.) He seek to kill me, for telling the truth. This did not Abraham, and ye do it. Here now again: He rejoiced in my day; and ye do it not. Do that, he did not; do not that, he did: How can these be Abraham's sons? Verily, as it is in Esay 63. Abraham nescivit nos: Abraham would never know them, for his. None of His Sons, these. Those are his sons, that do, as he did. And, here now, come in we. They Jews, but not Abraham's Children; we Abraham's Children, but not Jews: For, as he did, so do we. There is joy with us, at the sight of His Day: we renew our joy, so oft, as by the Revolution of the year, it cometh about. And, for this very point, we find our selves the nearer to Abraham: Even for the joy of His Day. Always, sure we are, since Abraham did it, and CHRIST allowed it, and disallowed the contrary: by these three, we have good warrant to do, as we do: To make it a time of joy. And so, a time of joy, God make it to us.

Thus it stands, for the Order. There be in the Text, three acts specified from one, issuing; from Abraham all: All directed to one mark; falling all upon one Object. That Object is Diem meum, My Day: Of that then first. The three Acts be, Exultavit ut videret: Videret; and gaudisset. First, would be glad, ut videret; that He might see; that is, was desirous to see it: Then, had his desire, did see it: And lastly, seeing it, took joy of his sight.

Of which three, the first and the last, Desiderium and gaudium, desire and joy are two affections attending upon Love; and are ever sure signs of it. Desire, when we want and have not, what we love. And joy, when we now possess, or (as the term is) enjoy it. The middle, which is Sight, that pertains to faith: For his light it was he saw it by. So, here is faith per Charitatem operans: Abraham's faith right.

But I keep the order in the Text, I change it not, it cannot be mended. All goes by a right line. Desire first, that is the way to see. Seeing next: that brings joy. And joy is the end: and a good end it is to end in joy.

These three with reference, first to Abraham; and then after, to our selves.

TO find our mark first, that all this desire is, to see; all this joy when it is seen; It is Diem meum, Christ's Day. Christ is God and Man; God to both: His day, as the Son of God, or as the Son of Man. Which of these?

Not as the Son of God; As the Son of God, He hath no day: Day and night are parts of time; And Egressus Eius, His goings out are from all eternity. If we would improperly call it a day; no day, to be seen: The light of it is unapproachable; nor to be approached so; it would strike any man blind to behold it. If we could see it, and Him, in His Deity; yet there is small joy, to see Christ so: Small joy to see Him, but by the light of this Day. All the desire was, that He might be; all the joy, that He was to be seen, as the Son of Man. As the Son of Man, then: His Day so.

But as the Son of Man he hath more days than one: So He saith, (Luk. 17.) I beg shall desire to see one day of the Son of man: one, of many; any one of them. But this (here) notes some one eminent Day, above the rest: It is a day, with a double title; Thy day, the day, That day, that same day; That, if any one day mine, more than other, I would, by special prerogative call; Thy day, Mine indeed. Now, there be but two such eminent days, to stand for this: The first, and the last. First, of His

Gen. 18. 25.

Genesis; or last, of His Exodus. Genesis; His coming into the world; or Exodus, His going out. That is, the first, of His Nativity: or the last, of His Passion. VVhich of these?

Not of His Passion. First: that, was none of His. For, He saith to them that took Him: Hac est hora vestra, Yours. So, theirs it was; not, His. Secondly, It was not His Day: Nay, it was no day, neither but Tenebrarum, as he there addeth: So, night rather than day. But thirdly, without all question, no day of Joy. The Heavens are darkned; the Earth quaking; the stones rent; every one going their ways beating their breasts, for sorrow: That was no fight to rejoice at; that no day to rejoice in.

Then is it, of necessity, to be His Birth day. That was a Day; the Angel calls it To day; To day is born: And His Day it was: for every man claims a kind of propriety, in His birth day. Men, in the day of the beginning of their life: As Kings, in the day of the beginning of their Reigns: As Cities, their Patris, when the trench is first cast: As Churches their Encania, when they are first dedicate: So Men their Yasidia, when they first come into the world. It is too plain, this. His day then: And sure, a day of Joy, withall. Joy in Heaven, Joy in Earth. In Heaven, for a day of Glory to God on high. In Earth: for a day of Peace here below, and for good will towards men; as ever, nay more than ever, was any. The Angel so proclaimed it. Gaudium omni populo, A day, of joy to all people: And proclaimed it, why? Quia hodie natus est. And, this omni populo (as appears now, by this text) was not only all people, then, in being, or after to be: but, (as Leo well expresth it) in praeitis se refudit etates, the joy of it went back, up to the ages past; up even to Abraham's time, two thousand years and more, before ever it came. I know well, this day may be taken for the whole time of His life: but it must be by a figure then. And, no man but seeth, that a day doth more literally and properly signify a day, than the time of ones whole life, at large. Yet, that time too had his beginning, on a day. And, that day, even for that very beginning, may well challenge a better right, and nearer property in this word [day] than any longer time whatsoever. As, the very day, whereon He was first seen, first shewed to the world, as the Son of man: As the very day, whereon the first fruits of all the joy then, and ever since: sure I am, the Fathers fix it all upon one day, and upon this day by name. So Irenaeus, Augustine, Cyril: set it down; that this day it was. This day then be it: the day of His birth. So have ye the Object.

Now to the three Acts: And first of desire. Exultavit ut: that [Ut] is desire. Glad and fain, Ut, that, he might see; that is, he desired, he longed much, to see it. Gaudere ut, and vellere ut, expound one another. This day then, is dies desiderii, or desiderabilis. To be desired, even of Abraham; and, if of him, of all. Of the Cause first, why: and then of the Manner. How, he desired it. The Cause why should Abraham to desire to see this day, two thousand years and more, after his days were away end, and he in his grave? What was it to him? how was he concerned in it? We say, Omnia bona operantur: what good had he by it? we say again, Indigentia desiderii patens: what need had he of it, that he should so desire it? Yes: Christ's birth he needed; he had good by: and consequently, His Birth-day.

Ye remember Job's Easter: that in all his heaviness, this was his spes in finem, his onely comfort and joy. That well yet, his Redeemer should rise again one day. The joy of Job's Easter, the same is the joy of Abraham's Christmas: Even, that a day should come, wherein his Redeemer should come into the world. For, Abraham's case was not such, but that, a Redeemer he stood in need of. One he stood in need of, and one he had: you may read it videtur verbis (Esay 29. 23.) Thum fatis Hebraei Redemptorem Abraham. That party, Him, he needed, and Him he desired: And desired His day; for His sake: dies for monum; the day for Him that was born on the day.

Will ye hear it from his own mouth? Thus he seeth down his own case, Gen. 18. (that very time, when he had this day first shewed him, the first glimpse of it.) Thus complains he there, of his uid, (and complaining, implies his desire.) Et ecce ego pulvis & cinis: And lo! I am but dust and ashes. Dust, is plain: it refers us to Pulvis & in pulvere. He was that by nature, by his very creation. But, why ashes? how come they in? ashes he was not made of: that is not natural; that (sure) refers to somewhat else. Ashes (we know) come of fire, without it they are not made: ever presuppose a fire precedent. So that besides death to resolve him into dust, he saw a fire to turn him into ashes. He saw it in his vision, Gen. 15. when the sun was down, and it was night; and a great fear or horrour fell upon him: he saw Elisamm fumentem, a fiery furnace. Blame him not, if after such a night, he desired to see day, and this day; dies contra noctem, a day to visit him from on high, after so fearfull a night as this. But this was but a vision of the night: But, when all days and nights should be at an end he saw, there was yet a day to succeed that day, which Enoch taught the world, wherein the Lord should come with thousands of his Saints to execute judgment upon sinners. VVhich day (it seems) Abraham took notice of: For speaking to God (in the same Chap.) He calleth Him by this Title, Judex of the world. Of which day a visible sign he had, before his eyes, waking, in the consuming of the five Cities immediately after. No marvel then, though he desired dies contra diem, a day that should quit him, of the fear of that day. Inasmuch then as dust he was, and ashes he was to be; dust by creation, ashes by condemnation; (and both these he confesses himself liable unto,) he needed one, as to restore the ruins of the first, so to prevent the danger of the second. Being in need, he desired; desiring, he was glad to hear of: but more glad would be, to see that day, that should bring Him into the world: And, O when shall that day be! And sure, the sun must go down with us too, and what fear we shall then be in, or whether we shall see the solenne, I know not: but, sure I am, that joyfull it will be, then, to have a comfortable sight and apprehension of the benefit and beginning of this day: when the world shall bid us good-night, then (as S. Augustine expresth it) videre in nocte saeculi, diem CHRISTI.

This,

This, for the cause, why Abraham himself should desire this Ut; to see this day: Why, but for this day, Abraham had been but ashes of the furnace. Which sheweth, it is a benefit to see this day: And as a benefit, desired by him, and as a benefit, and no small benefit, vouchsafed him, (the sight of this day.) Now, for his Manner how, how greatly he desired it. We may take measure of the greatness of the day, by the greatness of his desire. It was no day of small things; for, Exultavit ut is no small desire: there is vigour, there is both passion and action in it. The nature of the word [Exultavit] is, He did even fetch a spring for joy that he should see it. And it is not exiliit neither, but exultavit. And that is a frequentative, and so he did it more than once. To give a spring, and not once, but often; this was much, if all be well considered. For one to do it, one in years, fast upon an hundred, as Abraham then was; for such an one to do it, it was very much.

1. Much. First, that he should not contain his affection, nor keep it in; but out it must, even break forth into an external act, into a bodily gesture, that all that stood by must see him do it.

2. Into a bodily gesture (I say.) But then again, that into such a bodily gesture; a gesture on this fashion. It must needs be he was greatly, yea strangely affected with it, that it made him forget his gravity, and put a kind of Indecorum upon his age, at those years to fall on springing. All men will easily know, that (such as he was) stayed, discreet, grave men will never be so exceeding moved, as to be brought to fetch a spring, but upon some very exceeding great occasion.

3. Thirdly, to do all this but onely in desire, and nothing but desire, is yet more strange than the rest. In the fruition to joy is kindly; but in the desire, altogether unusual. Exultavit, cum videret may well be understood: Exultavit, ut videret, not so well. For desire of it self is a restless thing, unquiet and complaining: but a very affliction of the soul, it makes men, yea the very creature it self (saith the Apostle) ingemiscere (which is far from exultare) to groan for grief, not to spring for joy; Sad rather than glad, in that they want their desire. Judg then, how great good is the good of this Day; that, not in the enjoying, but even in the desiring; and that against the nature of desire, did put old father Abraham into this Passion; and brought from him this act, the act of exultation, and made him even young again.

But I will tell you yet of another as strange. For, the same word, you shall observe is used, of the Baptist, while he was yet but an Embriso, and in his mothers belly. That, at the enter-view, and voice of the Blessed Virgin Mary, he (then, a babe) gave a spring in the womb of Elizabeth his mother. So that we see, both old and young, Abraham and John Baptist, from the eldest in years, to the child unborn; it concerns all; all need it; all are bound to be glad of it: All is for the joy and honour of this day.

And this for the first act, and first joy, joy of desire, for there be two. There is another in the last word exultavit. As there be two sights; ut videret, and Et vidit: so, two joys answerable, either hath his joy. And this first is but John Baptist's forerunner, to the second. For, all this is but the Apostles spe gaudentes, yet; but, the joy of hope onely, anticipating the other, before it come; and joying (as it were) that it shall joy, when that joyfull time shall be.

And, with this, we must begin; even with desire, and seek to possess our souls of it. This carrieth the next, the eye: for, where the desire is, there will the eye be also, and, where it is not, no prospect thitherward; no window open, that way. Therefore, set that (as the needle point) right, and all the rest will follow. For, the truth is, therefore we joy not, because we see not; and therefore we see not, because we desire not. True it is, and pitie it is, Millions there be, never have true sight of Him: Why? they have no desire to Him. We must then begin there, with desire, with ut videret, or we shall never come to Et vidit. And, for our comfort, the very desire of this day, or of any other good thing else, (if it be true and uncounferfeit,) a first degree it is, and it is not lightly to be accounted of. It is not nothing; to say, (if one can say, and say it true) exultarem ut viderem. For, of this desire, Exultarem ut is (among other) one Character. Three there be besides; (and lightly they go together,) and they be Succedanea (as we call them) to any good thing, which we have not, but wish that we had, or that we might have. As, if we cannot repent, cannot abstain, cannot believe, or live as we ought, these come in place, and expreis yet, how we stand inwardly affected toward them: Even these four: Exultarem, or gauderem si: vellem ut: metuo ne: doleo quod non. Gauderem si, Glad I would be, if it were: Vellem ut, and I heartily wish, that it were: Metuo ne, but sure I doubt, it be not: and Doleo quod non, sorry I am, that it is not. Characters they be all: and if they be hearty and true, a sign it is, the flax smokes yet: Et lignum fumigans (so gracious he is) the flax, if it do but smoke, He will not quench it. But, of all the rest, specially if it be this. For there is vigour and vehemencie, in exultarem ut. It is a fervent desire, a kind of hunger and thirst, a desiderio desideravi, this. Exultarem ut, I would do any thing, I would give any thing, to have a sight of it. And such a desire shall never be frustrate: It shall see certainly.

Of Exultarem ut videam, the reward shall be videre ut exultes: of desiring that, we see not, to see that, we desire. We have Abraham, the Father, in the Text; take Zacchee, the son; for an example of it, too. He, out of a desire to see Christ, at his coming to Jericho, and could not for the press, exultavit, gave a spring, got him up into a tree, to have a sight of Him. It was so well taken, this very desire, as, he not onely saw Him, but received Him to his house. And our Saviour pronounceth, this Text was fulfilled in him: He was even thereby become the Son of Abraham. For, howsoever in things temporal, it may be, and is oft defeated; In things pertaining to Christ, and His sight, Exultavit ut videret shall ever end (as here it doth) in Et vidit. And so we pass to the next point of Et vidit.

And he saw it.
* Heb. 11. 13.
* 1 Cor. 13. 12.

It is here (first) directly avouched, the Patriarchs, (and Abraham by name) they did not only desire to see this day, but see it they did. See it, though they did but see it and salute it word a far off; or as in a looking glass, as in a perspective glass; yet see it they did. It is but Vidit; Vidit, in genere. Any fight, any descrying will serve to verify the Text. I say, they did not precisely know the very day of the month; I would not so be understood. But this they did: they knew and saw in genere. Such a day there should come, and then, come when it would; or what day of the year it would; all Joy they wished to that day, for the joy it was to bring them. This was enough for them in their estate: And more particular notice had they had, of the Month and day, this I am sure, they would never have scraped it out of their Kalendar.

How he saw it.

Luke 2, 30.

He saw it. But then if you ask, how he saw it? Sure, (not as they were mistaken in the Text) as if Abraham could not see His day; unless CHRIST had been in the flesh in the days of Abraham. That is one kind of seeing indeed. For so Simeon saw: (For mine eyes have seen.) But this Text must be true: vidit Abraham. Then, another there is beside. This is sure, what Simeon saw, the same saw Abraham: what Simeon saw, (I say) but not, as Simeon saw. The same Christ, both; and the same Day: though not both in the same manner.

Verse 59.

But let me tell you, this of Abraham was the better. And if Simeon had not seen him, in the same manner Abraham did, for all his viderunt oculi, he had been never the nearer. No more than were the Jews here, that hurled stones at him, and so saw him, but to no benefit, no matter of Exultation at all; of condemnation rather.

Then, if not with his eyes, how? Yes, with his eyes too, though not of the body. Which to conceive, we are to take notice, that there is in every man of us, two men: (Plato had seen so much and set it down, and (it is thought) the Apostle took it from him): 'An outward, and 'an inward man: (Rom. 7. 22. 2 Cor. 4. 6.) Now, if there be an inward man, we must allow him senses as a man; he must have eyes. So he hath: (Eph. 1. 18) Having the eyes of your understanding-lightened. Here are eyes; by them did Abraham; and even by them (and by no other) do we see Him.

Gal. 3. 9.
Heb. II. I.

Rom.4.11:

Those eyes many have beſide, but ſee him not for want of light. By what light ſaw he? He was a Prophet, and as a Prophet he might be in the ſpirit, and have the viſion clearly repreſented before him, in lucē prophetiæ. But without all queſtion, a faithful man he was, and ſo, certain it is, he ſaw it in lumine fidei, the light of faith, which faith is the clearneſs or evidence of things not ſeen. (Ye know the place.) Not ſeen? nay even of things inviſible. In the 27 verſe of the ſame Chapter, it is ſaid, Moſes was as if he had ſeen the inviſible. By faith, that was: and in Abraham the Father of the faithful, the ſame faith was. Both ſaw by the ſame light, and by it Chriſt was as verily preſent unto them, as if they had ſeen him, this day, in the manger with the Shepherds; or with Simeon, had had him in his arms, and beheld him. Thus he, and thus we. For it is all the light he had, or we have, to ſee him by.

But where was this, and when? The text is enough, so it was, if we rest not in that, but would know what the Fathers have conceived of the place and time; this they hold: That he saw his Birch, at the valley of Mamre, (Gen. 18.) And he saw his Passion in the Mount of Moria, (Gen. 22.) but, this Day he saw at Mamre. (Gen. 18.) Then was Christ in person there, one of the three; then made Abraham the confession we before spoke of. Then is twice mention of the time of life: which is this time, if ever any. Then Isaac was delivered as a gage; and then was his first feast of joy, down went his fat beifer: So all met at the time just.

Gen. 24. 29

And, so certainly he then saw it there, as after (we see) he swore his servant on his thigh: his thigh became Ad sancta Dei Evangelia: He bad his servant lay his hand on his thigh, and swear by the God of heaven. Et quid vult Deus cæli ad femur Abraham? What hath the God of Heaven to do with Abrahams thigh? (saith S. Augustine) and his answer is, Nisiquia, But onely because he saw (certainly) the Son of God was from thence to take flesh: Semen Abraham de femore Abraham: and so to make us this blessed day: And this of Christ's visus: And now of Abraham's gavissus, the end of his sights and desire both.

Gen: 2. 9.

He that was glad he should see it, must needs be glad when he did see it. If Exultavit ut videret, then Ut vidit, ut exultavit? when he saw how glad a man was he, now his desire was accomplished. And the desire accomplished (saith Salomon) is a tree of life, and the tree of life (we know) is in the midst, is the very center of all the joys of Paradise. Now we cannot possibly take a view of these his joys better, than out of the promise; which was the very list (or brief) of all he was either to see, or to joy in.

Gen. 26. 4.

Mat. 22. 32.
Luke 2.

We begin with the blessed joy of Benedicentur omnes gentes in nomine tuo : Benedicentur, shall be blessed. And that is of two sorts : ¹ Blessed from : and ² Blessed with : and either hath his joys.

Blessed from : from pulvis & cinis ; dust of the grave, and ashes of the furnace. His soul blessed from the Clibanus fumans, which he saw. Moreover also his flesh should rest in hope ; hope of rising again from the dust. Else how could God be called the God of Abraham ? God is not the God of the dead, but of the living. Abraham then being dead, should live again, and then Nunc dimittis may he say, no less than Simeon. These two joys first. And these two fit well the words of Joy in the Verbe : ' Exultavit, that is a motion of the body ; for the bodies deliverance from dust : ' Gavisus, that is a fruit of the Spirit, for the spirits redemption from the furnace. These are his two first joys.

Heb. 11: 13.

Then two more, in blessed with or concerning. Concerning first his two gages, Isaac and Canaan; Isaac, of Christ; Canaan, of the Kingdom of Heaven. And this joy was surely great: and if the joy of the Pledg (or Gage) were great, far greater was the joy of the Inheritance it self which he so greatly desired.

desired. For, both he was, (saith the Apostle) and he bare himself like a stranger here upon earth: shewing thereby that he sought for another, a better, an abiding City, whose builder is God, and that in Heaven. For that it was no earthly thing which was the object of his Joy, nothing but heaven; thence it may appear, that when God promised him, his seed should be as the dust of the earth, (Gen. 13.) It never moved him; it was no object, that of his faith or desire: not so much as a Credidit follows upon it. But after, (in the 15. Chap.) when God bade him look up and told him, they should be as the stars of heaven: then presently follows, Credidit Abraham Deo, he caught hold of that; believed that, (straight; and it was counted to him for righteousness;) even that his faith, touching (no dust of the earth, but touching) heaven, and heavenly blessings. And these are the two next Joys, of blissed wish: And these two answer the two fights, Ut videret, the Pledg: and Et vidit, the Inheritance.

Now these four, had they been granted to himself and to his own house, well might it have been Gavisus with him: how much more then that it should, by him, have his extent, and stretch to Omnes familie, Omnes gentes, all kindreds, all nations of the earth: be gaudium omni populo, be a day of Joy to both Hemispheres; the joy of generality; that all the world should be the better for him? And this his fifth, the joy of Omnes gentes.

And glad might he have been to have received all these, by whomsoever: yea, though a meer stranger. That all these then should come to him, not by any strange party, but by one to come out of his own bowels; that his seed should be his Saviour, and out of his root should rise his Redeemer; All this Joy should grow from the fruit of his own body: That he, that Nusquam Angelos, in no wise them; would take on him the seed of Abraham: This may (I doubt not) be reckoned for the sixth, even the joy of in semine suo.

Now, to in semine Abraham, add in finis Abraham, and so have we seven completed: That his house should be the receptacle of all that should enter into bliss: Whosoever there entertained, in finis Abraham it is to be. This is the last; that semen Abraham shall bring us to finis Abraham, and make us partakers of his heavenly joys there. But we must begin with in semine to day; that after, in his good time, in finis may follow. And this for Gavisus est, and for Abraham.

Now to our selves. And the first point is; whether we will be out with the Jews, or in with Abraham, in the fellowship of this days joy. In with Abraham, we sure. If all be well weighed, we have greater cause to desire the day, than he; we have more need of it (I am sure!) Dust, as he; but more in danger to be made after than he, by Manasse's argument in his prayer. The benefit of his Day, and the like, they do nothing so much concern the Just, (such as Abraham) as they do sinful Manasse; and such as he. And such are we: and ever, the more sinners, the more it imports him to love the dawning of this day. Greater cause we have than he.

And for our fight, we have that clearer than he by much. For, though we see, as he; and he, as we; both by the sight of Faith: yet he in the faith of Prophecy, yet to come; we in the faith of History, now past: and there is great odds between these two. We have the record of humane Writers, many; but of Divine, all: that this day is come and gone: Even of such as saw him with the eyes, both of the inward and outward man.

The greater cause, and the better fight: Then is our joy also to abound, and be above his. So it should (sure.) And we would seem as if it so were; we multiply the days, and where he had but one, we hold twelve together, as if we would exceed him twelve to one in this joy. Being then so bound, Joy agreeth well with us at this time. The Text invites us to it, the whole strain from the first word to the last. It begins with Exultavit, and ends in Gavisus sum.

Only that from whence we take our joy, from thence we take the rules of it: which be three. One of the two parts, Exultavit and Gavisus est: One of the end, Diem meum: And the last of our pattern, sicut Abraham pater noster, to express it as he did.

Here be two sorts: One, Exultation a motion of the body: the other, Joy a fruit of the Spirit: I am for both. I speak not against Exultavit, let the body have his part. Reason would, the body and the flesh should be allowed their parts, since all the joy is for Corpus apud mihi, and that Verbum caro factum est, the Word is become flesh: that Christ hath gotten him a body. But let not Exultavit be all whole and sole: then we joy but by halves; we lose half our joy, and the better half: for the joy of the Spirit is the better part when all is done. The flesh fades daily, so do the joys of it: the Spirit is the better part, that shall not be taken from us. That of the Spirit should exceed the joy of the outward man, as far as Et vidit (to which it is joyned) doth exceed ut videret. It should so: Well, in the mean while I would they might but part equally: At least not to stay so long, not to make so large allowance of time and cost for the flesh, as we leave little or nothing for the Spirit's part. Sure somewhat would be done; some special use of this Feast, that may tarry by us, when these of the flesh, we shall either have forgotten, or remember but with small joy. Time will come, that one lesson in this kind, learned this day, and laid up well, will do us more pleasure, than all the sports we shall see the whole twelve days after: That we come not behind Abraham half in half.

Our next Caveat would be, that we look this our joy be for Diem meum, and that our joy in Diem, be for Meum. For Meum is here the Substantive, it is Christ: and Diem, but an accident, or adjective to it. That is, that we joy in it as it is His, (Christ's,) As His, do we not so? As whose else? To speak plainly, the common sort, generally all (some few except) wish for it, and joy in it; not as it is Christ's; but as it is somewhat else: That is, as it is a time of cheer and feasting; as it is a time of sports and revelling. Exultavit ut videret, what? Why, that we shall now fare well: look you, that is it? As it is dies epuli, not Christi. What farther? that we shall now see pastimes: that is, as it is dies ludi, not Christi. Put both together, down they sat to feast, up they rose to play: so have you the Golden Calves Holy-day right. As it is dies vituli, not Christi. This is not dies, for men: In very deed, this is to desire Him for the Day, not the Day for Him. Christ's day is not desired for Christ, Christ is the least part of His own Feast. If it be but matter of the belly, the Jews here could have been intreated to have kept this day, so as dies Epuli. For, before (at the 6. Chap.) when their bellies were filled, then (and never but then) This is the Prophet, this is he that should come into the world. This was all they then made; all that many now do make, of Christ's coming into the world: That they may fill their bellies. Never care for Benedicentur, no more than Esau: but for bene viscentur; and if bene vestientur too, then all is well.

Or, if it be but shews and matter of sight, Herod he was glad to see Christ, too: and it is the same word, which is here, glad, and very glad, αγαλλίασε. But why was it? Because he hoped to have seen him done some strange feats. This pertaineth rather to Sara's laughter, than Abraham's joy: There is a difference between Sara's laughter, and Abraham's joy. Take heed that we change not Abraham's joy into Sara's laughter.

The III Rule: Now last, sicut Abraham. He is propounded here to us, as our pattern. we to express our joy, as he did his, upon the day of his sight, at the plain of Mamre. So we shall begin right. Two things he did: First, he got them (the three) to turn in to him. The same would Christ do to us, this day. That our joy may be suitable, to turn in hither: The beginning of the joy of His day, would be in his House, So the place and the time would agree well. So He saith Himself, Latiscabo eos in domo mea, the first thing I will do, I will make them joyfull in mine House. There first to satisfy us with the pleasures of His house, wherewith (God He knows) we are soon satisfied. Well, this is done; here we are, (and much ado too, and long it is first) but, here we are.

The next was, when they were turned in, Abraham said, Let me set somewhat before you, Ideo enim declinastis. For, even for this, are ye turned in hither: and so made his Feast. There is indeed no solemn entertainment or Joy, without a Feast. Christ will be, in all respects, as courteous as Abraham. He saith, Let me set something before you too, for therefore are you turned in hither, He invites us to His Feast, (His Church (so) doth in His name:) Even this day, prepares and sets Christ's Feast before us, wherein He offers Himself to us. Not as the object of one sense onely, (of sight) as to Abraham in the Text: but as the object of two, Sight and Taste; Gustate & videte, both. And we may not take the one, and leave the other; but, since both be offered, receive both. For, we are come hither for this cause: Here then shew your Joy, in His Feast day, by partaking His Feast, on His Day, the onely Feast of all the rest, for which the soul is the better. Thus shall we with joy keep this day aright.

And here now one day calls another: this day of His calls to mind another day of His, called so in twenty places (His Day:) And called [That day] in plain reference to this. So to joy this day, as, that day, we may joy also. As this, His day, because it is the day of His first coming: so that, His likewise, because it is the day of His coming again. A day (howsoever we do with this) which we must all see: Abraham, the Jews, we and all. Onely, that we see that Day with joy: that we so demean our selves, in this, as that also may prove a Festival with us, even the last and greatest day of the Feast, now begun in this. All will be, how to make that a Day of joy to us, when we see it: To have that day rise clear and chearfull to us, will be the joy of all joys. For here, first as we see but in part, so we can joy but in part: as our sight, so our joy imperfect. But there, we shall see as we are seen; our sight being perfect, so shall our joy be: Perfect sight, and perfect joy. And besides, that is another manner of day than this, or any day here: a day that shall never go down: No more shall the joy of it. And it shall not endure for twelve days, or be a feast of a fortnight; but shall be from month to month, from Inbibe to Inbibe, or ever and ever. To the joy of which Feast; or to the Feast of which joy, by, &c.

A SERMON

Preached before the
Kings Maiesty,

At WHITE-HAL. on Sunday the xxv. of December,
A. D. MDCXIV. Being Chrismass Day.

ESAY Chap. VIII. Verse XIV.

Ecce, Virgo concipiet, & pariet filium, & vocabitur nomen Ejus IMMANUEL.

Behold, a Virgin shall conceive, and bear a Son; and She shall call His Name IMMANUEL.

Fall the VVriters of the Old Testament, the Prophet Esay hath the honour, to be the first, that is vouched in the New. And, of all the places, this place, the honor to be first the of all; even, in the first Evangelist, S. Matthew; and in the very first Chapter of him, VVe may well think, S. Matthew would be carefull, to make choise of a very prime and pregnant place, to set it (as it were) in the front of his Gospel. This is much honour, S. Matthew doth it.

Mat. 1. 23.

But, the Angel Gabriel doth it more, (Luke 1.) who takes this verse, as it stands, word for word, and makes it stand for His Annuntiation, or Message, to the Blessed Virgin without any alteration: not so much, as the Esce left out.

Luke 1. 31.

The tenour of it is, all about a Child to be born; a child with an Esce: in whom, and in whose birth, God should be with us: So with us, as never before. On whose so being with us, depends all our well or evil being, here, and for ever. For, better not be at all, than be without Him: and, having Him, we need nothing else: for, in isso, Col. 1. 17.

The Eunuch's question falls fitly in, here: Of whom speaks the Prophet this? VVho is His Mother? VVho the Child? S. Matthew will be as good to us, as S. Philip was to him: who, where he enrols it, tells us, who, the Mother, the Blessed Virgin: who, the Child, our Blessed Saviour. VVho else? No Virgin ever bare child, but She: no Child, ever, nobiscum Deus, (and, so Deus) but He. There is none other to lay claim to it, but they.

Esce hath in it, two Powers, ' One for the ear; to awaken it to some matter more than ordinary. The Divisi-
' Another, on.

I. Another, for the eye; to direct it by pointing to some certainty: As here; to two certain persons: the Mother, and the Child. And shews us, two strange sights, in them. Mater, Virgo; and Dew, Homo: A Virgin, to become a Mother; God, to become man. A Virgin, to bear; God, to be born.

II. In both, and in either of them, three points are offered to us. ¹ Ecce concipiet: ² Ecce pariet: ³ Ecce vocabit nomen. Our Saviour Christ's first triplicity: ¹ The Mysterie of His Holy Incarnation, in concupiet: ² His Holy Nativity, in pariet: ³ His Circumcision, in vocabit nomen. And, every one of these three, makes a several Feast. Ecce concipiet, the Annunciation: Et pariet, this Feast, of the Birth of our Lord: Et vocabit nomen, New-years day, when His Name was given.

But, we apply it to this Feast. So doth S. Matthew, in his Inspection of it; to the Birth of Christ. The birth of Christ (saith he) was on this fashion: And then, brings in this Record out of Esay. As if, this Ecce did in particular point at this day. As (in truth) we stand not much upon His conceiving, (now He is born specially, as, born He is:) Ecce pariet is the Point. For, then we see Him, take Him in our arms; then, He is with us, indeed. And, when was that? Ecce pariet (saith the Text:) Ecce peperit, (saith the day,) this very day. This is the chief.

But, finding them here all, we will deal with them all. ¹ Christ, as Embryo, in His Conception: ² Christ as aperturatus Christ, a new-born babe, but yet aperturatus without a name: ³ And Christ with His full Christendom, as named; and named with this name here in the Text, the Name of Immanuel.

Of which three, ye may reduce the first two [conceived, and born] to His Nature: And (to make two, to two) of the later, make two more; Vocabit, and Nomen, His Name, and His Vocation, (For, in His Name, is His Vocation.) To bring God to us; to make God with us: Him to be with us; that we may be with Him for ever. Nobiscum Deus, the way: Nos cum Deo, the end: which is (and so may be) the end of the Text, and of the day, and of us all. Nothing more worth our sight, than this Birth: nor more worth our hearing, than this Name.

I. Ecce Virgo concipiet.
1 Ecce Virgo.
2 Cor. 3. 15.

E Ecce spreads it self over the whole Text, may be repeated, at every point of it: But, it first points to Ecce Virgo. There, we may make a stay: there, is a block in our way, by the Jews. In no one place, doth that of the Apostle's speech appear, that, at the reading of the Prophecies of Christ, the veil is laid over their hearts: no where, how true the Proverb is, that Malice will even blind a man, as, here in this. This Verse so dazles them, as, fain would they turn another way, and not see, that they do. They see no Virgin here: Esay's word [Alma] say they, is but a young woman; and, not a Virgin, properly. But, they say against their own knowledge, in so saying. For, first: Beside the nature of the word, the very energie gives as much. For, it is, of Alam, and, that is, to cover: and so (properly) is one, that is yet covered, and never yet known: opposed to them, that have been uncovered, and known, after the Hebrew phrase.

Gen. 24. 43,

Exod. 2. 8.

Cant. 2. 14.

Matth. i. 21.

And, beside the use of the word, for a virgin, in other places. Rebecca (then, a virgin) called by this name, Gen. 24. And Miriam, (then but six years old) called by it, likewise, Exod. 2.

And, beside their own taking of the word, they themselves (the more ancient of them, so) in their Targum, this very word Alamoth (Cant. 2) they gloss and paraphrase it by Betuloth, the proper word for virgins: where it stands, this day, to be seen.

Besides all this, see whicher their malice carrieth them, by denying this; even to over-turn Prophecie, Prophet, and all. For, he calls us to see a sign; and that with an Ecce: And, what is that? if it be but a young woman, to conceive, and, no virgin; where is the sign? what is become of the Ecce? It is no sign, or wonder, unless it be beside the course of Nature: And, is it any whit beside the course of Nature, for a young woman, to be with child? Therefore, take away Virgo: and away with the Ecce; down with the sign. Thus, rather than to bear witness to the truth, stick they not, to expose the Word of God (and so, God Himself) to scorn: make the Prophet, or (as S. Matthew well saith) God, by the Prophet, to speak idly: give them a sign, that is no sign: tell them of a marvel, not to be marvelled at.

Reject them then, and read confidently, as S. Matthew doth, Behold, a virgin: With Him, rest hardly, on the skill and integrity of all the Seventy; that more than an hundred years, before it came to pass, turned it παρθένος (in Greek) that is, a Virgin; who could skill of their own tongue, better than any Kimbi, or Albo; or any Rabbin of them all. This, for Ecce Virgo.

2 Ecce concipiet.

And, look what work we had with the Jew, about Ecce Virgo, the like shall we have with the Gentile, about Virgo concipiet. To conceive this conceiving; to joyn these two, a Virgin, and yet conceive, or bear; or, conceive and bear, and yet be a Virgin. For, before the birth; yea, before the conceiving come, the Virginity is gone. True, in Nature; but this is a sign, and so above nature. And, in Reason, so: but this, is nisi credideritis, non intelligetis, to be believed, otherwise not to be understood, (as, a little before was said.) For, what God can do, Faith can believe; Reason cannot comprehend. But, this, it can: that, we do God no great favour (as, well saith S. Augustine) Si Deum fateamur, &c. If we confess, God can do somewhat, which we confess, our reason cannot reach.

Luke 1. 34.
Luke 1. 35.

The Blessed Virgin her self, while she stood upon a reason, upon quia non cognosco virum, asked, How it might be? But, rested in the Angels resolution: and so let us. Which was of two sorts: First, That the Holy Ghost should be Agent in it, and the Power of the most High bring it to pass. That, which, of it self, seemeth not credible, put the Author to it, put to Ex Spiritu sancto, and it will seem not incredible.

Specially (and, that is the second;) If we set another by it, as unlikely as it, and done, though: As this Ecce of the Virgins, the Angel exemplifies, by another Ecce, of Zacharias, in a manner, as hard; which yet fell out at the same time. For, Elizabeth, being barren, first by nature, then by age; and so wanting power, to conceive: she was (then) gone six months with child. Now, the want of power to conceive, is no less material, to hinder the conception, every way; than want of the soil, no less, than the want of seed. He that could supply that, could also this. He, that do it without one; do it without the other. They were Cousins, (the Blessed Virgin, and she:) And their Signs were so, too. One of them made credible, by the other.

Luke 1. 36.

But, I ask S. Pauls question: Why should it be thought a thing incredible, this to the Gentiles; If, As 26. 8. (as their Religion taught them) they admitted of Minerva's birth, or Pyrrha's progenie, they need not make strange, at this. If they say, the God of Nature is not bound to the rules of Nature: we say the same. And yet, even in nature, we see it made not altogether incredible. The light passing thorow a body, the body yet remaining whole: And it is put therefore into the Verses, to pattern this, Luce penetratur, &c. The light cometh thorow the glass, yet the glass is not perished. No more, than the light of Heaven, passing thorow, breaketh the glass: no more, did the God of heaven, by his passage, violate any whit, the Virginity of his Mother; if we will allow God the maker of the light, to do as much, as the light he hath made.

But, I hold ever best, to let every thing rest upon his own base, or bottom: Natural, upon Reason; Supernatural, upon Faith. And, this is Supernatural: In which, tota ratio fallit est in potentia faciens: the power of the doer is the reason of the thing done. God is the Doer; cujus dicere, est facere, to whom it is as easie to do it, as to say it. As the Angel concluded, so do I: With GOD is nothing impossible: And here are both: and, where they meet, they make no less a miracle than Mater and Virgo, or Deus and Homo; Even Fides and Ratio.

And this, for Virgo concipiet.

Now, to the three particulars: and first, concupiet. To make him man, it is well known, there wanted not other ways: from the mold, as Adam; from a rib of flesh, as Eve. No need then of concupiet. Yes, for he was not to be man onely, but to be the Son of man; the name in the Text, Filius, and the name that for the most part, he giveth himself, and seemeth most to delight in. But, Adam was not son to the mold; nor Eve, daughter to Adam. And, a Son, no way but by concupiet. And, howsoever, of the body of man, there may engender that which is not of the same kind: yet by way of conception there cometh of man nothing but man; nothing but of the same nature and substance, with that he was conceived of.

II.
1 Christ an Embryo.
Et concipiet.

This we are to hold: To conceive is more than to receive. It is so to receive, as we yield somewhat of our own also. A vessel is not said to conceive the liquor that is put into it: why? because it yieldeth nothing from itself. The blessed Virgin is; and therefore is, because she did: She did both give and take. Give of her own substance, whereof his body was framed: and take or receive power from the Holy Ghost, whereby was supplied the office and the efficacy of the masculine seed. This is concupiet.

And this word is the bane of divers heresies. That of the Manichees; that held he had no true body. That had been, Virgo decipiet, not concupiet: Not conceive him, but deceive us. And that of the Valentinian (revived lately in the Anabaptist) that held he had a true body; but made in heaven, and sent into her. That had been recipiet, but not concupiet: Received him she had; conceived she had not.

From which his Conceiving, we may conceive his great love to us-ward. Love, not onely condescending, to take our nature upon him; but to take it by the same way, and after the same manner that we do; by being conceived. That, and no other better befitting way. The womb of the Virgin is (surely) no such place, but he might well have abhorred it. He did not: pudorem exordii nostri non recusavit (saith Hilary,) he refused not that our selves are ashamed of: Sed natura nostra contumelias transcurrit; but the very contumelies of our nature (transcurrit is too quick a word) he ran thorow them: nay he stayed in them; in this first, nine months. I say, the contumelias of our nature, not to be named, they are so mean. So mean (indeed) as it is verily thought, they made those old Hereticks (I named) and others moe (who yet yielded him to be man) to run into such phantasies as they did; onely to decline those foul indignities (as they took them) for the great GOD of heaven so undergo.

so being.

This therefore, even this, would he have set down, in terms terminant, of concupiet and pariet. Truittng we would wisely judge of them, and love him never the less, but the more even for these. Ma dū tū amas, in dū ornaturus: Honour him never the less, because he laid down his honour for thy sake. No: but quanto ille minus debita, anto ego magis debitor: the less due he took on him, the more due from me to him. In a word, quanto pro me vilior, tanto mihi charior: The lower for me, the dearer to me. It brings to mind King Dauids Vilior adhuc fiam; and how God, even for that, regarded him the more. Concupiet & pariet, to conceive and bring forth in us, love, honour and due regard even for them. It teaches both.

2 Sam. 4. 22.Our hearts hereby.

This (sure) is matter of love: But came there any good to us by it? There did. For our conception being the root (as it were) the very groundfil of our nature; that he might go to the root, and repair our nature from the very foundation, thither he went: that what had been there defiled and decayed, by the first Adam; might, by the second, be cleansed and set aright again. That had our conception been stained by him? Therefore, primum ante omnia to be restored again. He was not idle all the time he was an Embryo, all the nine months he was in the womb; but then and there he even ate out the core of corruption that cleft to our nature and us, and made both us and it an unpleasing object in the sight of God.

H

Eph. 1. 8.

And what came of this? VVe that were abhorred by God, (Filii ira was our title) were, by this means made beloved in him. He cannot (we may be sure) account evil of that nature, that is now become the nature of his own Son: His now, no less than ours. Nay farther, given this privilege to the children of such as are in him (though but of one parent believing) that, they are not, as the seed of two infidels; but are in a degree holy, eo ipso; and have a farther right to the Laver of regeneration, to sanctify them throughout by the renewing of the Holy Ghost. This honour is to us, by the dishonour of him: This, the good by CHRIST an Embryo.

Titus 3. 5.

Christ a new-born Babe.:
Et pariet.
* Esay 37. 3.

Et pariet: And this, no more than needs. There may be concupiscit, and no pariet follow. Venerunt filii ad partum, &c. (saith the Prophet) * The children came to the birth, and no strength to deliver: Pariet makes all sure.

And pariet makes all appear. We could not tell, it was Filium; knew not what it was, or what it would be. Till he came into the world, he was as thesaurus absconditus, though we had it, we had it not. But when he was born, when come into the world, we see him and handle him; then he was with us indeed. With us, not as conceived of the same nature with us; but as born, and now a person among us. That which was potential in concupiscit, made actual by pariet.

Luke 1. 78.

So that this is the Occipula, when he came forth, as a Bride-groom out of his chamber; or, as the Sun from his tabernacle, to run his race. And it was with a Vistavis ab alto. Thence an Angel cried Ecce, and sounded it on earth: and a Star cried Ecce, and proclaimed it from heaven. Poets in the VVest write of it: and Wise-men in the East, saw it, and came a long journey upon it to see him. And what did this pariet bring forth? No sooner born, but a multitude of heavenly Souldiers sung, Peace on the earth (belike there had been war before, but) peace, now: Nay, more than peace, Adusa, That God had conceived a good liking, was well-pleased with men. The same term to men, that he useth to CHRIST himself, In whom I am well pleased: Indulia to both. And what would we more? what lack we now? His Name.

Luke 2. 13.

Mat. 3. 17.

Christ christened, Et vocabitur nomen.

And now he is born, might we not leave here and go no farther? Remotemus: what care we for the Name? Yes, we must: For Christus anonymus will not serve. Therefore Esay, therefore the Angel are careful to bear him to his Baptism, to add his name; the Prophet to intimate it: S. Matthew there to interpret it. For though we have said much of Christ an Embryo, and Christ a new-born nameless babe; yet nothing to that that followeth, to the Ecce of his Name.

His name given by God.
Mat. 1. 23.

This name, if it had been of mans giving, I wot well, little heed had been to be taken of it. Men set great titles upon empty boxes. Nay many times, the names given by wise men, fall out quite contrary. Solomon called his son Reboham, the Enlarger of people; He enlarged them from ten to two. But, his name (S. Matthew tells us) the Prophet but brought, it was God that sent it. And the names of his imposing, there is no surer place, in Logick, than from them. His nominals be reals: as his dicere, facere; so his dici, fieri: what is said, in them, comes surely to pass.

That Name, Immanuel.
Gen. 49. 10.
Heb. 1. 9.

Now there were divers names given him at divers times. To express all his perfections, no one name was enough. There was Jacobs name, Silo; That was in respect of his Father, by whom and for whom he was sent. There was Pauls name, Messias, Christ: that was, regard had to the Holy Ghost, by or wherewith he was anointed. But what were these? Quid ad nos? VVe have no part in them, in this we have: and till this came, all was in nubibus (as they say.) But in this Immanuel, Nobiscum Deus, (here) come we in first. For in Immanu, is Ann; and in Nobiscum, Nos. And this is the first Nobis, and the first Cum, we find in any name of his: and therefore of all other, we are to make much of it. A Virgin to bear; God to be born, matter of wonder, but no benefit at all. But when we hear, It is with us and for us, that Ecce makes us look up to it.

Two doubts about it.

Before I come to it, I would clear a doubt or two of it. One of the name it self: The other of the interpretation or meaning of the name.

How Immanuel, and not Jesus.

It will be said, This was not his name in the end, for all this, but Jesus. True: and S. Matthew knew that well enough; for he sets it down so. Yet even in that place he sets it so down, presently he vouches this of Esay, of Immanuel: as if Immanuel and Jesus both came to one, as (indeed) they do; one infers the other. Immanuel, God with us: Why? to what end? To save us from our sins, and from perishing by them. If there be any odds, it is in Immanuel, which is of larger compass. God with us, to save us; though that be worth all, yet not that way onely, but with us, other ways besides; and all in Immanuel.

How with us, more than the Patriarchs.

GOD with us; Why was he not also with the Patriarchs and Prophets, and Esay himself, as well as, with Us? He was, but not, as well. Some Prerogative we must allow this Name, if it be for this Ecce. No Ecce belongs to these. Somewhat more to S. Matthew's Gospel, than to Esay's Prophecie. This name must needs imply a secret Antithesis to his former being With us. VVe say nothing, in saying, He is now with us, if he be not so with us now, as never before.

With

With them, in types and figures of Himself; His shadow was with them; but now, He himself. With them He was, even thus, in this very Immanuel: but how? in the future tense, concipiet, pariet; as things to come are made present to hope. But now, conceptus est, partus est; Re, not in spe; all is past and done. So that, now, Ita nobiscum, ut, de nobis; Nay, ut ipsi nos: So with us, as even of us now; of the same substance, nature, flesh, and bone, that we: With us, in concipiet; conceived, as we: With us, in pariet; born, as we. Now true, as never till now: now so, as never so before.

And, now, to look into the Name. It is compounded, and to be taken in pieces. First, into Immanuel, and El: of which, El, (the later) is the more principal by far: for, El, is God. Now, for anything yet said in concipiet and pariet, all is but man with us: not God with us, till now. By the name, we take our first notice, that this Child is God: And this is a great addition, and here (lo) is the wonder: For, as for any Child of a Woman, to eat Butter and Honey, (the words that next follow) where is the Ecce? But, for El, for God, to do it; that, is worth an Ecce indeed.

El, is God: And, not, God, every way; but (as the force of the word is) God, in his full strength and virtue: God, cum plenitudine potestatis (as we say) with all that ever he can do: and that is enough, I am sure.

For the other, Immanuel: though El be the more principal, yet I cannot tell, whether it; or Immanuel do more concern us. For, as in El, is might: so, in Immanuel, is our right to his might, and to all he hath, or is worth: By that word, we hold; therefore we to lay hold of it. The very standing of it, thus before; thus, in the first place, toucheth us somewhat. The first thing ever, that we look for, is Nos, Nobis, and Noster, the Possessives: For, they do mittere in possessionem, put us in possession. We look for it first; and lo, it stands here first: Nobiscum, first; and then, Deum, after.

I shall not need to tell you, that, in nobiscum, there is meum; in nobiscum for us all, a meum for every one of us. Out of this generality, of with us, in gross, may every one deduce his own particular; with me, and me, and me. For, all put together make but nobiscum.

The VVise man (Prov. 30.) out of Immanuel (that is, nobiscum Deum) doth deduce Israel, (that is) Mecum Deus, God with me; his own private interest. And S. Paul, when he had said to the Ephesians, of Christ, Who loved us, and gave Himself for us: might with good right, say to the Galatians, Who loved me, and gave himself for me.

This Immanuel is a compound again: we may take it in sunder, into Nobis, and cum: And so then have we three pieces. El, the mighty God: and Ann, we, poor we; (poor indeed, if we have all the world beside, if we have not Him to be with us: And, Im, which is cum, and that cum, in the midst between nobis and Deus, God and Us; to couple God and Us: thereby to convey the things of the one, to the other. (Ours, to God: Alas, they be not worth the speaking of;) Chiefly then, to convey to us, the things of God. For, that is worth the while: they are (indeed) worth the conveying.

This Cum we shall never conceive to purpose, but carendo: the value of With, no way so well, as by Without: by stripping of Cum from Nobis. And so, let nobis, (us) stand by our selves, without Him, to see, what our case is, but for this Immanuel; what if this Virgins Child had not this day been born us: Nobiscum (after) will be the better esteemed. For, if this Child be Immanuel, God with us; then without this Child, this Immanuel, we be without God. VVithout him in this world, (saith the Apostle;) and, if without Him, in this, without Him, in the next: And, if without Him there, if it be not Immanuel, it will be Immanuel; and that, and no other place, will fall (I fear me) to our share. VVithout Him, this we are: VVhat, with Him? Why, if we have Him; and God by Him; we need no more; Immanuel, and Immanuel-all. All that we can desire is, for as to be with Him, with God; and He to be with us: And we, from Him, or He, from us, never to be parted. We were, with Him, once before, and we were well: end when we left Him, and He no longer, with us, then began all our misery: VVhensoever we go from Him, so shall we be; in evil case: and never be well, till we be back with Him again.

Then, if this be our case, that we cannot be without him; no remedy then, but to get a Cum, by whose means, Nobis and Deum may come together, again. And, Christ is that Cum, to bring it to pass. The parties are, God, and VVe: And now, this day, He is both. God, before, eternally; and now, to day, Man: and so both, and takes hold of both, and brings both together again. For, two Natures here are in him: If conceived and born of a woman, then, a Man: If God with us, then, God. So Esay offered his signe, from the height above, or from the depth beneath: Here, it is. From above, El; From beneath, Ann; one of us, now: And so His signe, from both. And both these Natures in the Unity of one Person, called by one Name, even this Name Immanuel.

Vocabu nomen: I told you, in His Name, is His Vocation or Office, to be, cum: to come between, (that is) to be a Mediator, to make him, that was contra nos, nobiscum again.

A Mediator is not of one, but God is one. God and Man are two; and they were two (as they say:) VVe were two, and two will be, till he make them one: recapitulate and cast up both into one summe: to knit Ann, (that is, VVe) and, El, (that is, God) with his Im, into one: One word, and one thing, univocè, again.

So, upon the point, in these three pieces, there be three Persons; so, a second kind of Trinity: God, VVe, and Christ. El, is God: Ann, VVe: for Christ, nothing left but Im, that is, Cum, or VVith. For it is he, that maketh the Unity in this Trinity; maketh God with us, and us, with God: and both, in and by him, to our eternal comfort and joy.

In Name.

Thus is He with us: And yet all this is but Nature still. But, the nobiscum of His Name, bodeth yet a farther matter. For (indeed) the with us, of His Name, is more than the with us, of His Nature. If we make a great matter of that (as great it is, and very great) behold the Ecce of His Name, is far beyond it. With us in His Nature, that is, with us, as Man, that is short: We are more; sinful men: a wretched condition added to a Nature corrupt: Will He be with us, in that too? Elie, this (of Nature) will finally avail us.

In Name as Surety.

• Heb. 4. 15.

1 Cor. 5. 21.

What, in sin? Nay, "in all things, sin only excepts. Yes, that is, in being like us; but not, in being with us. For, in being with us, except sin, and except all: The ridding us of our sin, is the only matter, (saith Esay, after) Therefore, to be with us, in all things, sin it self not excepts. S. John's Caro factum est, will not serve: S. Paul's factus peccatum, must come too. In, with us, there too. I lay it over again: Unity of Nature is not enough: He is to be with us, in Unity of Person likewise. So, He was. The Debtor and Surety, make but one person, in Law. That, He was: and then, He was cum, with us throughly, as deep in, as we.

Col. 2. 14.

And this is the proper Immanuel, of His Name. And this, the Immanuel indeed, And, till He was thus with us, no name He had; He was Christus anonymus, Christ unchristened (as it were.) For, His name came not, till he became one with us in person: Not, till his Circumcision: Not, till for us, and in our names. He became Debtor of the whole Law; Principal, Forfeiture, and all. To the hand-writing He then signed, with the first fruits of his blood. And then name the Child, and give him this name, Immanuel. For, thus he was a right Immanuel; truly, with us, with us, as men: with us, as sinful men: with us, in all things, sin it self not excepted.

This Name given by His Mother.

Phil. 2. 9.

Verse 15.

Psol. 69. 21.

Mat. 27. 48.

May I not add this: It is said in the Text, She shall call: She, that is, his Mother. Why, She? To let us understand, that She might give him the name, while he undertook this for us. But, his Father, till all was discharged, and the hand-writing cancelled; till then, he suspended, he gave it him not. His Mother, She did; when he dropped a little blood, at the sealing of the Bond. But, he was fain not to drop blood, but to sweat blood, and to shed his blood, every drop of it, yet this with us were full answered. And then, his Father did it too; Adiis illi nomen super omne nomen: Then, and not before. His Mother, now: His Father, not till then. But, then, he had proved himself fully with us, per omnia, when neither VVomb nor Birth, Crutch nor Cross, Cross nor curse could pluck him away from us, or make him not to be with us. Then, vocabit illi nomen, both She and He: Mother, Father, and all. With us, to eat Bitter and Honey, seemeth much: And it is so, for God. VVhat say ye, to drink vinegar and gall? This is much more, (I am sure:) yet, that he did: I cannot (here) say with us, but for us, even, drunk of the cup with the dregs of the wrath of God: which passed not from him, that it might pass from us, and we not drink it.

Mat. 28. 10.

This, this is the great with us: For, of this, follow all the rest. VVith us, once thus, and then, with us in his oblation on the Altar of the Temple; with us, in his sacrifice, on the Altar of the Cross: with us, in all the virtues and merits of his life: with us, in the satisfaction and satisfaction (both) of his death: with us, in his Resurrection, to raise us up from the earth: with us in his Ascension, to exalt us to heaven: with us, even then, when he seemed to be taken from us: That day, by his Spirit; as, this day, by his Flesh. Ecce nobiscum, and lo, I am true, Immanuel. VVith you, by the love of my Manhood: VVith you, by the power of my God-head, still to the end of the world.

It is Immanuel and therein we wish him.

One more yet, He won it, and he wears this name; and, in it, he wears us. And it is both a comfort to us, and a glory, that so he wears us. That, he is not, cannot be named, without us: that when he is named, Et nomen tecum Domine, we also are named with him. In Immanuel, is ann, and that is we. This is not it; but this; That he hath set us in the fore part of it; Immanuel before El, Nobiscum before Deus. This note is not out of place, in this place, where precedence is made a great matter of: That Immanuel is before El: That is, We first, and God last.

Not Elimmanuel but we before Him.

Ruth. 2. 4.

Good manners would, in a name compound of him and us, that he should have stood before us, and it have been, Elimmanuel, (at least) Deus nobiscum, and Deus before nobiscum; Not, Immanuel, Nobiscum, before Deus: He before us; He the priority of the place, in all reason: Booz, he placed them so, Ruth. 2. and so should we, (I dare say) if it had been of our imposing, Elimmanuel: It had been great arrogance otherwise. But, he giving it himself, would have it stand thus; Us set before Him. There is a meaning in it. And what can it be but this? That, in the very Name we might read, that we are dearer to him than Himself; that he so preferred us; and that his own name doth pro se ferre no less, but give out to all the world, the Ecce of S. John's Gospel, Ecce quomodo dilexit! The Ecce of his Epistle, Ecce quam charitatem habuit! See, how he loved them! Babel, how great love He bare to them! See it, in his very Name: VVe are a part of it; VVe are the fore part of it, and He the later: He behind, and we, before: Before Himself, and that by order from Himself: He would have it Immanuel. O, whether was greater, Humility, or Charity in Him! Hard, to say whether, but both unspeakable.

Jonas 2. 8.

Nobiscum from Deus.

Let us examine this Sine nobis a little. How came God from us? Nay, ask not that: but, how we came from Him? For, we went from Him; not He from us: VVe forsook Him, first. Jonas tells us, how: By following lying vanities, we forsook our own mercy.

If we went from Him first, then should it be (in reason) nos cum Deo; Not, Nobiscum Deus: VVe, to Him, not He to us. Did we so? No indeed: VVe sought not Him, He was fain to seek us. Nos cum Deo, that would not be: It must be, nobiscum Deus first, or Nos cum Deo will never be. This second, then: That we began the separation; that, long of us: but He begins the reconciliation.

VVho hath the hurt, if God be without us? We, not He. Who gets by Nobiscum? What gets God

God by Nobiscum? Nothing, He. VVhat get we? Multum per omnem modum. VVhy then doth He begin, doth He seek to be with us? No reason, but Sic dilexit, And no reason of that.

But, when He sought and offered to be with us, did we regard it? Nor that neither. You see, the Prophet here offers Abaz a sign; bids him, ask it: Abaz would none. And, as he, to the Sign, so we to the Signatum, the thing signified: Care as little for Him, or, His being with us, as Abaz did for his sign. VVe can be content, He in any sort will cease from us, come not at us so long as the world can be with us, or we with it: Care not for His being with us, till world and all forsake us. How He was fain even to force it on him.

Cast up these then: That He forsakes not, but being forsaken first. That, being forsaken, yet He forsakes not, though. That He, which should be sought to, seeks first: And seeks us, by whom he shall get nothing. Yea, when we neglect Him so seeking, when Abaz will no sign, tells him, He will give him one, whether he ask or ask not: that is, will do us good, not only without our seeking, but even in a manner against our wills. And tell me, if there be not as much love in Nobiscum, as in all the rest.

With us; how, we see. Now, with us, why; to what end? To more, than I have now time, to tell you of. Two only I name. One that of the place; To save them from their enemies: As them, so us. (Them from Razin and Remelie's son: Us, from the son of Romelie, or Romulus, or whomsoever. If He, with us, on our side, then will He be against them, that are against us: and, that, let us never fear: Neither our own weakness, nor the enemies strength. For, though we be weak, and they be strong, yet Immanuel (I am sure) that is, with us, is stronger than they.

Our fear, most, what groweth, both in sin and in danger, that we look upon our selves: As if it were only Nobis; as if, never a Cum; or that Cum were not El, the mighty God. As if, with that great El, all the inferior El's were not attendant, Michael, and Gabriel; and (if he will) twelve Legions of Angels. Or, as if He alone, with one word of his mouth, one Ego sum, could not blow them all down, could not make them all, as chaff in the Text, as the tails of a couple of fire-brands that have spent themselves, smok a little, and there is all. No: if He be with us, we need not fear, what these two, nay, not what all the fire-brands of Hell can do against us.

And (sure) strange it is, The Saints of God, what courage and confidence they have taken, from the very name Immanuel. Goto (saith Esay in the next Chapter) Take your counsel: is shall be brought to nought, Pronounce a Decree, it shall not stand: VVhy? For, Immanuel, God is with us: nothing but this name. For, as it is a name, so, it is a whole Proposition, if you will. And after (in the 50. Chapter) he seeks for enemies, calls them out, who will contend with me? where is my adversary? let him come near: So little doth he fear them. And, these were ghostly enemies: And this was, in the point of Justification. This for the Prophet.

Now, for the Immanuel. He, the great Champion, in more courageous manner, call his glove, than doth he to his ghostly enemies, to height, to depth, to things present, to things to come, to all, that none of them shall be able, to sever him, from this Cum, from His love. And all, in confidence of S. Deus nobiscum: in whom he makes full account to conquer; Nay, conquer, will not serve: more than conquer, he. Conquiesco.

The reason, let down, Prov. 30. where he betakes himself to Isriel first, (which is, but a slip of Immanuel) Deus mecum; and then, to Isriel, straight joyns Ucal, I shall prevail; not I, but El with me. Isriel goeth never alone: Ucal attends it still. Get Isriel, if Isriel be with us, Ucal will not be away: For Isriel and Ucal part not.

Is this all? No: there is another in the very body of the word it self: With us, to make us that to God, that He was (this day) made to man. And how was He made to man? By His being with us; To give us, a posse fieri; a capacity, a power to be made to Him. And how was He made to man? By His being with us; For Originem, quam sumpsit ex utero Virginis, posuit in fontis Baptismatis, The same original that Himself took, in the Womb of the Virgin to us-ward; the same hath he placed for us in the fountain of Baptism, to God-ward. VVell therefore called, the womb of the Church our Virgin to the Virgins womb, with a power given it of concipiet & pariet filios, to God. So, His being conceived, and born the Son of man, doth conceive, and bring forth, (Filiatio, Filiationem,) our being born, our being the Sons of God. His participation of our Humane, our participation of His Divine Nature.

And, shall He be with us, thus many wayes; and shall not we be with Him, (as many, I say not, but) some, as many as we can? VVe, with Him; as, He with us? Specially, since upon this issue, the Prophet puts King Asa, The Lord is with you, if you be with him: With you to save you, if you with Him to serve Him. It holds reciprocè, in all duties of love, (as here was love if ever,) Immanuel, God with us, require Immanuel, Us with God again.

He with us, now (I hope:) For, where two or three are gathered together in His name, there is He with them. But, that is in His God-head. And, we are with Him; our Prayers, our Praises are with Him: But that is in our spirits, whence they come.

These are well: but these are not all we can: And, none of these, the proper with Him of the Day, That hath a special Cum of it self, peculiar to it. Namely, that we be so with Him, as He (this day) was with us: that was, in flesh; not in Spirit only. That flesh that was conceived and this day born, Corpus a se ipso, that body that was (this day) fitted to Him. And, if we be not with Him, thus; If this his flesh be not with us; If we partake it not; which way soever else we be with Him, we come short short of the Im, of this day. Im, other wise it may be; but not that way, which is proper to this Feast. Thy land O Immanuel, (saith the Prophet in the next Chapter:) and may not I say, This thy Feast O Immanuel? Sure, no being with Him, so kindly, so pleasing to Him, so fitting this Feast, as to grow into one, with Him: as, upon the same day, so, the very same way, He did with us.

This, as it is most proper; so, it is the most straight and near that can be: the surest being withall, that can be: Nihil tam nobiscum, tam nostrum, quam alimentum nostrum, nothing so with us, so ours, as that we eat and drink down; which goeth, and groweth one with us. For, alimentum & alimentum do coalesce in unum, grow into an union; and that union is unseparable ever after. This then, I commend to you: Even the being with Him in the Sacrament of His Body: That body, that was conceived and born (as for other ends, so) for this specially, to be with you: And, this day, as for other intents, so even for this, for the holy Eucharist. This, as the kindest, for the time; as the surest, for the manner, of being with.

In Heaven.

And, this is the furthest: And this is all, we can come to hear; near upon earth. But, this is not all: there is a further to come still. For, we are not together: we are parted, He and we. He, in heaven; and we, in earth. But it shall not alway so be. Beside this day, Immanuel hath another day: And that day will come; And when it doth come, He will come, and take us to himself. That, as he hath been our Immanuel upon earth, So he may be our Immanuel in heaven; He with us, and we with him, there, for ever.

This (of the Sacrament) is a preparative to that; will conceive and bring forth the other. For, immediately, after He had given them the holy Eucharist, He prayed straight, that they that had so been with Him in the Blessed Sacrament, Father, my will is, my prayer, my last prayer, that where I am, they may be also.

John 17. 14.

And He is in Heaven, in the Joy and Glory there: and there He would have us. So nobiscum Deus in terris, brings us to nos cum Deo in caelis, even thither. Thither may it bring us; and thither may we come, and there be; He with us, and we with Him for ever. Immanuel is the end of the Verse: The same be our end, that we may be happy and blessed without end.

A SER-

A S E R M O N

Preached before the
Kings Maiefty.

At WHITE-HAL. on Monday the xxv. of December,
A. D. MDCXV. Being Christmas Day.

MICA Chap. V. Verse XII.

Et tu Bethlehem Ephrata, parvulus es in millibus Iuda: ex te mihi egredietur qui fit * Dominator in Israel; & ^{Hyphth} egressus Ejus ab initio a diebus æternitatis.

And thou Bethlehem Ephrata art little to be among the thousands of Iuda; yet, out of thee shall He come forth unto me, that shall be the Ruler in Israel: whose goings forth have been from the beginning, and from everlasting.

He Prophet Esay had the honour to be the first, that is vouched, and whose words are enrolled in the New Testament. The Prophet Mica hath the honour to be the second. That of Esay, Ecce virgo, &c. in the end of the first Chapter. This of Mica, Et tu Bethlehem, &c. in the beginning of the second, of the first of all the Evangelists S. Matthew. Esay. 7. 14.

They follow one the other: and they follow well, one on the other. That of Esay, His Birth: This, of Mica, the place of His Birth. Behold a Virgin shall bear (saith Esay) and Bethlehem shall be the place, where she shall do it (saith Mica): His name (saith Esay) shall be God with us: With us (saith Mica) to be our guide, and conduct us: He, with us, in Bethlehem, in the beginning of the Verse; that we, with Him, in eternity, in the end of it, We have (first) a most sure word and warrant of the Evangelist, that the testimony of Iesus is the spirit of this Prophecie: that, this day, this Scripture was fulfilled, when He, was born at Bethlehem. In St. Matthews steps we tread, when we so apply it: and, so treading alwayes, (sure we are) we tread safely, No 'ista dñon, private interpretation of our own head; but, Mica, by Matthew, the Prophet, by the Evangelist: ever the best. Apo. 19. 19.

Mat. 1. 1.
1 Pet. 1. 30.]

To say truth, there is no applying it to any, but to Christ: None, to give it away to, from Him.

1. From David, to the Son of David, (that is, to Him.) We read not of any other born at Bethlehem. No Record to be shewed, but of them two.

2. But, whatever become of that, this is sure: none had ever His goings out from everlasting, but He. None, of whom those words can be verified, but of Him only: as who only is the Son of the ever-living God. 3. These

3. These might serve : But, it is yet more clear, this : For howsoever, about Esay's Ecce Virgo, the Jews and we are not of one mind : yet, for this (here) of Mica, the coast is clear : the Jews will not quarrel us, touching it : there is, on all sides, between them and us, good agreement.

Marth. 2. 4. For, upon the coming of the Wise-men, from the East, there was a Synod of the High Priests and Scribes, called at Jerusalem, (the very first, that we read of, in the New Testament) and called, by the Marth. 2. 5. King ; to resolve the point, about the place of Christ's Birth. And, then and there, it was resolved, Conciliariter, that at Bethlehem ; And resolved, from this very place, for that their words were a known Prophecie of the Birth of CHRIST.

John 7. 49. Upon which so famous an occasion, this resolution grew so notorious, as it did manare in vulgus, the very people could tell this : They argue, in the seventh of John, against our Saviour, by it, that He could not be the Christ : for Christ was to come out of Bethlehem (that was taken as granted) and He came out of Galilee (as they, in error, thought.) But, that was plain ignoratio elenchi : For, though He were there brought up, He might be born at Bethlehem : and so He was. But so, Priest and People (both) knew, Bethlehem was Christ's natale solum ; and that this Prophecie was the evidence for it.

Marth. 2. 9. 4. Though these be enough : yet have we a greater witness than all these, from heaven : even the Star. For, whither this Scripture doth send us, thither the Star doth lead us : to Bethlehem straight. Never stood still till it came thither : and there it stood directly over the place (as much to say, as) " Lo, there He is born. And, in this will we rest : since Mica and Matthew, Prophet and Apostle, Priest and People, Christians and Jews, Heaven and Earth are all with us ; all testify, this Text pertains to Christ's Birth ; and so, to this day properly.

It is, of a place : And place and time are held weighty circumstances. (Specially, in matter of fact or story,) Ubi & quando, material questions. The Apostles asked them both : Ubi Dominus? Where Lord? (Luk. 17) Quando, & quod erit signum? When and what shall be the Sign? (Mark 13.)

Of the time, when, some other time may give occasion, if it so please God. Now of Ubi Domine? the place where : There we are to day ; whereto, this is a direct answer, Bethlehem is the place. That first.

2 But then secondly, this circumstance leads us further, to matter of substance : the place of the Birth, to the Birth it self ; and the Birth to the Party born : who is, here set forth as a person : He comes forth once and again, He leads, He feeds ; all, acts of a person entire.

3 Thirdly, this person is here said to have two comings forth : " Egreditur ex te, one : " Egressus Ejus ab aeterno, the other. In which two are expressly set down His two Natures. " Ex te, from Bethlehem, on earth ; thence, He came according to His Man-hood. " A diebus aeternitatis, from everlasting, or from eternity ; thence, He came according to His God-head.

4 And last (to make it a full and compleat Christmas, in Text :) Besides His Place, Person and Natures (in these two comings forth :) Here is His Office also, to be " dux & " sempiternus, (so doth S. Matthew turn " dux the Prophets word ; I follow no other ; for, sure I am, I cannot follow a better Translator :) Dux, qui pascet. One to " lead us, and to " feed us, and so, to conduct us from Bethlehem (where, this day, we come first acquainted with Him) to the state of eternity, whence He came out, to bring us in ; there to live and reign with Him for ever.

So : " of the Place : " Person : " Natures ; and " Office of Christ. 1. The Place of His Birth, Bethlehem ; with her two Epithetes or twins (as it were) " Parvula, little ; and " Ephrata, fruitful. 2. Then, of His Person, that did come forth. 3. After, of both His Natures : " As man, from Bethlehem : " As God, from everlasting : 4. Last, of His Office. " To be our guide to lead us (saith Mica :) " Dux, qui pascet : Lead us, and feed us (saith Matthew) both. And, so leading and feeding us, to conduct and bring us, to the joys and joyfull days of eternity : whither, without Him, we can never come : and, whither till we come, we shall never be, as we would be, that is, truly happy indeed. This is His Office. And, as His Office to lead and to feed us : so, our Duty, to be led, and to be fed by Him. That follows of it self.

The manner of the speech : Et tu Bethlehem.

ET tu Bethlehem : A word of the Character, & manner of the speech. For, this Verse hath no dependance at all, on that, went before. The Prophet breaks off the discourse he was in, and breaks into this of Bethlehem (here,) all of a sudden. This we call an Apostrophe ; and, it is one of the figures, that be stirrers of attention.

For, this we find ; that, when one goes on still with a tale in a continued tenour of speech, attention grows dull ; and, no readier way to wake it, (as the Maisters of that Art tell us) than, suddenly to break off the point, we were in hand with, and turn us to quite another matter ; which with the strangeness, will affect the hearer, and make him listen afresh, whether he will or no.

The Prophet doth so, in this. He was (but the Verse before,) muttering garrisons and laying Siege to Jerusalem ; and, in the midst of his tale, falls from that, and presently is at Bethlehem : tells us, of a new matter ; about a Child to be born there. This must needs move attention. Any Apostrophe will do it more or less.

But, of all, none to that, which is framed in the Second Person : as, this is. For, it is not a speech of or concerning Bethlehem, in the Third Person, (as that of Esay, Behold a Virgin ; so here, Behold, out of Bethlehem shall come :) Nor, Enuntiative. But it is a speech to Bethlehem, in the Second Person : Et tu, and thou Bethlehem, out of thee shall there come : Annuntiative ; which hath more vigour in it.

If Eſay had ſaid [And thou Virgin ſhalt conceive,] it had been more effectual, than [Behold a Virgin ſhall conceive.] More a great deal.

But more ſpecially yet; if in the ſecond perſon, we turn our ſpeech ad inanimata, to things that can neither hear, nor underſtand. Not, that we hold them capable of that which is ſpoken: but that if in any degree they were ſo, it is ſuch, as ſurely would move them. Such is the Prophet here: turns him to the Town Walls of Bethlehem; makes a ſet ſpeech to them; tells them of all this matter: And thou Bethlehem, to thee be it ſpoken, out of thee, ſhall there come. And this is very forcible, and full of life: For, it intends, that if the very Walls and Stones in them could hear, or could rejoyce, there is good cauſe they ſhould do both: in that there ſhould come, out of them, One, for whom, Jeruſalem and all the Cities of Juda, Nay, all the world ſhould be the better. Weigh it well, and you ſhall find, there is more in this [Et tu] than is, or can be in any Ecce of them all. And this for Et tu, the Manner of the ſpeech.

For the Matter: It is an answer to the queſtion, (Ubi natus eſt;) of the Wiſe men, Where is He that is born? born He was; (that they knew:) Where born, (that they knew not.) The Star told them one; the Prophet, the other. Et claritas claritatem clarificat, and, a clear ſtar is made more clear, by a Propheteſie as clear, or clearer than it. For, very clear it is (the propheteſie) without all circuit, noting, naming, (and in a manner) pointing to it: And thou Bethlehem.

And, becauſe there were two Bethlehems, One in the Tribe of Zebulon, Jos. 19. 11. Another of the Tribe of Juda: He ſaith, it was Bethlehem Ephrata, which is that in the Tribe of Juda, as S. Matthew (rather giving the ſenſe, than ſtanding on the words) cites it. There can be no error: Rachels Sepulcher was there by: Rachel was buried by Ephrata; Ephrata, the ſame is Bethlehem, Moses tells us, more than a thouſand years before, Gen. 48. 7. As plain (this) as plain may be: No Oracle of Delphos; without any equivocation at all.

We have the Place: Now, what manner place is it? Et tu Bethlehem, parvula; Parvula, this little, doth a little trouble us: VVhy, it is a ſorry poor Village, ſcarce worth an Apoſtrophe; eſpecially, to turn from Jeruſalem, to turn to it. And, as little likelihood, that ſo great a State as the Guſts of the whole world ſhould come creeping out of ſuch a corner: Locum & locatum (ever) are equal. That birth is (ſure) too big for this place. The Prophet diſſembles it not; ſaw, what fleſh and blood would except ſtraight: As, (ever) they carry a conceit, againſt ſome Places and Perſons. And, can any great matter come from them? VVhat, from Bethlehems? VVhat, out of Galilee? Nay, if ſo great a State, He would come from another manner place, than that. Et tu Jeruſalem, from Jeruſalem, Damaſcus, Caſarea; from ſome ſtately City, much better beſeeming Him. Theſe are Diffata carnis.

Fiſt, He denies not, Little it was; and, not Only, but Only, not parva, but parvula; diminutively little. So little (ſaith the Prophet) that it was not be reckoned una de millibus, not one of a thouſand, for the meannels of it. And the Evangelist makes it rather worſe, than better: for, the *Prophet*s word parvula, he turns in ignem, that is, minima, even the very leaſt of all.

This he confeſſes: but then, joyns this iſſue, that though the Tu be little, the Ex te may be great. Ex te parva egredietur non parvus: As little as it is, no little perſon ſhall come out of it. Though it be not una de millibus, for the meannels (as ſaith Mica;) Notwithſtanding, He that is to come out of it, may be, and is, electus unus de millibus, One of a thouſand, for his choice, for his excellency. Though it, not worthy to be one of the thouſand of Juda, it ſhould ſend forth one, that ſhould rule the thouſands of Juda, and the ten thouſands of Iſrael: And not of Iſrael only, after the fleſh, (but a handſul, in comparison of them, He ſhould lead) but, the Iſrael of God His faithful choſen people, all the world over. Indeed, He had answered the objection, before He made it, in Ephrata: that little it was; but fruitful, and not a little fruitful.

Which two counterpoyns make (in ſhew) a conflict, or contradiction between the Prophet and the Evangelist. The Prophet ſaith, Thou art the leaſt: The Evangelist (citing him) ſaith the clean contrary, Thou art not the leaſt. Bethlehem, minima, & non minima; leaſt, and not leaſt; how may both be? Well enough; both: So, both be not ſaid, regard had to one and the ſame thing.

Leaſt (ſaith Mica, and ſaith true,) for the compaſs of the Territory, leaſt; for the ſmall number of the Inhabitants, leaſt; for the thinneſs and meannels of the buildings, (as was ſeen at Chriſts Birth, not able to give lodging to any number;) ſo leaſt. But then again, not leaſt (ſaith S. Matthew, and ſaith truly too;) Not, in regard of any of the three now mentioned; but of another, able (of it ſelf alone) to weigh them all down: in that it ſhould yeild Alumnus tam grandem, ſo great a birth, as the great Meſſias of the world: One, whoſe onely coming forth of it was able to make it, not the leaſt, nay, the greateſt and moſt famous of all the dwellings of Jacob; of the whole Land; nay, of the whole world, then. And thus, not the leaſt. Though minima, for the Tu: non minima, for the ex te: Non minima, if it were but for him, and for nothing elſe.

What ſhall we make of this? Nothing but what cometh from it of it ſelfe, without ſtraining. That, with God, it is no new thing; (Nay, very familiar, as even the Heathen have obſerved; ſo familiar, as God ſeems to take delight in it;) to bring Maxima, de minimis; Great, out of little; Chriſt, out of Bethlehem. VVhich is plaine, even in Nature. How huge an Oke, from how ſmall an Acorn! (But, that asks great time:) From how little a grain of Muſtard ſeed (the very Bethlehem minima, the leaſt of all ſeeds) how large a plant! Of how far a ſpread! and that, in little time, a month or two at moſt.

But, we are again in Nature, now: in this very point (here) of Guſts ana Rivers, therein (too)

it hath been no unusual thing with him, out of small beginnings, to raise mighty States. Their first Cricle (Moses), whence came he? out of a basket of bull-rushes, forlorn and floating among the flages; taken up, even by chance. The great beginner of their Monarchy: and not of them alone, but the two beginners of the two mighty Monarchies of the Perfians and Romans; (Cyrus and Romulus) from the Shepherds scrip, from the Sheepcoat all three. These great Magnalia, from parva magnalia. And, as the Kingdoms of the earth from a Sheepcoat: so, his town (of the Church) from a Fisherboat. We may well turn to them, with this Apostrophe: And thou Sheepcoat; out of thee have come mighty Monarchs: And thou Fisherboat, out of thee, four of the chief and principal Apostles.

Even so Lord (saith our Saviour) for, so is thy pleasure. And, since it is his pleasure so to deal, it is his further pleasure, (and it is our lesson, out of this Bethlehem minima, even this) Ne minima minimi, that we set not little by that which is little, unless we will so set by Bethlehem, and by Christ and all. He will not have little places vilified; little Zoar will save the body: little Bethlehem, the soul. Nor have (saith Zachary) dies parvos, little times despised; unless we will despise this Day, the Feast of Humility: nor have one of these little ones offended, VVhy? for, Ephrata may make amends for parvula; ex te, for tu.

This is on Gods behalf. On Christs yet further, (to say a little upon this little;) For though there want not divers other good congruencies, why Christ should come from Bethlehem, rather than from another place: For that, it was the Town of David; and he was the Son of David; and so a place not unworthy for him to come from, even in that respect, being sedes avia. Out of thee came David, and (well) therefore, out of thee shall come Dauids Son; Dauids Son, and Dauids Lord both.

2. The surname of Ephrata puts me in mind of another; Lo, we heard of it at Ephrata, (saith the Psalms) there, the first news of the Temple: And Lo, we heard of him at Ephrata, (to day by the Angel,) there, the first word of the Lord of the Temple. The Temple was the type of the Church: and that was heard of, at Ephrata first: and, no ways incongruent, that were the Church; there, the head of the Church; Christ, and Christs Church (both) at one place.

3. There is a third in the very name of Bethlehem (that is) the house of Bread. For He that was born there, was Bread, but that will be more proper anon at Qui pascer.

But these though they agree well, yet none of them, so well, as this, that it was minima: the very minimeness (as I may say) of it. For, in so being, it was a place well suiting with his estate now, (at his egredietur ex te,) which was the state of Humility; eminent in His (if ever in any) Birth. Bethlehem was not so little, but he as little as it. Look, what Apostrophe Mica made to the Town, may we make to him; and that with better reason: And thou Bethlehemite, thou wert as little among the Sons of men: as ever was Bethlehem among the villages of Juda. So, novissimum oppidum (as Mica calls it) suits well with novissimus virorum, (as Esay calls him.)

And it was not the Place alone, but, all were little, then. The time, in solstitio brumali, the deep of Winter, when the days are at the shortest and least. And the people, (He came of) little. Amos saith, Who shall raise up Jacob, for he is small? Small, ever: but, never so small, never so low brought, as, at his coming forth. Then, at the lowest, and the very least: as being (then) brought under the bondage of a stranger: and he, one of the children of Edom, that cried, down with them, down to the ground. One, that made Rachel mourn in her grave (her grave was there hard by) for the slaughter of the poor innocents, within a while after. So, Place, and Time, and People, and all, little: and, He Himself less than all.

For, even in the place, Mica hath not said all: for, He is less yet. If little Bethlehem offended: what could have been said, if he had gone further (and yet not further than S. Luke) And thou, the stable, in the Inns at Bethlehem, And thou, the manger in the stable, Ex te egredietur, out of thee shall He come. These are beyond Bethlehem parva: less yet: yet thence did he come too, at his entrance into the world. And all these nothing, to his going out: Another manner of diminution, there, than all these. Such was his Humility, on this Feast of Humility.

And O thou little Bethlehem, And O thou little Bethlehemite, how do you both (both Place and Person) confound the haughtiness of many, that (yet) would be called Christians, and even near Christ Himself. There is in both of you (if it were, well taken to heart) enough to prick the swelling, and let out the aposthumed matter of pride, from a many of us, whose look, gesture, gate, and swelling words of vanity are too big for Bethlehem: whose whole carriage and course is, as if they were to be saved, by one that came out of the great City Ninive, or Grand Cayre, rather, than out of the little Hamlet of Bethlehem.

But, all this was done to bring that virtue in credit. I find no reason rendred of it, but this: That by what manner of place, he made choice of, to be born at, he would teach us, what manner of spirits, he doth affect, to take up his residence, and to rest in. The High and Excellent, saith Esay, that inhabits Eternity. He also will rest with the lowly; with those, that be no higher than Bethlehem, in their own eyes. To them he looks, gives grace to them, to them He reveals, what He keeps from the great ones of this world. And when he shall sit in all his glory, he shall say, Quod minimis huius & mihi. Say it forward, affirmative: and say it backward negative, Quod nec minimis huius, nec mihi: What to these minimis, to me: What was to them, was to me neither.

To end this point then: For little Bethlehems sake, to love the virtue that is like it. And for the virtues sake, to honour it. Honour it, there is a Star over it, there is a Saviour in it: Honour it, for that which comes out of it; for the fruit it yields: More good comes forth out of that poor Town, Town, (mibi, saith the Prophet, to me: nobis, may we say, to us all) than from all the great and glorious Cities in the world. What good, Nazianzen tells us: Bethlehem honora parvam, quæ te inducit in Paradisum. It gives us our introduction, to Paradise, (Bethlehem): it gives us a Guide, to day, if we will follow him, will bring us thither to our original happiness: Nay, further than so, to the days of eternity. And, Him we must follow, and it we must honour, (even this virtue,) if ever we mean, to come there.

This for the Place. Now for the Person, that cometh from this Place. For, being in speech of a Place, He continues in local terms fit for a place, Egreditur ex te. Egredi is to come forth; and that is properly from, or out of a place. And, the rather he doth it, because withal, it is a term that fitteth His Birth well: So, the Scripture saith, Naked came I forth, (that is) was I born. The child that first comes forth, (that is) the first is born. This word is twice repeated: 'Once, out of Bethlehem: Ex te. ' Another, from everlasting: ab aeterno. These two set out to us his two comings forth (that is) his two Nativities: (Nativity is nothing but a coming forth.) Those two, his two Natures: since Nativitas est ad naturam via, Nativity is but the way that leads to Nature. ' Egreditur ex te, as the Son of man, as Dauid's Son: ' Egressus Ejus ab aeterno, as the Son of God, as Dauid's Lord.

II.
The Person
Job 1.21.
Gen. 38.28.

Egreditur ex te. Egreditur is the tense of the time to come: To come, when Mica wrote this and in the Future: but come, when * S. Matthew cited it, and in the Prayer: When Jesus was born at Bethlehem. But, future and prayer (both) are in time: So, this, his Birth in time.

III.
His Natures:
As Man from Bethlehem.
* Mat. 2.1.

But, the other hath neither Future nor Prayer, neither Mood nor Tense; No Verb at all. It is expressed by a Substantive: to shew his subsistence before all time, from all eternity.

2. Ex, is a place; out of it he came; so, in it he was: and this Birth, local, as (before) temporal. So was not his order: that hath no ex: that is ab, ab aeterno: For, as eternal, no place contains him; he is every where; fills both heaven and earth.

3. Te; that place is Bethlehem; a place upon earth. According to which it is said, there shall come a Root out of Jesse (Esay's term, Chap. 11. vers. 1.) and out of it, a Branch, (Jeremie's, Chap. 23. v. 5.) Thence, Germen, a flower or blossom, (Zacharie's, Chap. 6. v. 12.) and from it this fruit of Ephraim, the fruit of the Virgins womb. Root, Branch, Blossom, and Fruit, all of the Earth, earthly. But there came forth, at the same time a Star, too: to shew he had another more high and heavenly being.

Jer. 23.4.
Luka 1.41.

For, this of Bethlehem was not his first flight (as we say:) the other, though it stand behind in the verse, was before that, by far: Ex aeterno, ante luciferum: Ante luciferum, before the Star of his birth; nay, before any morning star came forth, he was come forth. A principio (saith Mica.) And it is S. John's In principio, (the two first words of his Gospel,) long before Moses's In principio (the two first words of Genesis.) But, to leave no place to doubt of his meaning, he glosseth his a principio with, ab aeterno, (that is) from everlasting. By which very words, [from eternity] Arius error (of erat, quando non erat) falls to the ground. For, nunquam erat, quando non erat aeternus. Never was there (call it what you will) when eternity was not. For, as everlasting, forwards, is, to quando tempus non erit amplius, there shall be no more time: So everlasting, backward, is, to quando tempus non erat adhuc, when there was yet no time at all.

2 As God from
Psal. 110.3.

Now let it not trouble you, that this His eternal, is the plural number (outgoings) as if they were more than one: It is but the Hebrew phrase: They use to express the Superlative (ever) by the Substantive of the plural number, to call that man many blessings, whom they mean to be most blessed. So that, outgoings, which is but one; but so high after such a manner, so past our reach, as Esay asks, Generationem Ejus quis enarrabit, Who shall declare his generation? No one, no singular will reach it: and so, it is expressed plurally.

Esay 53.8.

So use they also, to note our continuance, And so it sets out to us, the continual emanation, or proceeding of him, from his Father, Sanctus (the Apostles word) as a beam of brightness streaming from him unceasingly: Never past, (his Generation;) but, (as the School-men call it) actus commensuratus aternitati. For Hodie genui te, is true of every day: yet because it hath co-existence with many revolutions of time (though it be indeed, in it selfe, but one drawn out along, yet) according to the many ages it lasteth, it seemeth to multiply it self into many: And so is expressed plurally.

Psal. 2.7.

Though, (the principal sense alwayes saved) we may referre this Plural to both His outgoings; both, as Son of God before all times, and as Son of man in the fulness of time. For, this later (though executed in time) had his outgoing (that is, the Decree for it went forth) ab aeterno. Even, that out of Bethlehem He should come; be the Son of man; the Saviour of Mankind, and their Guide, to eternity. Even, that way also (in a sense) it may be said; As Man, He came forth A principio, A diebus aternitatis: A principio, for the efficacy; ab aeterno, for the Decree. From the beginning there there went virtue forth of Him, which wrought, even then, when He was but forth-coming, as we say, and yet not come forth. His life, His death, ab origine mundi. So for the efficacy, a principio. As for the Decree; that was gone forth, from before the foundations of the world, from all Eternity.

Ephes. 1.4.

So now have we this Party, twice come forth; compound of Bethlehem, and Eternity. And, now we have Him, what shall we do to Him? But first, what shall He do to us? With God, Officium fundatur in beneficio: He first doth for us, before He require ought of us. This He shall do for us. He shall be, to us, וְיָשׁוּעָא is the word of the Text; S. Matthew turns it ἡ σωτηρία. Which, in the first and native sense, is a Guide for the way, Dux via, to lead us: In a second, is a Captain, Dux militia

III.
His Office.

militie, to guard us. * And to these two, by way of paraphrase, S. Matthew adds, 'quis pascet, a Guide that shall feed us.' To lead us in the way. * To guard us in the way. * To feed us in the way. In these three, His Office.

I
A Guide to lead us.

Heb. 5. 9.

Heb. 4. 15.
Deut. 18. 18.
Jer. 30. 21.
Heb. 5. 1.

From a place, He came to be our guide, to a place: Still, He holds on with his local terms, he began with. For a guide serves properly to bring one to a place. There is, in that word, both the Office, He to perform to us; and the Benefit, we to receive by Him, (guiding.) And it implieth also our Duty to Him again: for, if He to lead; we to be led by Him: He is become the author of eternal salvation, Heb. 5. (saith the Apostle) so them, as will obey Him, and be guided by Him, and, to none other.

VWill ye see (first) the necessity of both these His comings forth, for this Office, to be our Guide: Egredietur ex te, first, He was to be of us, being to guide us: for being of us, He would the better understand our wants, and have the more compassion on them, Heb. 4. 15. Therefore, if a Prophet: A Prophet shall the Lord raise up unto you, from among your brethren: (Moses Egredietur ex te.) If a Prince: Your noble Ruler shall be of your selves, even from the midst of you: (Jeremy: So he, Egredietur ex te.) If a Priest: then, so be taken from men, and be ordained for men, in things pertaining unto God: (the Apostles Egredietur ex te.) To every one of these: And these three be the three great Guides of mankind.

Esay 57. 15.

And again: As meet, He should come forth from Eternity, if thither He to bring us. None can bring to a place, so well, as he, that hath been there. There he had been; had inhabited eternity (saith Esay:) thence he came; and coming thence, best knows the way thither again. So neither of his outgoings more than needs.

Iohn 14. 5.

Now to our Guide. VWhere the terms of Way, and of Walking, and Leading, meet us so thick, are so frequent, all along the Scripture; as plain it is, our very life is held as a Journey; and we (as the School-men term us) viatores, in state of wayfaring men, or travellers, all, from our coming into the world, to the going out of it again, still going on, in the way, or out of the way, 'one or 'other if so: In a journey two things we are to look to; * our Quo, and * our Qua: * Quo, our end, whither; * Qua, our way by which S. Thomas said well; Lord, we know not whither thou goest; and how then can we know the way? Right: for, Ignoramus quem portum petas nullum secundum est ventum, No wind is good for him, that knows not for what port, he is bound: he that knows not, whither he goes, wanders, and is never in his way; is never in it, for he hath none, to be in.

First then, Quo; whither? Now, the end of the Verses, is our journey's end, Eternity. VWhere, if we may arrive, happy we: that is agreed on presently. So is not the way thither.

But yet, this (I take) is agreed; that, if it be a ready way, we care the less for a guide; but if hard to hit, then Dux nobis opus, we need one.

Esay 30. 21.

And sure, the way is not ready to hit; not so easie, a fool may find it: It is but a foolish imagination to to wren of it. By-ways there be divers: many cross paths, and turnings in and out; and we like enough to miss it, if we venture on it, without a Guide: If there be not one, to call to us ever and anon, (as Esay 30. 21.) Hac est via, ambulate in ea, This is the right way, keep it: if not, you go, you know not whither.

Acts 8. 31:
Mat. 2. 2.

The first point then is, to find our own want; to think, we are in case, to need a Guide. For, if we need none, this Text is superfluous: And thou Bethlehem, and Thou Christ, ye may both well be spared. If we be able to go the way, without a guide; to be guides to our selves; Nay, to be guides to our guides, then: (the world is come to that, now.)

Mat. 15. 14.

VWell he was a wise man, and a great Counsellor, that said, when time was, How can I, without a Guide? And the Wise men, at this test, were not so well perswaded of their own skill, but they sought and took directions. Let us follow them.

Iohn 14. 6.

To get us one then. And, not any one, but one that is skilful in the way: (no one thing need we so to be advised of, as this.) For, strange it is, but true it is; even they, that be blind themselves, will take upon them to be guides to others. You know who said, fi cecum cecum: that (fi) was no vain (fi;) no idle supposition: usque hodie, it is done daily. But the end (there) is, in foveam, a place we would not come to; and God keeps us from it.

Luke 1. 75.

One then, that is skilful: And where shall we have any so skilful, as this; this of ours? He cannot but be so. It is sure; there were no better guide, than the way it self, if the way could speak to us, and tell us when we were right or wrong in it. Now, he, He is the way: the Way and the End both. As God, he is the end: (the fruition of the God-head, the end of our journey.) As man, he is the way: both Way and Guide too. His Doctrine our Guide; His example, in the whole tract of his life, the very way thither.

Nothing remaineth, but that we now set forward in this way. For (as we daily sing in the Benedictus) he came, (not to whet our wits, or to file our tongues, but) to guide our feet into the way. And, into what way? Not of questions and controversies, whereof there is no end, about which we languish all our life long: but, into the way of peace, even of those duties about which there is no disagreement. Look but to this Feast, (it is S. Augustines note) didicerunt Magi, & abierunt: docuerunt Scribae & remanserunt, the Wise men, they learnt the way, and on they went: The Scribes, they taught the way, but they tarried still behind. O do, as did the Wise men, dimittunt Scribae inaniter lectitare, ipsi pergunt fideliter adorare, let the Scribes sit still, and scan and read lectures of the way; On went the Wise men on their way, and performed their worship, the end of their journey: and so let us. This for Dux via.

be enemies beset the way, to stop our passage; then will not dux (a guide) serve our turn, we must have A Captain to Dux (a Captain,) then: (the second sense of the word dux;) one to guard us, and to make way guard us. for us. For, we are not onely to be led surely, without error: but safely, without danger also. Such a Guide we behove to have, as will see us safe at the place we would be at. And, Bethlehem breeds such. Out of little Bethlehem came he that fetched down great Goliath. And again, out of it, this day, He, that shall tread down Satan under our feet: Dux Messias, Captain Messias, (as the Angel 1 Sam. 17. 49. in Dan. 9. 25. calls him.) Rom. 16. 10. Dan. 9. 25.

And, for qui pascet, we may not miss that neither. For, say, we be guarded from enemies; yet shall we go our journey but evil, if we faint by the way for hunger or thirst, and have not to relieve us. He is not a good Guide, that in that case, cannot lead us, where we may be purveyed of necessary food, for our relief. It is all one, to perish out of the way, by error; and to perish in the way, by want of needfull refreshing. S. Matthew therefore, to make Him a compleat Guide, by way of supply adds, Qui pascet: Such an one, as shall lead, more Pastoritis, as a Shepherd doth his flock: not, lead them the way onely: but lead them also to good green pasture, besides the waters of comfort; see, they want nothing, Dux qui pascet, or Pastor qui ducet, chuse you whether; for, He is both. Psalm 23. 27

Of all the three, the name of the Place (He was born in) seems to favour this most; to be ominous toward qui pascet. Beth, is a house; lehem, bread; and Ephrata, is plenty: Bread, plenty. And there was in Bethlehem, a well of such water, as King David (we read) longed for it, (the best in all the Country.) Bethlehem then (sure) a fit place, for Qui pascet to be born in. And, Qui pascet as fit a person, to be born in Bethlehem. He is not meet to be Ruler (saith Esay) that saith, in domo mea non est panis. He can never say, that Bethlehem is his house: and that is domus panis: and in domo panis semper est panis. Never take him without bread his house is the house of bread, inasmuch as He himself is bread: that, in the house, or out of it, wherefoever he is, there is Bethlehem. There can no bread want. 1 Chr. 11. 171

These three abilities then, are in Christ our Leader: 1 Skill, to be a Guide: 2 Valour, to be a Captain: 3 and for Qui pascet, Bethlehem, the house of bread, is his house. Of which, 1 Skill, serves for direction: 2 Strength, for defense; 3 food, for refreshing. Esay 3. 7.

1 Lucas Sacerdos alio scientia; by the light of his Priestly knowledg; so, he guides us: for the Priests lips are to preserve knowledg.

2 And, brachio Regis Potentia, by the arm of his Royal power; so, he guards us: for Power pertains to the Prince principally. Mal. 2. 7.

3 And, for qui pascet, He is Melchisedek, King and Priest; ready to bring forth (as He did) bread and wine. But in another manner far, than he did. The bread and wine, Melchisedek brought forth, were not His body and blood: Christ is: Both qui pascet, and quo pascet. As before, Dux, & via, the guide and the way: so, now, here, Pastor, & pabulum, the feeder and the food, both. Gen. 14. 18.

You may see all this represented, in the shadows of the Old Testament. There is a book, there, called Exodus, of Israels agnoscitur out of Egypt: therein, they had Moses for their Guide; and he led them to the borders of the Holy land, and there he left them: to shew, the Law brought nothing to perfection. Then comes Josua (whom the Epistle to the Hebrews calls Jesús), the figure of ours here, and by his conduct, they were led, and put in possession of the Land of promise. Heb. 7. 19: Heb. 4. 8.

All this but in type of another Testament, after to be made, saith Jeremy; and upon better promises, saith the Apostle: Namely, our spiritual leading through this vale of vanity, to the true land of promise, the heavenly Jerusalem that is from above; whither this our Jesús undertakes to bring all those, that will be guided by Him. Jer. 31. 31. Heb. 8. 6. Gal. 4. 26.

Observe but the correspondence, between the type and the truth. Moses, when he came to lead the people, found them, how? scattered over all the land of Egypt, to seek stubble for brick, to build them a City, that sought the ruine of them all. Our case right the very pattern of it: when our Guide finds us wandering in vanity, picking up straws, things that shall not profit us; seeking death in the error of our life; till we be so happy, as to light into his guide. Sap. 1. 13.

Secondly, Moses was to them, not onely Dux via, a Guide for the way; but, when enemies came forth against them, Dux militia, a Captain for the war. Christ was so too: and far beyond Moses; For, he made us way with the laying down of his life: so did neither Moses, nor Josua. Would die for us, but, he would open a passage to the place, he undertook to bring us to. Was Dux, a Guide, in his life; Dux, a Captain, in his death. Esay 53. 131

Thirdly, Moses when he fainted by the way, obtained, in their hunger, Manna from heaven; and, in their thirst, water out of the rock for them. Christ is (himself) the true Mannab, Christ's the spiritual rock: whom he leads, he feeds: carries Bethlehem about him. John 6. 31: 1 Cor. 10. 4.

Plain, by the ordaining of his last Sacrament, as the means to re-establish our hearts with grace, and to repair the decays of our spiritual strength: even, his own flesh, the bread of life; and his own blood, the Cup of salvation. Bread made of himself the true granum frumenti, wheat corn (Job. 11. 24.) Wine made of himself the true Vine: VVent under the Sickle, Flail, Adilstone, and Oven, even to be made this bread: Trod (or was troden) in the winepress alone, to prepare this cup for us. Heb. 13. 9: John 6. 33, 48. Psalm 116. 13. John 13. 24. 15. 1.

And in this respect, it may well be said, Bethlehem was never Bethlehem right, had never the name truly, till this day, this birth, this bread was born, and brought forth there. Before it was the house of bread; but, of the bread that perishest: but then, of the bread that endureth to everlasting life. That, it might seem (inter alia) to have been one of the ends of his being born there, to make it Bethlehem, veri nominis, Bethlehem truly so called. John 9. 27.

And

of his Leading

And this is his Office. Now, all the doubt will be, how he can perform this Office to us; go before us and be our Guide; seeing, he is now in heaven, at his journeys end: and we in Earth, by the way still. No matter for that: He hath left us (first) the way traced by the steps of his blessed life; which we keeping us to, sure we are, we cannot go amiss. And then, as before he came in the flesh, He led them by the hand of Moses and Aaron, (Guides chosen and sent by him;) So doth he, us, now, by the hands of those whom the Apostle, (three several times in one Chapter, Heb. 13.) calleth by this very name ἡγουμένους, our Guides: by whom he leads us, if he leads us at all: And other leading we are not to look for any. Onely to pray, they may lead us right, and then all is well.

Apoc. 14. 4.

And, they cannot but lead us right, so long as they but teach us, to follow the Lamb whither he goeth. For their Office is, but to lay forth before us, the way traced by the steps that he went. Those steps when all is done, are ever our best directions. And, I mean to do but so now: as here (not to go a step out of the text) there are four or five of these steps, as many as we shall well carry away at once. And these they be.

Luke 2. 15.

The main point is: It is a place, and so to be gone to. We take this from the Shepherds, directed thither by the Angel, to resolve of Transseamus usque Bethlehem, that we get us to Bethlehem. There is the Rendez-vous, to day: there he will be first seen, and saluted: there he began with us; there we to begin with him: VWhere he set forth, there our setting forth to be also. Indeed, there is no finding him but there, this Feast. There the Shepherds found him, this day, the first: There, the Wise-men, on Twelfth day, the last. But thither they came both; both the Shepherds, directed by the Angel; and the Wise-men, guided by the Star. The Shepherds, in them, the Jews: the Wise-men, in them, the Gentiles. The Shepherds, in them, unlettered persons: the Wise-men, in them, the profoundest Clerks. The Shepherds, in them, mean men: the Wise-men, in them, great States. Be what we will be, at Bethlehem to begin all. Thither to go to him; thence to set out after him. Transseamus usque Bethlehem.

Luke 2. 12.
Mat. 2. 9.

Rom. 10. 6. 8.

How shall we do that? VWhat, shall we go in pilgrimage to the place? VVe learn a shorter course of the Apostle, (Rom. 10.) The righteousness of faith (saith he) speakes on this wise: say not thou in thy heart, who shall go over the sea for me, that were to bring Christ again into earth. But, What saith it? The word is near thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart. And, this it is: Bethlehem hath here two twins: an Epithete, a virtue or two. Get but them, get but your souls possessed of them, it will save you a journey: you shall never stir hence, but be at Bethlehem, standing where you do.

1 By Humility,
Parvula.

Parvula is the first: you know, Bethlehem is little. And, look what little and low is in quantity: that is little in our own eyes, and lowly in quality. Get that first, (humility:) it is the Bethlehem of virtues; where he, in great humility was found, this day. If we begin not there, we lose our way, at the first setting out. For this is sure, where Eternity is the terminus ad quem, there Humility is the terminus a quo. Humility, in the first comma of the sentence, where Eternity is the period (as in this Verse it is,) And even here now at the first, is CHRIST like to lose a great part of his train. The Pharisees are gone; all, too big for Bethlehem, they: and with them, all that are ἡγῆα, some great matter, in their own sight. Touching whom we may use the Apostrophe: And thou Bethlehem art too little for these great conceits: None of them will come out of thee, or come at thee, by their will: every one of them is a cunning Guide himself; and, no Guide, they, but sequuntur spiritum suum, their own bold spirit: bid Bethlehem fare-well; at it, they come not. Well, parvula is the first.

Ezek. 13. 3.

2 By fruitfulness, Ephrata.
Esay 53. 10.
Psaln 72. 16.

The next station, is to the next virtue, and that is Ephrata, fruitfulness; (so it signifies:) little it is, but fruitful. Fruitful, first, that it brought forth him: for, he hath brought forth, seen come of himself (saith Esay) longævum semen, a lasting seed: the fruit whereof, to this day, shakesh like Libanus, and as the green grass covereth all the earth. I mean, the Christians, that were, are, or ever shall be: how great an Ephrata, of how little a beginning! It is not onely little, but Ephrata too; and, by that, know it. For indeed, good heed would be taken, that we go not to the wrong Bethlehem: not to Bethlehem Zabulon, that is, Bethlehem on the sands (so lay Zabulon by the sea,) Bethlehem the barren: But, to Bethlehem Juda, Bethlehem Ephrata, (that is) Bethlehem the fruitful. That is, to Humility to add Fruitfulness. (I mean) Plenteousness in all good works. Else, it is not Ephrata; not right: not right Repentance, unless it be Ephrata, bring forth fruits of Repentance: nor Faith; without the work of faith: nor Love; without the labour of love: nor any other virtue, without her Ephrata. Ephrata is not the Surname of Humility onely, but even of the rest too: Repentance Ephrata, and Faith Ephrata; & sic de ceteris, if they be true: Else be they but vites frondosa, leaves and nothing else: Simulachra virtutum, and not virtues indeed: Of Zabulon, not of Juda; and so, not the right.

works, Beth-

James 5. 7.
Rom. 15. 28.
Phil. 4. 18, 19.

Fruitful then: and of what fruit? That is in the very name itself, [of Bethlehem.] Not the fruit of the lips (a few good words) but the precious fruit of the earth (as S. James calleth it) lehem, good bread: that fruit. Such fruit, as S. Paul carried to the poor Saints at Jerusalem, Alms and offerings; that is the right fruit: Cum signavero fructum hunc; it hath the Seal on it, for right. Such, as the Philippians lent him, for supply of his want: whereby he knew they were alive again at the roor; in that they thus fructified, yielded this fruit, of a sweet odour, and wherewith God was highly pleased (as there he tells them.)

Psaln 13. 26.

2 Sam. 18. 25.

It was not (sure) without mysterie, that the Temple was first heard of at Ephrata, at this fruitful place. No more was it (that which the Fathers observe) of the Trees, that were used about it: Not a post of the Temple, not a Spar; nay, not so much as a pin, but was made of the wood of a fruit-bearing tree: No barren wood at all, in it. No more was it, that the very Altar of the Temple was founded upon a threshing floor (Arauna's) where good corn was threshed. All, to shew, it would be plenteous in feeding, and cloathing, and such other pertaining to this of Ephrata. Which (how-ever they be with us) will will be the first, and principal point of inquiry at the day of Doom; even about feeding, and cloathing, and other works of mercy.

Now, if we could bring these two together; make a conjunction of them in Comitas, it were worth all. For, (I know not how, but) if there be in us ought of Ephraim: if we happen to be any thing fruitful, but in any degree; away goes parvula straight: Straight, we cease to be fruitful: VVe begin to talk of Merit and worth, and I wot not what. Indeed, if we be all barren and bare, it may be, then, (and scarce then neither, but peradventure, then) we grow not high-minded. But so, we fall still upon one extremum or other: if fertile, then proud: if humile, then desert. VVe cannot get, to be fruitful, yet not fruitless; or to be fruitful, yet keep our humility still: Not Ephraim, and parvula together: But, that is the true Bethlehem, and there was he born. And thus far, (I hope) we have been led right, and are in our way.

But, leading is not all: here is qui pascet too, and we may not pascit. For, to that he leads us also; Dux, qui pascet. VVe followed a false Guide, at first, that led us to the forbidden fruit, the end whereof was more moriemini. This (now) will lead us to a food of the nature of the Tree of life, even the bread of life; by eating whereof, we shall have life in our selves, even life eterna. That is his food he leads us to. And if we would forget this, both the Person and the Place (the Person, qui pascet, that shall feed; and the Place, Bethlehem, the house of bread) would serve to put us in remembrance of it; Even of the breaking of bread, which the Church, as this day, ever hath, and still useth, as the Child-house Feast.

VVe speak of Transcarnus inque Bethlehem, going thither: that we may, even locally do, and never go out of this Room: inasmuch as there is to be had the true bread of life, that came down from Heaven. VVhich is, His flesh, this day born, which he gave for the life of the world, (called by Him so, the true bread, the bread of Heaven, the bread of life:) And where that bread is, there is Bethlehem ever. Even stricte loquendo, it may be said, and said truly, the Church, in this sense, is very Bethlehem, no less than the Town it self. For that, the Town it self never had the name rightly, all the while there was but bread made there, bread (panis hominum) the bread of men: Not, till this bread was born there, which is Panis Angelorum (as the Psalm calleth it) and man did eat Angels food. Then, and never till then, was it Bethlehem: and that is in the Church, as truly as ever in it. And accordingly, the Church takes order, we shall never fail of it: There shall ever be, this day, a Bethlehem to go to: a house, wherein there is bread, and this bread. And shall these be Bethlehem, and so near us, and shall we not go to it? Or shall we go to it, to the House of bread (this bread) and come away without it? Shall we forsake our Guide leading us to a place so much for our benefit?

Luke 17. 37.

Else do we our duty to him, but by halves. For, as our duty to Dux, is to be led: So, our duty to qui pascet, is to be fed by him. To end: And thus, ducendo pascit, and pascendo ducit: leading He feeds us, and feeding He leads us, till He bring us, whither? Even to A principio, back again to where we were at the beginning: and at the beginning, we were in Paradise. That our beginning shall be our end. Thither He will bring us: Nay, to a better estate than so: to that whereunto, even from Paradise, we should have been translated, to the state of eternity, to the joys and joyful days there: even, to glory, joy, and bliss eternal. To which He bring us, even our blessed guide, that this day, was in Bethlehem, born to that end, JESUS CHRIST the Righteous.

A SER.

A SERMON

Preached before the
Kings Maieſty,

At White-Hall, on Wednesday, the XXV. of Decemb. An.
Dom. MDCXVI. being Christmas Day.

Psalm. LXXXV. Verſ. X, XI.

Miſericordia & Veritas obviaverunt ſibi: Juſtitia &
Pax oſculatæ ſunt. (xit.

Veritas & terra orta eſt: & Juſtitia de cœlo proſpe-Mercy and Truth ſhall meet: Rightouſneſs and Peace
ſhall kiſſ one another.

Truth ſhall bud out of the earth; and Rightouſneſs ſhall look down from Heaven.

Have here read you two Verſes, out of this Psalm, which is one of the Psalms ſelected of old, by the Primitive Church, and ſo ſtill retained by ours, as part of our Office, or ſervice of this day: as being proper and pertinent to the matter of the Feaſt, and ſo to the Feaſt it ſelf. For, the meeting here ſpecified was to be, at the birth of the Meſſias: So ſaith Rabbi Moſes, and other of the Jews. Was at the birth of our Saviour: ſo ſay the Fathers with uniform conſent, and eo nomine, have made this a Christmas-day-Pſalm.

As his manner is, the Pſalmiſt, in it, under one, compriſeth the type, and the truth, both. By thoſe things which beſell the people of the Jews, the Church typical ſhadowing out thoſe things, which were to befall the Antitype of it, Chriſt and his Church. For, prima & propria intentione, it cannot be denied, but the Pſalm was firſt ſet, according to the letters, upon the turning tack of the captivity of Babel. But, the Prophet knew well, that was not their worſt captivity, nor ſhould be their beſt delivery: there was another yet behind, concerned them more (if they underſtood their own ſtate aright) which was reſerved, to the Meſſias, to free them from. To that, he points. Even that the Apoſtle complains of (Rom. 7.) wherein the ſoul is led away captive under ſin and Satan (the very true Babel indeed, as which bringeth with it everlaſting confuſion:) From which CHRIST (the true Zorobabel) is to ſet us free: us, and them both.

There is a Meeting here. A Meeting at a birth. A birth, that did them in Heaven (Rightouſneſs by name) good to behold. The meeting, in obviaverunt: the birth, in orta eſt: the pleaſure to behold it, in proſpexit de cœlo. Proſpexit is to ſee with delight, as when we look into ſome pleaſant object.

A Meeting qualified with the manner. For, they do not meet, and paſſ by; but meet and ſalute, as friends, with an oſculati ſunt: a ſign of love begun, or renewed.

Rom. 7.23:

This

This meeting is of four. Four, which of themselves (proprie loquendo) are nothing but Attributes, or Properties, of the Divine Nature. But, are (here) by the Psalmist brought in, and represented to us, as so many Personages. Personages (I say) inasmuch as they have here personal acts ascribed to them. For, to meet, to kiss, to look down, are all of them acts personal. And, look how the Psalmist presents them, so we treat of them; in the same terms, the Text doth.

At a Birth, at Orta est, these four meet here: At Orta est veritas, the birth of truth; de terra, from the earth. For, two Ortus there were: and this, not His antefacularis ortus de celo, His birth before all worlds, from Heaven; but, His Ortus de terra, His temporal birth, from the earth.

Lastly, the birth of this birth (as I may say;) the effect is wrought: Of which, more there are in the neighboring verses: Here, in these (besides the meeting occasioned by it) there is but one. That, such a spectacle it was, as it drew Righteousness it self from heaven, to look at it. Time was, when Righteousness would not have done so much; nor have vouchsafed a look hitherward: Therefore respeccus ius Justitia, is good news: That, then, and ever since, She hath beheld the earth and the dwellers in it, with a far more favourable regard, than before. And all, for this birth's sake.

And when was all this? When He that faith of Himself, I am the Truth, when He was born upon the earth: For, orta est Veritas; and natus est Christus will fall out to be one Birth. What day soever that was, this meeting was upon it. And that was, this day, of all the days of the year. The meeting, and the Day of this meeting, here, all one: and the Birth of CHRIST, the cause of both. So, being this day's work; this day, to be dealt with most properly.

Onward we have here four Honours of this Day. Every one of the four giving it a blessing. It is the day of ortus Veritatis, Truth's birth: And the same, the day of occursus Misericordiae, the Meeting here mentioned: And, of osculum Pacis, the Kiss here expressed: And of prospicuum Iustitiae, Righteousness's gracious respect of us. These, from each of them in several. And generally, the day of reconciling them all.

Holding us to these, we are to speak of the Meeting, the Parties, the Birth, and the Effect here specified to come of it. Of this Meeting, in CHRIST: Then, in Christianity, not to be broken off by us, but to be renewed, and specially this day.

The Division.

I.
II.

Here is a Meeting: And that is no great matter, if it be no more. How many meet we, as we pass too and fro daily, and how little do we regard it? But that meeting is casual.

Somewhat more there is, in Set Meetings. It was not, by hap: not obviaverunt, simply; but, obviaverunt sibi. Sibi sheweth, they had an intent; they came forth, on both sides; Not to meet any fifth person; but to meet one another.

But, not every Set meeting is memorable: This, is. I find a Psalm (here) made, in remembrance of it. And (lightly) Songs be not made, but de raro contingens; not, of ordinary, but of some special great Meetings.

The greatness of a Meeting groweth three ways. By the Parties, Who: The Occasion, Whereon: and the End, VVhereto they meet. All three are in this. The Parties, in the first Verse: the Occasion, and End, in the second. The Occasion, a birth: an occasion oft, of making great Persons meet: And the End that comes of it, that Righteousness, who is to be our Judge, and to give the last sentence upon us, beholds us with an aspect, that promises favour.

The Occasion, and the End, we shall touch anon: Now of the Parties: If the Parties great, the Meeting great. The conjunction of the Great lights in heaven, The interview of great States on earth, ever bodes some great matter. VVho ate the Parties here? Four, as high, as excellent Attributes, as there be any in the God-head, or (to keep the style of the Text) four, as great States, as any in the Court of Heaven.

These meet: and in what manner? Great States meet otherwise, in a pitch field: Not so here; This is an obviaverunt, with an osculum sunt: they run not, one, at another, as enemies: they run, one, to another, and Kiss, as loving friends. And that which makes it memorable indeed, is, that these Parties, in this manner thus meet, who (if all were well known) were more like to turn tail, than to meet: one to run from another; Nay, one to run at another, to encounter: rather than to run one to another, to embrace and kiss. Nor meet at all: at least not meet thus, standing in such terms as they did.

Mercy and Peace if they two had met; or Truth and Righteousness, they two, it had not been strange. But, for those, that seem to be in opposition, to do it, that is it, that makes this Meeting marvelous in our eyes.

VVill you stay a little, and take a view of the Parties. Four they are: these four, Mercy, Truth, Righteousness, and Peace. VVhich quaternion, at the first sight, divides it self into two and two. Mercy and Peace, they two pair well: they be collatanea (as Bernard saith of them in one place) bed-fellows, sleep together: collatanea (as, in another place) sucked one milk, one breast, both. And, as these two; so, the other two (truth and righteousness) seem to be of one complexion and disposition, and commonly take part together. Of these, Mercy seems to favour us; and Peace, no enemy to us, nor to any: (seeing we must speak of them as of persons) mild, and gentle persons, both. For Righteousness, I know not well what to say: Gestas gladium, and (I fear) non frustra. Nor of Truth, who is vera, and severa; severe too, otherwise. These (I doubt) are not like affected. doubt. Of one of them (Righteousness) is told; here, for great news, that She (but) looked down hi-therwards from Heaven. Before then, She would not have done that. A great sign it is of heart-burning, when one will not do so much as look at another; not endure his sight: We cannot promise our selves much of her, No, nor of Truth. One was so bold, in a place, to say, Omnis homo mendax, and feared no challenge for it. By that, it seems, all stands not well with her, neither. So then; two, for us; two, against us.

For their order: Mercy is first, and Peace last. VVith both ends, we shall do well enough: God send us to do but so with the middle. Yet, this is not amiss, that they, which favour us less, are in the middle; hemmed in on both sides, closed about with those that wish us well; and, they between us and them. On the one side, Mercy before: On the other, Peace, behind.

Another; that, in this double meeting, Mercy sorts not her self, goes not to Righteousness: nor Righteousness, to her, but to Peace. A kind of cross meeting (as it were) there is: the better hope of accord. Mercy and Righteousness have no Symbolizing quality at all; no hope of them: but, Truth, with Mercy, hath, There is Truth as well, in the Promise of Mercy: as, in the threat of Justice.

And it stands yet better, between the other two (Righteousness, and Peace.) Melchisedeck, which is by interpretation King of Righteousness, the same is King of Salem, (that is) of peace. He, that is after the order of Melchisedeck, King of both, like enough, to set accord between them two both of them his lieges. This for the view of the Parties.

These meet here: but, what is obviaverunt, without osculata sunt? Better, let them stand in sunder still, and never meet. There seems to be two Meetings implied. One obviaverunt, without: and another, with osculata sunt.

Before they met here, they were parted, the one from the other. For, they that meet, come from divers coasts. Before this meeting they have been in divers quarters, one from the other, and not come together thus a good while.

Their distance, in place, grew from their distance, in affection estranged one from the other. That they meet not, I will not say: but that they met not thus, ever before. Else, what remarkable thing were there in this meeting, or worth the composing of a Psalms, if it had been familiar with them, thus to meet every other, nay, any other day?

How came they then asunder, that it should be a marvel to see them meet? Since (naturally) they are not strangers; all four, in the bosome of God from all Eternity; Attributes (all four) of His undivided essence. So, not divided, of themselves: Not, of themselves, then. That they were divided, it was about us; the quarrell ours, that made them part company. Thus I gather it: If, at Christs birth they met: at Adams fall, they parted. If, when truth was born on earth; they came together: when truth perished from the earth, they fell in sunder. That was, when the first lye was told, and believed, (and that was nequaquam moriemini, by Adam) and thereby God much wronged. So that Adams cause it was, (and so, ours) that first divided Heaven: yea, the very Attributes, in God (we see) and so (in a sort) God Himself. So they parted first. It could not be said (by the Apostle) that Christ pacified all things in Heaven, and in Earth: If there had not, in Heaven, been somewhat to be taken up.

For all this yet, I deny not, but they might and did meet, once before. But it was an obviaverunt, without an osculata sunt: Never, both these, till now. Out of Christ, and before His birth, they met in opposition: In Christ, and at His birth, did these four Lights come to meet, and to be in conjunction, now. They met before: obviaverunt: but, in stead of osculata, it was altercata sunt. While Mercy and Peace would have Adams and our case relieved, Righteousness and Truth would by no means endure it. The plea is drawn up and reported at large, by Bernard, in his first Sermon upon the Annuntiation. Mercy began: (for out of her readiness to do good, she is, here, she is ever foremost) Her inclination is, or rather, she herself is an inclination, to pity such, as are in misery: and, if she can, to relieve them: yea, though they deserve it not. For (which is the comfort of the miserable sinner) she looks not to the party, what he is, or what he hath done, or deserved; but, what he suffers, in how woful and wretched a case he is. And her plea is, nunquid in vanum? What hath God made all men for naught? What profit is there in their Blood? It will make Gods enemies rejoice, Thither it will come, if God cast them clean off: VVhat then, Will He cast them off for ever, will He be no more entreated? Hath God forgotten to be gracious? VVith these and such like pii susurri (as he calls them) did she enter into Gods bowels, and make them yerne, and melt into compassion. And certainly, if there were none to stand against us, there were hope Mercy had prevailed.

But, Truth must be heard too, and she layes in just matter of exception, Pleads, Deum erat Verbum; VVhat is God but His Word? and His word was, as to A D A M. morie morieris; So, to his sons, anima qua peccaverit, the soul that sinneth, that soul shall die. God may not falsifie His word: His word is, the truth: falsifie the truth? that may not be.

And then steps up Righteousness, and seconds her: that God as He is true in his Word, so is He Righteous in all His works: So, to reddere suum cuique, to render each his own, to every one, that is his due; and so to the sinner stipendium peccati, the wages of sin, (that is) death. God forbid, the Judge of the world should judge unjustly: that were as (before) to make Truth false, so (here) to do Right wrong.

Nay, it went farther, and they made it their own cases. What shall become of me (said Righteousness?) What use of Justice, if God will do no justice, if He spare sinners? and what use of me (saith Mercy,) if He spare them not? Hard hold there was, in as much as, Parit, nisi homo moriatur (said said Righteousness I die, If he die not: And Peris, nisi Misericordiam consequatur (said Mercy) if he die, I die too. To this it came: and in those terms break up the meeting, and away they went one from the other. Truth went into exile, as a stranger upon earth: --- Terras Astra reliquit, she confined her self in Heaven: where so aliened she was, as she would not so much as look down hither upon us.

The first meeting broken up.

Mercy, she stayed below still: ubi enim Misericordia esset (saith Hugo well) si cum misero, non esset? Where should Mercy be, if with misery she should not be?

As for Peace, she went between both, to see, if she could make them meet again in better terms. For without such a meeting, no good to be done for us.

For, meet they must, and that in other terms, or it will go wrong with us; Our Salvation lies a bleeding, all this while. The Plea hangs, and we stand, as the prisoner at the Bar, and know not what shall become of us. For though two be for us, there are two against us, as strong and more stiff than they. So that, much depends upon this second Meeting; upon the composing or taking up this difference. For, these must be at peace between themselves, before they be at peace with us, or with God. And this is sure: we shall never meet in heaven, if they meet no more.

And many means were made for this meeting, many times; but, it would not be. Where stayed it? It was not long of Mercy, she would be easily entreated, to give a new meeting: (no question of her.) Oft did she look up to heaven, but Righteousness would not look down: Nor, look? not that? small hope, she would be got to meet, that would not look that way-ward.

Indeed, all the question is of her. It is truth, and she, that hold off: but, especially She. Upon the Birth (you see) here is no mention of any in particular; but of Her; as much to say as, the rest might be dealt with; she onely it was, that stood out. And yet; she must be got to meet, or else no meeting.

All the hope is, that she doth not refuse simply, never to meet more: but stands upon satisfaction: Elle Righteousness should not be righteous. Being satisfied; then, she will: remaining unsatisfied; so, she will not meet.

No meeting till Justice satisfied.

All stands then on her satisfying; how to devise to give her satisfaction to her mind; that so she may be content, once more (not to meet and argue, as y^er-while, but) to meet, and kiss; meet in a joint concurrence to save us, and set us free.

And (indeed) Hoc opus, there lies all: how to set a song of these four parts, in good harmony; how to make these meet, at a love-day; how to satisfy Justice, upon whom all the stay is.

And this (say I) no Religion in the world doth, or can do; but the Christian. No Quier sing this Psal, but ours: None make Justice meet, but it. Consequently, none quiet the conscience soundly, but it: Consequently, no Religion but it. Withall Religions else, at odds they be; and so, as they are faine to leave them so: For, means in the world have they none, how to make them meet: Not able for their lives to tender Justice a satisfaction, that will make her come in. The words next before are, that glory may dwell in our land. This glory doth dwell in our land indeed: And great cause have we all highly to bless God, that hath made our lot to fall in so fair a ground: That we were not born, to inherit a lye; that we were born to keep this Feast of this Meeting. For, bid any of them all but shew you the way, how to satisfy Justice soundly, and to make her come to this meeting; how Gods Word may be true, and his work just, and the Sinner find mercy and be saved for all that: They cannot. The Christian only can do it and none else. All beside for lack of this, pass by the wounded man, and let him lie still and bleed to death.

Nor in any but the Christian religion.

Verse 9. Psal, 16. 4.

Luke 10. 31, 32.

Bid the Turk: All he can say, is Mahometers prayer shall be upon you, Mahometers prayer, what is that? Say he were (that, he was not) a just man, a true Prophet; What can his prayers do, but move Mercy. But, Gods Justice, how is that answered? Who shall satisfy that? Not prayers; Justice is not moved with them; heares them not; goes on to sentence, for all them. He can go no further: he cannot make Justice meet.

Bid the Heathen; he sayes better yet, than the Turk. They saw, that without shedding of blood there was no satisfying Justice; and so, no remission of sin. To satisfy her, sacrifices they had, of beasts. But, it is impossible, (as the Apostle well notes) that the blood of Bulls or Goats should satisfy for our sins: A man sin, and a beast die? Justice will none of that. What then, will you go as far as some did, the fruits of my body, for the sin of my soul? Nor that neither. For, if it were the first born, the first born was born in Sin; and Sin, for sin, can never satisfy. This Meeting will not be there.

Heb. 9. 22.

Mich. 6. 7.

Bid the Jew, he can but tell you of his Lamb, neither. And, while time was, that was not amiss; while it stood in reference, to S. John Baptists Lamb, the LAMB of GOD, this day, yeanned: as having the operation, the working, in the virtue of that. That being now past, there is no more in the Jew's, than in the Gentiles sacrifice. Beasts both: both, short of satisfying. So, for all that these can do, or say, no meeting will there be had.

Ioh. 1. 29.

Onely the Christian Religion, that shews the true way. There is one, there, thus speaketh to Justice: Sacrifice and sin offerings thou wouldst not have; then said I, Lo I come. He, of whom it is written in the volume of the Book, that he should do that feat; Corpus autem aprasti mihi, Make him a body to do it in, and he will do it. Give him an oramus est, let Him be but born, He will make them meet straight; Justice, and all. For, all the world sees, if order could be taken, that He, that the Son of God, the Word and truth Eternal, would say, Lo I come; would take our nature upon Him; and, in it, lay down his soul, an offering for sin; there were good hope of contenting Justice, and that the meeting would go forward. Deus sanguine in suo, God with his blood; V What sin in the world would not that serve for?

Psal, 40. 6, &c.

Eph. 5. 2.

Mat. 16. 26.
Iob 32. 13.

What Justice, in heaven or earth, would not that satisfy? If ye speak of an expiation, a ransom, an Aradagya (CHRIST'S own word) a perfect commutation, there it is. This had, Justice will meet, embrace, kiss Mercy, shake hands, join (now) friends; Inveniemus in quo recipiamus, I have found that now, wherewith I hold my self fully content and pleased. This way, ye shall make them meet; or else, let it alone for ever.

Verse X I.

Truth shall budde out of the Earth; and Righteousness shall look down from Heaven.

3 The Birth
de terra.

AND this is it, the Christian Religion sets before us: how the Son of the most High God of Heaven and earth took on Him our Nature, that, in our nature, for our nature, He might make to God (even stando in terminis iustitia sua, as the School-men speak, standing on the terms of his most exact strict justice) a compleat, full, every way sufficient satisfaction. And this (lo) makes the meeting. This haungeth the Christian Religion above all other; this glory doth dwell in our land; that these four, by CHRIST'S Birth, in it, are brought, not only to obviaverunt sibi, but even to osculata sunt.

And, thus be the glory, be not they the shame of Christian profession, that cherish in their bosomes, and entertain, with stipends, such, as are come to this (phrensie, I will call it) to say; what needs any satisfaction? what care we, whether Justice meet or no? that is (in effect) what needs CHRIST: Cannot GOD forgive offences to Him made, of His free goodness, of His meer mercy, without putting His SON to all this pain? Foul men! If He would quit His Justice, or waxe His Truth, He could: But, His Justice and Truth are so Him as essential, as intrinsically essential, as His mercy: of equal regard every way as dear to Him. Justice otherwise remains unsatisfied: and satisfied it must be, either on Him, or on us. For such beatus, or prayers it will not be: And it will hold off, till it be. If Justice be not so met with, it will meet with them: And, they had better meet a she Bare robbed of her whelps, than meet Justice out of CHRIST'S presence.

Prov. 7. 2.

To us, they meet, this day, at the Child-house. For, these great Lights could not thus meet, but they must portend some great matter, as it might be some great Birth toward. The Astrologers make us believe, that in the Hemisphere of CHRIST'S Nativity there was a great Trigon of (I wot not what) Stars meet together. Whether a Trigon, or no; this Tetragon (I am sure) there was, these were all (then in conjunction) all in the ascendant, all above the Horizon at once, At Orta est the Birth, of Veritas the Truth, de terra from the Earth: The Occasion of drawing these four together.

Christ the Truth. Veritas
prima, et
Iohn 14. 6.

Veritas will fit CHRIST well, who, of himself said, Ego sum veritas, I am the truth. So is He: Not that of the former veile, which is but veritas secunda, the truth spoken or uttered forth: He, the Veritas prima, the first truth, within. That depends upon this. Then are the words uttered true, when there is an adaequation between them and the mind. So, the first truth He is.

And Veritas secunda, too.

1 Cor. 1. 2.

The first and last both. For, now, by his coming, he is the adaequation of the Word and the Work, the Promise and the Performance. That way, He is truth too: The truth of all Types, the truth of all Prophecies: for, in Him, are all the Promises, yea and Amen: Yea, in the first truth, Amen, in the last. That actual verifying is the truth, when all is done: and, that He is, by His Birth.

c Eccle. 10. 9.
d Esay 45. 8.
Iren. 1. 3. 5.
LaB. 1. 4. 6. 12.

And, as the truth fits his Nature, so doth earth, Man. Of whom, GOD: Earth thou art: To whom the Prophet thrice over; Earth hear the word of the Lord: By whom, the VVise man, Quid superbis, VVhy should earth be proud? Germinat terra salvatorem, Let, this earth bring forth a SAVIOR, be the terra promissio, the Blessed Virgin, who was, in this, the land of Promise. So was this very place applied by Irenaeus in his time, who touched the Apostles times: So, by Lactantius. So, by S. Hierom, and S. Augustine. Those four meet in this sense, as do the four in the Text: Quid est veritas de terra orta? Est Christus de famina natus; Quid est veritas? Filius Dei; Quid terra? Caro nostra: VVhat, the Truth? CHRIST: VVhat, the Earth? Our Flesh: In those words they find this Feast all.

est, double.
1 De calo.
Luke 1. 73.
2 De terra.
Zach. 3. 8.
Orta de.

For Orta est it is double: Therefore de terra is well added. Another Ortus he had, de calo: to wit, His heavenly Divine nature, which, as the day, sprung from on high; and He, in regard of it, called Oriens, by Zachary in the New Testament. But this (here) is de terra; for, the word (properly) signifies, the shooting forth of a sprig out of the ground: and He, in regard of this Ortus, called the Branch, by Zachary in the Old.

Gen. 4. 4.
Esay 11. 1.

2. And, there is more in Orta. For (it is Rabbi Moses note) that is (properly) when it springeth forth of it self, as the field flowers do, without any seed cast in by the hand of man; so (saith he) should the MESSIAS come: Take his Nature not only in, but de, of the Earth. Not bring it with him from heaven (the error of the Bransick Anabaptists,) but take it of the earth: be the woman's seed, made of a woman, out of the loyns of David: Virga de radice Jesse, the Root of Jesse: Nothing more plain.

2 Orta est.

3. And yet more from orta est. For, that the truth, while it is yet unaccomplishd, but in promise only, it is but (as the Seed under ground) hid and covered with earth, as if no such thing were: as soon as ever it is actually accomplished (as this day) then doth it spring forth, (as it were) is to be seen above ground; then Orta est de terra, in very deed.

Of the effect, now. Birhts are and have been, divers times, the ending of great diffusions: As was this here: For, by this Birht, took end the two great Houses: An union of them by it.

First, by this, Truth is gained; Truth will meet now. That truth will come to this truth, tanquam minus dignum, and magis dignum, as the Abstract to the Archetype. And, Truth, being now born of our Nature it will never (we may be sure) be against our Nature: being come of the earth, it will be true to his own countray; being made man, will be for man now, all He can.

By this means, one of the opposites is drawn away, from the other: Got to be on our side. It is three to one, now. Righteousness is left all alone; and there is good hope, she will not stand out long. For (lo) here is good news; first, that respexit de caelo; she yet looks down from heaven, now.

So as, this birht in earth (you see) marks in heaven; and, by name, upon Righteousness, there. For, (of all) she the least likely: and, if she be wrought on, the rest there is no doubt of. How can there? they are all won to us already.

With Righteousness, it works two ways: First, down she looks. Whether it was, that she missed Truth, to see what was become of her, and not finding her in heaven, cast her eye to the earth. But there, when she beheld Verbum caro factum, the word flesh, the Truth freshly sprung there, where it had been a strange plant long time before, Aspexit and Respexit: she looked and looked again at it. For, a Sight it was, to move, to draw the eye; yea, a sight for Heaven to be a Spectator of; for the Angels, to come down and look at; for Righteousness it self to do so too. Septuagint is the Angels word (in S. Peter): Διαβόλου the Septuagint's word here: both mean one thing. The Greek word is to look (as we say) wisely at it, as if we would look sid, even through it; the Hebrew word, (that) is, as if Righteousness did beat out a window: So desirous was she, to behold this Sight.

And no marvel; for, what could Righteousness desire to see, and satisfy her self with, that, in Him, was not to be seen? A clean birht, an body life, an innocent death; a Spirit and a mouth without guile; a soul and a body without sinne. In Him, she beheld them all. Then, and whatsoever else might yeild her full satisfaction: Lay judgement to the rule, and righteousness in the ballance, nothing oblique, will be found in him; nothing, but straight for the rule; nothing minus habens, but full weight for the ballance.

Thus, when Truth, from the earth; then, Righteousness, from heaven. Then: but not before. Before, Righteousness had no prospect, no window open this way. She turned away her face; shut her eyes clapt to the caement; would not abide so much as to look hither, at us a sort of forlorn sinners: not vouchsafe us once the cast of her eye. The case is now altered. Upon this sight, she is not only content, in some sort, to condescend to do it, but she breaks a window through, to do it. And then, and ever since this [Orta est], she looks upon the earth with a good aspect; and a good aspect, in these celestial lights, is never without some good influence withall.

But then (within a verse after) not only down she looks, but down she comes. Such a power attractive is there, in this Birht. And, coming, she doth two things: ¹ Meets first; for, upon the view of this Birht, they all ran fitt, and Kissed the Son: ² And that done Truth ran to Mercy, and embraced her; and Righteousness to Peace, and Kissed her. They that had so long been parted, and stood out in difference, now meet, and are made friends: Howsoever (before) removed, in ortu veritatis, obvenerunt sibi; howsoever (before) estranged, now, osculata sunt.

And, at that Birht of His, well met they all, in whom they meet all: The Truth He is; and per viscerum misericordiam He came, through the tender mercies of our God; and He is made to us righteousness; and He is our peace. All meet in Him; for indeed, all He is; that, no marvel, they all four meet, where He is, that is all four.

And, at this meeting, Righteousness, she was not so off-ward before, but she is now as forward; as forward, as any of the rest. Mark these three.

Let not Peace prevent her (as Mercy did Truth;) but, as Mercy to Truth, first; so, she (first) to Peace: as forward as Mercy every way.

Nay, more forward than Mercy: for Mercy doth but meet Truth, and there is all; but she, (as more affectionate) not onely meets Peace, but Kisses her. And (indeed) Righteousness was to do more, (even, to kiss) that it might be a pledge of forgetting all former unkindness; that we may be sure she is perfectly reconciled now.

And one more yet (to shew her the most forward of them all,) out of the last verse. At this meeting, she follows not, draws not behind, she will not go with them: She is before, leaves them to come after, and bear the train: She (as David) is before the Ark: puts S. Iohn Baptist from his office, for the time; Righteousness is his forerunner: Righteousness shall go before, tread the way before Him; the foremost now of all the company. By all which, ye may know, what a look it was, she looked with from Heaven.

Thus ye see CHRIST, by His coming; hath pacified the things in Heaven. A peace of Hosanna, is pax in celis: There cannot be pax in terris, till there it be, first. But, no sooner there it is, but it is peace in earth straight, which (accordingly) was, this day proclaimed by the Angels. So, by the virtue of this birht, heaven is at peace with it self: and heaven, with earth, is now at peace. So is earth too, with it self, and a fulfilling of the Text by this meeting is, there, too.

The Jews they represent truth; to them it belongeth properly. For, Truth was, where were Elo- quin Dei, the Oracles of God: and they were with the Jews. The Gentiles they claim by Mercy, that is their virtue: Where was Mercy, but where was miser? and where was miser, but with them that lay in darkness in the shadow of death? And, that was the Gentiles case, before this orta est. But, when when the partition wall was broken down, and the two met in one, then also (in a sense) Mercy and Truth met together. So, these two.

And so, the other two likewise. For, Righteousness, she was where the Law was, (for, that the rule of Righteousness;) where the Covenant of the Old Testament was, do this and live (the very voice of Justice;) But, Peace was, where CHRIST was, in the Gospel, Ipse est Pax nostra, for He is our Peace, and Peace-maker both, Qui fecit utrumque unum, that hath made the Law and the Gospel, the Old Testament and the New, to be bound together (now) both in one volume.

II.
Of this meeting in Christianity.

Thus we have done with CHRIST. I would now apply this meeting to our selves another while. For, I ask; did this hold; did these meet only in CHRIST? Do they not in Christianity likewise? Yes, there, too. With CHRIST came Christianity: look, what in His Birth, now, in the new birth of every one, that shall be the better by it; even the same meeting of the very same virtues, all.

1 I. h. 1. 8.

Mercy and Truth (first) to meet. Truth of confession; confession of our sins; which if with fig leaves we seek to cover, and confess not, there is no truth in us. And, some truth there is to be (at least this truth) or no meeting with Mercy. But, when this truth cometh forth, Mercy meeteth it straight. Will ye see the meeting? Peccavi (saith David) there is truth: transtulit Dominus peccatum (saith Nathan,) there is Mercy: Mercy and truth met together. Homo in terris, per veritatem stimulatius, peccasse se confitebatur; & Deus in calis, per misericordiam flexum, confitentis miserebatur. Truth pricked man to confess his sinnes; and Mercy moved God to pity him confessing, and sends Mercy to meet Truth.

2 Sam. 12. 13.

VWill ye go on to the other Verse? It holds there too (this.) For, where a true confession is by man made, Veritas de terra orta est, truth is budded out of the earth. And so it must, yet Righteousness will give us a good look from Heaven. But, will, as soon as it is: for when this truth springs freely from the earth to our own condemnation; immediately upon it, Righteousness shews her self from Heaven, to our justification. VWill ye see this too? Lord be merciful to me a sinner, (there is truth from the earth;) descendit domum suam justificatus, (there is Righteousness from Heaven.)

Luke 18. 14.

But, (will ye mark:) Here are two truths, and in either Verse one. This later, is the truth of Veritas orta est, of Christ's Religion. And in this treaty, it was an Article of Imprimis, Mercy not to meet any, but them that profess the truth of Christ's birth from the earth. Both these were born together: by and by, upon the birth of Christ (the truth,) the other birth also, of Christian truth, did flourish and spread it self all over the earth. The whole world (before) given over, and even grown over, with Idolatry, quite covered with the mist of error and ignorance, began then to entertain the Christian profession, (and by it to worship God in spirit and truth,) the true Religion, which is never true, if it have not this meeting: And this meeting it cannot have, if it have not the means of it, ortu veritatis de terra.

The same lay we likewise, for the Righteousness which looked down, and shewed her self. It was not that of the Law, (which never came past the top of Mount Sinai;) but a new righteousness, cast in a new mould; a heavenly one, which never saw the earth (nor the earth it) before, before this birth, which is, the righteousness of Christ revealed in His Gospel, when that truth sprang, this righteousness looked down upon it.

Verse. 13.

Now, as this of mercy and truth enter us; so truth (not truth alone, but truth with truth's paire,) with righteousness, carry us forward to God. Truth is not enough; not the truth of Religion, never so known, never so professed; not without Righteousness. Truth is but the light to guide us; Righteousness is the way, to bring us thither. A light is to see by: A way is to go in: So is Righteousness. It follows straight, Ponet gressus in viâ, Righteousness shall set us in the way of His steps: Steps, that is, the course of life. For, Scienti (by knowledge of the truth,) and not Facienti, (by the practise of Righteousness;) peccatum est illi (saith Saint James;) and plaga multa, saith Saint James his Master. Sin; in that man that serves these two, is less pardonable, and more punishable, than in any other.

Luke 12. 44.

And then turn Righteousness to Peace, and they will not meet barely, but (more than meet) Kiss, in sign, there is between them more than ordinary affection. Fac justitiam, & habebis pacem, (Saint Augustine stands much on this.) Eschew evil and do good, saith he, (there is Righteousness;) and then, seek peace, and ye shall not be long in seeking it; She will come forth, her self, to meet Righteousness and kiss her. And this he assures us, as a certain sign, to know on the one side, true Righteousness, (for, that tends to peace, not to questions and brabbles, whereof there never will be end;) So, on the other side, true peace; that kisses righteousness, comes not together (like Sampson's Foxes) by the tales, by indirect means, but clearly and fairly; Such means, as all the world will confess, to be right and good.

Jud. 15. 14.

Now mark the order, how they stand. Mercy leads to truth, and the knowledge of it; and truth to righteousness, and the practise of it; and righteousness to peace, and the wayes of it, Guides our feet (first) into the way of peace. And, such a way shall there alwayes be (do all the Controversie-Writers what they can;) a faire way agreed upon of all sides, questioned by none, in which, who so orders his steps aright, may see the salvation of our God, even the way here chalked out before us; To shew mercy, and speak truth; do righteousness, and follow peace. And by this rule proceeding in the points whereto we are come already, even those truths, wherewith we are otherwise minded, would in due time be revealed unto us.

Ezek 1. 7.

This is Zacharies peace; and this of his well followed, in the end will bring us Simeons peace, Nunc dimittis in pace; to be dismissed, to depart hence in peace: and Pax in novissimo, Peace at the last end, is worth all. Peace in the end, is a blessed end; and the beginning of a Peace, which never shall have end. Mercy our beginning, and Peace our end. This for the meeting; as in Christ, so in Christianity, or the course of a Christian mans life. Luke 2. 29.

Now a word, for the continuance of this meeting. For, I ask again: Met they to part? By no means; but, as they be together (now,) so to continue still. We had much ado to get them together thus: Now we have them so, let us keep them so in any wise. For, as this meeting made Christianity first: So, there is nothing marres it, but the breaking it off again: No greater bane, to it, than the parting of these.

Let me tell you this: S. Augustine is very earnest upon the point, of the keeping of righteousness and peace, (upon this Psalme, and this Verse;) and of truth and mercy together, (in the next,) upon misericors and verax, against them that would lay hold on mercy, and let go truth. O (saith he) that will not be: they met together, they will not part now; Either, without either, will not be had. And so, of the two others. There be, that would have Peace, and pass by Righteousness. Tu forte amant habere pacem, & alteram non vis (saith he) you would gladly have one (Peace;) and for Righteousness, you could be contented to spare it. Ask any, would you have Peace? VVith all my heart he will answer. There is no having one without the other, Osculantur haec, amant haec; why they kiss, they love together. Si amicum pacis non amaveris, non amabit te pax, if ye love not her friend (that is, Righteousness) she will none of your love. Take that from S. Augustine.

Set this down then; Christianity is a meeting: One cannot meet: two there must be, and they may. But it is not a meeting of two; but, of two, with two: so no less than four. As CHRIST Himself was not one nature, so neither doth Christianity consist in any one verine: Not under four. There is a quaternion in Chriit. His ¹ Essence, and His ² Person, (¹*and*, and Hypostasis), in divinitis, His ³ Flesh, and His ⁴ Reasonable Soul, in humanis. Answerable to these four, are these here: these four; to His four.

And as it is a meeting, to a cross meeting, of four Vertues, that seem to be in a kind of opposition (as hath been noted.) No matter for that. They will make the better refraction; the cool of one, allay the heat; the moist of one, temper the drought of the other. The soft vertues, need to be quickned: the more forward, to be kept from Altum sapere. So are the Elements, of which our body: So are the four winds, of which our breath doth consist, which gives us life. And these (in the Text) have an analogy, or correspondence, with the elements, observed by the Ancients. 'Truth, as the earth, which is not moved or anything: Quasi fixior per Terram. Peace, as a main stream, the gulf of which is the City of our God. Mercy, the breath and life by, no less than we do by air: and Righteousness, she ventura est judicare saculum per ignem, in that element.

You may happen find one of these, in Scripture, stood much upon, and of the other three nothing said there, but all left out; Conceive of it, as a figure (Synecdoche they call it.) As, ye have (here) man called earth; yet is he not on earth alone, but all the other three elements as well. No more is Christianity any one, but by Synecdoche: but in very deed, a meeting of them all four.

Is deceived the Gnostick, this place: This is eternal life to know Ibec. Knowledge (saith he) is it; Ioh. 17. 3. As if, it were all; and so, he bade care for nothing else, but to know, and knowing live as they list. The Encratite, he was as far gone the other way; He lived straightly, and his Tenet was, non est curandum quid quisque credat, Id curandum modo quod quisque faciat: So that ye hold a straight course of life, it skils not what ye hold in point of Faith. No meeting, with these: Single vertues all.

Yes, it skills. For both these were wrong; both go for Heresicks. Christianity is a meeting; and to this meeting, there go Pie dogmata, as well as Bone opora; Right confessions, as well as Right. Be not this error then, to think any one of these is a dogmatic of the rest: say not, See, will be the turn, what should we do with the rest of the four? Take not a figure, and make of it a plain speech: Seek not to be saved by Synecdoche. Each of these is a quarter of Christianity, you shall never while you live make it serve for the whole.

The truth is, sever them, and farewell all; take any one from the rest, and it is as much as the whole is worth. For (as Bernard well observed) non sunt virtutes si separentur, upon their separation they cease to be virtues. For, how loose a thing is Mercy, if it be quite devoid of Justice? VVe call it foolish pity. And how harsh a thing Justice, if it be utterly without all temper of Mercy? Summa injuria then (that is) Injustice at the highest. Mercy, take truth away, what hold is there of it, who will trust it? Truth, take Mercy from it, it is Severity, rather than Verity: Then Righteousness, without Peace, certainly wrong is much better; better than perpetual brabbling: And Peace without Righteousness; better a sword far. This, if you funder them. But, temper these together, and how blessed a mixture! Set a song of all four, and how heavenly a melody!

Entertain them then all four; ¹ Hope in mercy: ² Faith in truth: ³ Fear of Righteousness: ⁴ Love of peace: O quam praeclara concordia! O how loving a knot! how by all means to be maintained! how great pity to part it!

A little of the time (now,) when this meeting would be. No time amiss: no day in the year, but upon intreaty, they will be got to meet. Yet if any ont-day have a prerogative more than another, of all the days in the year, on this day most kindly; the day we hold holy to the memory of this meeting; the day of Orta est, the occasion of it.

In remembrance of the first meeting, then they are apt and willing to meet upon it again; forward (ever) to meet, this day, they first met of themselves. But, Christ this day being born, this day, to meet of course. One special end, that He was born, was that, at His birth, this meeting might be. If to day then they should not meet, that were in a sort to evacuate Christ's birth: if there should be a Veritas orta, without an obviaverunt sibi; So that if we procure it not, we had as good keep no Feast at all.

What is then the proper work of this day, but still to renew this meeting on it? For, Christ's birth we cannot entertain, but all these we must too; Necessary attendants upon it, every one. They be the virtues of his Nativity, these. At His birth, Christ bethought himself of all the virtues, which He would have to attend on Him, then; and these He made choice of, then, and for ever, to be the virtues of this Feast.

The sooner and the better to procure this meeting, the Church meets us (as Melchisedeck did Abraham) with bread and wine; but, of a higher nature than his, far: prepares (ever) this day a love-feast, whereat they may the rather meet. Where, truth from the earth, may look up to heaven and confess; and Righteousness from heaven, may look down to earth and pardon: where we may shew mercy, in giving where need is; and offer Peace, in forgiving where cause is; that so, there may be an obviaverunt, a meeting, of all hands.

And even so then let there be. So, may our end be as the end of the First verse in peace; and as the end of the Second, in Heaven. So, may all the blessings that came to mankind by this meeting, as by the birth of CHRIST (the cause of it) meet in us and remain upon us: till, as we now meet together, at the Birth; So we may then meet in a perfect man, in the measure of the full- ness of the age of CHRIST: As meet (now) at the LAMBS yearning;

so meet then, at the LAMBS marriage: be caught up in the clouds

(then) to meet Him and there to reign for ever with Him, in His Kingdom of Glory.

A SER-

A SERMON

Preached before the
Kings Maieſty,

At White-Hall, on Friday, the XXV. of Decemb. An. Dom.
MDCXVIII. being Christmas Day.

LUKE Chap. II. Verſ. XII, XIII.

Et hoc erit vobis ſignum, &c.

And this ſhall be a ſign unto you: ye ſhall find the Child ſwadled, and layed in a Cratch.

And ſtraight way there was, with the Angel, a multitude of heavenly ſouldiers, praizing God, and ſaying, Glory be to God on high, &c.

Of theſe three verſes, the points be two: ^a The Shepherds Sign: and ^a the Angels Song. The Sign is a remain of Angelus ad Paſtores, the Angels ſpeech to the Shepherds: VVe called it, as the Angel himſelf called it, a Sermon: Evangelizo (the word, he uſeth) is, to preach.

Of which Sermon there are two parts: His ^a Birth (the verſe before,) ^a His Finding (in this.) For, this is a double Feaſt: not only, the Feaſt of his Nativity; but the Feaſt of his Invention alſo. Therefore the Angel makes not an end with [unto you is born:] but tells them further; it is not enough, Chriſt is born; but to take benefit by his Birth, we are to find him. Natus eſt, his part; Invenietis, ours.

Of Natus eſt ſomewhat hath formerly been ſaid: Invenietis (now) follows: and follows well. For, what is Natus eſt, without Invenietis? Such a one there is born; what ſhall we be the better, if we find him not. As good not born, as, not known: To us, all one. Nobis naſcitur, cum à nobis moſcitur. Born He may be, before; but, nobis, natus, to us He is born, when to us He is known, when we find Him; and not before. Chriſtus inventus, is more than Chriſtus natus. Set down invenietis then firſt.

Invenietis leads us to Hoc erit ſignum. For, how ſhall they find Him without a ſign? So come we from Chriſtus natus, to Chriſtus ſignatus. Natus, born to be found; Signatus, ſigned or marked, that He may be found. Born he is, that they know: And, when, they know; (hodie.) And, where, they know: in Bethlehem. To Bethlehem they will: but when they come there, how then? In ſuch reſort, the Town ſo full of ſtrangers, as no room in the Innes, whither ſhould they turn them? What could they wiſh, but O quod erit ſignum? Natus eſt, O that he were Signatus! O that we had a ſign to find him by.

Their wiſh is honeſt and good: And pity, any that ſeeks Chriſt ſhould want a ſign, to find him by: The Diviſion the Angel will not ſuffer that; But, before he end his ſpeech, he takes order for their Sign: and this it is. on.

When ye come to Bethlehem, never ſearch in any houſe, or chamber; in a ſtable, there, ſhall you find a Babe swaddled and laid in a manger; You would little think it, but that is He: and so Sigro dato, this sign given, the Sermon ends. For, to find Christ is all: All, in all.

A Sermon would have an AntHEME of course; It hath so. And one suitable, if it might be: an Angel preached it, and no man: It would be a Quire of Angels, and not of men, to sing it. So it is Gloria in excelsis, all the Fathers call it Hymnum Angelicum, the Angels Hymn, or AntHEME.

II.

This is set down in the two later verses; the Quire that sing it, in the former: the Song it self (the duty of it so) in the later. 1. The Quire: in it five. 1. Who? That there were certain heavenly Personages first. 2. In what habit? that in the habis of souldiers to see to. 3. What number? that a great multitude of them. 4. What they did: that they took up this Hymn and fell on praising God. 5. And fifthly, VVhen? That they did it instantly, upon the speech ended.

The Song: That consists of three strains. There are in it God, Earth, and Men, these three first. And then, three to these three: Glory, Peace, Good-will: Each sorted to other: Glory, to God; Peace, to the Earth; To Men, a Good-will.

So have you the sign and the song: the one to ballance or counterpoise the other; the song to sing away the sign; to make amends, for the manger. The sign, very poor and mean; the Song, exceeding high and heavenly. Paupertas in imis, the Sign; poverty at the lowest: Gloria in excelsis, the song, Glory at the highest. That well might Leo ask, Quis est iste puer, tam parvus, tam magnus? VVhat Child is this so little and so great withal? Tam parvus, ut in praesepe jaceat: Tam magnus, ut Es concinant Angeli: so little, as He lies in a Cratch: so great though, as He hath Angels to sing to Him; the whole Quire of Heaven, to make Him melody. It is a course (this) the Holy Ghost began it (here,) at His Birth, and after observed it all along, sociare in a summis, & insolita solus temperare; to couple low and high together, and to temper things mean and usual, with others as strange every way.

Ioh. I. 42.

Out of these we shall learn, First, what our duty is, to find Christ. The Angel presupposes this; that being born we will not leave, till we have found him: till we can say, (it was the first word of the first Apostle) underspoken, We have found, found the Messias. Invenietis: by all means to find Christ. Then how to find him, at what sign. And last, when we have found him, how to salute him, with what words to praise God, for him. For him: both for his birth, and for his incarnation. All considered, his Invention, to us, no less behoveful, than his Nativity. And this day to be no less solemnized, for invenietis, his finding, then for natus est, his very birth itself. It is more often found in the first Fathers, by the name of Theophania, his appearance or being found; than by the name Genethlia, of being born into the world. The Angels Evangelizo reacheth to both: their Gloria in excelsis is sung for both.

I.

THE work of the day, is invenietis, to find Christ. VVe shall not be the better for natus est, if we find him not. Find him we cannot, if (first) we find not a sign to find him by. Erit vobis signum, and Hoc erit (saith the Angel) a sign ye shall have; and this shall be it: Ye shall find him swaddled and laid in a Manger.

I

The Sign.

Signs never come amiss; but, are (then) so necessary, as we cannot miss them, when we should miss without them: when, no sign, no invenietis: As, here. For, if a sign; if this sign had not been given, no invenietis: Christ had not been found. Not been found: for, never had been sought in such a place. Had not the Angel thither directed the shepherds: had not the star thither pointed the Magi, neither one, nor tother would ever, here have sought him. A Non est inventus had been returned by both.

And reason: For some kind of proportion there would be between the signum, and signatum: And, if the sign be a place (as here) between Locus, and Locusus. A chief Person, in a chief Place: a Lord and Saviour, something Lord and Saviour-like. To Bethlehem they will. Set the sign by, let them alone, say nothing to them: VVhen they come thither, they would never go to an Inne, or Ostry, but to the very best house in the Town. Or, if to an Inne, to the fairest Chamber in it: Or, to a Chamber at the least: Never, to the stable: there to look in the manger, for Christus Dominus. To the stable we go to look for an Horse: To the Crib, for bos cognovis & asinus, for one of them: Never, thither, to seek for the Saviour of the world.

Esay. I. 3.

Nay, if in their search, passing by, by hap, they had lighted upon such a Birth, a Child so lying, it may be they would have pitied the poor Babe and the Mother: but have gone on their way, and sought farther: Never (I dare say) taken him, for Christ the Lord. And if one should have bid them, Stay, for this is the Child, the Angel spake of; they would have shaken him off, and said, with as great scorn as they, 1 Sam. 16. Nunquid poteris iste salvere nos, what shall this be our Saviour trow? For, invenietis is not all, to find him: but finding him, to apply the Angels words unto him; to believe, of this Child thus, there lying, that he should be Christ the Saviour, Gaudium omni populo, the joy of the whole earth. It goes hard, this.

1 Sam. 16. 27.

VVe said (when time was) this message was so high, as no man meet to bring it, but an Angel of heaven. We say now, ex alio capite, this sign was so unlikely, no man was meet to give it but an Angel only. And it was well, it was an Angel: if it had been any else, His Birth would have seemed (as His Resurrection did) supra, a fained tale: No mans affidavis would have been taken for it.

VVhat were the Shepherds like to think of this? Sure, thank him for Natus est, the news of His Birth; but, not for His sign, Erit signum, they like well: but not, hoc erit. If he had given them them no Sign, it would not have troubled them : Now, the Sign given troubles them worse. For, this Sign they know not what to make of it ; It is so poor a one, it is enough to make them half in the mind to give over their journey, as not caring for invenietis, whether they find him or no : If his Sign be no better, as good lost, as found. Alwayes, this is out of the Evangelizo vobis ; no part of it ; for, no good news, thus to find him.

And we, if we admit a conference with flesh and blood, when we lay together the Sign, and of whom it is the Sign ; we find, to our thinking, a great disparagement, and (I know not how) thoughts arise in our hearts, as if some better Sign would have done better. The meaning is, we would find Christ (fain :) but we would find him, in some better place. Half Jews we are all in this point ; we would have a Messias in state. Hoc erit, this it shall be (saith the Angel.) Shall be : but should it be this ? No : how should it be, let us see ; VVhy, this shall be the Sign ; Ye shall find the Child, not in these clouts or cratch, but in a crimson mantle, in a cradle of Ivory : That (lo) were somewhat Saviour-like : Hoc erit signum.

But, in vain take we upon us, to teach the Angel : VVe would have we know not what. VVe forget S. Augustines. distingue tempora : as the time is, the Angel is right : and a fitter Sign could not be assigned. VVould we have had him come in power, and great glory ? and so he will come, but not now. He, that cometh here in clouts, he will come in the clouds one day : But (now) his coming was for another end ; and so to be in another manner. His coming now was, (as we say in the Collect) to visit us in great humility : and so, his Sign to be according.

Nay then, I say : First go to the nature of a Sign, if Christ had come in his excellency, that had been no Sign, no more than the Sun in the firmament shining in his full strength : Hoc non erit signum. Contrary to the course of Nature it would be, else it is no sign. The Sun eclipsed ; the Sun in sackcloth : that is, signum in sole, the sign indeed : And that is the sign here, the Sun of righteousness entering into his eclipse, begins to be darkened, in his first point, the point of his Nativity. This is the sign (say I) and, that had been none.

I say again : It is not only signum, that is not all, it is signum vobis : VVe shall do well to look to vobis. There is a matter, in that : For whom, this sign was given : (Not the persons so much, as the condition.) For, if he had been so gloriously born, such as these should never have been suffered to come near him. But, this is a sign, for you : You that keep sheep and such other poor people : you have a Saviour too. He is not the Saviour of Great States only, but even of poor Shepherds. The poorest of the earth may repair to him, being no other place but this, and by this sign to find him : And so, hoc erit signum vobis.

I say thirdly, Vobis, and take in our selves too. So, Hoc erit signum. For, what praise or thanks had it been for us, to have believed in him, born in all glorious manner ? But, being thus born, with this sign, if now we do it ὑμῶν χάρις καὶ εὐχαριστία (to speak in S. Peters phrase) this hath thanks and praise with God : And so, Hoc erit signum.

1 Pet. 2. 19. 20.

Fourthly, without regard of them, or of us, I say, that even in regard of Himself, Hoc erit signum. VVould there be a proportion between the Sign and the Signatum ? There is so. This holds good proportion with the ensuing course of his life, and death. And, (all considered,) it is even signum adequatum. VVe may well begin with Christ in the Cratch : VVe must end with Christ on the Cross. The Cratch is a sign of the Cross. They that write, de verustica, describe the form of making a Cratch Cross-wise. The scandal of the Cratch is a good preparative to the scandal of the Cross. To be swaddled thus, as a Child, doth that offend ? What then, when ye shall see him pinioned and bound as a malefactor ? To lie in a manger, is that so much ? how then, when ye shall see him hang on the Cross ? But so, — primo ne discrepet initium ; that his beginning, and his end may suit well and not disagree, sic oportuit Christum nasci. Thus ought Christ to be born, and this behoved to be his sign.

But then to remove this scandal, I say fifthly : that the less glorious, the more glorious ; the less glorious his sign, the more glorious He. And even in this respect of his glory, he was to be born under this Sign. Had he come in the power and great glory, we spake of, what great matter had it been for him (then) to have done things powerful, and glorious ? But coming in this sort, these same pauis and praepe were an evident sign, of the power of his might, in nothing so manifest, as in this, that, from so poor a beginning, he was able to advance so glorious a work. It was much, from the Babe floating in the flags of Nilui, in a basket of bulrushes (Moses) to gather himself a people, even the Nation and Kingdom of the Jews, and to deliver his Law. It was infinitely much more, from this Babe (here) lying in the Cratch, to work the bringing in of the Gentiles, and the turning about of the whole world, and to publish his Gospel, the power of God to salvation. Herein, is power : from his Cratch, to do this. There to lay him ; and, there lying, to make so many Nations come, and adore him as since he hath. That if ever in his Humility, His judgement were exalted : if his power were ever made perfect in weakness ; if ever he shewed, that infirmitas Dei fortius est hominibus, God at the weakest, is stronger then men in all their strength ; Hoc erit signum, in this sign it was.

A sign, cum externa rejicit quod sibi sufficit ; in that, He casts from Him all outward signes and means, that He is, of himself, all-sufficiens ; & nulla indiget nisi se, and needs no power but his own. His Cratch and He will bring this work to pass. His gloria in excelsis will be hoc ipso excelsior ; His glory on high, so much the higher, for this. Ever ; But now, more than ever : And, in all His signes ; but, in this, more glorious, than in any, nay, then in all of them. And so Hoc erit signum, this shall be the sign : shall be, and should be, both.

Act. 8. 33.
2 Cor. 12. 9.
1 Cor. 1. 25.

But, I wave all these, and say sixthly : Make of the sign, what ye will ; It skills not what it be ; never so mean : In the nature of a sign, there is nothing, but it may be such ; All is in the thing signified. So it carry us to a rich signatum, and worth the finding, what makes it a matter, how mean the sign be ? VVe are sent to a Crib ; Not, to an empty Crib ; Christ is in it : Be the sign never so simple, the signatum it carries us to, makes amends. Any sign with such a Signatum.

Colos. 2. 3.

And I know not the man so squeamish, but if, in his stable, and under his manger, there were a treasure hid, and he were sure of it ; but thither he would, and pluck up the planks, and dig and rake for it, and be never a whit offended with the homeliness of the place. If then Christ be a treasure (as in Him are all the treasures of the wisdom and bounty of God) what skills it, what be His sign. VVith this, with any other, Christ is worth the finding. Though the Cratch be not worth the going to, Christ is worth the going for. He is not worthy of Christ, that will not go any whither, to find Christ.

Lastly, I would tain know, why should the Shepherds, why should any be ashamed, of this Sign ? the Angels are not : Non erubescit quod predicat, No man proclaims or preaches of that ; makes a Hymn of that, he is ashamed of. And (indeed) why should the Angels be ashamed to report it, seeing Christus non est confusus, Christ is not ashamed to wear it. And if He be not, so to be found, never let us be, so to find Him.

I conclude then : they that will have a Saviour without such a sign, best stay for the Jews Messias, or get them, for their sign, to somebody else. The Angel hath none ; the Gospel knows none, but this : VVe must take Christ as we find Him ; Cratch and all. The invention of the Cratch, and the invention of Christ fall both upon one Feast ; this day, both : No severing of them. All which (I trust) by this, shew plainly, the sign was well assigned, by the Angel : and so (I hope) we will not let the Shepherds go alone, but go along with them too, for company, to find Christ, in hoc signo, by this Sign.

But the Cratch is gone, many years ago : VVhat is our sign now ? VVhy, what was the Sign a sign of ? There needs no straining at all ; of humility (clear) : Signum humile, signum humilis. Not alwayes. Not alwayes so ; not with us ; where, the highest minds will use the lowest signs : but, with Christ, with such in whom is the mind of Christ, there is no odds at all. Ye may strike a tally between the sign and the Signatum. Humility, then : VVe shall find Him, by that sign, where we find Humility, and not fail : and where that is not, be sure we shall never find Him. This day, it is not possible to keep off this Theme : we cannot but we must fall upon it ; it is so woven into every Text, there is no avoiding it : But, of all, into the Sign, most of all. Such a Sign, of such Humility, as never was.

Mat. 12. 18.

Signs are taken for wonders : (Master we would fain see a sign, that is a Miracle.) And in this sense, it is a sign, to wonder at. Indeed, every wonder (here) is a wonder. To Cyprian, an Infant, Verbum Infans, the Word, without a word : the Eternal Word not able to speak a Word : ' A wonder sure. ' And the swaynapuque, swaddled ; and that a wonder too, He, that (as in the 38. of Iob he saith) takeh the wast band of the main sea, turns it too and fro, as a little child, and rolls it about with the swaddling bands of darkness ; He, to come thus into clouts, Himself ! ' But yet all is well ; All children are so : But, in praesepi, that is it, there is the wonder. Children lie not there ; He doth : There lieth He ; the Lord of Glory, without all glory. In stead of a Palace, a poor stable ; of a Cradle of state, a beasts Cratch ; No pillow, but a lock of Hay ; No hangings, but dust and cobwebs ; No attendants, but in medio animalium (as the Fathers read the third of Abakkuk :) For, if the lune were full, the stable was not empty, we may be sure. A Sign this, (nay three, in one,) able to amaze any.

Esay 53. 3.

And it is true (saith Solomon, and makes a wonder of it) will God accept a place in earth to receive Him ? VVhen He had built Him a stately sumptuous Temple, and meant it by that. And is that a wonder, if in such a Temple ? What is it then, if in a corner of a stable, in a Cratch there ? Will he accept of that crow ? If He will, Hoc erit signum, indeed. O Lord, O Lord (saith King David (his Father) rapt with admiration) how wonderful ! What ? why, minorasti Eum ab Angelis, Thou madest Him lower than the Angels, (for, to CHRIST, doth the Apostle apply that verse Hebr. 2. 1) Lower than the Angels ? Nay lower yet (saith Esay in his 53.) Novissimus virorum, the lowest of men : Nay, lower yet (saith the Angel here,) lower than the lowest of men. For a stable, a Cratch, is a place for beasts, not for men. So low. VVell may this be said a Sign, in this sense, to wonder at : If it be well looked into, it is able to strike a man into an extasie.

Acts 11. 1.

2 Vobis, to you.

Mat. 11. 29.

But if we stand but gazing and wondering at this sign, the Angel will blame us at the Nativity, As, they did the Apostles, for the like, at His Ascension. VVhat learn we by it ?

For, loquitur signis ; signs have their speech : and this is no dumb sign. VVhat saith it then to us ? Christ (though as yet He cannot speak, as a newborn Babe, yet) by it He speaks, and out of His Crib (as Phelpis) this day, preaches to us ; and his Theme is, Discite a me ; learn of me, for I am humble : Humble, in my birth, ye all see. This is the Præcipe of the Præsepe (as I may call it ;) the lesson of Christ's Cratch.

Ezek. 9. 4.

A sign it is ; but not a sign at large, indefinitely : Nothing, but hoc erit signum. But, signum, vobis (for you :) limited, to some, not, to all. For not to some others ; But, to you, and such as you are, a sign it is : a sign it is, how to find Him. A sign for whom He was born, that thus was born : To whom He, to whom His birth belongs. Sure, humilis nascitur, humilibus. So He was born ; and, for them that are so, He was found ; and, of such He will be found, and of none but such.

But then (as Augustine saith well) signum Vobis, si signum in Vobis : A sign for you, if a sign in you. For in this sense also, it is a sign to sign us with : a signature, to make a mark on us. Theirs, (in the IX. of Ezekiel) that were saved, they were marked with the sign of a Tau in their foreheads : That, is this very sign, the mark of Humility, as being the last and lowest letter of the whole Alphabet.

And,

And, this sign shall follow them that believe: and by this mark will He know them: by the sign, we find Him; by the same will He find us: Invenietis, and inveniemini, by one and the same sign both. Mark 16. 17. For, nunquam erit aliud Servatoris signum, aliud servati; Never, He that saves, one Sign; they, that saved, another. At least, not a quite contrary, but the same sign, both. By the same, that CHRIST found, by the same a Christian: Or, to speak more nearly to the Day, by the same that CHRIST'S birth, by the same, the Christians new birth: For, as faith is the virtue appropriate to His Conception (by faith He was conceived, Beata qua credidit:) So is Humility, as proper to His Nativity: in great Humilitate, this Day, was He born, and brought into the world. Then, if the sign of CHRIST'S Birth, be the proper sign of a Christians new birth wherein CHRIST is fashioned in us anew; Hoc erit signum, that they, who to faith have not joyed Humility are not yet come so far, as to be babes in CHRIST; not yet (as Saint Basil speaks) come to their αἰσχρογάρμους, their swaddling clouts, in the state of salvation. And what time (trow ye) will these be come to the measure of the full age in CHRIST, that yet are no further forward? Many a μυρρίμιος are there among us, if this Sign hold.

Ephes. 4. 13.

But then, if it be Signum vobis, to some; It is for some others, signum contra vos: and that is the proud. For, the Word of God hath two edges: and, if it go one way thus for Humilitie; it cuts as deep the contrary, against Pride. And withall, under one leads us to the cause straight, and shews us the malignity of the disease of pride. For the cure whereof, this so profound humility was requisite in CHRIST. There was one when time was, took the disease of Ero similis Altissimo: And He breathed upon our first parents, with this Eritis sicut Dei, and infected them with it. To make themselves equal with God, is plain robbery (saith the Apostl., Phil. 2.) For that robbery of theirs, was the son of God robbed (as I may say) and quite spoiled of His glory. For their puffing up, balloones, He was made empty: For their lifting up, inwardness, was He brought thus low: for their comparing with GOD, came He to be compared to the beasts that perish: lay in their manger, we see.

Never blame the Angel, for giving this sign; he had no other to give. As Christ was born, so was he to tender Him. Ask CHRIST, why He would be so born. Of any other child, this could not be asked: They are born, they neither know where nor how. Of Christ it may: He knew both. For, as oblatum est, quia voluit: So, natus est. He was so born, because he would so be. And why would He so be? His Ecce venio, His coming was to recover man. Man was to be recovered by the contrary of that, by which he perished. By pride he perished, that is confessed. Then, by Humility, to be recovered, according to the rule, Contraria curantur contrariis. So, He to come, in Humility. The pride was high; Eritis sicut Dei: the contrary, as low, factus est sicut jumenta, as low as they; ly in their cratch.

Zach. 2. 10.

Gen. 3. 5.

Psal. 49. 12.

It is strange, this point of Christ in the cratch, how tedious, how harsh it is to be stood on. Harsh, but to none more, nay none so much, as to the proud: And they, of all other, have least cause to be offended with it: It is they, that were the cause of it. They should not (one would think) be offended with their own doing: It is long of them, all this. If there they find Him, It is they, and none but they, that there laid Him, If He be otherwise than He should, their pride is too blame for it. But for it, we had found him in a better place. And lie upon pride (say I,) if it were but for this onely: Enough to make us loath this vice, that laid this so great a disgrace (as we count it) upon the Son of GOD.

But marvel not, if this be signum contra, to them a sign against them: they are against it. Well said Bernard: In signum positum est praecepe unum Domine, sed in signum cui a multis contradicitur; Thy cratch O Lord is set for a sign; but for a sign, which of many is spoken against (done against I am sure) alluding to that of Simon (at the 34. Ver. after) that Christ should be a sign (and, if Christ, His cratch sure) to be spoken against. By many, whose pride (saith the Prophet) testifies to their faces; you may take up the edges of their garments, and shew it them; yea, that, even this day, come hither, to make a shew of it, as it were to affront this sign, and the Angel that gave it; come to celebrate the Feast of Humility, in excess of pride. Should the Angel ever have persuaded one of these, to have gone into the stable, and have sought his Saviour there? Never: Do but look upon them; you would think they had some other Saviour by themselves, that lay in an ivory Cradle; and never looked to be saved by Him that this day lay in a manger.

Ose. 5. 5.

Sure, it is no good sign, to be ad oppositum to this Sign. If signum vobis, to the one; signum contra vos to the other. For, if humility be a sign of finding Christ, pride must needs be the sign of losing Him; and who so loseth Him, is (himself) even the child of perdition: and therefore look to this sign, well.

But, humility is not all, we find in this sign. The Philosopher saith, Signs are either indicant, or co-indicant. Indicant it is, of humility: Co-indicant of that which, in Him, and on His part, (as pride, on ours) was the cause that made Him stoop to this humility, and that was His Love. He left gloriam in excelsis, for deduxit in arboribus; His glory on high, for His good-will towards men. It was a sign of Love too (this.) A sign, nay an ensign, His very colours (as in the 2 of Cant.) He terms it, love His banner, or ensign over us. Signal love indeed; that for our sakes, refused not, first our nature, our mortality (that alone had been love enough:) But, nor the basest estate of our nature, nor poverty: Poverty, and such povertrie, as the like was never heard of; usque ad squalorem & fatorem stabuli, to be found, where He was found: there to lie.

Thou didst not abhor the Virgins womb (so we sing:) Thou didst not abhor the beasts manger, (so Hymn Ambros.

we may sing too:) And is not this Hoc erit signum, a very Ensign of love?

Two ways take we measure of Love. 1 Of quantis fecit nos (first) quanta fecit pro nobis; how much He made of us, by how much He did for us, (the ordinary way of the worlds measuring.)

2 But there is another, and that is, quantis fecit nos, by quantillus factus est pro nobis, how much he made of us, by how little He was made for us. This later we hold to be the more, by how much it is easier for Him many times, to make great, then once to be made little.

³ But then, will ye take in (this in the Text) nobis (to make up a third) For us. Us that, even at that time, when He shewed so great love to us, shewed so little to Him; that, if the beasts had not been better to Him, than we, He had found no place to be born in. For us He came, and we thrust Him out from us, and from all place with us, into the place of beasts. And if He had not borrowed their stable, carnisset lecto. He had had no roof to cover him: if He had not borrowed their crib, carnisset lecto, He had lye on the cold ground, at this time of the year. Nobis (sure) is somewhat.

And now, to quantum fecit pro nobis. For, all this was not so much, to shew the love in Himself, as to work in GOD adventus in mundum, Good-will towards men, (the foot of the Angels Song;) to regain His Fathers love: to make Him well pleased toward men, by his Humility, with whom, for their pride, He was justly displeased. Thus unlovely He became, to make us beloved; thus poor, to make us rich: rich in the grace and favour of God, more worth (when the time comes) than all the riches of the world.

This (so) is the co-indicant sign of love, these the colours of it. The cratch is the cradle of His love, no less than of His humility, and able to provoke our love again, The less He made for us, the more we to make of Him: and that, not so much, for that He was made; as for the love, by which He was made it. And, these two Signatures made in us, This sign erit signum nobis, and nobis signum in bonum: A sign it shall be, to us, and to us for our good. And this for the Sign.

II. The Song.

Will ye now, to this inglorious Sign, hear a glorious Song; to this cratch of humility, a hymn of celestial harmony? If the sign mislike you, ye cannot but like the song and the Quier that sing it. The song I shall not be able to reach to, will ye but see the Quier? and that shall serve for this time: For, by all means, before I end, I would deal with some-what, that might ballance this sign of His low estate.

This, the Evangelists never fail to do; Ever they look to this point carefully: if they mention ought, that may offend, to wipe it away straight, and the Scandal of it, by some other high regard. See you a sort of poor Shepherds? Stay, and ye shall see a troop of Gods Angels. Hear ye one say, laid in the cratch below? abide, and ye shall hear many sing, Glory on high, in honour of Him that lieth in it.

Vidisti vilia (saith S. Ambrose) audimurifica: Were the things mean, you have seen? Wonderful shall they be, ye now shall hear, and see both. Vilescit prae sepe, & ecce Angelicis cantibus honoratur: is the cratch mean? Mean as it is, it is honoured with the musick of Angels; it hath the whole Quier of Heaven to sing about it. This also will prove a sign, if it be well looked into; a counter-sign to the other: That, of His humility; this, of His glory.

Surely, seeing the other three Evangelists omitted this sign, one would wonder, why S. Luke did not so too. In discretion, small credit there was in it; better have concealed it, (one would think:) a great deal better. But, Saint Luke knew what he did; He would never have mentioned the sign, but that sure he was, when he had laid Him so low, he was able to up with Him again, and sing away all the disgrace of the Sign with a strange Carrol, and as strange a Quier sent from heaven to sing it.

Esay 7. 11.

To the Quier then, Who were they? Where, the first I pitch on, is the word Heavenly. For, thence they came, and thither they went again, (15. Ver.) Quid praesepi & calo? What hath Heaven or heavenly Personages to do here; with the Cratch? It should seem, some celestial thing there is in it: as low as it seems, it reacheth high, as high as Heaven; heavenly things, and heavenly Personages both. About it here comes divers from Heaven: For it, there goes Glory up to heaven. So that the sign is also, signum de caelo sursum, from on high, by reason of the Quier: as well as a sign from the earth beneath in respect of the Cratch here.

2. In what habit.

Gen. 3. 24.

How appear they, These Personages were Angels. It is said expressly, (v. 15.) Yet are they here, said to be Souldiers. What shall we have war then? (for they are in the habit of the war:) True, of war; but, it is war (not, that now is, or hereafter should be, but of war) that had been before even to the day of this birth; but now, to cease (witness Pax in terris.) There had been no peace with heaven, but plain hostility, between earth and it; No good will toward men, but filiis ira, children of wrath all. Ever since the Cherubin first drew upon Adam, and with a shaken sword kept the entrance of Paradise; Ever since, in arms, till this very day. Their habit shews, what was before: their song, what now should be. By virtue of Christs Nativity, Peace to earth, from Heaven; Good-will, to men, from God. So now, upon His Birth, they were to disarm: but, before they put their armour off, yet being in it, they would have a Paeon, and sing of the new world, that was now to ensue. A sign this, and a strange one, (this conjunction,) species praesentium, and voces celsantium, the habit of war, and the song of peace. Souldiers make a camp, come to fight: These make a Quier, come to sing. They are not in the habit of Quier-men, yet they sing: They are in the habit of men of war, yet sing of peace.

3. What number?

What number? A multitude there was of them. First, for the more authority: that, in the mouths of many, this might be established: many, to witness it. Then, for the better musick; if, a full Quier, many to found it out. It was a matter of great weight; so, divers to testify it: It was a matter of high praise; divers therefore to celebrate and set it forth.

When we hear of a multitude, we fear a confusion. But (you will observe,) this multitude was multitudo militum; No confused rout: No; but acies ordinata, a well ordered army. There is order, in an army: there is order, in a Quier: there is order among Angels: coordinate among themselves, subordinate to their head and leader. So, a multitude without confusion.

And yet: there is a further matter in this same multitude. For, that there were not some few of them, but but a great many; that was a sign, it was no petty Saviour, that was born. To have Angels come, by one, and by two, as at the birth of Sampson, or Isaac, and others; But the grand Saviour, of all, by his troops of them; the Lord of Hosts Himself, as attended by the whole Army. Judg. 13. 15. Gen. 18. 2.

For, at His birth was fulfilled that, the Apostle speaks of (Heb. 1. 6.) When he brings His only-begotten Son into the world, He saith, Let all the Angels of GOD worship Him, Let the whole Host of Heaven do him honour: As, honour Him (here) they do. For, they that offer up praise, honour Him; and praise they offer Him, the (next word is laudantium.) And even now they do it: even, here, is this honour done; Even to Him, in his cratch, is it done. And Heaven it self, for a while, left empty, that it may be done. All which is but a sign, to shew, what a shew He could have made, if He had listed: that he might have had the Legions, he speaks of at his Death, that had them in such a multitude, to day, at his Birth. A sign he was not weak (what ever he seemed) that had these military forces, if he would, to take arms for him. That he was not to be despised how ever he appeared, that had these consorts of Angels, to sing about his cratch, and to praise God for him. Heb. 1. 6. Psalm 50. 23. Mar. 26. 53.

What did they? Praised GOD. For Angels to praise GOD is no new thing. From the beginning, it was their occupation, so to do (Job 38. 7.) But, to praise him for a Child in a Cratch, that (so) is new; A new thing; A new song, and (if you will) a new sign, too. For, never the like seen before. Before (in Job,) their praise was for the creating; they had that only, then, to praise him for: now, for the restoring of all things. For the birth of the world then; for the new birth of it now, by the birth of Him, by whom the world at first was made, and now (ne perderet quod condidit), made again, created anew, and many a new Creature in it. To him, sitting in the throne, sing they their Sanctus, Esay 6. (For, to Christ was the sanctus sung, saith S. John directly in his 12. 41.) Now, to him, here lying in the manger; which is great odds: But indeed, to both; in imis, puero; in excelsis, Deo: For, John 12. 11. he was both. And his being both was an Ecce signum, if ever there were any upon earth.

And lastly, all the Hallelujahs, that instantly: No pause between; between Amen, and Hallelujah. No sooner the speech ended, but straight, as if the word cratch had bin their rest, immediately took they up the Hymn, and begun it. A plain sign, that one of these did depend on the other. This the Anthem, that properly belongs to that Sermon: And back again, this the Sermon, that requireth this Anthem: and both to the Child in the manger. The dirty meant by him, and none but him. For Him, this glory: By Him, this Peace: Through Him, this good-will: Glory, Peace, and Good-will, from him all three. And mark, that the word Cratch is the last word, in the Sermon; and the word glory the first, in the song; and nothing comes between to part these two. Nothing, to part Humility below; from Glory on high. Even as he drew light out of darkness, so doth he Glory on high, from Humility below, by a sequence. VVhich when we hear, and hear it from the mouths of Angels, sure we are, all that before seemed to tend to his disgrace, were but the Auspices of his Glory: All that beneath appear in ferocia inani, is pronounced gloria in excelsis, and for such celebrated by the whole Host of Heaven. And this for the Quier, and for this time. 2 Cor. 4. 6.

But I ask; do the Angels praise God for this Birth? Ut quid illis concio, vel cantio, VVhat do they preaching of him, or praising God for Him? For them, all this is not; they put it not in the first, but in the second person. Vobis. Here is now Vobis, the third time. ' Evangelizo Vobis (saith the Angel first:) ' Natus est Vobis (saith the second:) And now Erit vobis signum, third. ' Vobis, the news: ' Vobis, the Birth; ' and Vobis, the sign; all three. And who are these Vobis? In the song it is expressly set down, In hominibus, for men. VVhat mean the Angels then, to make this adoe, with laudantium, and dicentium, and it concerns not them at all? VVhat then; The blessed Angels, they rejoyce and sing at the good of others, at the conversion but of one poor sinner: Hoc Angelicum est. As, on the other side, the Devils manner is, to howl, and to grieve at others good; if CHRIST come to save men, to cry, He is come to torment them: Hoc est diabolicum. Luke 16. 7.

But well: from this yet, that the Angels thus sing (whom in their own particular it concerns not,) I rise to make this inference; that they, whom it concerns, are to do it with far greater reason: And that is, our selves, to whom solely and wholly this Birth, and the benefit of this Birth, redounds. Shall they, for us, and not we for us, for our selves? Shall we be in at the other three, 'at the News, 'at the Birth, and 'at the Sign; and be out at this of laudantium Deum? No, I trust. The Quier of heaven did it but to set us in; VVe, to bear a part: and it should be a chief part, since the best part of it is ours. They but took it up; we to keep it up; and never to let it go down, or die on our hands, but from year to year, as we have occasion, still to renew it. The Angels began here; the Shepherds they follow, and praise God for that they had heard and seen; the Sermon they had heard, the Sign they had seen. VVe, to come in at our turn, and to do the like. Mark 1. 24. Verse 20.

You say well, for that we have heard, we may; but, not for any Sign, (we.) Yes: For that too. The Sacrament we shall have besides, and of the Sacrament we may well say, Hoc erit signum. For a sign it is; and by it, invenietis puerum, ye shall find this Child. For finding his flesh and blood, ye cannot miss, but find him too. And a sign not much from this here. For, Christ in the Sacrament, is not altogether unlike Christ in the cratch. To the cratch we may well liken the hask or outward symbols of it. Outwardly, it seems little worth; but is rich of contents; as was he crib, this day, with Christ in it. For, what are they, but infirma & egena elementa, weak and poor elements of themselves: yet, in them find we CHRIST. Even as they did, this day, in praesepe jumentorum, panem Angelorum, in the the beasts crib, the food of Angels: Which very food our signs both represent, and present unto us.

Let me say this further; It is the last word in the Sacrament, This is a sacrifice of praise and Thanksgiving: and the whole Text resolves into laudantium Deum, to praise God: And not to praise Him alone, but to praise Him with this Hymn of the Angels. Now being to praise Him with the Angels Hymn, it behoves, to be in or as near the State of Angels as we can; of very congruity to be in our best state, when they and we to make but one Quasi. And when are we so? if at any time, at that time when we have newly taken the holy Sacrament of His blessed body and most precious blood; when we come fresh from it. And, as if there were some near alliance between this song of the Angels, and these signs; to shew that the signs or Sacrament have a special interest in this Hymn; therefore it is, that even then, upon the administration of it, hath the Church ordered this very Hymn, ever to be sung or said, what ever day it fall in the whole year. For then (sure) of all other times, are we on earth most near to Angelique perfection; then, meetest to give glory unto God; then, at peace with the whole earth; then, a good-will and purpose in us, if ever.

But, as the time falleth out, we have more inducements than one. The day it self is one most proper: For, it is the very day, this Hymn was first sung on. And, the celebration of the Sacrament, that is another. But the Sacrament now falling on the day, a double. Either of these, of it self apart; but together much more. For, the Sacrament, that comes at other times; the day, but once a year, On this Day, they both meet; and never but on this: Not to slip it then; but then, when it is most proper, most kindly, then to do it. I would to God, we were as meet to do it, as the Sacrament is to do it at, and as the time is to do it on. But as we may; let us endeavor to do it. So enuring our selves to record it, as oft as we may (especially when most meetly we may) here on earth among men; that in His good time we may be counted worthy to do it on high, with the Angels in the bliss of heaven.

A SER

A SERMON

Preached before the
Kings Maiefty,

At White-Hall, on Saturday, the XXV. of Decemb. An.
Dom. MDCXIX. being Christmas Day.

Luke Chap. II. Vers. XIII.

Gloria in altissimis Deo, & in terra pax, hominibus bonæ voluntatis (vel, *in homines bona voluntas.)

* Vel in hominibus.

Glory be to God in the high Heavens, and peace upon earth, and *towards men good will.

* Or, in men.

HE Anthem of the Quier of Heaven for this day. For, having heard the Angels Sermon at twise: Of the Nativity, Of the Invention of CHRIST: and seen the Quier of Angels set, with their nature and condition: there remains nothing but the Anthem, to make up a full service for the Day.

This is it S. Luke, besides that he is an Evangelist, hath the honour further, that he is the Psalmist of the New Testament: four Hymns more hath he added to those of the Old. Of which four, this is so much the more excellent than the rest, in that it is not of any mans setting, though never so skilfull: the Ditty and it are both Angelical; from the Angels both. That, we praise God with the tongue of Angels, whensoever we praise Him with this with Gloria in excelsis.

The Sum of it is: that though, all days of the year, and for all benefits; yet, this day, and for this
(now) above all, GOD is highly to be glorified: More highly than in others: Nay most highly then; The Summe.
for, it is in altissimis, the highest of all.

That Heaven and Earth, and men are to joyn in one consort: Heaven and Earth first; Heaven on high, Earth beneath to take up one Hymn: both in honour of his birth, both are better by it; Heaven hath glory, Earth peace, by means of it. Heaven hath glory; latetur celi: Earth, peace; exultet terra, at thy Nativity, O Lord, Warranted by this Song; at thy Nativity, O Lord, let the heavens rejoyce for the glory: let the Earth be glad for the peace, that come to them by it. Psal. 96. 11.

And men, hominibus, though they rest, and come in last after both; yet they to do it as much; Nay much more than both, for Gods good-will toward them, which brought all this to pass in Heaven and Earth both: restoring men to Gods favour and grace, and all by means of this Child, their Reconciler to God that hath been; their Pacifier on earth, that is; their Glorifier in heaven that shall be. They therefore, if any: nay more than any: and now, if ever; nay more than ever, to bear their part in this glorious hymn at the cratch side.

Ita, canunt in Nativitate, que per Nativitatem : Thus sing they at His Nativity, of those things that came by His Nativity. Came to Heaven, to Earth, to Man : Glory to Heaven, Peace to Earth, Grace and favour to Man.

The Divi-

Eph. 2. 14.

To take a Song right, it behoveth to know the parts of it. And they are easily known : They divide themselves into the number blessed above all numbers, because it is the number of the Blessed Trinity ; and the mysterie of the Trinity do the Fathers find in the parts of it : ' In God on high, the Father : ' In peace, Ipsa est pax nostra, the Son : ' And in Good-will, the Holy Ghost, the Essential Love and Love-knot of the God-head ; and this day, of the Man-hood and it.

Being Ode natalitia, if we consider it as a Nativity, they that calculate or cast Nativities, in their calculations stand much upon Triplicities, and Trigons, and Trine aspects. And here they be all : A triplicity of things : ' Glory, ' Peace, ' and Goodwill. A Trigon of Parties : ' God, ' Earth, and ' Man. And a Trine aspect, referendo singula singulis : ' To God, glory ; ' to Earth, peace ; ' to Men, favor, grace, or good-will.

I. II. III.

But if (as it is most proper) we consider the parts, as in a Song the three will well agree with the Scale in Musick : ' In excelsis, on high, Hypate : ' On earth, Nete : ' And men, howsoever they come in last, they make Mese, the Mean : Most fitly ; for they (as in the midst of both the other) partake of both : ' Their soul from on high ; ' Their body from the earth. Not the heathen, but did confess, the soul divina particulam aura. And, for the body, there needs no proof, that earth it is : Earth to earth, we hear, we see before our eyes every day.

Of these three parts then asunder. And after, (as the nature of a Song requireth) of their ' Conjunction, ' Order, and ' Division. ' Conjunction, Glory on high, and on earth peace. Then, the order, or Sequence : But, first glory, then Peace. ' And last, the division, sorting them sum cuique, each to his own : ' To God, glory ; ' Peace to the earth ; ' Goodwill to men. ' Last, of the singing of the hymn, ' When, the time : ' and by Whom.

I.
The several acceptations of the Text.
By the Greeks.

Here are in this Hymn (as the Greeks read, and we with them) three Rests. The ground of which three, are three Parties. ' In excelsis Deo, God on high, ' In terra, earth : ' and hominibus, men. To these three, other three : ' Glory, ' Peace, ' Good-will, as it were three streams having their head or spring in Christ's cratch, and spreading themselves thence, three sundry ways, having their influence into the three former ; One of these into some of them. Glory, upward, in excelsis : Peace, downward, to the earth : good-will, to men, in the midst between both, compound of both.

You will mark : The Christ (here) is God and Man. God, from on high ; Man, from the earth. To heaven, whence He is God, thither goeth glory : To earth, whence man, thither peace. Then, as God and Man is one Christ, and as the reasonable soul and flesh is one man : So, Christ consisting of these two brings goodwill the fulness of God's favour, the true and real cause of both ; yielding them peace, while here on earth, and assuring them of glory, when there on high : as thither on high, we trust to be delivered, after our time here spent in procuring heaven glory, and earth peace. Thus, three Rests.

But, let me not keep from you, that the Latins hath but two Rests, and of the Greek (some likewise) : To two they reduce all, and well. The Places are but two : ' On high, ' and in earth : The Persons but two, ' God, ' and Man : So, the Parts to be but two, ' Glory on high, to God : ' Peace on earth, to Men. But then what shall become of goodwill ? Good-will is a good word, would not be lost or left out. No more it shall. And indeed the diverse reading of that one word makes the parts to be either two, or three. The Greeks read it in the Nominative case, evdulia, which refers to men : then there must needs be three ; there are two besides. The Latins seem to have read it in the Genitive, evduliae, (but a S, but one letter more :) And so they make it of the nature of a limitation, Peace on earth to men : What, to men promissum, good and bad, elect and reprobate ? No : but to such as pertain to his evdulia, God's beneplacitum, his good-will and purpose : to the children of it.

Evduia or evdulia, Nominative or Genitive, let it not trouble you : To men, a good-will, or To men of good-will, no great matter whether, so long as evdulia refers to God, and to His good pleasure : Not, to Men, or any will of theirs. And that so it is to be referred, I will use no other witness but Cardinal Tolet himself ; who, in his Readings at Rome, and in the Pope's own Chappel, and upon this very place confesseth as much, that so is the native signification of the word ; and so, and no other-wise to be taken here, but in that sense.

And in that sense being taken, it goes well. Glory from us, to Him : Peace, from Him, to us : From men on earth, to God on high, glory ; From God on high, to men on earth, Peace. Men, I say, toward whom He is now appeased, and with whom (now) he is well pleased ; and both, for this Child's sake here in the cratch, in evdulia, in whom He is absolutely well pleased, as, of the fulness of his favour, we all receive. God spake it once, and twice : ' Once at His Baptism, ' and again in the Holy Mount.

And Hoc erit signum. This may be a sure sign, that he is well pleased with our Nature, that he hath in this Child taken it, and united it to His own ; which, if He had not been highly well pleased, He would never have done. What greater goodwill can there be than this ? It passeth the greatest, (even that of Marriage) union of nature, unity of person.

Then riseth there another doubt, what Verb to put here ? For, never a Verb there is at all. Whether some Indicative, Glory is, or shall be : and then it is an Hymn of Gratulation, and agreeth well with laudantium, a praise to God, that these (now) are. Now, hath God glory : Now, earth

peace: Men are now received to favour and grace. Thus: Or whether fit or est, in the Optative; and then, it is Votum bene ominatum, a Vow or wish, that Glory may be to God; and so to the rest.

I say again here (as before I said: it skil'd not then, whether Nominative or Genitive;) it skills not now whether Indicative or Optative. Tebilla (a Praise, it is) and Tephilla (a Wish it may be) do commence. Either is well; But, both are best; for, both are most true.

By way of Gratulation: Glory now is, or shall be to God, for this Birth. Before it was not: at least, not so, as after. Before it was Gloria in excelsis, but Deo was left out. All Nations (in a manner) worshipping the host of Heaven, the superior bodies; desiring the creature, passing by the Creator quite: Excelsa, they did; but Deum in excelsis they did not. But, by this Birth now, down should all Idolatry go; as, down it went, wheresoever Christian Religion took place. From the Creature there, all to the Creator. To none on high, but God on high. The point of Glory much mended; God more glory, than before.

By way of Gratulation.
Glory is to God

And the Earth more at peace, if you take peace in things spiritual, matters concerning the soul. One onely I will mention. There was (as out of Varro, S. Augustinus reckons them) no less than two hundred sixty and odd several Opinions, and that of the wisest then on the earth, touching Man's Sovereign good, or chief end. The very highest point, and that did most concern them; and least peace, most variance in it. This mist also was scattered, and that point well cleared, by Him that was the Way and the Truth: That this good here is it; the favour of God it is, and the assurance of it, and nothing but it makes a man truly happy, when all is done.

Peace is in earth.
John 14. 6.

As for the point of God's good-will, and favour, that was never in kind, till this Day. Many favours, much good will, before; Never so, as when God and Man, the God-head and Man-hood meet both in one. God never so pleased, as when he was pleased to assume it, into one Person with Himself, uniting both with the straightest union that can be. Never that, till this day, when, for adventus in mundum, good-will toward men, He forsook gloria in excelsis, to come into the cratch for them. So that, for God's favour, the gratulation is most just; more than both the rest.

Bishop Bradwardine did joyn a good issue: Let that be the Religion, let that prevail, as best, and most true of all other, that is Deo honorabilior, brings more honour to God; Paci amicabilior, best friend to the earth's peace; and Homini favorabilior, most favourable to man: as, shewing God better affected to him, and making men better affected to God, better one to another. That Religion is Christian Religion: None sings this Hymn in time, in true note, but it; all other are out. So that, we have a compendium of true Religion, and three notes of it, out of the three notes of the Song in this Anthem. And this, if it be the Indicative, or by way of Gratulation.

But I confess, it is more usual, per modum voti, by way of wish, by fit, than by est. (Sit doth better become the Church Militant: Est is more fit for the Church triumphant.) Glory be to God, Peace be to the earth, &c. Exoptando that these may be so, and, so being, continue still, and be daily more and more: And so taking it, to the triplicity again.

H.
By way of
wish.

[First, glory we wish to God. On high stands in the midst, you may either cast it to the first word Glory, Glory on high, and then the point, (that is, high glory;) Or, (with the point, after glory;) and cast [on high] to God. A third variety (but easily reconciled) if we take in both: Glory on high, to God on high. One [on high] may serve for the reason, why we wish glory to God: for God being Altissimus, the most High, (as Melchisedek first stiled Him,) and glory being the altitude, or highest pitch, we can fly or perform; by good reason, we wish Him that is Highest, the highest thing we have.

Glory be to

Gen. 14. 18.

But, not every glory do we wish, but wish it him at the highest. All glory is high: yet is there one glory higher than another. If any be so, that they wish to God, the very height of it, even glory in altissimis, as high as it can go.

1 Cor. 15. 41.

Now, the more He is glorified, the higher his glory: Higher, if, by Heaven and Earth, on high and below, by Men and Angels; than by either alone.

This then they wish, when they say, glory be in the highest: that high and low, Heaven and Earth, Men and Angels would do their parts, to make His praise glorious, glorious at the highest. On earth, sound it out far and wide, all the world over, to the ends of the earth; and lift up our voices, and help them with instruments of all kinds, and make them to be heard up to the very Heavens, that so it may be in altissimis, indeed. Yea, that all creatures, in both, ravished with the consideration of the great favour and good-will of God, in this days birth testified, would take occasion to fill their mouths with the praise of His goodness, in resolving; His wisdom, in contriving; His mercy in promising; His truth in performing the work of this day, the blest birth of his Son.

Psal. 148.

Psal. 150. 4.

For the work of the Day, to make the day of the work a glorious day: causing it to be attended with a number of days according to the number of the months of the year; as no Feast else. Glorious in all places, as well at home with Carols, as in the Church with *Anthem*s. Glorious in all Ages, even this day, this year, as on the very day on which he was born. Glorious in habit, in fare: But specially, (as we see the Angels here do) with the service of God, the most solemn service, the highest, the most melodious Hymns, we have: and namely, with this here of the Quier of Heaven. In a word, all the ways we can: all the ways, God can have any glory from us, to let Him have it; and have it even at the height, in altissimis.

And good reason, we should so wish: CHRIST lost His glory, by being thus in the cratch. VVet took some from Him: to wish Him some for it again. That was ignominia in infimis: to wish Him gloria in altissimis, in lieu of it.

Again, we get glory by It; our Nature, so. For the glory we get by God here below; to return some glory to GOD there on high. This is votum gloria; This wish we, when we wish gloria in altissimis.

2. The next is votum pacis; they wish, Peace may be upon earth. Even Augustus his peace, first, (that is the first, cometh to our minds when we hear that word;) the shutting of Jannus: for, that also was a blessed fruit of this Birih. Esay foretold it; There should then be a bridg from Asbur to Egypt, and from Canaan to them both, that is, from every nation to other, to traffic, and to trade together.

Eph. 2. 14. That: but not onely that, but the taking down also of the partition wall, which formerly Moses had set up, between the Jew and the Gentile; the making of them both one in the body of His flesh: S. Paul's peace.

And yet further. For both these are Peace upon earth, of earth with earth. Augustus can, the World can give that peace, though many times they will not. But he speaks in a Place of the peace which the world cannot give, that is peace with heaven. That there should not be Esay's bridg onely, but Jacob's ladder set up from Bethel to Heaven; a peaceable intercourse with that place, by the Angels descending and ascending between us and them.

Gen. 28. 10. And further yet, peace at home with our selv's, and with our own consciences. Turn again to thy rest O my soul; for, in finding him we shall find rest to our souls.

Pfal. 118. 7. And last, (to answer Gloria in altissimis) Pax in novissimis, peace at the parting, which is worth all; Simeon's peace, a good Nunc dimittis in peace, a departing hence in peace. And all, by means of viderunt oculi, the sight of the salvation of this day. All these are in voto pacis.

3. The third is, there may be, in GOD, a good-will toward men. And, good-will is a kind of peace, but, somewhat more, with an extent or prorogation; a kind of peace peculiar to men, which the other parts of the earth are not capable of. So, a further matter to men, than bare peace: Even Jesus us, to think well, to bear Good-will, to be well pleased with men. And, what greater will can there be than In quo complacitum est? CHRIST hath no more, than in se and in deum. It is His high glory, that for His (and this His Birih sake, which we now celebrate) that which is verified of His Person, is verified of both His Natures: of Him, not onely as Son of GOD, but even as Son of Man too. And, what is verified of Him, as Son of Man, may be verified also of the Sons of men, of all Mankind. This wish is at the highest, and more cannot be wished, than that this favour to day begun, may still and ever continue to us all. So have you now the three parts of the Angels wish, Summa votorum, Glory be to God, &c.

4. What is now to be done? Three things more: To see the Connexion copulative, the Sequence, and the Division. The Connexion copulative, (a blessed couple) Glory and Peace. The Sequence: but, first Glory, and then Peace. The Division, which to which: One, to God; The other, to earth: The third, to man.

Glory and Peace are coupled together with an [and:] And in earth peace: That, Glory would not be sung alone, but Peace together with it. We will not, we may not skip the Copulative: that couples together high and low, heaven and earth, and in them God and Man: But, (that which I respect specially,) Glory and Peace must be sung together. If we sing Glory without Peace, we sing but to halves. No Glory on high will be admitted, without Peace upon earth. No gift on his altar (which is a special part of his glory,) but lay down your gift, and there leave it, and first go your way and make peace on earth, and that done come again, and you shall then be accepted, to give glory to Heaven; and not before. And O: that we would go and do the like, have like regard of His glory, that He hath of our peace. But, this knot of Gloria & Pax, is against those, that are still ever wrangling with one thing or other; and all for the Glory of God (forsooth,) as if these two could not joyn; God could not have his glory, if the Church were at peace: as if (no remedy) the Angels Et must out.

5. Glory, and Peace: but, Glory first, and then Peace; There is much in the order. Glory to be first, else you change the Cleff; the cleff is in Glory; that, the key of the Song. That is to be the first, and before all: Peace to give place to her; Glory is the elder Sister: And, no Pax in terris, unless it be first considered, how it will stand with gloria in excelsis. To set Peace before Glory, is to set earth above heaven. Keep the order then; each in her place. So goeth the Song: The Child born is God and Man; God, from on high; Man, from the earth; Celestem primo, dein & terrestrem celebrans: They keep the right order in singing of Him; we to do the like: Heavens part ever to be first.

Pfal. 34. 15. But then, next after His glory, nothing more dear, more precious; nay nothing so dear, so precious to us then, as peace. Set glory late, and then by all means Inquire pacem (saith the Psalmist,) Seek Peace: (if she hide her self, seek her out;) Et persequere eam; and pursue her: (if she fly away, follow her hard,) Peace is not sought: No man follows her, to make any pursuit; they know not the value of peace, that lose her so easily, and follow her so faintly. Nay, instead of pursuit, persecute her, and drive her away, and make the chasing her away, the seeking of God's Glory. The second thing in the world is Peace: Onely one, One onely before it, the glory of God.

But, the Air of the song is in the Division, wherein each is sorted to his own: GOD, to His; the Earth, to hers; Men, to theirs. Justus division (which makes peace in Heaven and Earth) skored skored here out so plainly, as it is easily seen, which pertains to which. And we by all means so to distribute and deal them; and by all means to preserve and hold up this division. Else we change the note, which is as much as the whole harmony is worth.

Now in this partition glory goes whither? Up on high. To whom there? To God, and to none but God. The Place and the Person are both set forth. On high, there is the Place: To God, there is the Person. Earth is not the place of glory: It is in excelsu, on high, Earth is not on high. Here below it is, as it were the cellar or vault of the world. Where though there be Excelsu and Excelsu, high places, & high persons both, yet the word is in u-^oltis in altissimis; & altissimis they be not; there be higher than they. 1 Glory to God. Eccles. 5.7.

And as Earth is not the place; So Man is not the person: For, man is upon the earth, and is earth. No glory to man then; Especially, none this day, of all dayes. Glory to Him; for what? For entertaining Christ, and lodging him in a stable? Confusion rather, somewhat to be ashamed of, nothing to glory of. Had men deserved it, some to them: Now, let God above have the glory of this day.

Yet, conceive it aright: we wish it, as our duty; not as any longing of His. It were a silly conceit to imagine of God, as if he were avidior gloria, did hunger or thirst for our glory. What is He the better for it? Only, nothing we have but that; and so, either that or nothing: for nothing but that can he receive from us. But we have, nothing to render him for all his goodness, for his civility, but Deo. Give it him then; but, give it entirely: give it none but him. Soli Deo (saith S. Paul:) Soli (saith S. Jude) Soli, let us all say. Not unto us O Lord, not unto us: (It is David, as if he were afraid to touch any part of it:) No; But, as Paul and Barnabas, rend our cloaths, if any Divine honor be forced upon us. 1 Tim. 3.17. Jude 15. Psal. 115.1. Act. 14.14.

Yet, glory we may. (I grant;) but not this, here: gloria in altissimis, if we sing to any but him, we sing a false note. Men do so now and then; but the Angels are never out: and thus sing they, and set out Glory for Gods part.

Let, Earth be content with peace: Peace is her portion; and a blessed portion, if she may well hold it; a fair portion; a rich wish. For, I would fain know, what could be said more, to the praise of this portion, than is here in this song? First, that in general it reacheth to the whole world: (Not, to men alone, though they have their share too, in whatsoever good cometh to the earth, but) it reacheth to all on earth: omni animantium, or vegetantium generi, to all the bealts, all the green things on the earth; All are the better for it. 2 On Earth, Peace.

Secondly, what more for the credit of peace, than that it is vetum militare, it comes from the mouths of soldiers that were there in their military habit. Even they sing of peace, and praise it, and wish it, where they wish any good; and know not what better thing to wish to the earth, than it. It is the earths happiness, Peace: it flourisheth by it. Before, was the earth as the Garden of Paradise, saith the Prophet behind, it was a waste and barren wilderness, all spoiled and burnt up. 3 Joel 2.31.

Thirdly, that it is Votum Angelicum, an Angels wish, Peace. They being heavenly Spirits, wish not any thing at any time, but heavenly: So that a heavenly thing is Peace: And so it is, as Nazianzen here well observed, Pugnas & discordia nescire Deum & angelos: No brutes, no brabblers in heaven: nothing but peace there. And a kind of Heaven there is upon Earth, when there is peace upon earth: and justly are they blessed, and rightly are they called the children of God, the most blessed that are, or shall be at any time, that are the procurers of it. This (I say) is the Angels division, they sing. 3

But here we are like to have no little ado to maintain this: As we said before, Hinc signa a matre contradicuntur; as the sign, so the song is gainsaid of many. The Devil doth all he can, to marre the Angels musick, to bring in his, his own black Sanctus; to procure contempt on Gods glory on high, to bring Gods glory as low as he can, to make Garboiles upon earth, to work men all evil will, mischief, and malice that he can. Verse 34.

And first, to make a confusion in this division, perswades earth not to stand content with the Angels partition, but earth (forsooth) must have glory, must be dealing with heavens part. It is well said, sa God on high: There be certain Gods, here below, aspire to glory. And glory we would allow, but no glory will I give, unless gloria in altissimis be sung to it. Sicut Dii cannot be gotten out of us. We cannot yet get Dominus Deus pastor Papa out of the glois, no, not now, after it is reformed. And King Herod would be content to be made more than a man, and to hear—Nec vox hominum sonat. And we heareath are too ready to sing it, otherwhile; to desire those, that are on high, and to give that belongs to God on high, to Gods below. Now, that earth is thus willing to entitle her self to Heavens part, this brings all out of tune. Gen. 3.7. Act. 12.13.

But, in tune, or out of tune, to die for it, have it we will. What the Apostles rent their cloaths to put from them, we would rend our skins to pluck to us. So greedy are we, to be held for Gods upon earth. Nay, earth is content to thrust from her, her own part (that is, peace) to invade Gods part (that is, glory); Es dum gloriam usurpant, pacem turbant, to usurp glory, they lose peace: we can dispense with that (shift Gods glory how it can) rather than our own should suffer the least disgrace, away with peace, moveatur terra, let all the world be on a weker. Act. 14.14.

What comes of this? Pacem domemientes & gloriam appetentes; & gloriam perdunt & pacem: Even this peace (their own part) they set light by: glory (Gods part) they gape after, and lose glory and peace (both) by the means; and when they have brought all to confusion, sit down by their losses. For first, by seeking glory, glory is lost. The Heathen man well observed; Glory is one of those things that to seek them, is the very next way to lose; and to neglect them, the way to gain them: Querendo amittitur. No readier way to mis it, than eagerly to seek it. And again, by seeking glory, peace is lost clear. Yeilding glory to God, doth bring with it pacem in terris; diverting it from him, doth take pacem de terris. In very deed, Peace upon earth, as it stands after it, so it hath a dependence upon Gods glory: comes comes (as it were) in exchange for it. Da gloriam & accipe pacem (saith God :) I let men on earth see glory up to God on high, and God on high will send down peace to men on earth and will not fail: Hic veniens pacem, for earths glory. VVhereby we see, if we miss peace on earth at any time, what it is long of. It is that, which makes the Angels here keep on their armour still: upon glory detained from God; or transferred whither it should not, they are up in arms straight, have power to take peace from the earth; till the point of glory be set right again. The setting right of which point is the way to recover it. Let Heaven, let God be well served with their part, peace will not long be away, It is coupled to it (you see,) it followeth close; Et pax in terris. So much for that Division.

Esay 6. 3.

To men a good will, For, besides Earths peace, wherein they enter common, Men have a part by themselves, which is their prerogative. And first, I would have you to note; that here it is entered first into the Musick of Heaven. In the Angels Hymn, in Esay, in the Old Testament. Men are out there: No mention at all, not a word of them, in that. Heaven is in, and Earth; but, no Men, there. In the Angels Hymn, here, in the New Testament, here, Men, are in: that all may know, that for this Childs sake now made man, Men are now come into the Angels song; to be a part, and a principal part there, who before were left out.

A principal part (I say :) For, mark again: They have never an Et, they stand by themselves. For both those former resolve into this of Men: They, the Epitome of Heaven and Earth; The parties, from whom this glory, to whom this peace is principally intended to come. Glory to God, Glory and Peace: Why both? For God hath received men to grace; Men are now in favour again.

But heaven, and earth, and men, and all resolve into the free grace and good-will to God. How shall they perform either peace or glory, but if there be toward them first; and secondly, but if there be in them this third of good-will. Thence issues Gods glory; thence the Earths peace. The fountain of both, that: Nay, of Christ and all. For, Him, this glory; for Christ: Through Him, this peace; through Christ: But, Christ himself whence? Whence, but from the good-will of God toward men? From whence also, the good-will in men, to God, and one to another, if any be in them. That if we go hither yet, even of this Birth, Gods good will was the cause, and because His will was, men should be restored, therefore, His will was, Christ should be incarnate and born. Can we go any higher? are we not in altissimis? Verily, as we said, the humility of the Sign was so deep, we could not sound it: so may we now, that the sublimity of this point is so high we cannot reach it. There is a part of Divinity that dazzles: if we look too long on it, we may well lose our sight.

Then to in hominibus, last. It may be turned two wayes; it will bear both: (and, for my part I wish no word ever narrowed by a translation, but as much as might be, left in the latitude of the Original tongue.) * in hominibus will bear in homines, to, or toward men. So we turn it; and we turn it well. * But in hominibus, is also in hominibus, in, or among men; in hominibus, as well as in hominibus and no less properly. And no hurt, if we turn it so, in in hominibus; provided, in, or erga homines goe first, be sung before it, In in hominibus soever, as coming from in hominibus. For then Donum magnum bona voluntatis Dei, bona voluntas in hominibus, it is Augustine: of the good-will of God towards men, a special gift it is: this good-will in men, to God and man both. The best way is, where there are two, to take in both: So we shall be sure, to leave out neither.

1 But Toward men, first.

Yet in their sequence. To, or toward men then first: But, to, or toward them for this Childs sake. In whom He is so well pleased, as, for His sake, He is pleased, first, to receive men to pardon, though grievous sinners, and so utterly unworthy of it,

Secondly, He is pleased to reward their works also, otherwise (but for this good-will in God, in accepting them) that might justly be accepted too, for their many imperfections: to take them well in worth, though they want worth: and to vouchsafe them a reward, and that a high reward: for, it is your heavenly Fathers good pleasure to give you a kingdom.

Chap. 12. 32:

Thirdly, beyond both these, He is further pleased, in some case to accept even of this in hominibus at our hands; and though skill and power both fail, and be wanting; yet a willing mind if there be, if there be but that, a man is accepted according to that, he hath, not according to that, he hath not. Mary Magdalens quod potuit fecit; the poor Widows quod habuit dedit (and God wor, it was but two mites) yet well taken though: One admirabilis by another, That he placeth not acceptance, neither in in hominibus deep capacity of wit; nor in in hominibus great ability of power; but in in hominibus, readiness of good-will, an honest true meaning, an unteined hearty desire: Ut si sit actionis infirmitas, & si sit voluntatis integritas, though there be weakness in the act, yet if there be soundness in the will, out of His good-will toward men, He will accept this good will in men. * Nehemias desire to fear Him. * Ezechias setting his heart to seek. The Servants but preparing to do his Masters will. And even in Davids secundum cor meum, his honest true heart was the fairest flower in his garland.

c Luk. 11. 42.

1 Sam. 13. 14:

And this, if it were well weighed and digested aright; If Christ, if all that comes by Christ (and that is all in all) be by his free grace and favour: If men were but rightly conceited in this point, it would soon bring them out of conceit with their own I wor not what; It would make them truly humble: And it is the humble man that gives God the true glory, that sings this song right, when all is done. The glory that comes to God, is Dei gloria, the first word for the last. With glory it begins, with good-will it ends; and with good-will it begins, and with glory it ends: As the first shall be last, and the last first.

Mat. 19. 30.

But, when we have fixed bona voluntas in homines, what hurt will it do, to wish bona voluntas in hominibus; Sure, none. Bona voluntas in homines is to work bonam voluntatem in hominibus, and that by very course of kind. For Suum simile, grace to beget his own like, is most natural: Bene placitum Dei

men.

Dei, to beget Bonitas Dei: Who, out of his good pleasure worketh in us both to will and to do; Phil. 2. 13. and whose only work it is, Uterque boni voluntas Dei, bona voluntas hominis.

What hath then, if the Angel should wish it, or commend it to men, in whom it is, it comes from that of God merely, and from no other. Verily, what is praise-worthy in God, cannot but be so in men too. Quamvis Religio est, assimilari Et quomodo vultis, To become like to Him; we worship, is the pitch of all Religion.

Rom. 15. 16.
10. i.
Phil. 1. 15.
1 In men towards God;

Now, an exhortation at the second hand there is in men: The word it self is ascribed to them of Asia, towards the poor Saints at Jerusalem: to S. Paul towards the Jews: to the Philippians towards Saint Paul: and in other places.

To wish them in men this Adon's toward God; which, where it is, makes men to Adonari, to have a good conceit or opinion of God; which will bring forth a good affection to God. It is well observed, it is not adonstans, (which is properly Greek for good will) but adonari, which is rather a good thinking, if we go to the very nature of the word: But, it will come all to one. Only, the affection that begins in the opinion is noted for good; and the opinion; that is bred in the affection, not so.

From that good conceit of God, accepting well whatsoever it pleaseth Him to send: If good, receiving it thankfully; if otherwise, taking it patiently; ever praising God for all. But, no wayes extolling, of Him, that opinion, for which they cannot but love Him the worse, if, as of a Tyrant sentencing men to death, only for his pleasure, before they have offended him at all. That would prove no adonari, as it may be handled. And the Apostle tells us, the adonari that is in God, is adonari ad iudicium; it is not, but regulate by His goodness (2 Thes. 1.) for which ever may there be glory ascribed to Him.

2 Thes. 1. 11.
2 In men towards men,
Rom. 12. 18.

Then, to wish it in men towards men: An adonari, also, which, where it is, breeds an inclination to Adonari, to take all in the better part; and if possibly we can; and as much as in us lieth to have peace with all men, which if it were on earth, would shake heaven on earth. Peace is not said (as glory) to be in, but ad; and ad, is over. For, (indeed) it doth but hover aloft over the earth; would light, but cannot otherwise. The Raven can, but the Dove cannot, for want of this Bona voluntas in hominibus; or these homines bona voluntatis. It finds them not well willing to peace, while every one stands more for his own reputation, or other ends, than either for Charitas or Concordia pacis. Banish the opposites of adonari, Envy (Rom. 10.) Malice (Phil. 1.) and peace will be no stranger upon earth. It would then be in γινώσκου where it is in γινώσκου, the same Proposition in both. All depends upon the cadence adonari perform that well, and it will be Musick for an Angel.

Rom. 10. 12.

And, now ye have heard all parts, what shall we do with this Song? Sing it. But we have no Angels to sing it, and it will be musick for an Angel. Angels it would be, as at first it was: But, when it is not, it will please them well, that men sing it, whom it most concerns. But, if by men, of very congruity, an Angels song would be, by men, when in some degree they drew something near to the Angels estate. At least, when nearer than at other times.

And when is that, that men on earth come so? at what time? Sure, if ever men do rise above themselves, and approach in any sort near to those blessed Spirits; if ever they be in state with Angels and Arch-Angels to laud and magnifie His glorious name; if in all their lives they be in peace and charity, the bond of perfection, the Bona voluntas we speak of; if at any time it be in men; and they homines bona voluntatis; upon the taking of the Sacrament it is: At that time, then, or never, they lift up their hearts in true devotion. So, then in best case, that in all our lives to sing it: If Christ dwell in our hearts by faith, if we be Temples of the Holy Ghost.

And that we might be in that case, and to sing it, the Church is never unprovided, this day, of this means of elevating our minds: And it is opera pretium, worth the while, if it were but for that; and there may be joy among the Angels in Heaven, to hear their Hymns kept still alive: Though, there is another congruity for the Sacrament: that the Great Mystery of Godliness, which is God manifested in the flesh, might not be celebrated without the Mystery of His flesh: that, the day, He came among us to be partaker of flesh and blood, we also might be partakers of the flesh and blood which he took from us, to give them us again.

1 Tim. 3. 16.

But otherwise, this Day, in this Hymn, and this Hymn in this Day continually have a special interest. Time in Musick is much. And if we will keep time with the Angels, do it when they do it, this day they did it: And what fitter time to sing it, than the day, it was first sung, the day of the first singing of it, Canticum dei, in die cantati? When should the Hymn of Christ's birth be better sung, than on Christ's birth-day?

But, because it is not Vox, but Votum; the voice is not all, but the hearts desire and wish it is that God chiefly respecteth; to add that. And, what should we wish from our hearts; but that the Angels may have their wish; Every one may have his due, as it is here set out.

And, for that Nihil a quibus est, quam ut pro quo quis orat, pro eo laborat, what we wish for, we should not stand wishing only, but endeavour withall, it may come to pass, that it be our labour too, with all our endeavours, to procure the glory of heaven, and the peace of the earth: To find peace in the good will of God, and to give Him all glory for it, who hath appointed peace our portion here, and glory our hope laid up there. Assuring our selves that the same adonari that was able to bring the Son of God from Heaven into earth, shall have the like power to lift up the Sons of men from earth to the glory of heaven: There with the blessed Angels to sing this glorious Hymn eternally. No more, of wish then, but of fruition, and so of everlasting Gratulation.

SERMON

Preached before the
Kings Majesty.

At WHITE-HAL, on Monday the xxv. of December, Anno Domini, M D C X X, being CHRISTMASSE Day.

MATT. Chap. II. Vers. I, II.

Cum ergo natus esset Iesus in Bethlehem Judæ, in diebus Herodis Regis, Ecce Magi ab Oriente venerunt Ierufolyman, dicentes.

Ubi est qui natus est Rex Iudæorum? Vidimus enim stellam Ejns in Oriente, & venimus adorare Eum.

When Iesus then was born at Bethlehem in Iudea, in the days of Herod the King, behold there came Wisemen from the East, to Ierusalem, saying.

Where is the King of the Iews that is born? For we have seen His Star in the East, and are come to worship Him.

Epas now this year, from the Shepherds, and the Angels, to the Wise men, and their Star. This Star, and their coming no less proper to this day, than those other were. For, though they came not to Ierusalem, this day; yet, this day, venerunt ab Oriente, from the East they came: They set forth, this very day. For, they came when JESUS was born; And, this day, was He born. Howsoever the Star brought them not to their journeys end, till twelve days hence; yet this day it first shewed it self: how soon Iesus was born, vidimus stellam, it appeared straight. For which very appearing you shall find, the Fathers of the East Church do call this first day ra emania, as well as the last. This first, wherein His Star appeared, and they began their journey. That last, wherein He appeared Himself, and their journey was at an end. First, and last, an appearing there was. One begins, the other ends the Feast.

VVe pass from one of them, to the other; but, from the less to the greater: For, of the twain this is the greater. Greater, in it self: Greater, to us. Two ways greater, in it self. Th'other (of the Shepherds) a poor one: poor and mean. This (of the Wise men) a sign of some stars: high and heavenly.

God bade Ahaz ask a sign; Ask one from here below, or one from the height above: He would ask neither, but God gave both. From below, Hoc erit signum, you shall find the Babe in a manger: Low enough: (that we have done withall.) Now, from above, Eccce vidimus Stellam the sign from Heaven: His new Star. Esay 7. 11.
Luke 2. 12.

Besides, (to speak uprightly) one might in some sort complain, of the privateness of the Angels appearing: Somewhat obscure it was; few privie to it: passed over in the night between the Angels and them. And, upon it, three or four Shepherds got them into the stable; and, what there they did, no man could take notice of.

More famous, and more Manifestation-like was this here. A new light kindled in heaven, A Star, never seen before. The world could not but look up at it, and ask what it meant. Nothing appeareth there, but, the sound of it goeth out into all Lands, and the news of it to the utmost parts of the earth. Psalm 19. 4i

This made another manner venerunt: upon this came there to Hierusalem (not a rout of Shepherds, but) a troop of Great persons. And not from a heath, or Sheep-common hard by; but, from afar, from the East, twelve days journey off. All Hierusalem rang of it. The King, Priests, and people busied with it. To this day, remembered in all stories. It cannot be forgotten: For this was not done in a corner. This was (indeed) a Manifestation. Better, in it self, thus. Acts 26. 26.

And, for us, Better: For us all. For we (all) hold by this. It was a brack in the former; the Sermon was made, and the Anthem sung, and none at it but the Shepherds. And what were they? Jews: What is that to us? This scripture offereth more grace. These (here) that come from the East, first, they were Gentiles. Gentiles, that concerns us, for so are we. We may then look out, if we can see this Star. It is ours, it is the Gentiles Star. VVe may set our course by it, to seek, and find, and worship Him, as well as they. James 4. 6i

This is for us all. But there is yet more grace offered to some in particular: the Shepherds were a sort of poor simple men altogether unlearned; But, here come a troop of men of great place, high account in their countrey: And withall, of great learned men (their name gives them for no less:) this (lo) falls somewhat proper to this Place and Presence, that will be glad to hear it. It is faustum & salutare sydus to such; that wealth, wealth, or wisdom shall hinder none, but they may have their parts in CHRIST's Birth, as well as those of low degree. It is not onely Stella Gentium, but Stella Magorum: the Great mens, the Wise mens Star, this.

So, quoad nos, for us, it fitteth well. And, quoad se, of it self, it is fit every way. This Star leads us to another Star, even the Root and Generation of David, the bright morning Star. He of whom Zachary saith, in the old Testament, Eccce Vir, Oriens nomen ejus: Yea, Oriens ab alto (saith Zachary, in the New:) Visits those of the East, whence the day springeth; takes them that are nearest Him; and his rising works upon the place first, that bears His name. The wisdom of God the beginning of all his ways is found by Wise men, of all other (because they be wise) most fit to find Him. Esay 21. 1i
2 Pet. 1. 19.
Psalm 110. 3i
* Zach. 6. 12.
* Luke 1. 78.
Prov. 8. 22.

Two verses I have read. In the former, after the Matter of the Faith first remembered, (When Jesus was born,) accompanied with the two circumstances of Place and Time, (the place where, Bethlehem Juda; the time when, the days of Herod the King;) there is a memorable accident (that then happened) set down: A Venerunt, a coming or arrival at Hierusalem. And they, that so came, were a company of Magi, from the East. And this (lo) hath the Ecce on the head of it, Ecce, venerunt Magi ab Oriente, Behold, there came, &c. As the special point in the text: and so, we to make it. The Division.
I.

In the later, is set down their Errand. Both the Occasion, and the End: best expressed by themselves out of their own dicentes. 1. the Occasion: Vidimus Stellam, they had seen his Star. 2. the End, Venimus adorare, they are come to worship him. Viderunt, Venerunt, Adoraverunt. II.

That they may come to their finis ultimus, they must have a medius finis: that is, to worship, they must find him where he is.

So they ask, Ubi est? Not whether He be born; but, where He is born. For, born He is, they are sure, by the same token they have seen His Star. His Star is up, that is risen; therefore He is risen too.

So the Star in Heaven kindled another Star in earth, (S. Peter calls it the Day-Star which riseth in the heart, that is, faith) which shined and manifested it self, by their labour in coming, diligence in enquiring, duty in worship. 2 Pet. 1. 19.

CHRIST's birth made manifest, to them, by the Star in Heaven: their faith (the Star in their hearts) made manifest to Christ, and to all, by the travel of it, which shewed it manifestly.

That (upon the matter) there falls a threefold Manifestation, (you may call them three Stars, if you please;) 1. the Star in Heaven: 2. the day-Star, in their hearts: 3. and Christ himself, the bright morning-Star, whom both the other guide us to: the Star of this morning, which makes the day, the greatest Day in the year.

The sum of all riseth to this: That God hath opened the door of faith to the Gentiles: And, among them, to wise men, and great men, as well as to the simpler sort. But with this condition, that they say with them, venite adoremus: and so, come, and seek, and find, and worship him; that is, do as they did. Acts 14. 27.

The Matter.]

VWhen Jesus was born: That (when) is now. His Birth is the ground of the Feast, and the cause of our Venimus, our coming together. Where this we note first; It is the very first time, the first (was born) in the Bible: was born, never till now. Here, the tide turns; the sense changes, from shall be, to was. A blessed change; and, the day is blessed, on which it happened.

Esay 9. 6.

Before He was born, it was so sure He should be born, as Esay said, Puer natus est nobis. But for all that there is some odds between Esays natus est, and S. Matthews. That was but virtually; as good as born: This, actually born indeed.

Web. 13. 8.

Jesus Christ, yesterday, & to day, and the same for ever. The same, yet not altogether after the same manner. There is as much between Jesus Christ, yesterday, not come; and Jesus Christ, to day, cum natus esset; as is between a state in reversion, and one in being.

Num. 13. 22

The Fathers aptly resemble their case, that were the ante-nati before Christ, and ours that came after, to the two men (Num. 13.) that carried the great cluster of grapes, upon a staff between them. Both carried; but, he that came behind saw that he carried: so did not he that went before. The post-nati (sure) are of the surer hand: And so, for cum natus esset (the day and time) to hold a Feast: for When Jesus was born.

The Circumstances.

VEighty circumstances are ever matter of moment; in a story specially. Three there are in the first Verse: ¹ The Place: ² The Time: ³ The Persons. ⁴ I add a fourth (out of the second Verse) the Occasion. The place (Ubi,) Bethlehem Juda. The time (Quando,) the days of Herod the King. The Persons (Quibus,) Wise men from the East. The Occasion, (whereupon) A new star appearing; every one of the four having a several Prophecy running of it: and every Prophecy a filling of it, in these words.

Micah 5. 2.

The Place: He was born, in Bethlehem Juda: And thou Bethlehem Juda (saith the Prophet Micah,) out of thee shall He come. And now, come He is.

Gen. 49. 10.

The time: the days of Herod the King. The scepter shall not quite depart from Juda, till Shilo come (saith old Father Jacob in his Prophecy;) Shilo then is (now) come. For, the scepter is in Herod's hand: His father, an Edomite, his mother, an Ismaelite: Juda clean gone.

Psalm 72. 10.
Esay 60. 6.

The Persons: Magi ab Oriente, Kings from the East. The Kings of Arabia and Saba, shall come and bring gifts (saith David;) And Esay specifies them, Gold, Myrrh, Incense. These Kings are come: Here they are, they, and their gifts, both.

Num. 24. 17.

The Occasion, whereupon: A star risen: A star shall rise of Jacob (saith Balaam, no very good man, yet a true Prophet in this; and his prophecy true, and for such recorded in the Book of Moses.) This star is, this morning, up to be seen. Prophecies of all four: and, all four accomplished.

Christ's Ubi.

Of the Place of Bethlehem (out of Mica) it hath formerly been treated: I but touch it and pass it now. It was the place, where David himself was born. And what place more meet for the Son of David, to be born in? It was the place, where was heard the first news of the Temple: And, where could the Lord of the Temple, more fitly be heard of? It is interpreted Domus panis, the House of Bread: what place more proper for him, who is the living bread, that came down from heaven, to give life to the world? It was the least, and the lowest, of all the thousands of Juda: What little and low is, in things natural; that lowliness and humility is in spiritual. This natural birth-place, of his, sheweth his spiritual. Humility is his place: Humility (as I may call it) the Bethlehem of virtues: where you find it, Lo, there is he born. So born in us, as born for us. Pass we Christ's Ubi, and now, to His Quando.

Micah 5. 2.

Christ's Quando.

Of the time: the Days of Herod the King. And those were evil days; Days of great affliction, to that land. Juda's scepter clean broken: not a Law-giver left between his feet. Edom (that is, Herod the Edomite) cried, down with them, down to the ground. Not so much as a sort of silly babes, but barbarously slain in their mothers arms: enough, to make Rachel mourn, as she lay in her grave. Dismal days, certainly: why, then comes Shilo: When mans help furthest off, then Gods nearest: When it is dark, then rises the star.

What one prophecy of Him, but came even so; even, at such a time, when they were most out of heart, and needed comfort most? Jacobs, when they were in Egypt, the house of bondage. Balaam's, when in the wafts and barren wilderness, among fiery serpents. Esay's, when they were ready to be over-run with the two Kings of Syria and Israel. Daniel's, when in Babylon, the land of their captivity. Agge's when they built the wall with the trowel in one hand, and the sword in the other. As his Prophecies came (fill:) so came he: His Prophecies (saith Peter) as a candle: Himself, as a star: in the dark, both. For all the world, like the time of the year his birth fell in; in the sharpest season, in the deep of Winter. As Humility, His place, so affliction, His time. The time and place fit well. For, the time of affliction, makes the place: makes humility: VWhich place Christ is born in. I pass this also, and come to the third; of the Persons.

Christ's Quibus.

For, there stands the Eccē; upon it. VWhich Eccē points us to it, as to the chief point of all; As (indeed) it is. And our chief endeavour, to include our selves, to have our parts in this Venerunt, in coming to Christ.

Here is a Coming, Venerunt: And they that come, Magi. In which Comers we consider four points: they sustain four persons: ¹ Of Gentiles; ² Gentiles, from the East; ³ Great Persons, Great Princes, (for, so we may be bold to call them, as the Prophecy calls them, Kings;) ⁴ Of great Learning and wisdom: so [Magi] their name gives them.

To

To Bethlehem came the shepherds. Nothing to us, they were Jews. But, thither came these too 3 Gentiles, and they were Gentiles : and, in this Gentiles, we ; So come we in. Then hath God also, to the Acts 14. 27. Gentiles set open a door of faith. At which door we enter ; We with them, and they with us : For, they and we Gentiles both. The star is stella Gentium, the Gentiles star : And to ours ; and we to direct our course by it. All, that ever write, call them Primitias Gentium, the first fruits ; Antesignanos, the standard-bearers, to all the Gentiles, that came in after. Upon this, I beg leave to stand a little, because it is our tenure, we hold by.

And, that GOD would thus do, call the Gentiles in, there was some little Ecce (still) some small star-light from the beginning.

By way of Promise. So much promised, by the Patriarchs. Noe ; that Japhet should at the last dwell in the tents of Sem. Abraham ; that in his seed (not any one Nation, but) all the nations of the earth be blessed. Jacob ; that Shilo's coming should be expectation (say, some, and some aggregatio) Gentium : All nations look for him, all be gathered to him. Gen. 9. 27, 28. 49. 10.

By way of Figure. As much was shadowed in the Law, the Tabernacle, and the Temple ; all, figures of things to come. The Law ; Where was it given ? Was it not in Sinai, a mountain in Arabia (saith the Apostle) and upon heathen ground ? I trust, we may have leave to come upon our own ground. And by whom ? Was it not by Moses ? And we claim to him by alliance : His wife was the daughter of the Priest of Midian : So, of a heathen woman : and his children, heathen of half-blood : The Tabernacle : was not the silk, and gold, and riches it was made of, the spoils of Egypt, and so heathen stuff ? Exod. 12. 36. 25. 2, &c. 1 Chr. 21. 18.

The Temple : was it not founded upon the threshing floor of Ornan the Jebusite, a heathen man ? So, on heathen soil ; and, edificium cedit solo. The Timber and materials of it, came they not from Hiram's country, A heathen King ? And, the chief workman, in it (the son of a man of Tyre) heathen also. So, the heathen were never wholly out. Venerunt, they came, they made their proficients. Some Ecce, some little star still. 1 Reg. 5. 10. 7. 13, &c.

Now the Prophets, when they came, had we not hold there, too ? At the same time, that God gave Moses to the Jews, who wrote of CHRIST, did he not likewise give Balaam to the Gentiles, who, in the mountains of the East prophesied of Christ's star, here ? Great odds (I know) between the men ; None between their Prophecies : Both, alike true : both their places alike, in the Library of the holy Ghost. After that, Jonas : howsoever his book stand in the volumn of the Prophets, yet, (when time was) it was shewed, that in time, he was the first of the sixteen Prophets : before, and ancient to them all. And this was a fair star, that his first Prophet of all GOD sent to Ninive, the great Citie of the Gentiles, then : And sent him, before he sent any of the other fifteen to his own people (then) in shew, the People of the Jews. Num. 24. 17.

But, even of them he sent to the Jews, saith not Esay directly, the Root of Jesse should be as a standard, all the Nations gather unto him ? Saith not GOD there, It was too poor a service for CHRIST to do to him, to draw to him a sort of silly Shepherds ; He would give him as a light to lighten the Gentiles, to bring them, even the very best of them, from the ends of the earth. That light to lighten the Gentiles was this star (here ;) Simeon had it revealed to him, whereto this star referred, and what it meant ; For, it lightened them indeed. And this, standing the first Temple. And saith not Aggee, (standing the second Temple) The desire of all Nations shall come, (meaning Christ ;) the desire, not of one Nation alone, but even of all. So, the Prophets will not be against this venerunt : they are (all) for it. Esay 11. 10. Esay 41. 6. 43. 5. Luke 2. 32. Agg. 2. 8.

And was not also this Venerunt daily sung in their Quier ? The Psalm of the Nativity : I will think upon Rahab (that is, Egypt) and Babylon ; among such as shall know me. Behold ye the Philistines also, and them of Tyre, with the Moabians, Lo, there was He born. Born, in all those places ; that is, His birth concerns them all : all, their interest in it. In the Psalm of His Passion : All the ends of the earth shall remember themselves, and shall turn unto the LORD ; And all the kindreds of Nations shall worship before Him. In the Psalm of the Resurrection : That, He should then become the Head-stone of the corner, and joyn both Jews and Gentiles in one coin, or angle. And in the Psalm of His Ascension : That the Princes of the Nations should be joyned to the People of the GOD of Abraham. And in the Psalm of His Exaltation : That all Kings should kneel before Him, all Nations do him service. Psal. 47. 4, 5. Psal. 32. 17. Psal. 118. 22. Psal. 41. 20. Psal. 71. 11.

That which (then) was thus promised, to and by the Patriarchs ; shadowed forth, in the figures of the Law, the Temple and the Tabernacle ; That which was foretold by the Prophets, and foretelling of in the Psalms ; that, was this day fulfilled : Venerunt, here they are come : And Venimus, We, in them, and with them. Who, not onely in their own names, but in ours, make here their entry ; came, and sought after and found and worshipped their Saviour, and ours, the Saviour of the whole world.

A little wicket there was left open before, whereto divers Gentiles did come in. Many, a Venit there was : Venit Job, in the Patriarchs' dayes : Venit Jethro, in Moses : Rahab, in Josua's : Ruth, in the Judges time : Ittai (the King of Gath's son) in Davids : The Queen of Saba, in Solomon's : The Widow of Sarepta, in Elias : Naaman (the Syrian) in Elisa's time. Each of these, in their times, had the favour to be let in. This was but a Venit, a little wicket, for one or two. Now, a venerunt, the great Gate set wide open, this day, for all : For these here, with their Camels and Dromedaries, to enter, and all their carriage. Job 1. 1. Exod. 18. 5. Jos. 2. d Ruth 1. 4. e 2 Sam. 18. 2. f 1 Kings 10. 1. g 1 Kings 17. 9. h 2 Kings 5. 15

In the setting down his Genealogie, (the Chapter before) That Salmon espoused Rahab the Canaanite; that Booz likewise, Ruth the Moabite; it is plain, that CHRIST descended (according to the flesh) of Heathen. Descending of Heathen, He will never disdain them, of whom He is descended; never shut them out, but invite them to his Child-house: As we see this day by His Star, he did.

And (if you mark it) of his first Sermon the Widow of Serapim, and Naaman the Syrian were the Theme: which made his Sermon was not liked. Yet, that Theme he chose purposely. And the Queen of the South, and the men of Ninive much in his mouth: He mentioned them willingly. And (to end this point) He that, at his birth (now) received these of the East; a little before his death, in like sort, received Gracians from the West, to see and to salute him: And straight upon it (upon the receiving them) brake out and said, The hour is come now, that the Son of man is glorified, when East and West are come in, both.

I have a little stood on this, because it is the Ecce point. I conclude, The Place, he was born in, (an Inn, which is for all passengers of what country soever,) the time, he was born in, (of the tax; when all the world came up to be taxed,) the very star, which (as the nature of stars is) is common to all Coasts and Climats, peculiar to none: All shew, that all coasts they may now come; that, the Gentiles are now to be (as the Apostle in three pregnant terms delivers it) συνσώμα, συμμέτοχοι, συγκαταμέτοχοι, fellow-members, fellow-partners, and fellow-heirs of one body; Co-partners, and Co-heirs of Christ, and his birth. This for Stella Gentium, the Gentiles Star; So both theirs and ours.

There came Gentiles: And they came from the East. This may seem to set us back again; for, we are of the West, the contrary Climate. That is no matter. For, in that they came from the East, there lieth yet further hope for us; even from that point of the compass. For, that is not onely Gentiles, but sinners of the Gentiles: Sinners, and that chief sinners. For, so were they of the East; greater, far greater sinners than the rest. For tell me, what sin was there that came not from thence? There was the Tower set in hand, that should have confronted GOD: and of it came Babel, and from it confusion.² Thence came all Tyranny and oppression among men, from Nimrod, that hunted and ranged over men, as over beasts in a forest.³ Thence, all Idolatry, and worship of false Gods; both in earth, from Belus tomb, first: And in heaven, from the Star of their God Remphan (which S. Stephen speaks of).⁴ Thence (from the Mountains of the East) the posterity of Balaam, false Prophets, that loves the wages of unrighteousness; and, from them, all that naught is. And, if in all these it did, It cannot be denied, but that the whole World received their infection that way, from the East.

And herein appeared the grace of GOD, which bringeth Salvation to all men, and to all sinners, as fair and clear, as the Star it self; that, thence (out of the mountains of the East) GOD calleth these to seek, and guided them to find Christ: that, whence the poison first came, thence might come the Triacle: and that as they were the first that went out, so they should be the first that came in.

So the East sets us no further back, but brings us nearer. For if the East may come, which are the greater; much more may the West, which are the less: if the Seducers, the Seduced. From the East to the West, is a maiore ad minus. That, if venerunt ab Oriente, venient ab Occidente; if the greater, much rather the lesser. This, for the Star of the Gentiles, first: And now, the Star of Sinners, and chief sinners of the Gentiles, even Oriental sinners.

But, they sustain yet a third person, these: (to come near, and to make it come nearer us, even to this place.) For Great men they were in their Countreys, of the highest place and account there, as all Stories testify. The Psalms calls them Kings of Sheba and Seba: and, so may we. It may appear by Herod's respect to them: His calling a Synod to resolve them: his privie conference, with them. So may it by their treasures they opened, and by their resents they offered (resents, for a King), which give them for no less. So, this is (now) thirdly, Stella Magnatum, the Star of Princes and Nobles. also. Yea, Stella Regia, the Star Royal, Kings themselves have their hold and claim by it.

CHRIST is not onely for rusted cloaks, Shepherds and such; shews himself to none but such: But even the Grandez, Great States, such as these; venerant, they came too: and when they came, were welcom to Him. For they were sent for, and invited by this Star (their star properly.)

These, at His Birth, at his welcom into the world; and others such as these, at his death, at his going out of it. Then Joseph of Arimathea, an honourable Counsellor, bestowed on him a fair new Tomb: and others came, with their hundred pound of sweet odors. So that coming and going. He was beholden to such. The Tribe, Christ came of, was the Royal Tribe, to whom the Sceptre belonged; And in the Prophecy it follows, A star shall rise out of Jacob, and a Sceptre out of Israel. To Kings, to Sceptres Christ cannot but be well inclined.

Among his Prophets, I find Amos, an herdsman: True: but, I find Esay and Daniel, (both) nobly descended, and of the blood Royal.

In His descent, there are Booz, and Jesse, plain country men; But there are David, and Salomon too, and a list of Kings withall: that so, there may be a mixture of both. It is true, S. Paul saith: You see your calling; not many mighty, not many noble after the flesh: Not many, he saith: Not any, he saith not: he should (then) have spoken contrary to his own knowledg. Some pertained to this star, went by it. The Lord Deputy of Cyprus; the great Judge in Arceopage, divers of the nobler sort at Berea; And divers of Cæsars household came in, and had all their calling, by and from Him.

As

As likewise the great ^a Lord Treasurer, by St. Philip; and the ^b Elest Lady, by St. John. Those (all) ^c Acts. 18. 27. were of this Troop here: Under this Star, all of them, Stella Magnatum. To conclude, from our ^d 2 John 1. Saviour Christ's own mouth: As there is in Heaven, room for poor Lazarus; So, that room was in the bosome of one that was rich (that is) of Abraham; a great Man, yea; a great Prince in his time.

¹ Stella gentium; ² Stella peccatorum de gentibus; ³ Stella Magnatum. But yet all this while, we have not touched Stella Magorum: Not yet deal with Magi, the very word of the Text, and the chiefe person they represent. For, beside that they were great States, they were also great learned Men; And (being both) they are filed rather by the name of their skill and learning, than by that of their greatness; to point us, to the quality in them, we are principally to regard.

Wife men.

You shall not need startle, when you hear the word Magi, as if they were such as Simon Magus was. Of later times it sounds not well (this name) of old, it was a name of great honour, as was the name of Tyrannus, and Sophistes; all, in the like case. Evil and unworthy men took them up after, and so, they lost their first reputation. But, originally, Magus was a title of high knowledge.

I adde, of Heathen knowledge, and comprehend in it this very knowledge, that they were well seen in the course of heaven, in the stars and bodies celestial. Their Vidimus stellam shews as much. The stars God hath given, for signs (saith the Book of Genesis;) Even the ordinary. And, if them, the extraordinary (such as this) much more. For, Signs they are, open the Signature who can.

Gen. 1. 14.

This learning of theirs made them never the further from Christ (we see;) It did them no hurt, in their coming to Christ: No more than it did Moses, that he was well learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians (saith S. Stephen, Act. 7. 22.) Nor no more than it did Solomon, that he passed all the children of the East, in their own learning, (1 Reg. 4. 30.) No more than it did Daniel, that he was brought up, and well seen, in the cunning of the Chaldeans (Dan. 1. 4.) No more these; than the gold and spoils of Egypt, did the Tabernacle hurt, that was hung all over with them.

They, that are seen in this learning of Egypt, of Chaldea, of the East, are not thereby barred at all. This is their star, their guide; a guide apt and proper for them that knew the stars; for them that were learned. Christ applyeth himself to all; disposes all things: what every one is given to, even by that, Christ calleth them. Saint Peter, Andrew, James, and John, Fishermen, by a draught of Fish. These, These that were studious in the Stars, by a star for the purpose.

And note that the apparition to the Shepherds was no sooner over, but this star appeared presently, if not the very same hour: (that is) both at once. In like manner, Christ, at first (to shew the glory of his greatness) took and employed Fishermen, such as had no bringing up in Schooles. But it was not long after, but Learned Men came in apace: Learned men of all sorts; ^a Zenas, in Law; ^b Luke, in Physick; ^c Apollo, with his Eloquence; ^d *Dionys*e, with his Philosophy; ^e S. Paul, with his word γρηγορη much learning, (which he had at Tharsus, as famous an University for Asia, as Athens was for Greece;) Which Learning (for all Festus phansie) turned not his braines, nor did them any hurt at all.

b 1 Tim. 4. 11.
c Acts 18. 24.
d Acts 17. 34.
e Acts 26. 24.

There is no star of brain of it; There is no truth at all, in humane learning, or Philosophy, that sheweth any truth in Divinity; but forteth well with it, and serveth it, and all to honour Him, who saith of Himself, Ego sum veritas, I am the truth. None that will hinder this Venerunt, keep back any wise man, or make him less fit for coming to Christ.

Ioh. 14. 6.

So, you see your calling; all four. ¹ Gentiles may come, ² Sinners of the Gentiles may come, (yea, though they be peccatorum primi, of the primer sort;) ³ Men of Place; ⁴ Men of Gifts, Learned and Wise may come. In Magis insunt omnes hi, all are in Venerunt Magi: The star goes before them, guides them (all) to Christ.

It remaineth, that, what we may doe, we will do; that is, come. (For, further than Venerunt, we are not like to come, at this time.) And though we go no further, it skils not, so we do but that; come. Even that will serve. For, it is all in all. We shall go in the company of Wise men, that is once. And if the Shepherds were too homely to sort with, these are company for the best; they were company for Cyrus, and Darius, and all the great Monarchs of Persia.

The Application.

Ecce Venerunt it is, in the Text: And (indeed) not only the Persons, (Ecce Magi;) but their very coming deserved an Ecce. It is an Ecce venerunt, theirs (indeed) if we weigh it well, whence they came, and whither. Whence; from the East, their own countrey: Whither, to Hierusalem, that was to them a strange Land: That was somewhat. ¹ They came a long journey, no less than twelve dayes together.

² They came an uneasy journey, for their way lay through Arabia Petra, and the craggy rocks of it.

³ And they came a dangerous journey, through Arabia Deserta (too,) and the black tents of Kedar.

Psal. 110. 5.

there then famous for their robberies, and even to this day. ⁴ And they came, now, at the worst season of the year. And all, but to do worship at Christ's birth. So great account they made; So highly did they esteem their being at it, as they took all this great travel, and came all this long journey, and came it, at this time. Stayed not their coming, till the opening of the year, till they might have better weather and way, and have longer dayes, and so more seasonable and fit to travel in. So desirous were they to come with the first, and to be there, as soon as possibly they might: broke through all these difficulties. Et ecce venerunt. And, behold, come they did.

And we, what excuse shall we have, if we come not? If so short and so easie a way we come not, as from our Chambers hither, not to be called a way indeed? Shall not our own venerunt have an ecce, Behold, it was but stepping over the threshold, and yet they come not?

And these were Wise men; and never a whit the less Wise, for so coming: Nay, never so truly wise.

Psal. 40. 7.

in any thing they did, as in so coming. The Holy Ghost recordeth them for wise, in capite libri, even in the beginning of the New Testament. Of Christ, when He came into the world (that is, when He was born) the Psalms saith, In the beginning of the Book it was written of Him, He said, Ecce venio. Lo, I come: Of these, in the same words, when they came to meet Him (so born) it is said here, in the beginning of the Gospel, Ecce venerunt, Behold they come.

And we, if we believe this, that this was their wisdom; if they and we be wise by one Spirit, by the same principles; we will follow the same Starre, tread the same way, and so come (at last) whither they are happily gone before us.

Nay, not onely that [come]; but this withall; to think and set down with our selves, that, to come to Christ, is one of the wisest parts, that ever these Wise men did; or we, (or any else) can do in all our lives.

Ibid. verse 6.

Heb. 10. 9.

Heb. 10. 10.

MAL. 2. 28.

And how shall we that do? I know not any more proper way left us, than to come to that, which himself by expresse order hath left us, as the most special Remembrance of Himself, to be come to. When He came into the world (saith the Psalms) that is, at His Birth (now) He said, Ecce venio, Lo, I come: When then? Sacrifice and burnt offerings thou wouldst not have, but a body hast thou ordained me: Mark (saith the Apostle) He takes away the first, to establish the second, (that is) to establish His body, and the coming to it. By the offering, breaking, and partaking, of which body; we are all sanctified, so many as shall come to it. For given it is for the taking away of our sins. Nothing more fit, than at the time, His body was ordained Him (and that is to day,) to come to the body so ordained.

Apoc. 22. 17.

John 6. 35.

And in the Old Ritual of the Church we find, that the cover of the Canister (wherein was the Sacrament of His body,) there was a star ingraven; to shew us that (now) the star leads us thither; to His body, there.

And what shall I say now, but (according as Saint John saith) and the star, and the Wise men say, Come. And He, whose star is, and to whom the Wise men came, saith, Come. And let them that are disposed, Come. And let, whosoever will take of the Bread of Life, which came down from Heaven, this day, into Bethlehem the house of Bread. Of which Bread, the Church is this (day) the House; and the true Bethlehem, and all the Bethlehem we have now left to come to, for the Bread of Life; of that life, which we hope for in heaven. And this, our nearest coming that (here) we can come, till we shall (by another Venite) come unto Him in His heavenly Kingdom. To which, He grant we may come, that (this day) came to us in earth, that we thereby might come to Him, and remain with Him, Jesus Christ the Righteous.

MATT. Chap. II. Verf. I, II.

Behold there came Wise Men, from the East to Hierusalem;

Saying, Where is the King of the Iewes that is born? For we have seen His Star in the East, and are come to worship Him.

Here be, in these two Verses, two principal points, (as was observed, when time was,) ¹ The Persons that arrived at Hierusalem: ² And their Errand. The Persons in the former Verse: whereof have been treated heretofore. Their Errand in the later: wherewith we are now to deal.

Their Errand we may best learn from themselves, out of their Discourses, &c. Which (in a word is, To worship Him.) Their Errand, our Errand, and the Errand of this Day.

This Text may seem to come a little too soon, before the time; and should have waited till the day, it was spoken on, rather than on this day. But, if you mark them well, there are (in the Verse) four Words, that be Verba Dei bijuni, proper and peculiar to this very day. ¹ For first, Natus est is most proper to this day of all days, the day of His Nativity. ² Secondly, Vidimus stellam: For, this day, it was first seen; appeared first. ³ Thirdly, Venimus: For, this day, they set forth, began their journey. ⁴ And last, Adorare Eum: For when He brought His only begotten Son into the World, World, He gave in charge, Let all the Angels of God worship Him. And when the Angels to do it, no time more proper for us to do it, as then. So these four appropriate it to this day, and none but this.

The main heads of their Errand are, Vidimus stellam, the Occasion : Venerunt adorare, the end of their coming. But for the better conceiving it, I will take another course, to set forth these points to be handled.

Their Faith first : Faith in that they never ask, Whether He be ; but, Where He is born : For, that born He is, that they stedfastly believe.

Then the work, or service of this Faith, (as S. Paul calleth it;) the touch, or trial donique (as Saint Peter;) the Ostende mihi, as (S. James) of this their faith in these five : Their confessing of it, in venerunt dicentes. Venerunt, they were no sooner come, but dicentes, they tell it out : Confess Him, and His birth to be the cause of their coming. Secondly, as confess their Faith, So, the Ground of their Faith ; Vidimus enim, For, they had seen his star : And, His star being risen, by it they knew, He must be risen too. Thirdly, (as S. Paul calls them, in Abraham's Vestigia fidei, the steps of their Faith, in venerunt, their coming ; coming, such a journey, at such a time, with such speed. Fourthly, When they were come, their Diligent enquiring him out by Ubi est ? (For, here is the place of it :) asking after Him, to find where He was. And lastly, when they had found Him, the end of their seeing, coming, seeking ; and all for no other end, but to worship Him. Here they say it : at the 11. Verse they do it, in these two acts, Procidentes, their falling down : And, Obtulimus, their offering to Him, worship Him with their bodies ; worship Him with their goods : Their worship, and ours ; the true worship of Christ.

The Text is of a star : And we may make all run on a star : that so, the Text and Day may be suitable, and heaven and earth hold a correspondence. S. Peter calls faith, the Day star rising in our hearts ; Which sorts well with the star in the Text, rising in the skie. That, in the skie manifesting it self from above, to them : This, in their hearts, manifesting it self from below, to Him, to Christ. Manifesting it self, by these five : By Ore fit confessio, the confessing it : By Fides est substantia, the ground of it : By Vestigia fidei, the steps of it, in their painful coming : By their Ubi est ? Careful enquiring : And lastly, by Adorare eum, their devout Worshipping. These five, as so many beams of faith, the day-star risen in their hearts. To take notice of them. For, every one of them is of the nature of a Condition : so, as if we fail in them, non lucet nobis stella hac, we have no part in the light, or conduct of this star. Neither, in stellam, the star it self : Nor, in Ejus, in Him, whose the star is ; that is not in Christ neither.

We have now got us a star on earth, for that in heaven : And these (both) lead us to a third. So as, upon the matter, three stars we have ; and each his proper manifestation. 1. The first, in the firmament : That appeared unto them, and in them, to us : (A figure of S. Paul's homo christi, the Grace of God appearing, and bringing salvation to all men ; Jews, and Gentiles and all. 2. The second, here on earth, is S. Peter's Lucifer in cordibus : And this appeared in them, and so must, in us. Appeared, In their Eyes, Vidimus : In their Feet, Venerunt : In their Lips, Dicentes : ubi est : In their Knees, Procidentes, falling down : In their Hands, Obtulimus, by offering. These five, every one a beam of this star. 3. The third in Christ Himself (S. Johns star) The generation and root of David, the bright morning star Christ. And He, His double appearing. One, at this time, now, when He appeared in great humility ; and we see, and come to Him by faith. The other which we wait for ; even, the blessed hope, and appearing of the great God, and our Saviour, in the Majesty of His Glory.

These three : The first, that manifested Christ to them ; The second, that manifested them to Christ : The third, Christ Himself, in whom, both these were (as it were) in conjunction. Christ the bright morning star of that Day, which shall have no night ; the Beatifica visio, the blessed sight of which Day, is the consummation of our Hope, and Happiness for ever.

Of these three stars, the first is gone ; the third yet to come ; the second only is present. We to look to that ; and to the five beams of it. That is it, must do us all the good, and bring us to the third.

Saint Luke calleth Faith, the Door of faith : At this door let us enter. Here is a coming : And, He that cometh to God (and so, he that, to Christ) must believe that Christ is : so do these. They never ask, An sit, but ubi sit ? Not, Whether, but, Where He is born. They that ask Ubi, qui nasci ? take natum for granted : presuppose, that born He is. Herein is faith : Faith of Christ's being born, the third Article of the Christian Creed.

And what believe they of Him ? Out of their own words here : First, that Natus, that born He is ; and so Man He is : His Humane Nature. And as His Nature, so His Office, in Natus est Rex, born a King : they believe that too. But, Judeorum may seem to be a bar : For then what have they to doe with the King of the Jews ? they be Gentiles, none of his Lieges ; No relation to Him, at all ; What do they seeking, or worshipping Him ? But, weigh, it well, and it is no bar. For, this they seem to believe : He is to Rex Judeorum, King of the Jews, as he is adorandus a Gentibus, the Gentiles to adore Him, And though born in Judaea, yet, whose birth concerned them, though Gentiles, though born far off in the mountains of the East : they, to have some benefit by Him and His birth ; and for that to do Him worship, seeing Officium fundatur in beneficio. As thus born in earth, so a star He hath in Heaven of His own : stellam stellam Ejus, His Star; He the owner of it. Now we know the stars are the stars of Heaven; and He, that Lord of them, Lord of Heaven too; and so, to be adored of them, of us, and of all. St. John puts them together: The Root and Generation of David, His Earthly; and, The bright Morning Star, His Heavenly or Divine Generation. Hac est fides Magorum, this is the Mystery of their faith. In Natus est, Man; In stellam Ejus, GOD: In Rex, a King, (though of the Jews, yet) the good of whose Kingdom should extend and stretch it self far and wide, to Gentiles and all; and He of all to be adored. This, for corde creditur, the day-star it self in their hearts. Now, to the Beames of this Star.

Rev. 22. 16.

Next to Corde creditur is Ore fit confessio, the Confession of this Faith. It is in venerunt dicentes, they came with it in their mouths. Venerunt, they were no sooner come, but they spake of it so freely, to so many, as it came to Herod's ear, and troubled him not a little, that any King of the Jews should be worshiped, beside himself. So then, their faith is no bosom-faith, kept to themselves, without ever a dicentes, without saying any thing of it to any body. No, Credidi, propter quod locutus sum; They believe, and therefore they spake. The star in their hearts cast one beam out at their mouths. And though Herod, who was but Rex factum, could evil brook to hear of Rex natus, must needs be offended at it; yet they were not afraid to say it. And, though they came from the East (those parts, to whom and their King the Jews had long time been captives and underlings,) they were not ashamed neither to tell, that, One of the Jews Race they came to seek, and to seek Him to the end to worship Him. So, neither afraid of Herod; nor ashamed of CHRIST: but professed their Errand, and cared not who knew it. This for their confessing Him boldly.

II.

The work of their Faith.
1 Their Confession, dicentes
Psal. 116. 10.

But, Faith is said (by the * Apostle) to be substantia, and so there is a good Ground, and ἰσχυρὸς and so, hath a good Reason for it. This, puts the difference between Fidelis and Credulus, or, (as Salomon terms him) fatuus, qui credit omni verbo: between Faith and lightness of belief: Faith hath (ever) a Ground: Vidimus enim, an Enim a Reason for it; and is ready to render it. How came you to believe? Andivimus enim; For, we have heard an Angel (say the Shepherds) Vidimus enim, for we have seen a star, (say the Magi:) And this is a well-grounded faith. We came not of our own heads; We came not before we saw some reason for it; saw that which set us on coming; Vidimus stellam Ejus.

Their Ground.
Vidimus enim:
2 Heb. 11. 2.
Prov. 14. 15.

Luke 2. 10.

Stellam Ejus

Vidimus stellam: We can well conceive that: Any, that will but look up, may see a star, But, how could they see the [Ejus] of it, that it was His? Either, that it belonged to any; Or that, He it was, it belonged to. This passeth all Perspective: No Astronomy could shew them this. What by course of Nature the stars can produce, that they, by course of Art or Observation, may discover. But, this Birth was above Nature. No Trigon, Triplicity, Exaltation could bring it forth. They are but idle, that set figures for it. The star should not have been His, but He, the stars, if it had gone that way. Some other light then, they saw this [Ejus] by.

Now (with us in Divinity) there be but two in all: Vespertina, and Matutina lux. Vespertina, the Owl-light of our Reason or skill, is too dimme to see it by. No remedy then, but it must be (as Esay calls it) Matutina lux: The Morning light, the Light of Gods Law must certify them of the Ejus of it. There, or not at all, to be had, whom this star did portend.

And in the Law, there we find it (in the XXIV. of Numbers.) One of their own Prophets, that came (from whence they came) from the Mountains of the East was ravished in spirit, fell into a trance; had his eyes opened, and saw the Ejus of it many an hundred yeares, before it rose. Saw Orisetur in Jacob, that there it should rise; Which is as much as Natus est, here: Saw stella that there should be the bright Morning-Starre; and so might well have a star to represent Him. Saw Sceptrum in Israel (which is just as much as Rex Judaeorum;) that it should portend a King there: Such a King, as should not onely smite the corners of Moab (that is) Balaam their enemy, for the present; but should reduce and bring under Him all the sons of Seth (that is) all the World: For, all are now Seth's sons, Cain's were all drowned in the Flood. Here now is the Ejus of it clear. A Prophetsey might discern this: Never a Chaldean of them all could take it with his Astrolabe. Balaams eyes were opened to see it; and he helped to open their eyes, by leaving behind him this Prophecy, to direct them: how to apply it (when it should arise) to the right Ejus of it.

Num. 24. 17.

Ibid.

Ibid.

But these had not the Law: It is hard to say that the Chaldee Paraphrase was extant long before this. They might have had it. Say, they had it not: If Moses were so careful to record this Prophecy in his Book, it may well be thought, that some memory of this so memorable a Prediction was left remaining among them of the East, his own Country where he was born and brought up. And some help they might have from Daniel too, who lived all his time in Chaldaea and Persia, and prophesied among them of such a King, and set a just time of it. And this, (as it is conceived) put the difference between the East and West. For I ask, What is Vidimus in oriente with them; Was it not vidimus in occidente? In the West, such a star, it or the fellow of it was seen, nigh about that time, or the Roman Stories deceive us. Toward the end of Augustus Reign, such a star was seen, and much scanning there was about it. Pliny saith, it was generally holden, that star to be a Faustum sidus, a Lucky Comet; and portended good to the World, which few or no Comets do. And Virgil (who lived then) would needs take upon him to set down the Ejus of it, --- Ecce Dionai, &c. Entituled Caesar to it. And verily, there is no man, that can (without admiration) read his sixth Eclogue, of a Birth, that time expected, that should be the Off-spring of the Gods, and that should take away their sinnes. Where-upon it hath gone for current, the East and West, Vidimus, both.

O

But,

But, by the light of their Prophecy, the East, they went straight to the right Ejus. And, for want of this Light, the West wandered and gave it a wrong Ejus: As Virgil, applying it to little Salonine; and (as evil hap was) while he was making his Verles, the poor Child died; and so, his star shor, vanished, and came to nothing. Their vidimus never came to a venimus: they neither went, nor worshiped him, as these (here) did.

2 Pet. 1. 17.

Verse 19.

But, by this we see, when all is done, hither we must come, for our Morning-light; to this book, to the Word of Prophecy. All our vidimus stellam is as good as nothing without it. That Star is past and gone, long since: Heaven and earth shall passe, but this word shall not passe. Here, on this, we to fix our eye, and to ground our faith. Having this, though we never hear Angel, nor see star, we may (by the Grace of GOD) do full well. For, even they, that have had both thote, have been fain to resolve into this, as their last, best, and chietest point of all. Witness St. Peter: He, saith he, (and they with him) saw Christs Glory, and heard the voice from Heaven, in the holy Mount: What then? After both these, Audivimus and vidimus (both senses) he comes to this, Habemus autem firmiorem, &c. We have a more sure word of Prophecy than both these. Firmiorem, a more sure, a more clear, than them both. And Si hic legimus (for, legimus is vidimus), If here we read it written, it is enough to ground our faith, and let the star go.

And yet (to end this point;) Both these, the star, and the Prophecy, they are but circumsusa Lux: Without, both. Besides these, there must be a light within, in the eye: Else (we know) for all them, nothing will be seen. And, that must come from Him, and the enlightening of His Spirit. Take this for a Rule: No knowing of Ejus, absque Eo; of His, without Him, whole it is. Neither, of the Prophecy, without Him, that inspired it. But, this third comming too; He sending the light of His Spirit, within, into their minds; they then saw clearly, This, the star; now the Time; He the Child, that this day was born.

He, that sent these two without, sent also this third within: and then, it was Vidimus indeed. The light of the star, in their eyes, the word of prophecy in their ears, the Beam of His Spirit in their hearts; these three made up a full vidimus. And, so much for vidimus stellam Ejus, the Occasion of their comming.

Venimus.

Jam. 2. 18.

Rom. 4. 12.

Acs 1. 7.

Cant. 1. 4.

Now, for venimus, their comming it self. And it follows well. For, it is not a star only, but a Load-star: And whither should stella Ejus ducere, but ad Eum? whither lead us, but to Him, whose the star is? to the Stars Master.

All this while we have been at ducentes, saying and seeing: Now we shall come to Facientes, see them do somewhat upon it. It is not saying nor seeing will serve St. James: He will call, and be still calling for Ostende mihi, shew me thy Faith by some VVork. And, well may he be allowed to call for it, this Day: It is the day of Vidimus, Appearing, Being seen. You have seen His star: Let Him now see your star, another while. And, so they do. Make your faith to be seen: So it is: Their Faith, in the steps of their Faith. And, so was Abraham's, first, by comming forth of his countrey; As, these here do, and so walk in the steps of the faith of Abraham; do his first work.

It is not commanded, to stand gazing into heaven too long, Not an CHRIST Himself ascending: much lesse on His star. For, they sate not still gazing on the star. Their Vidimus begat Venimus; their seeing made them come; come a great journey. Venimus is soon said; but a short word: But, many a wide and weary step they made before they could come to say Venimus. Lo, here we are come; Come, and at our journeyes end. To look a little on it. In this their Comming, we consider, 1. First, the distance of the Place they came from. It was not hard by, as the shepherds (but a step to Bethlehem over the fields:) This was riding many hundred miles, and cost them many a dayes journey. 2. Secondly, we consider the way, that they came: if it be pleasant, or plain and easie: For, if it be, it is so much the better. This was nothing pleasant; for, through desarts; all the way white and desolate. Nor (secondly) easie neither, For, over the rocks and crags of both Arabias (specially Petraa) their journey lay. 3. Yet if safe: But it was not; but exceeding dangerous, as lying through the middett of the Black Tents of Kedar, a Nation of Thieves and cut-throats; to passe over the hills of Rahbers; Infamous then, and infamous to this day. No passing without great troops or convoy. 4. Last we consider the time of their comming, the season of the year. It was no summer progress. A cold comming they had of it, at this time of the year; just the worst time of the year, to take a journey; and specially a long journey, in. The wayes deep, the weather sharp, the dayes short, the sun faithst off in solstitio brumali, the very dead of Winter. Venimus. We are come, if that be one; Venimus, We are (now) come, come at this time, that (sure) is another.

And these difficulties they overcame, of a weary-some, irk-some, trouble-some, dangerous, unreasonable journey: And for all this, they came. And, came it cheerfully, and quickly; As appeareth by the speed they made. It was but vidimus, venimus with them; They saw, and they came: No sooner saw, but they set out presently. So, as upon the first appearing of the Star (as it might be, last night) they knew it was Balaams star; it called them away, they made ready straight to begin their journey this morning. A sure signe they were highly conceited of His believed some great matter of it, that they took all these paines, made all this haste, that they might be there to worship Him, with all the possible speed they could. Sorry for nothing so much, but that they could not be there soon enough, with the very first to do it even this day, the day of His birth. All considered, there is more in venimus than shews at the first sight. It was not for nothing, it was said (in the first verse) Ecce venerunt; their comming hath an Ecce on it: it vvell deserves it.

And

And we, what should we have done? Sure, these men of the East, shall rise in judgment against the men of the West, that is, us: and their faith, against ours, in this point. With them it was but vidimus, venimus: With us, it would have been but venimus at most. Our fashion is, to see and see again, before we stirre a foot: Specially, if it be to the worship of CHRIST. Come such a Journey, at such a time? No: but fairly have put it off till the Spring of the year, till the dayes forger, and the wayes fairer, and the weather warmer: till better travelling to CHRIST. Our Epiphany would sure have fallen in Easter-week at the soonest.

Mat. 8. 11.

But then, for the distance, desolatenesse, tediousnesse, and the rest, any of them were enough to mar our venimus quite. It must be no great way (first) we must come: we love not that. VVell fare the Shepherds yet, they came but hard by: Rather like them than the Magi. Nay, not like them neither. For, with us, the nearer (lightly) the furtherest off: Our Proverb is (you know) The nearer the Church the further from God.

Nor, it must not be through a Desart, over no Petrea. If rugged or uneven the way; if the weather ill disposed; If any never so little danger, it is enough to stay us. To Christ we cannot travel, but weather and way and all must be fair. If not, no journey but sit still and see further. As indeed, all our Religion is rather vidimus, a Contemplation, than Venimus, a Motion, or stirring to be ought.

But when we do it, we must be allowed leasure. Ever, veniamus; never venimus: Ever comming; never come. VVe love to make no very great haste. To other things perhaps: Not to Adorare, the Place of the worship of GOD. VVhy should we, Christ, is no VVild-Cat. VVhat talk you of twelve dayes? And if it be forty dayes hence, ye shall be sure to find His mother and Him; She cannot be Churched till then: VVhat needs such haste? The truth is, we conceit Him and His Birth but slenderly, and our haste is even thereafter. But, if we be at that point, we must be out of this Venimus: they like enough to leave us behind. Best, get us a new Christ-masse in September: we are not like to come to Christ at this Feast. Enough, for venimus.

But, what is Venimus without Invenimus? and when they come, they hit not on Him, at first: No more must we think, as soon as ever we be come, to find Him straight. They are faine to come to their Ubi est? VVe must now look back to that. For, though it stand before in the Versé, here is the right place of it. They saw before they came; and came, before they asked: Asked, before they found; and found, before they worshiped. Between venimus (their comming) and Adorare (their worshipping) there, is the true place of [Dicentes, ubi est?]

Their Enquiry,
Ubi est?

VVhere (first) we note a double use of their Dicentes, these Wise men had: 'As to manifest what they knew, Natus est, that He is born; so, to confesse and aske what they knew not, the Place, where. VVe, to have the like.

* Secondly, set down this: That, to find where He is, we must learn of these, to aske where He is: VVhich we full little set our selves to do. If we stumble on Him, so it is, But for any asking we trouble not our selves: but sit still (as we say) and let Nature work; And so let Grace too; and so, for us, it shall. I wor well, it is said (in a place of Essay) He was found a non querentibus, of some that sought Him not, never asked Ubi est? But it is no good holding by that place. It was their good hap that so did. But, trust not to it: it is not every bodies case, that. It is better advice, you shall read in the Psalm, Hac est generatio querentium: There is a Generation of them that seek Him. Of vvhich, these vv ere: And, of that Generation let us be. Regularly, there is no promise of Invenietis, but to querere; of finding, but to such as seek. It is not safe, to presume, to find Him othervvise.

I thought there had been small use (now) of [Ubi est?] Yet there is: Except we hold the ubiquity, That CHRIST is ubi non? any vvhere. But, He is not so. CHRIST hath His ubi, His proper Place, vvhere He is to be found: And if you misse of that, you misse of Him. And vvell may we misse (saith CHRIST Himself) there are so many vvill take upon them, to tell us where: and tell us of so many ubi: Ecce hic, Look you here He is, Ecce illic; Nay then, thvz. In deserto, in the desart: Nay, In penetrabilibus, in such a privy Conventicle, you shall be sure of Him. And yet, He (saith He Himself) in none of them all. There is then (yet) place for [Ubi est?] I speak not of His Natural body, but of His Mystical: That, is CHRIST too.

Mat. 24. 23?

How shall we then do? VVhere shall we get this [where] resolved? VVhere these did, They said it to many and oft, but gat no answer, till they had got together a Convocation of Scribes; and they resolved them of CHRIST'S ubi. For, they (in the East) were nothing so wise or well seen, as we (in the West) are now grown. VVe need call no Scribes together, and get them tell us, where: Every Artisan hath a whole Synod of Scribes in his brain, and can tell where CHRIST is; better than any learned man of them all. Yet, these were Wise men: Best, learn, where they did.

And how did the Scribes resolve it them? Out of Mica. As before, to the star they joyn Balaam's Prophecy: So now again, to His Orietur (that such an one should be born) they had put Mica's [in Bethlehem] the Place of His Birth. Still helping, and giving light (as it were) to the light of Heaven, by a more cleer light, the light of the Sanctuary.

Thus then, to do. And, to do it our selves: and not seek CHRIST, per alium; Set others about it (as Herod did these) and sit still our selves. For so, we may hap never find Him, no more than He did.

And now we have found where, what then? It is neither in seeking or finding, Venimus nor Invenimus:

Their End,
Adorate Eum.

Ver. 16.

nimus, the End of all, the Cause of all is, in the last words Adorate Eum, to Worship Him. That, is all in all: And without it, all our seeing, comming, seeking, and finding is to no purpose. The Scribes they could tell, and did tell, where He was; but, were never the nearer for it: For, they worshiped Him not. For this End to seek Him.

This is acknowledged: Herod (in effect) said as much. He would know, where He were (fain) and, if they will bring him word where, he will come too and worship Him, that he will. None of that worship. If we find Him, his Worshipping will prove Worrying, as did appear by a sort of filly poor Lambs, that he worried when he could not have his will on CHRIST, Thus he, at his Birth.

Luke 13. 31.

And at His death, the other Herod he sought him too: but it was, that he and his Souldiers might make themselves sport with Him. Such seeking there is other while. And such worshipping as they, in the Judgment Hall, worshiped Him with Ave Rex, and then gave Him a bob blind-fold. The Worlds worship of Him, for the most part.

But we may be bold to say, Herod was a fox. These mean as they say: to worship Him they come, and worship Him they will. Will they so? be they well advised, what they promise, before they know, whether they shall find Him in a worshipful taking, or no? For, full little know they, Where, and in what case, they shall find Him. What if in a stable, laid there in a manger, and the rest suitable to it; in as poor and pitiful a plight as ever was any: More like to be abhorred than adored of such Persons? Will they be as good as their word (trow?) Will they not step back at the sight, repent themselves of their journey, and wish themselves at home again? But, to find Him, and so finding Him, worship Him for all that? If they will, verily then, great is their faith. This, is the clearest beam of all.

Mat. 12. 41.

The Queen of the South, (who was a figure of these Kings of the East) she came as great a journey, as these. But when she came, she found a King indeed, King Salomon in all his Royalty. Saw a glorious King, and a glorious Court about him. Saw him, and heard him: Tryed him, with many hard questions, received satisfaction of them all. This, was worth her comming. VVeigh, what she found, and what these here: As poor and unlikely a birth, as could be, ever to prove a King, or any great matter. No fight, to comfort them; Nor a word, for which they any whit the wiser: Nothing worth their travel. VVeigh these together, and great ods will be found between her faith, and theirs. Theirs, the greater far.

VVell, they will take Him, as they find Him: And, all this notwithstanding, worship Him for all that. The star will make amends for the Manger: And, for stella Ejus, they will dispense with Eum.

And, what is it to worship? Some greater matter (sure,) it is, that heaven and earth, the stars and the Prophets (thus) do but serve to lead them, and conduct us to. For, all we (see) ends in Adorate: Scriptura & Mundus ad hoc sunt, ut colatur qui creavit & adoretur qui inspiravit; The Scripture and World are but to this end, that He, that created the one, and inspired the other, might be but worshiped. Such reckoning did these seem to make of it, here. And such, the Great Treasurer of the Queen Candace. These came from the Mountains of the East; He, from the uttermost part of Aethiopia came, and came for no other but only this, To worship: and, when they had done, then home again. Tanti est adorare. VVorth the while, worth our comming, if (comming) we do but that; but worship, and nothing else. And so I would have men accompt of it.

Acts 8. 27.

To tell you what it is in particular. I must put you over to the 11. Verse, where it is set down, what they did, when they worshiped. It is set down in two acts Προσκύνησιν, and Προσέφωρον; Falling down and Offering. Thus did they; thus we to do: We to do the like, when we will worship. These two are all: and more than these, we find not.

We can worship GOD but three wayes: we have but three things, to worship him withal: 'The Soul He hath inspired; 'The Body, He hath ordained us; 'And, the Worldly goods, He hath vouchsafed to blesse us withal. VVe, to worship Him, with all, seeing there is but one reason for all.

If He breathed into us our Soul, but framed not our body (but some other did that) Neither bow your knee, nor uncover your head, but keep on your hats, and sit even as you do hardly. But, if he have framed that body of yours, and every member of it, let him have the honour both of head, and knee, and every member else.

Rom. 12. 1.

Again, if it be not He, that gave us our worldly goods, but some body else; what He gave not, that with-hold from Him, and spare not. But, if all came from Him, all to return to Him: If He send all, to be worshiped with all. And this (in good sooth) is but Rationabile obsequium (as the Apostle calls it.) No more, than Reason would, we should worship Him withal.

Else, if all our worship be inward onely; with our hearts, and not our batts, (as some fondly imagine) we give Him but one of three. VVe put Him to His Thirde; Bid Him, be content with that, He gets no more but inward worship. That is out of the Text, quite, For, though (I doubt not, but) these here performed that also; yet, here it is not: St. Matthew mentions it not: It is not to be seen: No Vidimus on it. And the Text is a Vidimus; and, of a Starre; that is, of an Outward visible worship, to be seen of all. There is a Vidimus upon the worship of the Body, it may be seen: Prociuentes. Let us see you fall down. So is there, upon the worship with our worldly goods, that may be seen and felt: Offerentes. Let us see, whether, and what you offer, with both which (no lesse, than with the soul) GOD is to be worshiped. Glorifie GOD with your bodies, for they are GODS (saith the Apostle.)
Ho-

Honour GOD with your substance; for he hath blessed your store (saith SOLOMON) It is the precept of a wise King; of one, there: It is the practise of more than one, of these three, here. Specially, now: For, CHRIST hath now a body; for which, to do Him worship with our bodies. And, now, He was made poor, to make us rich: and so, offerentes will do well, comes very fit. 1 Cor. 6. 20. Prov. 3. 9.

To enter further into these two, would be too long; (and indeed, they be not in our Verse here:) And so, for some other treatise, at some other time.

There now remains nothing, but to include our selves, and bear our part with them, and with the Angels, and all who this day adored Him.

This was the Load-star of the Magi: and what were they? Gentiles: So are we. But, it must be ours, then we are to go with them: Vade, & fac similiter, Go, and do likewise. It is Stella gentium; but idem agentium: The Gentiles star; but such Gentiles, as overtake these and keep company with them. In their [Dicentes], confessing their faith freely: In their [Vidimus] Grounding is thoroughly: It their [Venimus] Hastening to come to Him speedily; In their [Ubi est] Enquiring Him out diligently: And in their [Adorare eum] Worshipping him devoutly. Per omnia, doing as these did: Worshipping, and thus worshipping; Celebrating, and thus celebrating the Feast of His BIRTH. The Application. Luke 10. 37.

We cannot say, Vidimus stellam: The star is gone long since; Not (now) to be seen. Yet (I hope for all that, that, Venimus adorare, we be come thither to worship. It will be the more acceptable, if not seeing it, we worship (though). It is enough, we read of it in the Text; we see it, there. And indeed (as I said;) it skills not for the star in the firmament, if the same day-star be risen in our hearts, that was in theirs; and the same beams of it to be seen, all five. For then, we have our part in it, no lesse; nay, full as much as they: And, it will bring us whither it brought them, to CHRIST. Who, at His second appearing in glory, shall call forth these wise men, and all that have ensued the steps of their Faith; and that upon the reason specified in the Text: For, I have seen their star shining and shewing forth it self by the like beams: And as they came to worship me, so am I come to do them worship. A Venite then; for a Venimus, now. Their star I have seen, and give them a place above among the stars. They fell down: I will lift them up, and exalt them. And, as they offered to me; so am I come to bestow on them and to reward them, with endless joy, and bliss, and of my Heavenly Kingdom. To which, &c.

A SERMON PREACHED

Before the

Kings Maiesty

At WHITE-HAL. on Thursday the xxv. of Decemb.
Anno Domini, MDCXXIII, being
CHRISTMASSE Day.

EPHES. Chap. I. Verse X.

In dispensatione plenitudinis temporum, instaurare omnia, in CHRISTO, quæ in coelis, & quæ in terra sunt, in Ipso.

That in the dispensation of the fulness of the times, He might gather together into one all things, both which are in Heaven, and which are in Earth, even in CHRIST.

John 7. 6.

Eing the Text is of Seasons, it would not be out of season it self. And though it be never out of season to speak of CHRIST, yet even CHRIST hath His seasons. Your time is alwayes (saith He, John VII.) So is not mine; I have my seasons. One of which seasons is this; the season of his Birth, whereby all were recapitulate in Heaven and Earth: which is the season of the Text. And so, this, a Text of the Season.

There is (for the most part) in each Text some one Predominant word. That word (in this) is the word ἀνακαταλίσσας, here turned gathering together into one again. To know the nature and full force of it, we may consider it three wayes, 'As it is properly taken

'As it is extended: 'As it is derived.

1. As it is taken properly. So, it signifies to make the foot of an account. We call it the foot, because we write it below at the foot: They of old writ theirs above over the head, and so called it ἀνακαταλίσσας: In Capite libri Scriptum est de me: the summe in the top.

2. As it is extended. So, it is the short recapitulation of a long Chapter; the compendium of a Psal. 40. 8. book, or of some discourse. These are all like the foot of an Account, and are usually called, the Summe of all that hath been said.

3. As it is derived: So shall we have the native sense of it. It comes of καρπύω, and that of κεφαλή (Greek for a head.) Best expressed in the word recapitulate; that is, to reduce all to a head. Each of these is gathering together into one (as, we read.) Which of the three, you take; nay, take them all three, you cannot do amiss. They be all true: all tend to edifie. CHRIST is the Summe of our account; The shutting up of our discourse; The Head of the body Mystical, whereto this gathering (here) is. We shall make no good andis without Him: no nor good Apology. VVhatsoever be the premisses, with CHRIST we must conclude; As we do the year with Christ-mass, so conclude with in CHRISTO. Col. 1. 18. Eph. 4. 15, 16.

Seasons, and Things for seasons; and seasons for things. on.

Two parts here be: Seasons, first; Seasons, more then one. Here is a fulness of them: Here is a dispensation of that fulness: And that by GOD, That He (that is, GOD) That in the dispensation of the fulness of times, He might. This is the first part. I

The Things. For first, here are all things: Things in heaven, Things on earth; All, in both. II
2. Of these, a collection or gathering them all together: or rather a Recollection or gathering them together again. 3. A gathering them all into one: All into one κεφαλή; one Summ; Or all to one κεφαλή one head: and these two are one; and that one is CHRIST.

You observe, that as the things answer the seasons, and the seasons them; So doth the fulness answer the gathering, and the gathering, it. To fill the seasons, to make a fulness of them, here is a gathering. 2. A gathering, whereof? Of all in heaven, and all on earth (a great gathering sure, and able to fill the seasons up to the brim.) 3. But, this is not a gathering at the first hand, but a gathering again; that is a-new, at second hand. 4. A gathering, whereto? to one: One, either one summe, or one head (both are in the body of the word:) and these two are one, and that one is CHRIST. 5. A gathering how? (that is in the word too:) By way of contracting or recapitulation. 6. And when? When GOD dispensed it; and that is at CHRIST'S Birth. 7. Now last, what are we the better by this gathering, what fruit we gather by or from it, what our share is in this Summe, which is Summa dividenda. 8. And then how we may be the better for it: if we divide, as GOD; and when GOD did it: 9. As GOD, gather things in Heaven, first: 10. When GOD; and that is, this season of the year, the gathering time, with GOD, and with us, So shall we disperse the season well.

Find the things, they will bring you to the season: find the fulness of things, you shall find the fulness of seasons. Find the gathering, you shall find the fulness: find CHRIST, and you shall find the gathering (for the gathering is full and whole, in CHRIST.) So, upon the point find CHRIST, and find all. And this is the first day, we can find Him; for this day, was He born, and so first to be found by us.

WE have heretofore dealt with the fulness of time: and now are we to deal with the fulness of season. Time and Season are two, and have in all tongues two different words to shew they differ. In Hebrew יוֹם and עֵת, in Greek, χρόνος and καιρός; in Latine, Tempus, and tempus.

And, differ they do as much, as a time, and a good time. It is time alway, all the year long: So is it not season, but when the good time is. Time taken a large, any time: Season, not so; but is applyed to that with which it suits, or for which it serves best. Here, it is applyed to gathering: the season of gathering.

These seasons be καιρός in the plural: for, Ut res, ita tempora rerum; as the things to be gathered are many, so are the Seasons, wherein they are to be gathered, many likewise. Each, his several season, to be gathered in.

Now, as the things (Res) have their Autumn of maturity: So (tempora) the Seasons have their fulness: And, when the things are ripe, and ready to be gathered, then is the season full. 2 Their fulness.

Now, of these seasons and their fulness, there is a dispensation, an Oeconomia (the word in the Text) which is a word of Husbandry; a great part whereof consisteth in the skill of seasons; of taking them when they come, allotting the thing to the season, and the season to it. 3 The dispensation.

Which dispensation is here ascribed to GOD: That He (that is) that GOD in whose hands our times are (saith the Psalm) and our seasons, both. He that can make them, full, by giving us kindly seasons; or empty, by making them unseasonable: and having made them full, is to dispose of them, very right. There is none of these but is sensible in the course of the year, in things upon earth. 4 The Dispenser, GOD.

But are there seasons for the things on earth and their fulness, and are there not also seasons for the things in heaven, and for the filling of them? All, for relieve of the body wants here below; none or the supply of spiritual necessities above? All, for the body, and never a season for the soul? If we allow them to the World, shall we not to the Church, the divine, or abridgement of the world? If it be sensible in the natural things; (though not so easily discerned, yet) it is as certain in the main revolution of Annus Magnus, the great periodical year of the VVorlds endurance.

Ecclef. 3. 1. It can never enter into any man, to think, that the great Oeconomus or Steward of this great household (the VVorld) should so far forget Himself, but if for all matters He had appointed a season, then for the greatest matter: if for every purpose under heaven; then, for the highest purpose of all, that (as we see) concerneth all the things in heaven, and earth, both. Above Salus populi (this) Salus mundi, the saving the whole world. Shall not these have their seasons, and the seasons their fulness there, and that fulness the due dispensation (of all other) most worthy of G O D, the greatest work, of the greatest person? Set this down then (to begin with :) There are seasons; as in our common year (of twelve months :) So, in the great year, whereof, every day is a year (by Danels) nay, a thousand years, (by St. Peters calculation.)

2 Pet. 3. 8.

Prov. 3. 10.

And which be the seasons, and when, in the common year? Our Saviour, sets them down (Mar. 4.) 1. The season, when the earth bringeth forth the blade. 2. VVhen, the stalk. 3. VVhen, the ear. 4. VVhen, the full corn in the ear. And when the ear is full, and full ripe, the season is full: then, is the season of fulness, the fulness of season. Then, the reaper fills his hand, and he that bindeth up the sheaves, his bosome: Then, are the Barns filled with plenty; and the Presses run over with new wine. And when all is full, then, to gathering we go.

Such like seasons do we find in Anno Magno: ' The time of Nature, all in the blade: ' Of Moses, in the Stalk. ' of the Prophets in the ear: ' And, when the full corn? VVhen, but at this great gathering here mentioned. VVhen all in heaven, and all in earth gathered, (I think) was the fulness of things (plenitudo rerum :) and the fulness of Seasons (plenitudo temporum) may be allowed for it.

II.

1. Res: the things.

Colof. 3. 1, 2:

This sets us over to the second part, from the Seasons to the things; from the fulness of seasons, to the gathering of things. And first, whereof, of what things? of res uariae, even all. All: And (to shew the extent of it) subdivided, into all in heaven, all in earth: and that (I trow) is All. It was not amiss, he would thus sever them, and express things in heaven by name: Else, we should little have thought of gathering things there so high. No farther then earth, we: There is all our gathering; and there onely. The Apostle points up to heaven (sursum corda) to lift up our hearts, to let our affections on things there, above; to gather them. There is a gathering of them, also.

Of which gathering into one, I know not what the things in heaven have; the things in earth (I am sure) have good cause to be glad. In heaven is all good, and nothing but good. In earth, to say the least, there is much evil. Yet upon the reckoning, Heaven is like to come by the loss: we (on earth) are sensible gainers by it. It is a good hearing for us, that both these shall be thus gathered together. For, if heaven and earth be so gathered, it is, that heaven may advance earth higher; and no meaning, that earth should draw it down hither. Magis dignum semper ad se trahit minus dignum, is the old rule.

2. The gathering.

But well; between them both here is a great gathering toward; well expressed by the Apostle, in the terms of a Summe. For, it is Summa summarum, a summe indeed; Heaven and earth, and the fulness of them both.

All these to be gathered, and well. Gathering, G O D favours: for it ends in Unity, To gather into one: and Unity G O D loves, Himself being principalis Unitas. G O D favours it sure; Himself is the gatherer, scattering G O D favours not; that tends to division, and division upon division. Gathering it good for us: Unity preserves; division destroyes. Divisum est (be it house, or be it kingdom) ever ends in desolabitur: G O D delights not in destruction, would have none to perish. The kite, he scatters: The hen, how fain would she gather.

Mat. 12. 25.
Ezek. 33. 12.
2 Pet. 3. 9.

3. Gathering again.

But stay a while, and take with us what kind of gathering? it is not καταλυσιν, a gathering, but ανακαταλυσιν, a gathering together again: (We must not lose And, there is force in it.) It is not a Collection, but a Recollection. Re imports, it is a new Collection again; the second time. You see it in re-call, re-turn, re-duce; that is, to call, turn, bring back again.

Now our rule is, And, ever presupposeth and; ανακαταλυσιν presupposeth καταλυσιν: that is, a returning to, implies a departing from: a gathering together again, a scattering in sunder before: a dispensation, a dissipation. So, a dissipation, a departure, a scattering there had been.

Yet one degree more, and (that is, from) ever implies and, that is, a former being with. One cannot be said to be gone from, that was never with, or to fall out, that was never in: One cannot be said to be so again, that was never so before. So then, together we were first, and in sunder we fell after. VVhich falling in sunder, required an and, to bring us together again; to restore us to that the second time, that we had before lost, to our former estate. It is S. Peter's word [restoring] the same with S. Paul's [gathering together again] here.

Acts 3. 21.

Now these three set forth unto us our threefold estate: ' Together and our first original, which we had in Adam, while he stood with G O D together. ' In sunder (and) there came our misery, by Adams not keeping his first estate, but scattering from G O D. ' But then comes about, and makes all well again, by bringing us where we were at the first. There was a former Capitulation; The Articles were broken: then came this Recapitulation (here) anew: An account was cast, but it was mis-cast; and so it is here cast new over again.

But when all is done, And is it, we must hold by. The first is gone: All perished, by being scattered scattered from. All must be recovered, by being gathered to again: Our separation, Our ruins; Our Reparation, our Ἀνά, our gathering again: And not ours alone, but Salus mundi, of all in heaven, all in earth.

But this we may see (by the way, ' what case, all were in: ' what case, all are in still, that lie loose and ungathered, and whom Ἀνά hath not recollected again.

VVe see, what and how gathered: Now (quo?) the next point is, whereto? Into one. Every thing, that is gathered, is so. But, there is more ones, than one, one heap, as of stones: One flock, as of sheep: One pile, as of the materials of a building. All are good: but to take the word in the Native sense, the gathering, here, is either to one καρπύσιον, one Summe (as, many members:) Or (to go neerer) to one κεφαλή, one Head (as many members;) and, that is it, the Apostle pursueth to the Chapters end. Both these (Summe, and Head) are in the body of the word: καρπύσιον, and they both serve, and suit well. The body: the Head is (as it were) the Summe of all; all ' sense, ' motion, ' speech, ' understanding, all recapitulate into the Head. This (of Head, or Sum) fitteth it best. For, (to speak properly) many heaps, flocks, piles, there may be: Head there can be but one. De ratione capitis est, unum esse. And so, of a summe: but one true summe, were there never so many, so divers ways cast.

So then, into one, that is not enough; it is not co-adunation will serve. It is recapitulation, and, in that word, there is Caput: it is ἀνακαρπύσιον, and in that word there is κεφαλή, such a reducing all to one, as that one be the Head. A headless gathering, the Apostle cannot skill of. And indeed, say there were an entire body, and every member in his right place, and all strictly knit together; yet if the head should hap to be away, as good the members all in sunder, for all were to no purpose. So, a Head or nothing.

This gathering then (you see) is to the chief Member; to the Member, that wears the Crown. Thither, upward, the true gathering goes. There is an Unio downwards; (as of Sampson's Foxes, that were together by the tails;) That, is not the right: but, by the head. The Oxen that plough, are joyed together by the head. The Foxes, that are tied by the tails, they set all on fire. The Unity of the head & O D send us: That, is the true Unity.

And yet are we not where we should. VVe may gather upward too, and make a head, and not the right head. That, to a head, is not enough, if it fall out to be but a wrong head. (suppose Romeli's Son) Humano capiti, &c. do but paint (saith the Poet) any body, with a wrong head, it will but move laughter and scorn. The right, the own head it would be. A strange head will not suit, nor do us any head. The right head, then.

And which is the right head? He adds: Recapitulati in Christo: it is Christ. There (lo) is the right head, now. To that, let all gather.

And now we are arrived at Christ, we are, where we should; our gathering is at the best. All in heaven; All in earth: gathered together: together again: Again into one. One Summe, whereof Christ is the Foot: One body, whereof Christ is the Head. Gather then, and be gathered to Him: Gather then, and be gathered with Him: He that gathereth not with Him scattereth.

And so were all, scattered without Christ; till he came with his Ἀνά, and got them again together. The seasons were (all) empty; The things, all on heaps.

Things in heaven, from things in earth; Angels with drawn swords at men: Things on earth, from things in heaven; Men, at but the sight of an Angel, ready to fall down dead. The members, from the head; the head from the members: The members one from another: Neither union with the head, nor among themselves. Peccata vestra, it was sin, that divided between GOD and them; and, divided once and divided ever, divided in semper invisibilia, till they were quite past all division: No longer divided (now) but even scattered. The case of the world, then.

Scattered in point of Religion: Gods scattered all over; as many gods as Cities: All the Host of heaven; all the beasts and creeping things of the earth.

Scattered, in point of morality, or moral Philosophy: I know not, how many scattered opinions Augustine reckons, de Summo Bono, the chief point of all.

The Jewes scattered from the Gentiles, and the Gentiles from the Jewes: A maine Wall between.

The Gentiles scattered from themselves grossly; all in factions, they. Nothing of a Body; Never a head: and yet many heads, but never a right one among them all.

No, not the Jewes themselves: For, the Tabernacle of David was then down, and the ruins of it scattered into many Sects (as the Prophet Amos complains. And Saint James alledgeth it out of him, (A. 15.) In a word: the whole world then was but a mass of errors, a Chaos of confusion, Tobu and Babu: empty and void of all saving grace or truth. Well likened, to them that were scattered at the tower of Babel, where no man understood another: or to the people that were scattered all over the land of Egypt, to gather stubble, to pick up straws. All (then) wandring hither and thither, and seeking death, in the error of their life. By all which, you see, what need there was of this gathering, this

Now then, if, for the divisions of Reuben, there were great thoughts of heart (as it is in Deborah's song) for but one Tribe scattered from the rest; shall there be no thought or course taken for these; such, so general, so many (not divisions, but plaine dispersions) scatterings all abroad?

Ioh. 5. 12.

Great pity, that all these should lie thus loose and ungathered, as if they were not worth the taking up. He that (in John 6.) took order for the broken meat, for the fragments; willed them to be gathered, ἵνα μὴ τι ἀπολῇται, that nothing might be lost, no not of them; He (certainly) were no good Oeconomus, if He would let all these be lost for lack of gathering.

But could not this gathering be absque Christo, in some other? It appears, no. Seasons there were more then one, but all empty: profers were made in them, but nothing full, nor any thing neer full.

A season of the Law unwritten: Then came the Patriarchs. But they had much adoe to keep themselves from scattering: they gathered none.

A season of the Law written: Then, the Priests and Levites: but the gathering little the fuller for them.

Luk. 10. 31, 32.

Then came all the Prophets: To no great purpose they neither: Some few Profelytes they made, that was all. But in the end, all these (as they in the Parable of the wounded man,) passed by, looked on him, but let him lie: Little was done, till the good Samaritane came. The things in heaven and earth (the generality of them, to) in not much better case for all these, could not be recapitulate, in the Patriarchs, Moses, the Prophets. So that to this plunge it was come, that the Psalmist even asked

Psal. 89. 47.

Heb. 10. 37.

God, Wherefore hast thou made all men for nought? It was time for him to come, Quis venturum erat.

1 Sam. 26. 19.

Psal. 40. 6.

It was time; More than time, when that which was the only known way (when one was scattered from God; how to gather him to God again, which was, Let him smell a sacrifice;) when that grew out of season, when that failed. And that it did. Sacrifice; burnt offering; burnt offerings for sin (sin, that made all the scattering) noluit (that is plain) thou wouldst not; (It is Christ now speakech) then said I, lo I come. I of whom it is written, ἐν καρδίᾳ, in the top or front of the book, that I should fulfil thy will, and gather these together again. Lo, I come to do it.

Psal. 40. 6.

Heb. 10. 20.

By this Ecce venio of His, a way was found, those that were thus distracted and scattered before, how to bring them together again. What way was that? It follows in the same place, what he meant by Ecce venio. He goes it over again; No sacrifice thou wouldst; No: Corpus autem aptasti, But a body hast thou ordained me. The Incorporating Christ, the ordaining Him a Body, that is, the new and living way, through the vaille, that is his flesh. With that He comes this day, and gathers all again.

; The manner

Recapitulando.

Aq. 10. 12.

How, or in what manner, that? The manner is set down in the VVord: by way of Recapitulation. VVe are not to conceive, there was such a great Sheet, as S. Peter saw let down from heaven (Act. 10.) and that all these vvere put into it, and so gathered. No: it vvas recapitulando, by reducing to lesse roome (as vve do many diffused matters to a few heads) as we contract great Maps, to a small compass; as great plots, to a small module: for, that is (properly) to recapitulate. There are two vvords in the verse, set it out vvell: ἐκλεῖψαι, and καρπαιῶν. Πληροῦμα, this fulness vwill come into a little καρπαιῶν, as the particulars of many leaves come into a Total of not halfe a line.

If then vve be to proceed by vway of recapitulation, then are vve to reduce all to heads. So let us reduce these things to these two heads: First, Heaven, and all in it, to God; Earth, and all in it, to Man. Gather these two into one, and there is the ἀνακεφαλαιῶσι in short. To conceive it the better, you shall understand, this was on a good way onward, before. You have heard man called the little World, the ἀνακεφαλαιῶσι, of the great one, a compendium of all the creatures. And so he is, of both. He participates with the Angels, and so with things in heaven, by His soul. He participates with the elements, and so with things on earth, by His Body. The Poet had it by the end: Fertur Prometheus, &c. That to the making of mans body, there went a piece of every of the creatures. So, there was in man, a kind of recapitulation before.

But, that was not full: yet lacked there one thing. All in heaven were not gathered into man. Of God we say, Qui es in celis: He was one of the things in heaven, and He was out all the while. But, if He could be gathered in too, then were it a full gathering indeed, All, in heaven, recapitulate into one; that is, G O D: All, in earth, recapitulate into one; that is, Man. Gather these two now, and all are gathered: all the things in either. And now at this last and great Recollection of G O D and Man; and in them, of Heaven and Earth; and in them, of all in Heaven and Earth; are all recapitulate into the unity of one entire Person. And how? Not so, as they were gathered at first; Not, as the κεφαλαιῶσι (the first gathering) so the ἀνακεφαλαιῶσι (the second gathering.) When things are at the best, God and Man were two in number: Now, God and Man is but one in CHRIST. So the gathering, nearer then before: So, surer then before: So every way, better then before.

In Man, there was onward an abridgement of all the rest. Gather G O D and Him into one, and so you have all. There is nothing, not any thing, in Heaven or Earth, left out. Heaven is in, and earth: the creatures in heaven and earth; the Creator of heaven and earth. All are in now: All (reconciled as it were) in one mass, all bair into one summe: Recapitulate (indeed) truly and properly.

1 Cor. 15. 27.

Herein is the fulness, that God Himself comes into this κεφαλαιῶσι. The Apostle (1 Cor. 15.) where the Psalm saith [He hath put all things in subjection under his feet]; It is manifest (saith the Apostle) That he was accepted, that so put them under: But here it is manifest (say we) that He is not accepted, that did gather; but, He (the very Collector is, in this Collection, Himself and all.

2 Cor. 5. 19.

1. 12. 22.

For, G O D was in CHRIST reconciling the world: The world, that is, all things; All in heaven, all in earth. And, in CHRIST did dwell the fulness of the Godhead bodily, when he did to reconcile them, in the body of his flesh. In a word: certain it is, that, by virtue of this recapitulation, we are one with CHRIST; CHRIST as Man: G O D is one with CHRIST, CHRIST as G O D. So, in CHRIST, G O D and Man are one. And, there is good hope, they that are one, will soon be at one: where unity is, union will be had with no great adoe.

And

And even besides this, there is yet another Recapitulation; that, well might it have that name. For (if you mark it,) it is not Recapitation, but Recapitulation; and that comes of Capitulum; which is a Diminutive. So was it: verbum in principio, the eternal, mighty, great Word became verbum abbreviatum, as the Apostle saith (Rom. 10.) to bring this to pass. He; that the heavens are but his span abbreviate into a Child of a span long: He, that Caput the Head of men and Angels, principalities and powers, became capitulum: He that κεφαλή, κεφαλὴ, a little diminutive head; Head? Nay, became the foot, Pes computi (the Text is) the Foot, the lowest part of the account; and of the lowest account.

Rom. 10. 18.
Esa. 40. 12.

And now (because we are in Seasons, we speak of Seasons.) When was this, at what season of the year? when was it, that he was so capite minutus? Sure, never less, never so little, never so minorated, so minimated (I am sure) as now. When was Ecce venio fulfilled? we may know that, by all the four Sundays in Advent now past, that, to day, it is Ecce venio. His coming, the Psalm expounds, by ordaining him a body: A body there was ordained Him in the Womb: But, to us things are, when they appear. That, though the Word were made flesh before, yet God was not manifested in the flesh; came not and dwelt among us visibly to be seen, till this day. So that, if you ask [of In CHRISTO] what, or when? In CHRISTO nato, then, was this gathering of things in heaven, and earth.

Mat. 2. 1.

And in sign it was then, look there comes a Quire of Angels down, there comes a new Star forth to represent the things in Heaven: there come together a sort of Shepherds, and there is gathering to them a troop of great Princes from the East, to represent the things on earth, which consist (as these do) of high and low, noble and base, wise and simple: All, to celebrate, and make shew of this gathering, of this great μικρὰ, into this small κεφαλὴ. And in their heavenly Hymne, there is mention of this gathering: In excelsis, and in terris set together; as if, all (in both) were now in full and perfect harmony.

Now, when the seasons travelled with, at last brought forth Him, that was the best thing, they had or should ever bring forth when they were at the best. VVhen Him, in whom it pleased the FATHER, all fulness should dwell, then were they at the full. The gathering of the things, so full, as it made plenitudo rerum: The gathering of the seasons, so full, as it made plenitudo temporum. And so have we brought both parts, (seasons and things) together.

The Summe is at the foot: the Oration at the period; the Building, at the head stone, the Tide, at the full: the fulness of the Gentiles are come into his Church, which is his Body, the fulness of Him, that filleth all in all.

Vers. 23.

But, why God, in the dispensation of the seasons, did so order, that at such a year of the world, such a month of the year, such a day of the month, this should fall out just, this is more, than I dare take upon me to define. But this I may: that the Christian world hath ever observed divers good congruities of this Feast, with this Text.

The Application of the text to the time, &c. to us.

The Text is of Recapitulation: The Feast is so. Twelve months recapitulate to twelve dayes: Six for the old; in six dayes was the creation of the old. And, when the old things are past, as many for the new; For, behold all things are new; And, if any be in Christ he is a new Creature. But these recapitulate in one season equally divided. Equally divided between both; yet so, as the days of the last are set before the first, that so erunt novissimi primi is verified even of the season, and the last, first, there also.

In earthly things.

I
2 Cor. 5. 17.

The Text is of a gathering: and that falls fit with the season; and giveth us great cause to admire the high wisdom of God, in the dispensation of seasons; That now at this season, when we gather nothing, when nothing groweth to be gathered, there should be a gathering (yet) and a great one: nay, the greatest gathering that ever was, or will be: And so by that means, the poorest and emptiest season in nature, become the fullest and richest in grace.

Now we do, our selves (in effect) express as much as this comes to. For we also make it a season of gathering together, of neighbourly meetings and invitations. Wherein we come together, and both (our selves) have, and we make each other partakers of what we have gathered, all the year before.

In which sense also, we may call it the season of dispensation; in that we then dispense the blessings, God hath sent us; and that is in good house-keeping, and hospitality.

And (if you will) of fulness too. For, the most part do then use to be better filled, and with better fare, that are not so full again all the year beside. That one may truly say, there is more fulness in this season, than any other. And so it is the season of fulness then; For the hungry are then filled with good things; then of all the seasons of the year.

Psal. 107. 9.

And last, there is in the Text (and it is the main word in the Text) ἀνακεφαλαιώσας, which (in the Primitive sense) is the making the foot of an account: which agreeth well with the foot of the year, for, at the foot of the lease Summes use to be set. Set it at the head, or set it at the foot; it is the foot of the Old, and the head of the New: and so the fittest season to celebrate it in. For, be it head, or be it foot, Christ it is. So, recapitulation, or gathering, fulness, or dispensation, or summing all up, the Text is seasonable.

But, these (I have spoke of) are of things on earth. VVere it not to be wished, we would endeavour to have some fruition, and to gather some fruit, for the heavenly part from this gathering, this summing up of Christs?

In heavenly things.

Christ is but κεφαλὴ, a short summe; but there is in Him ἀνέκμητος, a fulness of all: Christ is but the Contents of a Chapter, some three or four lines; but a great long Chapter follows, long and large large. For, what shall you see in this Skulamita, but Choros Castrorum, legions, whole armies of good things, to gather. Such, so great a sum, as twelve dayes will not serve to cast them up. But yet, somewhat let us gather, that the seasons being full, we our selves be not to be sent empty away.

The time failes : I will therefore name but one ; and that (the main word of the text) avayxhthai, which referreth properly to the making up an account. The Fathers, taking the Verse into their considerations, pitch upon it : (As S. Jerome, who thinks it chosen of purpose to that end.) But, the word and thing both, we may have good use of, seeing we all are to be Accomptants (Redde rationem, said to us all :) seeing, to an accompt we must all come.

And thus he followeth it, goes no further than the text, for the particulars of our accompt ; makes them consist of qua in caelis, and qua in terris. VVhich two, as they are principally taken for the creatures in both ; So may they also (and not amiss) be taken, for the things done in them both. Specially, our gatherings in them referring to either.

Things in heaven, to stand for our good deeds, our alms, fasts, and prayers, that ascend up thither, (the Angel tells Cornelius so,) and will receive us up thither into everlasting Tabernacles. Of which gather we as many as we can all our life long.

As for these on earth, we gather but too fast ; meaning our evil deeds, which smell of the earth, whence they are, and where they were done.

Now, when we come to give up our accompt, it should seem by the word 'Apw' we had cast them up once before, and cast them false ; that we must to it again, and see, if we can find our summes right. There is no danger, but in casting our qua in caelis (our good) lest we cast them over ; and our qua in terris (our bad) lest them we cast under. The other way, the error is nothing so perilous.

Our qua in caelis (our good) howsoever our new Auditors cast them so, as they find G O D in their debt, for that we have laid out more than ever G O D required ; I doubt, will not prove so at the Audit. But, of our qua in terris, our evil, there is no great fear of overcasting them : their summe will rise but too high, if we deceive not our selves.

But whether it be of both ; we shall find our selves wrong in both, if they be not recapitulate in Christo. For our qua in caelis ; having done all we can, Christ bids us say, servi inuiles sumus : and so we must say then : (and what account can be made of inutile ? having suffered all we can, Non sum condigna (saith S. Paul :) So both come not home. The good Cenurion, he that built the Synagogues : Nay then Saint John Baptist himselfe, both cast themselves to a Non sum dignus ; Even the best of our nature. That, when we have done, we must begin again, and cast and cast till we be weary, unless we cast in Christ ; faile still, unless our Total of qua in caelis, be recapitulate in Christo.

But then come to the other accompt of qua in terris : to that, there is a fulnes, and the fulnes of our seasons. Many a broken reckoning shall we find there, such furd numbers, such fractions we shall meet with, we shall not tell how or when to get through, we shall want compters. They are so infinite, and infinite withall, that (I fear) we shall be found in a mighty arreare, a huge debt of thousands and ten thousands of talents : we shall not tell vvich vvay to turn us, nor vvich vvay to satisfie it, though all we have were sold, and we our selves too. To ballance this accompt, Christ is most needfull : For Summis conjunctis, cast both these together, and Iob being our Auditor, he finds we shall not be able to answer G O D one for a thousand, that he can charge us vvith. Sine Me nihil potestis facere (if ever) we shall find, in this, most true. For gather heaven and earth, and all that is in them, all gather, and leave him out, they will never be able to make our discharge : Not the best Auditor of them all.

But He, out of the fulnes of his satisfaction, can relieve us that way, to take off (or strike off) a great part of our Omnis. And he can cast in, of the fulnes of his merits to make up that, is found minus habens, or defective, in ours that way. For, the short is, He is both Pater, and Caput compti, the uxor, and the uxor ; he is called both in the Text. His avayxhthai must help us, if ever we come to our Audit.

But foreseen, that this be no hinderance to our gathering. No : gathering we must be still, those of heaven (spiritual) and turn as much of our earthly as we can into them. And still order the matter so, as while we have time, we be doing good. We shall but evil summe up all, in Christ, if we have no particulars to raise our summe of ; if we have nothing, but what is out of Christ, to recapitulate, in Christ. To gather, I say ; Else are we like to have but an empty season of it.

And even to begin, now : to imitate God, in His time, when ; and in His order, how. His time : this is the time, God made his in ; Now, we to take the same time, to fall on gathering. His order : this is the order, God made his by ; He began with heavenly things ; we to keep the same order, follow His method, begin where He begins : begin with the things, that have the priority of place in the Text, begin with them : Make Regnum ejus, our primum quarite, and the things that pertain to it. And not pervert Gods order, and be so wholly given to the fulnes of the things on earth, that we fall to them, first. Nay, I pray God, it be not first, and last, and all. We shall the better dispense the season, if we gather to prayers, to Gods word : If we begin with them : If with the dispensation of his holy mysteries : gather to that, especially.

For, there, we do not gather to Christ, or of Christ ; but, we gather Christ Himselfe, and gathering Him, we shall gather the tree, and fruit, and all upon it. For, as there is a recapitulation of all in heaven and earth, in Christ : So, there is a recapitulation of all in Christ, in the holy holy Sacrament. You may see it clearly: There is in CHRIST, the Word eternal, for things in heaven; There is also Flesh, for things on earth. Similarly, the Sacrament consisteth, of a Heavenly, and of a Terrene part; (It is Irenaeus own words:) the heavenly, there the word too (the abstract of the other;) the Earthly, the Element.

And in the Elements, you may observe, there is a fulnesse of the seasons of the natural year; of the corn-floor (or harvest) in the one, Bread: of the wine-press (or vintage) in the other, Wine. And, in the heavenly, of the wheat-corn whereto He compareth Himself (Job. 12.) Bread, even the living bread (or bread of life) that came down from heaven; the true Manna, wherof we may gather each his Gomer. And again, of Him, the true Wine (as He calls Himself;) the blood of the grapes of that Vine. Both these issuing out of this dayes recapitulation; both, in corpus autem apostoli mibi, of this day.

And the gathering or Vintage of these two, in the blessed Eucharist, is (as I may say) a kind of hypostatical union of the Signa, and the thing signified, (so united together, as are the two natures of Christ. And even from this sacramental union do the Fathers borrow their resemblance, to illustrate, by it, the personal union in Christ: I name Theodoret for the Greek, and Gregory for the Latine Church, that insist upon it (both) and presse it against Eutyches. That even as, in the Eucharist, neither part is evacuate or turned into the other, but abide each still in his former nature and substance; No more is either of CHRISTs natures annulled, or one of them converted into the other (as Eutyches held;) but, each nature remaineth (still) full and whole, in his own kind. And backwards: As the two Natures in CHRIST, so the Signum and Signatum in the Sacrament, è converso. And this later device, of the substance of the bread and wine, to be flowen away and gone, and in the room of it, a remainder of nothing else but Accidents to stay behind, was to them not known; And (had it been true) had made for Eutyches, and against them. And this for the likeness of Union in both.

Now, for the word gathered together in one. It is well known, the holy Eucharist it self is called Synaxis (by no name more usual in all Antiquity that, is a Collection or gathering. For so it is, in it self: For, at the celebration of it (though we gather to Prayer, and to Preaching, yet) that is the principal gathering, the Church hath, which is (it self) called a Collection too (Heb. 10.) by the same name, from the Chief: For, where the body is, there the Eagles will be gathered: And so, one Synaxis begets another.

And last, there is a Dispensation: that word, in it, too: that most clearly. For, it is our Office, we are stiled (by the Apostle) Dispensers of the mysteries of GOD; and, in and by them, of all the benefits that came to mankind, by this dispensation in the fulnesse of season, of all that are recapitulate in CHRIST.

Which benefits are too many to deal with. One shall serve, as the summe of all: That the very end of the Sacrament is, to gather again to GOD and His favour, if it happen (as oft it doth) we scatter, and stray from Him. And to gather us, as close and neer, as alimentum aliis, (that is) as neer, as neer may be.

And as, to gather us to GOD; so likewise each to other mutually: Expressed lively, in the Symbols of many graines into the one, and many grapes into the other. The Apostle is plain, that we are all one bread, and one body, so many as are partakers of one bread. So molding us (as it were) into one loaf altogether. The gathering to GOD refers still to things in heaven: This other, to men, to the things in earth. All under one Head, by the common faith: All into one Body mystical, by mutual charity. So shall we well enter into the dispensing of this season, to begin with.

And even thus to be recollected at this Feast, by the holy Communion, into that blessed Union, is the highest perfection, we can in this life aspire unto. We (then) are at the highest pitch; at the very best we shall ever attaine to on earth; what time we newly come from it: Gathered to Christ; and, by Christ to God; stated in all whatsoever He hath gathered, and laid up against His next coming. With which gathering here in this world we must content and stay our selves, and wait for the consummation of all, at His coming again. For, there is an Eccy venio, yet to come.

This gathering thus here begun, it is to take end and to have the full accomplishment, at the last and great gathering of all, which shall be of the quick, and of the dead. When He shall send His Angels, and they shall gather His Elect from all the corners of the earth: shall gather the wheat into the barn, and the tares to the fire. And then (and never till then) shall be the fulnesse indeed, when GOD shall be; not (as now He is) somewhat in every one, but all in all. Ec tempus non erit amplius, and there shall be neither time, nor season any more. No fulnesse then, but the fulnesse of eternity, and in it the fulnesse of all joy. To which in the several seasons of our being gathered to our fatbers, He vouchsafe to bring us; that (as the year, so) the fulnesse of our lives may end in a Christmasse, a merry joyful Feast, as that is. And so GOD make this to us, in Him, &c.

SERMON PREACHED
Before the
KINGS MAJESTIE.
At WHITE-HAL. on Saturday the xxv. of December, Anno Domini , MDCXXIV , being
CHRISTMASSE Day.

PSAL. II. Verſe VII.

Prædicabo Legem , de qua dixit ad me Dominus :
Filius meus tu , hodie genui te.
I will preach the Law whereof the LORD ſaid to me : Thou art my Son , this day have I begotten thee.

His Text the firſt word of it is Prædicabo, I will preach. So, here is a Sermon toward. And it is of Filius ; Filius meus genui te ; of the begetting, or bringing forth a child. And that, Hodie, this very day. And let not this trouble you, that it is (begotten) in the Text, and (born) on the day. In all the three tongues, one word ſerves for both. In Latine, Alma Venus genuit : Venus did but bear Aeneas ; yet it is ſaid, Genuit. In Greeke ἡ ἄνδρ' ἐκ παρθένου : He was but born of the Virgin ; yet He was ſaid ἡ γεννητός, Genitus. And I report me to the Maſters of the Hebrew tongue, whether the original word in the Text, bear not, be not as full, may do not more properly import His Birth than His begetting. It is ſure, it doth. So, it may be uſed ; and ſo, we will uſe it indifferently. And let this ſerve once for all. VVe return to our Sermon.

Prædicabo. Here is one ſaith, he will preach. Hath he a licence ? Yes : Dixit ad me, he was ſpoken to, or (indeed) he was commanded. (Amar is to command.) Commanded : by whom ? By him that hath lawful authority ſo to do, Dixit Dominus. He ſtept not up of his own head ; He came to it orderly : made no ſuit for the place ; was appointed for it.

What will he preach of ? VVhence will he take his Text ? Out of dixit Dominus, out of the Word of God. And that is right. So do we take, ours ; for, ſo did he take his. To Dixit Dominus He held Him ; preached not voluntary : but, as he preached the law, ſo he had a law to preach by (the Word of God.) Dixit Dominus.

And what was His Text ? Filius meus tu hodie genui te. This Text He preached on : As it might be, at the bringing forth of a Son. And that (as it ſhould ſeem by the word, Hodie) this very day. This day, the Birth ; this day, the Sermon. And, if ſo : by the ſame enquiry, the ſame Text may well be preached on again, whenſoever that day comes about, by the circling of the year.

It uſeth to be the firſt queſtion (I kept it laſt) who preacheth ? For, if we like him, we will hear him, elſe not. Sure, He, to whom this is ſpoken, Filius meus tu, He it is, that ſaith, Prædicabo. And He to whom it is ſaid, Filius meus tu, is CHRIST. CHRIST then preacheth. And CHRIST is worth the hearing. There will lie no exception to the Preacher, that, I am ſure of.

And indeed, ſo it was moſt meet, that He ſhould. He, that was the Law-giver, moſt meet to read upon His own Law ; He, that the Son, moſt meet to preach upon Filius meus tu ; He, that was born, upon His own Birth.

Upon His own Birth. And if upon it, any day, that day eſpecially, whercon He was born. So is the Text. The day He preach'd on, He was born : The day He was born, He preach'd on, No time ſo kindly to preach de Filio hodie genito, as Hodie. So ſhall you have CHRIST preach ; of CHRISTS Nativity ; and that, upon the very day of his Nativity ; (which, according to the Chriſtian account, is this day of all the dayes of the year.

this Birth.

And, firſt I muſt tell you, this ſame Hodie (here) is ſaid Signanter, that CHRIST was begotten to day. For, He was begotten beſides this : had more Begittings, than one. Two natures He had, and ſo, two Nativities. One eternal, as the Son of God : the other temporal, as the Son of man.
And

And, as it falls out, this very place (here) I find vouched for both. Vouched for His begetting, as the Son of GOD; by the Apostle (Heb. 1. 5.) For to which of the Angels said He at any time, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? Alledging this place to prove His Deity: as one, whose nature was farre above, farre more excellent, than the Angels.

But, of the twain, more properly we apply it to this dayes birth: (His Birth, as the Son of Man.) And for our so applying it, we have the warrant, not of one, but of all the Apostles at once; and, even of the whole Church assembled in prayer (Acts 4. 27.) Where, to God Himself they say, that the Prophecy of this Psalm was fulfilled, when Herod, the High Priests, and the rest took counsel against His holy Child Jesus: And, that (we know) was at this Birth. So applying it to this Birth, sure we are, we apply it aright.

And indeed, it cannot be otherwise. For, in the very next words, GOD bids Him, Ask, and He will give Him the Heavens, and the uttermost parts of the earth. This must needs be said to Him, as the Son of man; and can no wayes be said to Him, as the Son of GOD. As the Son of GOD, He asked not; He needed not ask; He had all: All quo jure with His father, as being in form of God. Nothing was; nothing could be given to Him: He was not a person capable of any gift: All was His own. So, it was spoken, as to the Son of Man, this day born. And so, to the Son of Man, this day born, we apply it.

Of this Sermon, these be the parts. The matter of it at large, or in general: That it is a Law first. Then, what manner of Law, or how qualified: 1. A Law to be preached, as other Lawes use not to be. 2. A Law de qua dixit Deus, where other lawes are, de qua dixit homo: Which is the reason, why it is to be preached. 3. And then (out of the very body of the word in the Text) that it is not a Law at large, but a Statute Law, for so is Elchok, which but by publishing, none can take notice of. A second reason, why it is to be preached. And this is the first part.

The second, is the very Text it self, or the body of the Law in these words, Thou art my Sonne, this day have I begotten thee. The points in it are five: 1. Of a Sonne. 2. Of my Sonne (that is) the Sonne of GOD. 3. Genui, the Sonne of GOD begotten. 4. Hodie the Sonne of GOD, this day begotten. 5. And Dixit genui (that is) dicendo genui, begotten only by saying; onely said the word, and it was done, and the Word became flesh. This is the second part.

The third is the hardest. For it would make one study (Filius meus tu) how this should be a Law, as here it is called. It looks not like one. But, said it must be, which CHRIST hath said: A Law He calls it, and a Law we must find it. Now there be but two lawes (as the Apostle tells us, Rom. 3. 27.) Lex fidei, and Lex factorum: if, both these wayes, a Law it be, a Law we shall find it. And both these wayes a Law it is.

1. Lex fidei. A Law limiting what to believe of Him. Of Him (that is) of His Person: His Natures: and His Offices. His Person, out of the words, Ego, and Tu. His Natures, out of Hodie, and Genui. His Offices, out of Pradicabo, and Legem.

2. Then Lex factorum. Setting out first, what he doth for us; and then, what we are to do for Him. What He doth for us (Filius meus tu) to us He conveyeth all Filial rights. What we to do for Him (Filius meus tu) we to return to Him all Filial duties. Which duties are comprised in Pradicabo legem. And legem, that law is no more, than Filius meus tu: for, Filius meus tu goes through all, and is all in all. These are the parts. Of these, &c.

Pradicabo Legem (saith CHRIST.) And we like it well, that He will preach. But He hath not chosen so good a Text: Legem was a fitter Text for Moses to preach on. We had well hoped, CHRIST would have preached no law; all Gospel, He That He would have preach'd down the old law, but not have preach'd up any new. VVe see, it is otherwise. A law He hath to preach, and preach it He will: He saith it Himself, Pradicabo Legem.

So, if we will be His Auditors, He tells us plainly, we must receive a Law from His mouth. If we love not to hear of a law, we must go to some other Church. For in CHRIST'S Church (there) a law is preached. Christ began, we must follow, and say, every one of us (as He saith) Pradicabo Legem.

Nay, there is another point yet more strange. These very words here [Filius meus tu, &c.] are as good Gospel as any in the New Testament; yet are here (as we see) delivered by Him under the term of a Law. And we may not change His word: we may not learn CHRIST how to use His terms. The words are plain, there is no avoiding them: a law he calls it, and a law it is.

First then, to take notice of both these. 1. That Christ will preach a law; and that they are not for the law, are not for Christ. It was their quarrel above (at the third verse) they would none of Christ, for this very cause, that Christ comes preaching the law, and they would live lawlesse: they would indure no yoke: that were the Sons of Belial; Belial (that is) no yoke: but what agreement hath Christ with Belial.

And then: that these words Filius meus tu, are a law; and so as a law by Christ preached. So as in the very Gospel it self, all is not Gospel, some law among it. The very Gospel hath her law. A law Evangelical there is, which Christ preached: and, as he did, we to do the like. (VWhereof, more is to be said by and by.)

In the mean time, it is not without danger to let any such conceit take head, as though Christian Re-

Religion had no law-points in it, consisted onely of pure narratives: believe them; and all is well: Had but certain Theses to be held, dogmatical points, matters of opinion. And true it is, such points there be; but they be not all. There is a law besides, and it hath precepts, and they to be preached, learned, and (as a law) to be obeyed of all.

Look but into the Grand Commission (by which we all preach) which Christ gave at his going out of the world: Go (saith He) preach the Gospel to all nations, teaching them, VVhat? to observe the things that I have commanded you. Lo, here is commanding, and here is observing. So, the Gospel consists not only of certain Articles to be believed: But of certain Commandments also; and they to be observed. And what is that, but Pradicabo Legem?

Now (I know not how, but) we are fallen clean from the term, Law; nay, we are even fallen out with it. Nothing but Gospel now. The name of Law, we look strangely at: we shun it in our common talk. To this it is come, while men seek to live, as they list. Preach them Gospel as much as you will: but (hear ye) no Pradicabo legem, no law, to be preached, to hold or keep them in. And, we have gospelled it so long, that the Christian Law is clean gone with us; we have lost it, if Pradicabo legem (here) get it us not again. But, got it must be, for as Christ preacheth, so must we; and Law it is, that Christ preacheth.

I shall tell you, what is come by the drowning of the term, Law. Religion is even come to be counted res precaria; No law, no, no: but a matter of fair entreaty, gentle perswasion, neither pura, nor leges, but only Consulta patrum, good fatherly counsel, and nothing else. Concilia Evangelica were a while laid aside; now there be none else. All are Evangelical counsels, now. The reverend regard, the legal vigour, and power, the penalties of it are not set by. The rules, no reckoning made of them, as of Law Writs, none; but onely, as of Physick bills, if you like them, you may use them: if not, lay them by. And this comes of drowning the term, Law. And all, for lack of Pradicabo legem.

I speak it to this end: to have the one term retained, as well as the other, to have neither term abolished; but with equal regard, both kept on foot. They are not so well advised, that seek to suppress either name. If the name once be lost, the thing it self will not long stay: but go after it, and be lost too.

They that take them to the one term only, are confused once a moneth. For, every moneth, every first day of every moneth, this verse fails not, but is read in our ears. And here, a law it is. And so was the Christian Religion called in the very best times of it, Christiana lex, the Christian law; and the Bishops, Christiana legis Episcopi, the Bishops of the Christian law. And all the ancient Fathers liked the term well: and took it upon them.

To conclude, Gospel it how we will: if the Gospel hath not the legalia of it acknowledged, allowed, and preserved to it: if once it lose the force, and vigour of a law, it is a signe it declines, it grows weak and unprofitable: and, that is a signe, it will not long last. VVe must go look our salvation by some other way, than by Filius meus tu: if Filius meus tu. (I say not, be not preached, but) be not so preached, as Christ preached it; and Christ preach'd it, as a Law. And so much for Legem.

Now, of this law, three things are here said: First, legem turns back upon Pradicabo. And this priviledge it hath, that it is materia pradicabilis, a law which may; nay, a law which is to be preached. And that lawes use not to be: Not to be preached. To be read upon at times privately: but, to be preached, not any Law, but this. But, this is: and it serves for a special difference, to sever it from other lawes, and make it a kind by it self. Even this, that it is to be preached.

To be preached: and that even to Kings themselves, that make lawes: to Judges themselves, that are presumed to be best seen in the Law: yet they to learn, they to be learned, in this law. Erudimini (is the word) qui judicatis terram, in the tenth Verse after.

And the reason is: for this is a law, de qua dixit Deus, And so is none else. And that is a second difference. There is a law, de qua dixit homo, quam sanxerunt homines, which men among themselves make for themselves (as by-lawes are made.) This is of a higher nature. This, God himself made; is a Law of His own making. De qua dixit, or rather edixit, for so is Amar: which God enacted first, and then gave commandment, it should be preached.

And to whom? Dixit ad me, Who is that CHRIST. First, and before all others to be preached by his Sonne. His preaching, He thought it worth, and gave it Him in charge, and accordingly (we see) He performed it, and professed Pradicabo, that He will preach it.

But, the third is a reason, why it could not be otherwise; why it could not but be preached. Because (as I told you, out of the very body of the word) it is not a law at large: but a Statute law. And the nature of that law is, without publishing, it cannot be known.

GOD hath His Law in the same division that man hath his: His Statute, and His Common Law. The Law of nature which is written in the hearts of all men, that, is the Common Law of the world. Of that every man is to take notice at his peril. But this law, here, is no part of that law: Filius meus tu is not written in the heart; it must be preached to the ear. No light of Nature could reveal it, from within; Preached from without, it must be. And so, and no otherwise, come we to the knowledg of it. The very words gives it for such, which is properly a Statute (as this is) enacted, and decreed in the high Court of GODS Council above, and reserved to be revealed in the later times; And of that we cannot bear without a Preacher: and the preaching thereof was committed to CHRIST. He began, and we follow. And so much for Pradicabo legem, de qua dixit Dominus ad me. (The matter at large.) And now to His Text, wherein is the letter of the Law it self.

I reckoned up to you five particulars in this Law. 1. Filius, a Son. 2. Filius meus, my Son (that is) the Son of God. 3. Filius meus genui; the Son of God begotten. 4. Hodie genui, the Son of God begotten this day. 5. And fifthly, Dixit genui (that is) dicendo genuit, begotten by saying, as the word should be.

Of a Son, first. Which plainly sheweth, it is not the old; it is a new law (this.) The old runs, Ego sum Dominus, which must needs imply, Servus meus tu. This is Filius meus tu (in another stile) which necessarily doth imply Ego sum pater tuus. A Father to be the giver of it. According to the former, He saith Ego sum Dominus, and we say, Dominus meus tu. According to this latter, He saith, Filius meus tu, and we say, Pater meus tu. This, the better by far: as far as the condition of a Son is better, than that of a Servant. And indeed, the main difference between the two Laws, is but this: Do it (saith the one) Servus meus tu, the imperfect law of fear and servitude. Do it (saith the other) Filius meus tu, the perfect law of love and liberty.

Of a Son. VVhose Son? Filius meus. And He that speaks it, that saith meus, is God; and so to whom it is spoken, the Son of God. And the Son of God is a high title, and of a special accompt, Salomon, before his Crown or Scepter prized that speech of God; I will be his Father, and he shall be my Son.

But nothing makes it more clear, than this place. The last verse he saith, Posuisti Regem, I have set thee a King: that He speaks not of, thinks it not fit. But here, now, Filius meus tu, thus (lo) preach He will, this He thinks worth the preaching. Filius meus tu, rather than, posuisti Regem, to be the Son of God, than to be a Prince in Sion.

The Son of God: and the Son of God begotten. For Sons of God there be, that are not begotten; that come in another way, that come by adoption. To beget, is an act of nature, and is ever determined in the identity of the same nature, with him, that did beget. And this putteth the difference.

Otherwise, God speaks of Angels as of his Sons. When all the Sons of God praised him. Speaks it of Israel, his people: Out of Egypt have I called my Son. Speaks it of Rulers and Governors: Ye are all the Sons of the most high. To every of these, as much in effect is said, as Filius meus tu. But to which of them all, to which of the Angels said He at any time, Genui te, I have begotten thee? Not to any. Filius they were, but not genui, none of them all. So, Filius meus tu is communicated to others, but Genui te, to no creature, either in heaven or earth. Of none, is Genui to be verified in proper terms, but of CHRIST, and of CHRIST only.

Begotten; and this day begotten: Genui, and Hodie genui: for, begotten He had been before. Another begetting besides this, Two Genui's, a Genui before Hodie: Ex utero ante Luciferum genui te, said the LORD to my LORD, in the CX. Psalm. Twice begotten He was, This day begotten, and begotten ante Luciferum, before there was any morning Star, and so, before there was any day at all: and so, before any, quod cognominatur Hodie, any time that is called, To day.

VVe are to take notice of both these generations; Of Christus ante Luciferum, and of Lucifer ante Christum. To take notice of both: but to take hold of this latter. For, that, ante Luciferum was not for us, His second begetting, his Hodie genui, his this dayes begetting is it for us, it we hold by. Not, by his going out from everlasting: not by his olim, ante Luciferum, ante secula genui: None of these, Hodie genui is the last, that we are to preach: (that is) not his Eternal, but his Hodiernal generation. Not as GOD, of the substance of his Father, begotten before all worlds: but as Man, of the substance of his Mother, born in the World, when in the fulness of time God sent his Son made of a Woman. And that, was the hodie genui of this day.

Now the speculative Divino pierceeth yet deeper, he finds a further mystery in these two words, Dixit genui (that is, saith he) dicendo genuit. He said, he begat (that is) by his very saying, he begat. VVhere- in the very manner of his begetting, is set forth unto us.

There is a very near resemblance betwixt Dixit and Genui; betwixt begetting and speaking. To beget is to bring forth: so, is to speak to bring forth also. To bring forth a word, and Christ (you know) is called the Word. Now, when we speak, either we do it within, to our selves, or without to others. Either of which two, may well be compared to a like several begetting.

VVhen we think a word in our thought, and speak it there, within, to our selves, (as it were in silence) and never utter it: this (if you mark it well) is a kind of conceiving of generation: the mind, within of it self ingendring a word, while (yet) it is but in notion, kept in, and known to none, but to our selves. And such was the generation of the Eternal Word, the Son of God, in the mind of his Father before all VVorlds; and even to that doth the Apostle apply the Genui of this verse. And this is the first begetting or speaking.

Now, as the word, yet within us in our thought, when time comes that we will utter it, doth take to it self an airy body (or breath by the vocal instruments being framed into a voice) and becommeth audible to the outward sense: And this we call the second begetting or speaking. Right so, the eternal Word of God, by Dominus dixit, by the very breath of God, the Holy Spirit (which hath his name of Spiro, to breath) corpus autem apstati mihi, had a body framed Him, and with that body was brought forth, and came into the world. And so these words Genui te, this very day, the second time, verified of him. Genui and Dixit Genui; said, and by saying begot Him. For, how soon the Angels voice sounded in the blessed Virgins ear, instantly was he incarnate in the womb of his Mother.

Of both which words, Dixit and Genui, we can spare neither. There is good use of both. Of Genui: to shew the truth of the identity of his nature and substance, with his Father that begat him, and with his Mother that bare him. For, to beget is when one living thing bringeth forth another living thing, of the same nature, and kind it self is.

But (I know not how) the term of begetting, the very mention of that word, carrieth our conceit to a matter of carnality: therefore, is the word [Dixit] well set before it, to shew this Genui, was not by any fleshly way; to abstract it from any mixture of carnal uncleanness. That the manner of it was, onely as the word is purely and spiritually conceived in the mind. The one word [Genui] noting the truth. The other word [Dixit] the no way carnal, but pure, and concreate manner of His generation. And so I have gone over, the five terms of this Law, or (if you please) five points of this Text.

III.

The hardest is yet behind: For it will not sink into our heads, how this should be called a Law. It seems nothing lesse, rather a Dialogue between a Father and his Sonne. But a Law (sure) it cannot be. A law runs in the imperative: this is meerly Narrative: declares some-what, injoynes nothing; gives not any thing in charge, as Laws use to do.

John 10. 35.
Rom. 3. 4.

Sed non potest solvi Scriptura, GOD must be true in all his sayings; CHRIST may not preach false doctrine: A Law He hath called it; and we may not give it any other name.

There be that think, this verse is but the preamble, and that the body of the law doth follow, and reacheth to the end of the Psalm.

But, the better sort are of mind, that even this verse; taken by it self contains in it a law full and whole. Let us see then, whether we can find it so.

VVe pitch upon the Apostles division of the law, into Lex fidei, and Lex factorum. If both these be found in it, we may well allow it for a Law.

VVe will begin with Lex fidei: what we are to believe of Him. Of Him (that is) of these three: 1. Of His Person. 2. His Natures. 3. and His Offices.

And then come to Lex factorum. First, what He doth for us, the benefit of this Law. 2. And then, what we are to do for Him again, our duty of this Law. The former of which (the benefit) is the Gospel of this law. The later (the duty) is the law of this Gospel.

1 Of his Person.

Of His person first. That He is, of Himself, a person subsisting. Plain, by the two persons that are in the Text, Ego and Tu; the first and second person in Grammar; and the same, the first and second person in Trinity. Here is Ego genui, the person of the Father; and Filius meus tu, the person of the Son. Here is one begets: And (sure it is) nemo generat seipsum, none begets himself: but he, whom he begets, is a person actually distinguished from him, that begets Him.

John 14. 6.

But, of these two persons, this you will mark. That, the first that is named, is Filius meus tu. He stands first in the verse before Genui to. VVe hear of Filius, before ever we hear of Genui: For, that is the Person we hold by. By Nature; Genui should go before Filius meus; but quo ad nos, Filius meus is before Genui: To shew, there is no coming to the Father, but by Him; no interest in the Father, but from, and through Him, This for His Person.

tures.

And, in His person, we believe two natures, set down here in the two words, Hodie and Genui. If you do observe, there is somewhat a strange conjunction of these two words. One is present, Hodie, the other is perfectly past, Genui. In propriety of speech it would be a present act, for a present time: or it would be an act past with an adverb of the time past: and not joyn a thing in being (Hodie) with an action ended and done (Genui).

The joyning of these two together, the verifying them both, by one and the same person, must needs seem strange, And indeed, could not be made good, but that in that one party, there are two distinct Natures. To either of which, in a different respect, both may agree, and be true, both. Some little difference there will be about the sorting of the two words: which to referre to which. But, that will easily be accorded, for they will both meet in the end.

There be, that, because Hodie (the present) is yet in Fieri, and so not come to be perfect; understand by it, His temporal generation (as man) which is the lesse perfect, as subject to the manifold imperfections of our humane nature, and condition. And then, by Genui, which is in factum esse (and so, done and perfect) understand His eternal generation (as the SON of GOD) in whom are absolutely all the perfections of the Deity.

There be other, and they fly at a higher pitch, and are of a contrary mind: For, whatsoever is past, is in time (say they) and so Genui is temporal: and, that Hodie (that) doth best expresse His eternal generation: For that, nothing is so properly affirmed of Eternity it self as is Hodie. Why? For, there, all is Hodie: there, is neither Heri, nor Cras; no yesterday, nor to morrow. All is, to-day, there. Nothing past; nothing to come: all present. Present (as it were) in one instant, or center, so in the Hodie of Eternity. Past, and to come argue time; But, if it be eternal, it is neither: All there is present. To day then, sets forth eternity best (say they) which is still present, and in being. But Genui (that being past) cannot be His eternal at any hand; but must needs stand for his temporal.

But whether of these it be; Genui, His eternal (as perfect) and Hodie (as not yet perfect.) His temporal: Or vice versa, Hodie represent eternity best, and Genui, time, as being spent and gone. Between them both, one way or other, they will shew His begettings. You may weave Hodie with Genui, or Genui with Hodie, and between them both, they will make up the two Natures of Him, that was the Hodie genitus of this day. Concerning whom, we believe; as first, that He is one entire person, and subsists by Himself; So, second, that He consists of two distinct Natures, eternal and temporal. The one, as perfect God: the other, as perfect Man.

Of his Offices.

Now for His Offices. Them, we have likewise in the two words, Pradicabo and Legem. Pradicabo By that, it is plain, He doth preach. And that seems strange: for the last news we heard of Him (in the verse before) was, that he was set a King in Sion. And the word Legem imports as much: For, Laws (with us) are the Kings Laws.

A

A King to Preach? Let that alone for the Priests. That, is their Office; they shall teach Jacob his Judgments, and preach to Israel his Law. But preach He will (as he saith.) So, meus Filius will prove a Priest (as it seems:) A Priest, indeed. And, which is yet more strange, by vertue of these very words: Filius meus tu. No words (one would think) to prove him a Priest by; and we should hardly believe it, but that (in Heb. 5. 4.) the Apostle deduceth His Priesthood from these very words: No man (saith he) taketh unto him this honour, (that is, the honour of the Priesthood) but he, that was called of God, as was Aaron. And then he adds, No more did CHRIST, He took not this honour upon Him, to be our high Priest: but He, that said to Him [Filius meus tu, hodie genui te] He gave it Him. So that by vertue of these words, CHRIST was consecrated a Priest; as by vertue of the other [Posui te Regem] He was set a King in Sion.

And the place (Sion) suits well with both. For Mount Sion had two tops. On the one was the Temple built: on the other was the Kings Palace situate. The one for Pradicabo: the other for Legem. In the one (as King) he makes a law: in the other (as Priest) preacheth it. First, Posui Regem; and then, Pradicabo Legem.

And indeed the Kings that were his types, were mixt of both. Melchisedek; him the Apostle stands on at large, (in Heb. 7.) And if this Psalme be David's (as questionlesse it is, for, his it is avowed to be Act. 4. 25.) why then, he preach'd too. And for Salomon, it is too evident; we have his book of the Preacher. The like, may be said of Ezechias, and the rest by whom, this King (here) was in any sort represented. And by vertue thereof, they all had a greater care of publishing this law, here, than of any of their own lawes: as on the contrary, Ahab, and his race had more care of the keeping of the Statutes of Omri, then they had of the Lawes of GOD.

We believe then, for His Offices; that, He is both King and Priest. Hath a Kingdom to rule: Hath a Diocess to preach in. His Kingdom, the Heavens, to the uttermost parts of the earth: His Diocess, as large. His Auditory, all States, even the highest, Kings and Judges: for Pradicabo Legem concerns them all, And this, for lex fidei: what it binds us to believe of Him.

Now for Lex factorum. First, what shall be done to them, that live by and under this law. They speak of Lawes of grace: This is indeed, a law of grace; nay, it is, The law of grace: not only as it is opposite to the law of nature; but even, because it offereth grace, the greatest grace, that ever was. For, what greater grace or favour can be done to any, than to have these words [Filius meus tu] said unto him? This law doth it: for to them that receive it, it giveth power to be made the Sons of God.

The words seem to be spoken to one person onely; but (as lawes of grace use to be) are to receive ampliation, and to be extended, to the most benefit.

Dixit ad me. Said He it to Him, and said He it, to Him alone, and said he it to no other, but to Him? No: for, He gave it Him in charge to preach it; and to preach it, is to say it to others. Therefore it is, Dixit ad me, ut ad alios, per me: it was so said to Him, as that by Him, it might be said to others. Pradicabo makes it plain.

Pradicabo. When CHRIST doth preach, He is not to be understood to preach to Himself: no man doth so at any time; but to others more or lesse, that may be, or should be the better for His preaching. For, what needed it be preached, if it concern none, but Him? if none to have benefit, but He? if they, that hear it preached, shall receive no benefit by it?

So say we, of Legem. This law was not made for CHRIST: it needed not for Him (any law.) He was Filius meus tu plenus, et uerus, needed no law to make Him that, which by nature he was. The law was for others, which, by this law, were to be made that, which, by nature, they were not (that is) the Sons of God.

Take the very words. You see, His Text is not in the first person, Filius tuus Ego: His Text is, Filius meus tu. And, who is that, Tu? It cannot be CHRIST Himself by common intendment. The Father saith to Him, thou art my Son: But, to whom is it, that CHRIST saith, Thou art my Son? For, Filius meus tu, is His Text; that, He must preach on: He may not go from the words, or change the tenour of his Text. Who is then, that Sonus? To whom applyeth He His Text? To some other certainly. The Apostle saith, He was set and sent, that He might bring many Sons unto God, to whom God also might say, Filius meus tu. And himself likewise saith of himself in the Prophet: Behold, here am I, and the children which God hath given me.

And who be those Children? Those, whom He shall regenerate, and beget anew by his pradicabo Legem, the immortal seed: For, of His own good will beget He us, by the Word of truth, that We might be the first fruits of His creatures. These are the children, that are here meant. Of whom it shall be said, quod, per filium, filii, that in and by this Son, they shall be His Sons, all. And, what was said to Christ, shall be said to them, and every of them, Filius meus tu.

Of Sion saith the LXXXVII. Psalme, It shall be said, He was born in ber. And that is true, for so He was. But he goes on further, and saith, He did remember himself of Rahab, and Babylon, the Philistims, and the Moabians land, for, lo, there He was born. Born there? How can that be? Yes, born there, and here, and every where; where, by this Pradicabo Legem, He begets children to God. The power and vertue of his Birth reacheth even thither. Every place that receiveth His law (where ever it be) even there he is Born. This for his birth.

To this Birth there belongs a Birth-right. They talk much of the law, as of a birth-right: but (lo) this here, is a Birth-right, indeed; and that, verum nominis; and amounts to more than a Child's part. And it growes out of the double title, or interest, which he hath to all that is given him. For, as he is twice a Son, twice begotten, ¹ Anselucifarum, and ² Hodie: so hath he double right grows to him expressed in two distinct words (in the next verse) ¹ one of Inheritance, ² the other of Possession, or purchase; for, Abazza is true Hebrew for a purchase. Of which two, One contents him: his title, as Heir. The other he transcribes and sets over to us, which is that of his purchase, as Hodie genitus.

Mat. 3. 17.

But we need not so much as to go to the next verse for it. Filius meus tu, will serve; Which was said twice to him. ¹ Once, as his Baptisme, hic est filius meus. And so it is likewise at ours, to us; for, therein we are made members of Christ, and the children of God. ² And again, hic est Filius meus, at his transfiguration in the Mount. And we keeping the law of our Baptisme, the same shall be said to us likewise, the second time; and when time comes, we shall be transfigured into the glorious image of the Son of God. And this is, Lex factorum on his part: this shall be done for us by H. M. This we called the Gospel of this Law.

Mat. 17. 5.

Phil. 3. 21.

What we to do for Him:
The duty.

1 Pradicabo.2 Legem.

And what shall be done for us by Him? Which is the Law of duty on our part required; and which we called the Law of this Gospel: implied in the two first words, Pradicabo and Legem. Either word hath his condition. First, if he preach, that we bestow the hearing of him. And then legem, that we know it is a law he preacheth; and therefore so, and no otherwife than so, to hear it.

Hear him preach? that we will be entreated to, easily. If that be all, we will never stick with him for that. Nay Gods blessing on his heart, for (as the world goes) we are now, all, for preaching.

But take Legem with you too. It is so Pradicabo, as it is legem. Preached, and so preached, as it is a law, his Sermons are so many Law-lectures: His preaching is our Law to live by; And law binds, and leaves us not to live, as we list. And if that which is preached be law, it is to be heard, as a law; kept, as a law; to be made our lex factorum, as well as lex fidei. If we hear it otherwise, if we hear it not so, if we loose legem; we may let go Pradicabo too, and all.

Psal. 90. 9.

By legem,
what law is
meant.

And here now, we break. As a law? Nay none of that. The hearing we will give him: but soft, no law (by your leave.) Our case is this: So long as it is but Pradicabo, but Preaching, we care not greatly, though we hear it: but if it once come to legem, to be pressed upon us, as a law; farewell our parts; we give him over: for law binds, and we will not be bound. Upon the point, we are fast at Pradicabo, and loose at legem. Leave Christ his book to preach by; but keep the law in our own hands. But (to be short) if we hear it, not as a law; hear it not, but as news; if we bring our Sermons to an end, as a tale, that is told; if that be all; we forfeit all that follows, all our part and portion, in Filius meus, and Hodie genui and all.

By legem,
meant.

Now, if you ask, what law it is, is hear meant? No other, but the law, of these words, Filius meus tu: For, Filius meus tu, in the body of it, carrieth a law: That contains all Filial duties, which is the perfectest law, when all is done. For, the law of a Son is more, than all laws besides. For besides that it is lex factorum, that a Son will do any thing that is to be done; he will further do it, out of filial love and affection, which is worth all. And this Law (indeed) is worth the preaching. It is exhibita de Sion lex, the law that came from Sion.

Esay 2. 3.

Gal. 4. 24.

Rom. 8. 15.

The law of Sinas, that begins with Ego sum Dominus; it is a Law of servitude; a law for the bond-woman and her brood. Never preach it: at least, not to children. That law is to give place, and in place thereof, is to come the law of Sion, which we preach; the law of the free-woman, & the children of promise: the law of love, of filial love, proceeding, not from the Spirit of bondage, but from the Spirit of adoption.

There is lex factorum in both: But, as Gregory well expresses it, Si servus es, merus plagas, if thou be bond (as Ishmael) do it, out of servile fear, for fear of the whip. Si mercenarius, expecta mercedem: if thou be an hiring (as Balaam) do it, out of mercenary respect. Sed si filius meus tu; then do it, out of true, natural affection; perform all duties of a kind Son to him, that said, genui te, as did Isaac the son of the free-woman, to Abraham, that begot him, even to the laying down of his life. None to Timothy (saith S. Paul) none like minded to him; for, as a son with his father, so hath he laboured with me in the Gospel. So, (that is) so freely, so sincerely, so respectfully, as a loving, kind, natural son could do no more. And that is Lex factorum, indeed. And so much for lex factorum on our part; what we do for him: the filial duties: the Law of this Gospel.

Phil. 1. 10, 22.

1 The Time
hodie.

Heb. 3. 13, 15.

VVe lack nothing now, but the time. And as legem, is the condition; so hodie, is the time. VVe are willed by the Apostle to insist upon this word, Hodie, to call upon men for this duty, while it is called, To day. Not to defer, or to put off, or make a morrow matter of it. VVe are all inclined to be Crastini, or Perendini, for to morrow, or next day, or, I know not when; but not to be Hodierni. Hodie is no Adverb with us: for where shall we find one, but will take dayes for any matter of duty? To look to this Hodie, and not deceive our selves: for no time, but hodie, hath any promise: VVitnesse, Hodie, si vocem; To day if you will hear his voyce; which every day sounds in our ears.

Psal. 95. 7, 8.

But, Hodie genui, is more than Hodie: for every day in the year, while it lasts, is Hodie, To day: but every day is not Hodie genui. There is but one of them in the whole year; and that, is this day. This day then to take: of all other Hodie's, not to let slip the Hodie of this day. A day, whereon this Scripture was fulfilled: whereon, Dixit, & factum est, He said it, and did it; whereon, this Son was born, and given us: A day, whereon as it is most kindly preached; so, it will be most kindly praised of all others. And so, I hold you no longer; but end.

Praying to Him, that was the Hodie genitus of this day, Him, that was begotten, and Him, by whom He was begotten: that we may have our parts, as in Pradicabo, preaching; so likewise in legem, the law: in both legem fidei, to believe aright, and legem factorum, to live according: That we performing the filial duties required, may attain the filial rights promised, and may be in the number of those to whom first, and last, Filius meus tu shall be said, to our everlasting comfort; and to the praise of the glory of His grace, through Christ our Lord.

PSAL. LXXVIII Verſ. XXXIV.

Cum occideret eos, quærebant Eum: & revertebantur; & diluculo veniebant ad Eum.

When He ſlew them, then they ſought Him: and they returned, and inquired early after God.

THIS Psalm is a Callendar, or Roll of reports; how from Moses to David, the Iews carried themselves to God, in matter of Religion. And this verse, a report how in the matter of repentance (expressed here, under the terms of seeking and turning to God.) Wherein, this they did, this was their fashion; while He spared them, they sought Him not; When he slew them, then they sought him. Cum, &c. These words are a report.

A report: but such an one, as when S. Paul heard of the Corinthians, he could not commend it: What shall we say, shall we praise you in this? No, we praise you not. Neither He them, for that: Nor I these, for this. Rather as old Father Ely said to his sons: Non est bonus Sermo hic, quem audio de vobis; This is no good report I hear, Cum occideret, &c.

Whether good or whether evil, it pertaineth to us. For, to us of the Gentiles hath S. Paul entailed whatsoever well or ill befell the dissolved Church of the Iews: These, all these came unto them for example, and are enrolled, to warn us that grow nearer and nearer to the ends of the world.

Both pertaineth unto us; the Scripture hath both: And, in it draweth on our duty to us, in both, in good and evil reports; as it were in white work, and black work. And we have to use of both: Yet, not of both reports alike, but diversly, as our instructions upon them are divers. For we are not so much to regard the bare report, as the instruction of it. For which cause Asaph hath entitled this Psalme, not Asaph's report, but Asaph's instruction.

Now, we have here our report; May we find, what our instruction is touching it? VVe may. Asaph expressly hath set it down at the VIII. verse before. That this, and other errors of theirs are here upon the File, Ne fiant sicut patres eorum, that we should not be like our forefathers, a crooked and crooked generation. Not like them, in other indignities: and among other, in this Cum occideret, &c. Never to seek God but when he kills us.

In which foul indignity, our age is (certainly) as deep, as ever was that; And we need Asaph's instruction, no less than they.

For, as if there were no use of Religion, but onely Cum occideret, so spend we all our whole time, in the search of other things. Not caring to ask, or seek, or conferre about the state of our souls, even till occideret come. And then (peradventure) sending for Asaph, and hearing him speak a few words about it, which we would fain have called the seeking of God. I can say little to it; I pray God it prove so: but sure (I fear) it will be found Minus habens, far short of it.

Dan. 5. 27

VVhich is so usually received, that take a survey, not one of an hundred ever think of it, before. So securely practised, as if we had some Supersedeas lying by us, not to do it till then: As if there were no such Scripture as this upon record; which turned to their destruction, and must needs lie heavy upon us, when we shall remember it. Cum occideret, &c.

Now sure, this course must needs be prejudicial to our souls: and a number perish in it daily before our eyes. Yet we sit still, and suffer this custome to grow and gather head. Neither delivering their souls, or (at least) our own, by telling them seriously, this is not the time: and, then, to seek is not the seeking, God will allow. That this is a Ne fiant, such a thing, as should not be done in Israel. That it is upon record, et in Syria, to their disgrace and destruction: And it cannot be to our comfort or commendation, to do the like. Out of which their destruction, Asaph frameth an instruction for us: and (as it is well said, and fitly to this day) ex cinere Judaeorum luxurium Christianorum, of the Jews Ashes maketh a Le for Christians, to cleanse us from this foul indignity. Ut videntes cadentes, videntes ne cadant, that, heeding their fall, we take heed we fall not; that is, seek, not as they sought, lest we perish, by like example of seeking too late.

Therefore, that we set our selves to seek, before this Cum come: that is (in a word) seek God, as by repentance and the fruits; so by undelayed repentance, and the timely fruits of it; and be not like the Repoitie Jude's Michelmast spring, our seeking all Summer, withered and dry, and beginning to shoot out a little, about Michelmast spring: of which kind of shooting, fruit can never come. This is the sum.

The division
2 Cor. 6. 4.

The words consist of two parts. Two parts: but, these two evil matched, or (as S. Paul) unequally yoked together. For where our chief actions (of which I take it, our seeking of God is one) should have the chiefest time; Here, is the first and best of our actions sorted, with the last and worst part of our time: Querebant Eum, with Cum occideret.

And, not onely mis-sorted, but mis-placed. For, cum occideret, His killing standeth before our seeking: whereas our seeking should be first, and His killing come after. This was never Gods Fian: they must have a Ne fiant.

I.

Of these two, then. First by way of report; joyntly: that, de facto thus it is: thus, they; and thus, we seek.

II.

* Jer. 15. 19:

. Then, if we take them in sunder, and (as Jeremy saith) * Separate the precious from the vile. Querebant Eum, the flower of our actions, from cum occideret, the dross, dregs, and very refuse of our time. Consider them apart, and shew. 1. That this time is not the time. 2. And that this seeking, thus sorted and thus placed, is no seeking, nor ever shall find. Therefore, with Asaph's instruction, to settle our seeking upon some other time; and to resolve, to begin it before.

I.

Of both de facto joyntly:
1 Cum occideret.
Verse 33.

TWO powers there are in Cum: 1. A Privative, of all times before: 2. A Positive, of that instant time, then. No time, before, we seek: At that instant time, then, we do. On which two consisteth Theatrum vite, the very Theater of our life. Our case, before that time, is lively expressed in the words immediately precedent. They spent their dayes in vanity, and their years in turmoile in the world. Our case, then, at that time, in these words, cum occideret eos. Yea, by implication they are both in this verse: By what they do now, is implied what they did before. * Now, they sought him: So that, before, they lost Him. * Again, Then they turned to: So that, before they turned away, and nor once looked toward Him. * Now they rose up early: So that, before, they put it off till twilight. * Now they remembered: So that, before, they forgot Him clean; No speech, no question; nay, no thought about Him.

Thus it was (saith Asaph) under Moses. While His hand was not upon them; they regarded Him not, as not worth the seeking: Perdebant Eum, it was their losing time. But, when He slew them, they fell to seek; and well was he that might find: Querebant Eum, it was their seeking time.

2

Before, Querebant alia, they found themselves other matters more meet to seek: Then Querebant eum, they gave over all, to seek Him, onely.

3

Before, He sought them; and they gave Him good leave, so to do. Then all is turned out and in: As, He, them, before; So they, Him, now.

And

And is it not thus with us, that are now in theatro upon the stage? Yes indeed: and more, if more may be. This is but vetus fabula, per novos histriones, the same Play again by other Actors. For, in Publike: when in the dayes of safety, plenty, and peace, we are in the 6 of Amos, and are best at ease when Quarebant is farthest from us; but, if Warre, Famine, or Contagion come, then we runne to the I I. of Joel, Sanctifie a Fast, and call for the Ark, and grow all godly on a sudden: What is this, but Cum occideret? And in Private: VVhen while youth, and strength, and health doth last, while the evil day is farre off, we are even at cessare fac Sanctum Israel à nobis, Cause the Holy one of Israel to cease from us; But, when distresse, danger, or death come, when Rabsaketh is before the walls, then we cry, Now is the day of tribulation and anguish; now the children are come to the birth, and there is no strength to be delivered; Now, Send to Esay: Now, lift up thy prayer for the remnant that is left: VVhat is this, but Cum occideret? Surely, this is our case: Our seeking goeth wholly by our Killing: waxeth and waineth: is out and in, as that is neer at hand or farther off. I need not tell it, your eares and eyes are daily witnessers, that this is a true saying, Cum occideret eos, &c. No killing, no seeking.

Joel 2. 19.

Esay 37. 3. 14.

This is a true saying: but, all true sayings are not by all meanes (Nay some, not by any meanes) to be received.. The report (indeed) is, Thus it was. But the instruction, is Ne fiant, that it should not be, To the end then, we may know, what to receive and what to refuse, we will take it in pieces, and melt the drosse from the silver metal. Quarebant eum, by it self is good: Put occideret to it, it is base. Of these then in order.

I I.

Of each severally.

Of quarebant eum, we shall soon agree (if it be quarebant eum) that it is a Fiat, a thing to be done. VVhich, many other wayes might be made to appear, but by none better than this here: That, at last, all come to it: Sooner or later, all seek it: all men, if not before, yet cum occideret, then, certainly.

I Quarebant eum, our fiat.

All seek: And among all, They sought: which word is not without his weight here. For, what, are these, that Asaph here meaneth, by they? Not Saints: Not, generatio quarentium, the generation of them that seek G O D. But, they, that (in the verse before) wasted all their dayes in vanity, and their years in turmoiling in the world. They idle riotous persons: They sought.

Quarebant, they sought: they and all. Psal. 24. 6.

They, that (in a verse after) flattered Him with their lips, and gave Him all the good words that might be, and meant no such thing. The Hypocrites, They sought.

I
Ver. 33:

They, (that a little before) grievously provoked the most High G O D, with speeches little better than blasphemy, Can G O D doe this? Is there a G O D amongst us, or is there none? And so in stead of quarebant Deum; An Deus, made a question whether there were any to seek: That is, even the very wicked, and (of all wicked, the worst) the prophane Atheist, They sought, Even, at last, they sought. This, is the triumph of Religion: The Riotous person, The Hypocrite, The Atheist, all shall seek.

Ver. 19:

And herein is folly condemned even of her own children, and widome justified of her very enemies: That they, that greedily seek sin, at last would be glad to be rid of it: and they, that merily scorn Religion, at last are glad to seek to it.

They shall seek: And, the time is set down when they shall seek; and when you shall not faile, but see them seek, that never sought before. In diebus juventutis, not then: Sannus factum est, nor then, neither: But, cum occideret, then, certainly. Cum occideret, Mark this Cum, when it cometh, and you shall see them, that stood out all their life long, then come in.

The Heathen man saw it with his eyes. O (saith the Persian Messenger in Aeschylus) when the Græcian forces hotly pursued our Hoft, and we must needs venter over the great water Strymon, frozen then; but beginning to thaw, when an hundred to one we had all dyed for it (that is cum occideret;) with mine eyes, I say (saith he) when our's & his, &c. of those Gallants whom I had heard (before so boldly maintein, There was no G O D to seek, τοῦ θυξοῦ ἀναῖσι, then every one of them on their knees, and full devoutly praying, the Ice might hold till they got over. Moses saw it, with his eyes. Pharaoh (who was at high termes,) Who is the L O R D you talk of? (and answered himself) he knew none such, nor nothing would do for Him: When Cum occideret came, he took notice, there was a L O R D higher than he: that that L O R D was righteous, and he a wretched sinner, that sought for grace at His hands. Mark but the shutting up of dixit insipiens (their own Psalm.) When (saith David) they have in heart sought to perswade themselves, Non est: seek none, Non est: there is: and thereupon corrupted themselves; and became most loathsome in their lives, eat up their tenants, as they would do so many morsels of bread; made a mocke of such holy men, as set themselves seriously to seek G O D: When all is done, and occideret come, trepidabunt timore, ubi non erat timor, they shall begin to be afraid, where (they held before) no fear needed: And here shall be the last verse of their Psalm; Quis dabit à Sion salutem, to wish for the salvation of Sion: which they have so oft derided. They shall seek, and then they shall seek. Till then (possibly) you shall lose your labour, if you tell them of seeking of G O D but and how good it is. They are (saith Jeremy) like the Dromedary of the wilderness, a beast of exceeding swiftnesse, the female specially: Over hill and dale she goeth (saith the Prophet,) and snuffeth up the aire at her pleasure, and who can overtake her? They, that seek her, will not weary themselves, till her moneth: And in her moneth when she is bagged, then they will finde her, and deale with her well enough. The case is like. Age, sicknesse, death are farre off: Youth, health, and strength possesse them: there is no comming to them then. The moneth, cum occideret, is not yet come: But, come that once (as, once it will to all) you shall find, quarebant will have his place, Fiat. It is therefore G O D S own resolution; Thus He

He addeth: in novissimo quarent me diligenter, an end will come: and when that commeth, they will seek me diligently, even the best of them. And, even so we are faine to resolve: For, our lot, is GODS lot, and when He sought to them, we go to our place, and there stand, till their moneth, Expectantes aqua motum, waiting till the destroying Angel come and stirre the water, and then quarent eum will be worth the seeking after.

2 Cor. 5. 13. Then, according to S. Paul's disjunctive, we, that all other times mente excedimus Deo, at that time sobrii sumus vobis. Divinity, which (in our ruffe) is sophisme and school-points, and (at the best) a kind of extasie about God, is and shall be, then, the words of truth and sobernesse. For, GOD, and His seeking will have their time: Before, if it may be: but if not before, then, at the farthest. First, or last; all shall confesse, by seeking God is to be sought. Some, before He kill; and happy are they: But, when He killeth, all: Hypocrites, Heathen, Atheists, and all.

And I would pray you (in a word) but to note, in seeking then, how many things they confesse. For, there be (I take it) four potential Confessions in it:

1 That such an one there is to be sought. A Power above us, whose being and sovereignty all, first or last shall seek.

2 That somewhat there is to be found: some good to be done, in seeking (as Esay saith) Non frustra dixit, He hath not in vain said to the seed of Jacob, seek ye me. For, were it to no purpose, they would not then do it; but, as at other times they did, so let it alone then, too.

3 That, whatsoever that good is, hit upon it, or stumble on it, we shall not: It will not be had in parerge, but seek it we must. For, without seeking it will not be had. If it would, they might sit still, and let it drop into their laps.

4 That, seeking at this time when He slayeth them, they that shew what that good is, they seek. Even that, the Psalmist saith, seek the LORD, and your soul shall live: that whatsoever become of their body, at least, their soul may live: that we loose not both; that He kill not both, and cast both into hell fire. And this even when we come within the hemisphere of the other life, the sense we then have of somewhat that should have been sought before; the mis-giving of our hearts; they shall come to reckoning, for not seeking sooner: And this, that not one of us would die suddenly by our wills, but have a time to seek GOD; before we loose our selves: This, that we desire to die seeking, howsoever we live; all shew certainly, it is a Fiat, a thing to be done; a good thing to seek GOD, even the enemies of it, being Judges of it.

So then: querebant Eum is as it should be. But, I adde: * If it be querebant, seeking indeed, * And, if it be querebant Eum, and not alind in Eo: seeking, not Him, but somewhat else by Him. If it be seeking indeed. For they, to whom the Prophet Esay said, * Si queritis, querite; If ye seek, why then do it; sought so, as (it seemeth) their seeking deserved not the name of seeking. So loosely, so slightly, so slenderly, they did it; as if, that they sought were as good lost as found. So sought the party that said, In lectulo quaesivi quem diligit anima, that lay in bed and sought. So he that asked our Saviour, Quid est veritas? (a very good question:) and when he had asked it, another thing took him in the head, and up he rose and went: his may, before CHRIST could tell him, what it was. Such is our seeking, for the most part. Some idle question cast: Some table-talk moved: Some quid est veritas, and go our way: all by the way, Intransursu: and never, as if it were about some matter of special moment, sit about it, and seek it out indeed.

1. They turned them (saith the text:) as if, before, they sought, without so much as turning them about.

2. They rose up: as though before, they sate still and sought.

3. They did it early, and did not tarry till Cum occideret, the Sun were set, and no light to seek by, but their feet stumbled in the dark mountains.

4. They inquired: So that before, if you had ought to say to them, you might; they had nothing to say to you. To seek then, is to turn, to rise, to rise early, to enquire after it. O si queritis, querite (saith Esay,) the morning commeth, and so doth the night: that is, our dayes spend apace; and we say, we will seek: If we will seek, let us once do it indeed.

Secondly, if it be querebant, and if it be eum: Another point to be rectified. * Non vestra, sed vos (saith the Apostle) is the right seeking. Not, seek him, for somewhat we would have of Him; but to seek Himself, for Himself. It is one thing (say the Schooles) to seek GOD, for fruition: another, to seek Him, to make use of Him. One thing (saith CHRIST) to seek for the miracle; another, for the loaves. One thing, to seek his face; another, to seek His fingers ends. One thing to consult with Him only for conscience, to know and do: another, to consult with Him, if it hit out, humour to make our advantage of it; if it go against us, to set light by it. Such is our seeking for the most part: Cum occideret, to have our turn served; to have our health restored, that we may seek Him no longer, but to our former tyot again, and to morrow may be as yesterday, and much more.

2 Seek Him, indeed: Seek Him, for Himself. These two points being agreed of, we shall thoroughly agree of querebant eum. And, so much for it, and for our fiat. Now, to our Ne fiat.

For, vhen vve have agreed of our seeking, vve have not done. VVith * diligence, it vould be, and due respect. Our seeking (as all things, the best things under the Sun) must have tau' a'pay v' tau' x'apav, their due time and place. VVherein appeareth the abating power of Circumstances: that they are able 1 It must be querebant, seeking indeed. * Esay 21. 12. Cant. 3. 1. Ioh. 12. 30.

Esay 21. 12.

1 It must be eum, Him. * 2 Cor. 12. 14. Ioh. 6. 26. Psal. 105. 4.

2 Our Ne fiat: cum occideret, the time. * Hof. 5. 6. Iohn 3. 21.

to bring down the substances. Namely, of the time: And that, misfe-timing marreth not only misfe, but all things else. The thing is right, The Cum is wrong; and so, all is wrong.

To find out the time, we agree first, that as every weighty thing hath, so the seeking of God is to be allowed a time, too.

VVhat time is that? Verily, we should doe it absolutely, all our life long: Quarite faciem Ejus semper. Not, When? But, when not? without limitation, continually.

And, in this sense we grant Cum occideret: then, and at other times too. But, not (as Asaph) then, and never till then: So, we deny it:

GOD (indeed) is so to be sought: but we cannot so seek Him: Other our affaires crave allowance out of our time, and we are well content to yeeld it largely. Only that GOD hath a set time left, when to seek Him. That is but reason: all will yeeld to it. All grant a Cum.

But, come to knowv, vvhen that when shall be; here, vve vary, first. We cannot be brought to let downn any certainty, but love to be left at large. Doe it vve vvill; but (indeed) vve cannot shevv when; but even Felix his when, ô'ray d'aisphur, when we have leasure. I cannot novv stand to seek (saith he); I hope one day to be at leasure to do it: but, that day neuer came.

Urge them, presse them, When? No other resolution, but, omnis peccator dicit, Aliquando Deum sequar, sed non modo: Sometime still; but, not this time. Never in the present; but, sometime hereafter.

Follovv them all along their life, they finde not this Cum, but put it from one Cum to another, till there be none left, but only Cum occideret. Even that very time against vvhich GOD layeth His exceptions. Every time before, vve say, Nondum tempus, it is not time yet: Every houre before, Nondum venit hora, the hour is not yet come.

Not to leave GOD'S seeking thus at randome: But to grovv to some certainty. I demand, Will any time serve? Is GOD at all times to be found? It is certaine, Not. The very limitation (of dum invenire potest) shevveth plainly, that other times there be, vvherein, Seeks him you may, but finde Him you shall not.

Then, if, at all times. He is not to be found, vve are to make choice of a certaine Cum, Cum inveniri potest, vvhen He may be found, and then seek him.

Many returns there be, in the term of our life; Many Cum's: All are reduced totvvo: 1 Cum servaret, and 2 Cum occideret. Or (if vve vvill needs be vvadded, to a Cum occideret) 1 Cum occideret hostes eorum; 2 not, eos: VVhen He scattereth and slayeth our enemies, and saveth us. One of these tvvo it must needs be.

Cum occideret, it is not. CHRIST Himselfe expressely limiteth it, before: * Dedi ei tempus ad poenitendum; (saith he) I gave her a time to repent. VVhat time is that? Left vve might mistake it, to be Cum occideret: He adds; if vve doe it not in that time, so by Him given, He vvill cast us downe on our beds, the beds of affliction and sicknesse, and there kill us with death. So that, the time, He allowveth us to repent, is before vve come thither. For, thither vve come, because vve did it not in the time, he gave us to doe it in. Indeed, our bed is not the place. In lectulo quasi vi: I sought Him in my bed: quasi vi, sed non inveni: I sought Him, but I found Him not. The place of slaughter is not the place: Nor, the time of killiing is not the time. VVe may take that time: but it is not dedi illis, none of His giving. The time, He giveth us, is before we come there.

Then, if when he kills us, is not it when he saveth us? it is. It is indeed: and a cluster of it, at houre of cum servaret, then, is better than a vintage, a whole day of Cum occideret.

Upon these two the whole Psalm standeth: and the part (before) sheweth, when it should have been. When He over-whelmed the Egyptians in the Sea: When the pillar of the cloud was over: When, He not only saved them, but served them, raining downe Manna, for their need, and giving them Quails for their lust: then, was the time with them: and then, is the time with us.

For (sure) as we seek GOD, to save us: so, He saveth us, to seek Him. If when we seek Him, we are saved; when we are saved, we should seek Him. The time of His saving, is the time of our seeking: And, one houre, then, is better than four and twenty.

All that while, what seek we? VVhy (as Jeremy saith) we doe then quarere grandia. Other greater matters we have in hand: Matters of more weight than the seeking of GOD. As if His seeking were some pety businesse: Slightly to be sought, and lightly to be found. And any time good enough for it.

Nay, not that: but, so evil are we affected to seek Him, then, that quarebant is occideret: we indite Him of our death; it is death to doe it: as leese die, as seek: It maketh us old; it killeth us before our time. VVe digest not them, that call on us for it, but seek our selves (as the Apostle speaketh) Magistros secundum desideria, that may entertaine us with Speculations, of what may be done by miracle, at the houre of death: that may give us dayes and elbow-roume enough, to seek other things, and to shrink up His seeking into a narrow time, at our end; and tell us, time enough then. For, thus (then) we reckon: all the time we spend in it, we loose the fruit of our life, and the joy of our hearts shall be taken from us. As if the fruit of life were not to find GOD; Or, as if any true hearts joy, GOD being not found. Call we this our fruit and joy, not to seek God? Call it not so: Letetur cor quarentium Deum (saith the Holy Ghost) Let the heart of them rejoyce, that seek the LORD. Yea, in lachrymis peccatorum, in the very teares of a penitent, there is (saith Saint Augustine) more found joy, than in risu theatrorum, in all the games the Theater can afford. Da Christianum, & scit quid dico. But our taste is turned, and we relish not this seeking. By our flesh-pots we have lived, and by them we will dye, and so we doe. Lust hath been our life, and we will be buried in the gravis of Lust: And so we shall, and never know, what that joy meaneth, Latetur cor quarentium Deum.

I Cum occideret alios. Cum servaret then, will not serve. Nay, Cum occideret will scarce serve, it hath much adoe; Let him draw His sword and come amongst us. For if (as, of His goodnesse, He doth not) He rush not on us at first, but begin with others: If it be cum occideret alios: we seek not. See yee the XXXI. Verse: He took away others, before their faces; and those, not weak or sickly persons, but the goodliest and strongest of all Israel, and least likely to die: Here is occideret. Now, did this move? No. (See the XXXII. Verse:) for, at this they sinned yet more, and went about their seeking never the sooner. It must be cum occideret eos, themselves, their owne selves, or it will not doe it.

4 Cum caderet eos. Come then to themselves, and smite them with the edge, not with the point: with the edge, to wound; not with the point, to dispatch out-right; will that serve? Cum caderet eos, when He wounded them, with some mortal sicknesse the messenger of death, would they seek Him then? No: not then, not for all that, would they frame to it. For, quarebant medicum, then. I say, as Asa fought medicos, & non Deum: Not, GOD and them, but them first, and let GOD stay till they be gone. And till they give us over, and tell us plainly, occideret is now come indeed: no smiting or wounding will send us to seek. So that, it is not either Cum servaret eos, or Cum servaret eis, His saving, or serving us: Nay, it is not, Cum occideret alios, or Cum caderet, His killing others, or wounding us with any but our deaths-wound, will doe it.

It is Cum occideret, which is a Ne fiat. Tandem then, when we are come to the very last cast, our strength is gone, our spirit clean spent, our senses appalled, and the powers of our soul as numbas our senses: when a general prostration of all our powers, and the shadow of death upon our eyes: Then, something we would say or do, which should stand for our seeking: but (I doubt) it will not serve. This is the time, we allow GOD, to seek Him in.

Is this it? would we then seek Him, when we are not in case, to seek any thing else? Would we turne to Him then, when we are not able to turne our selves in our bed? Or, rise early to seek him, when we are not able to rise at all? Or enquire after Him, when our breath faileth us, and we are not able to speak three words together? Neither before, nor with, but even at the end of occideret? No hour, but the hour of death? No time, but when He taketh time from us, and us from it, & tempus non erit amplius? What shall I say? Shall I commend this seeking, turning, rising, enquiring? No: I cannot commend it, either in it self, or to any. I commend it not.

That that may be said is this, and it is nothing. True: some one or two of a thousand and ten thousand, that have. How then? Shall we not therefore follow our instruction and seek Him before? Esay 65. 1. Nay then, Some have found and never sought: Let us not seek him at all, if that will hold. Thus it is: Some, going a journey, have found a purse by the way: It were mad counsel, to advise us to leave our money behind, upon hope of like hap in ours. No: this is safe and good: Though some one or two have found and not sought; yet let us seek for all that. Though some one or two have, then, sought, and found, yet let us seek before. Though some have found a purse in their way, let us not trust to like hap, but carry money with us. This is a privy door, on special favour open to some few. There lyeth no way by them. This is the way, (you have heard) walk in it, and you shall find rest to your souls.

1 As not CHRIST'S time of seeking. To speak then of safe seeking, and sure finding, I say (as Asaph saith) it is a Ne fiat. This time is not the time CHRIST giveth us: He assigneth us another. Yea, we condemne our selves, in that we would seek to allow it our selves. If we were put to it, to say plainly; Not, till he kill me: it would choake us. We neither have heart nor face, we would not dare to answer so; we dare not avow it. And if it be a Ne dicant, it is a Ne fiat. The time of GODS quarise is Primum quarise. This Cum is the last of all our Cum's; all other before it. First, and last are flat ad oppositum. This is not it.

2 Not the acceptable time. The time of seeking GOD must be Nil, such as is meet to be received. This, is not: Therefore (I hope) we will not offer it GOD. If we do, take heed He scorn not this time, as He doth their price, in Zachary: A goodly time that I have assigned me. Take heed He stand not upon His reputation (as in Malachi) and bid us Offer our service, at this hour, to any great man and see, whether he will be content with it, and not reject both us and our seeking, then. This, is not; cannot be but a great Ne fiat; To offer GOD that, no man is so mean, but would take in evil part.

3 No time of seeking, but of dissembling. This time, is the time, when all Hypocrites, Atheists, tag and rag come in, and seek Him in a sort: And shall not we be confounded to see our selves in their number? Nay, to say that must be said (for, true it is.) It is past the Devils time. They be his words [Cur, ante tempus?] and he seeketh to make them ours, that it is ever too soon to seek GOD. At the hardest (I trust) we will not keep time with Him.

And, to seek Him then, is not to seek Him: Not quarebant Eum. No: they seek Him not, they dissemble with him (saith Asaph, in the next verse.) For, when GOD, to try them, reprieved them never so little time, they fell to their old byas; and vvhen as He ceased killing, their seeking vvvas at an end. So are all forced seekings: like to a bow-string brought to his full bent, but remit you never so little, it starteth back again.

Nay, it is not quarebant, not kindly seeking, but a base ignoble creeping to, vvithout all all ingenuity, when we must either die or do it. Neither quære nor quære to do it then.

But in very deed it is not seeking at all, as before we defined quærebant, so seek indeed. There is a diameter between occideret and quærebant, and therefore, between it and quærebant Enum. Men cannot then seek: If they must rise up, and turn them that must do it; they are not able for their lives; to turn or stirre themselves to do it. Nay, nor to enquire. For, what is our seeking then? Is it not to lie still on our bed, and suffer a few words to be spoken in our eares? Have a little opiate Divinity ministered to our souls, and so sent away? Sure, this is rather to be sought, than to seek. There goeth more to Quærebant, then thus. We must then seek, when we are in case, to give sentence, and so doe judgement on our selves: When we are able to take up our crosse, before it be laid on us. Quærebant enim must stand before cum occideret.

Lastly, it would be known, What became of this Quærebant? What they found that sought thus; and then, and not before? They found not Him, the Prophet saith plainly: They go then, with sheep and bullocks, and all manner of sacrifice, to seek the Lord, but find Him not; for He hath with-drawn himself before. Their successe of it. Hof. 5. 6.

And justly they find Him not, ex lege talionis. GOD himself answers them; nay, their own hearts answers themselves: Go, whom you have spent your life in seeking, seek to them now. Let them save you, at this, whom you sought at all other times. As for me, it shall come to passe, as I cryed and you would not hear; So, you shall crie and seek, and shall not find, or be heard, (saith the LORD.

Yes, they found Him; but, with a door shut between Him and them. But, what found they? The Parable of the ten virgins tells us (which is the Gospel for this Psalm) they found (that which we, I hope, shall never find) a Nescio vos. Where (that we may see, that this course is folly, and therefore indeed a ne fiant sicut) that which putteth the difference of those that be wise and go in, is that they had sought and looked to their oyle per the Bridegroom come: And those that were foolish and shut out, when the Bridegroom was even coming (that is cum occideret) were to seek their oyle then; had not looked to it, till then. Nescio vos is their answer, He knoweth them not: they took too short a time, to breed acquaintance in. Nescio vos they find, that so seek. Profecto ad hoc venit, &c. At this clap, he that waketh not, is not asleep but dead. Mar. 25. 13. Mar. 25. 41

To conclude then, with our Instruction. If this time, and this seeking have so many evil marks: the time so unseasonable; the seeking so many ways to seek: If the successe to this seeking be no better, but Nescio vos: Why then Ne fiat. If these here were not well advised: If those Virgins were foolish: why then, Ne fiant sicut, not to be like. Our Instruction

Secondly, To sever the silver from the dross; The seeking is good, keep it: the time is wrong, change it; Either into Antequam occideret, or into Cum servaret. Fiat to the action, Ne fiat, to the time. 2

Thirdly, As we confesse, that there is one to be sought: And that, with the turning of a ginne we cannot have Him, when we list, but seek Him we must: That His seeking is worth the while: And that it is not dispatched in a minute, but must have time: So, to think His seeking worthy a better, and to allow it a better time than this to do it in. 3

Fourthly, seeing yet is the acceptable time; Yet, He may be found; Yet, it is cum servaret; occideret is not yet come; (How neer it is, it is hard to say: Our SAVIOUR CHRIST saith, it is quæ hora nescis, it may be neerer than we are aware:) Let it come upon us before we seek; let us seek, before it come upon us. So seeking, we shall safely seek: Safely seek, and surely find GOD; and with GOD, whatsoever is worth the finding. But (that which we seek) we shall, after occideret is past, find our selves in His presence, and at His right hand, In whose presence, is the fulnesse of joy, (Not as ours here, joyes half empty:) and, at whose right hand, there are pleasures for ever more; (Not as ours here, for a time, and a short time, GOD knoweth.) Luk. 13. 49. Psal. 16. 11.

That, which here we seek and cannot find, with Him, we shall; if we shall here, indeed, and in due time seek Him, by the timely fruits of an undelayed repentance. Almighty GOD lighten our minds kindle our affections, settle our hearts so to seek, &c.

At what time the Earle of ESSEX was going forth, upon the Expedition for IRELAND.

DEUT. XXIII. Verse IX.

Quando egressus fueris adversus hostes tuos in pugnam, custodies te ab omni re mala.

When thou goest out with the Host against thine enemies, keep thee then from all wickednesse.

Luk. 4815.

Psal. 114. 10.
1 Sam. 15. 29.

O entitle this time to this Text, or to shew it pertinent to the present occasion, will ask no long preface. When thou goest forth, &c. This When is Now. There be enemies: and we have an Host: it is going forth. CHRIST'S own application; (which is the best) may be well applied here. This day, is this Scripture fulfilled in your eares. This our Host so going forth, our hearts desire and prayer unto GOD is, that they may happily go, and thrice happily come again; with joy and triumph to Her Sacred Majesty; honour to themselves, and general contentment to the whole Land. So shall they go, and so come, if we can procure the Lord of Hosts to go forth with, and to take charge of our Hosts. It is he that giveth victory to Kings (saith DAVID): It is He that is Triumphator Israel (saith Samuel): Victory and triumph never fail, if He fail not.

Now then, that God may not fail them, but go in and out before them, and bring them back with victory and triumph, and that, we all desire and pray for, may so come to passe; Moses doth here, out of his own experience, bestow an advise upon us: (And Moses could could skill what belonged to war, as one that fourty years together was never out of camp.) Which advise is: that among our military points we would reckon the abatement of sin for one: That now this time of our going forth, we would go forth against sin too; and keep us from it, as we would keep, us from our enemy. If we could be but perfwaded to reform our former custome of sin, it would (certainly) do the journey good. That therefore with other courses, some remembrance, some regard be had of this; that, at this time, sin do not so over-flow among us, be not so very fruitful as before time it hath.

And this is an use of Divinity in war. And, as this an use of Divinity, in war: so have we withal an use of war, in Divinity. For, Moses telling us, that when our forces go forth against the enemy, that we, Then, at that time, are in any wise to keep us from wickednesse: by sorting these thus together, doth plainly intimate: that, when the time of war is, then is a fit time, a very good opportunity, to draw from sin and to return to G O D. These former years, this time of the fast, and this day, the first day of it, (both) ministred an occasion to call for an abstinence from sin: This day, and this time being set out by the Churches appointed to that end. Now, besides that ordinary, of other years, G O D, this year, hath sent us another, the time of war: and that a very seasonable time too, wherein to repent and retire from sin. As if he should say: If you will forsake sin, now you may do it: For behold, now is an acceptable time, and a fit season. This time to concur with that time; and both to co-operate to the amendment of our lives.

And what shall I say? O that one of them, the former or the latter, or both might prevail so much with us, that as the fore-part, this day is fulfilled in our eares, so, the latter part might be fulfilled in our lives: that it might not be singly regarded, that is thus doubly commended: That the fast at hand might keep us; or the war at hand might keep us; or both might keep us; that we might be kept from sin. That either Joel's trump proclaiming a fast, or Amos's trump proclaiming war, might serve to sound this retreat, might serve to awake us from that (now more than sleep,) even almost that Lethargie of sin, which the security of our so long peace hath cast us in.

This is the Summe. These, the double use, ¹ Of war, in Divinity: that our going forth might procure the giving over sin. ² Of Divinity, in war: that our giving over sin might procure good speed to our going forth; even an honourable and happy return.

The parts are two: (For, the Verse parteth it self by when, and then.) These two: ¹ the going forth of the Host. ² The keeping from sin. To expresse them in the terms of the present businesse: ¹ The former, the Commission authorizing to go. ² The latter, the instruction directing so to go, that we may prosper and prevail. In which latter will come to be considered these three points. 1. The Conjunction and Coherence of these two. 2. The Consequence. 3. The Contents of the latter; How to keep us from sin.

sion.
I.
II.

When thou goest forth, &c. In the first is the Commission, which is ever the corner-stone of all proceedings. If we take the Verse entire, both parts together, it riseth thus: If they which go to war must keep themselves from sin, then is war no sin, but lawful; and, without sin, to be undertaken. Or, if we take the first part by it self, in saying, when thou goest, he implyeth, a time will come, when they may go forth. For, vain were the supposal and far unworthy the wisdom of G O D S Spirit to say, when; if never any such time should come: if there were no time for war, of Gods allowance. We cannot better pattern it, then by the Gospel of this day [when ye fast, be not like hypocrites] by all Divines resolved this. Fast ye may sometimes; and then fasting, look you fall not into hypocrisie. And as in that, so in this: Go ye may, sometimes: Only, When ye go, see ye refrain from sin, and then go and spare not. Out of which match of these two, Fast, and War, we may rise higher.

It is no lesse usual with the Prophets, to say, Sanctificate praelium (as Joel 3.) then to say Sanctificate jejunium (Joel 2.) Sanctifie a war, as well as a fast. And in another, Consecrate manus vestras hodie Domino, consecrate your hands, this day unto the L O R D. Which sheweth war is not so secular a matter, but that it hath both his lawfulness and his holiness: and that the very hands may be sacred or hallowed, by fighting some battails. And therefore, in the Calendar of Saints, we have nominated, not Abel, Enoch, and Noe alone, men of peace and devotion, who spent their time in prayer and service of God: But Gideon, Ieptho, Sampson, worthies and men of war, who (saith the Apostle) through faith were valiant in battel, and through faith put to flight the armies of Aliens. War therefore hath his time and commission from God.

Secondly, I add that this kind of war; Not onely defensive war, but offensive too hath his when. Both these have their time: The former to maintain our right: the latter, to avenge our wrong. By both these wayes, doth G O D send His people forth: Both have warrant. Thirdly: And to strengthen the hands of our men of war yet further. As war, and To go forth to war; Against our enemies, any enemies, whether forreign foes, or rebellious subjects: So, of all enemies, against the latter, against them to go forth, hath ever been counted most just and lawful. Many Commissions are upon record in the law, of journeyes in this kind. Against the tribe of Reuben; for erecting them an altar, beside that of Moses: And, that have these of ours done too. Against the tribe of Benjamin, for a barbarous, and brutish outrage committed at Gibea: And, that have these too; And not one, but many. Against Seba, for blowing a trumpet and crying, No part have we in David, no inheritance in the son of Isai: And, so far hath their madnesse proceeded. And the Gospel is not behind neither. Against them that sent word, Nolumus hunc regnare super nos, producite & occidite (saith our SAVIOUR CHRIST Himself,) In effect, they say as much as nolumus: and as much may be said and done to them. Nay, if once he say no part in David; if he were Absolom, or Adoniah (of the blood royal) he hath spoken that word against his own life; Much more, if but such a one as Seba the son of Bichri. And yet, even he was nothing so deep as this. For, neither had King David vouchsafed him any favour, any time before; neither offered him peace, or to receive him to grace, after he had lift up his heel against him. But here, here have been diverse Princely favours vouchsafed, and most unkindly rejected; means of Clemency many times most graciously offered, and most ungraciously refused: yea, faith falsified, and expectation deluded; contempt upon contempt heaped up, that the measure is full. These then are the enemies against, and this the time when. When not only we may, but must; and that, not with GODS leave only, but with His liking and full commission, Go forth in this cause. So that, war is lawful: and this kind, to go forth: and against these enemies, most just and most lawful. At this time, against these enemies, it is a war sanctified, they shall consecrate their hands, they shall præstari prælia Domini, that fight against them. So much for the Commission.

The Instruction.

The Conjunction, that it is needful.

The Commission being had, we are not to depart, but to stay and take our Instructions also with us: Which is the later part, of keeping from wickednesse. JOSUA had his Commission from GOD, to go up against AI: Yet, for leaving out this later, and not looking to Acan better, had not so good speed. This therefore must accompany, and keep time with the former, as a Then to that When.

1. Wherein first, of the joyning these two, 'that they must go together' and (of the reason) why they must go together.

2. And after, of the manner; how we may and must keep our selves from this wickednesse.

The meeting of these two within the compasse of one Verse, 'Going forth with an army, and Forbearing of sin, is worth the staying on.

Leading an army, pertaineth to Military policy: Forbearing of sin, is flat divinity.

For, what hath the leading an army to do with forbearing of sin? Yet, GOD hath thus sorted them, as we see. Therefore Policy of war; whereto the former; and Divinity whereto the later belongeth, are not such strangers one to the other, as that, the one must avoid while the other is in place. But that as loving neighbours and good friends (here) they meet together, they stand together, they keep time, consequence, and correspondence the one with the other. God Himself, in whose imperial style (so oft proclaimed in the Prophets) they both meet, The LORD of Hosts, the holy one of Israel: GOD (I say) Himself in the great Chapter of War (the twentieth of this Book) assigneth an employment to the Priests, as well as the Officers of the Camp: even to do that (which yer while was assayed) to animate the Companies in the LORD, and the power of his might; letting them see the right of their cause, and how ready GOD is to receive the right under the banner and power of His protection. And from GOD Himself (no doubt) was that happy and blessed combination, which in most wars of happy successe, we find, of a Captain and a Prophet sorted together: 'Jesua with Moses a Prophet; Baruk with Debora a Prophetesse; Ezechias, with Esay; Josaphat, with Jaaziel; Jons, with Elisha: And one of these doing the other no manner of hurt, but good. Jesua lifted up his hand, against Amalek: Moses lifting up his hand, for Jesua. The one leading against the enemy and annoying him; the other leading against sin, and annoying it; Against sin (what some reckon of it, it skils not, but) certainly the most dangerous enemy both of private persons and of publick States.

These two then, 'Going forth with the Host, and Departing from sin, being thus linked by GOD, our suit is, Break not this link: GOD hath joyned them, that we should joyne them. And this is a needful suit. For, it is one of the diseases under the Sun; in war, all our thoughts run upon the Host; Looking to the Host onely, and nothing but the Host: and letting sin run whether it will without any keeper. I know well; I both know and acknowledge, that the armies going forth is mainly to be regarded: It hath the first place in the Verse; and it hath it not for nought. JOSUA must choose out men first: Vidua must be supplied (Judg. 20.) And nemo militat stipendiis suis, Pay must be thought of. We must go forth with our Host; (They be the words of the Text:) Go; not sit still: And, with an Host; not a heap of naked, or starved men. We must help, and not tempt GOD. To help GOD, is a strange speech; yet, said it may be, seeing an Angel said it. Curse ye Meroz (saith the Angel of the LORD) curse the inhabitants thereof; VVhy? because they came not to help the LORD, to help the LORD against the mighty. This must first be done. But, when this is done, all is not done: VVe are not at a full point; VVe are but in the midst of the sentence yet. As that part (of the Host) is to be regarded; so, this (of fin restraint) is not to be neglected. As, that hath the first place: so must this have the second, and second the former, or we shall have but a broken sentence without it. There is not, there cannot be a more prejudicial conceit, then to say in our hearts: the first be well, all is well: then sin on and spare not; it skills not greatly, for the later. Si putas, in robore exercituum bella consistere, faciet te Dominus cadere coram inimicis tuis (saith the Prophet to Amasia) If this be your conceit, so the Host be well, all is well: GOD will teach you another lesson (saith he) which I list not English. A proof whereof we have, before Gibeon. Where the whole power of Israel (40000 strong) trusting in their going out so strong, fell before a few Benjamites, a small handful in comparison; and shewed plainly to all ages to come, that it is but a part, it is not all, to go forth with an Host, though never so well appointed.

2 Chr. 35. 7, 8.

Jud. 10. 17.

Let us then (as advice leadeth us) make up our period with taking a course for restraint of fin. For, what sin unrestrained can work, the valley of Achon may teach us; where, the inhabitants of the poor town of Ai, put to flight JOSUA with all his forces; and all, because this second point was not well looked to.

Jud. 7. 5.

Now, this second point being within the compass of our profession, and yet having so necessary a use in war, as the sentence is not perfect without it, may serve to answer the question (more usually then advisedly oft cast out) What good do these Church-men? VVhat use is there of them (now) at such times as this? Yes, there is a use of them, and that in war, we see. The Camp hath use of this place; and they that serve there, of them that serve here. Which GOD sheweth plainly, in the first field that ever his people fought; and, when he had shewed it, caused it to be recorded ad perpetuam rei memoriam (they be Gods own words) that the same course might be ever after holden in all. VVere it is thus written (and, if we believe not, we shall not be established) that Iosua having the better, or going to the worse, depended not a little on the steddiness of MOSES hands: and, that MOSES, staying behind and striking never a stroke, did his part toward the attaining of the victory, not much lesse than Iosua, that went forth and fought manfully. Prayer then is of use: and though we be (saith S. Paul) armed at all points from hand to foot, yet must we super omnia, over all, draw this; and arm even our very armour with prayer and supplications.

Ephes. 6. 18.

But what availeth prayer, without keeping from sin? Therefore, to that armour of S. Pauls, we must adde S. Peters too, To arm our selves with this mind of ceasing from sin, that our prayers may be effectual. Therefore MOSES himself joyneth not to our going forth his exercise of keeping up our hands at prayer; but this rather of keeping our feet from sin. The King of Moab (Balak) when he observed what prayer had wrought in the battail of Amaleck, thought to take the very like course, and sent for Balaam into his Camp; to match Prophet with Prophet, and to oppose prayer unto prayer. But when all his altars and rams would do no good; Balaam knowing well, there is, in sin, a power to defeat any prayer, he cometh to the dangerous counsel of causing Israel to sin with the daughters of Moab: which was found too true. For, it turned to their ruin, and all their prayers would then do no good. Here is then another use. For, the chariots and horses of Eliab, the weapons of our warfare (as the Apostle termeth them) though not carnal (if GOD enable them, to cast down such sinful thoughts and wicked desires, as exalt themselves daily, and to captivate them to the obedience of CHRIST) have (certainly) their use to second the former: and, we, in our turnes, serviceable, as by crying unto GOD by prayer, and drawing Him to the Host, who is our chiefest and best friend; so by crying also against sin and chasing it away, which is our chiefest and worst enemy. Since then these two have this mutual use either of other, let this be our petition (and withal, the conclusion of this part:) That we sing: them not, or leant to either alone, but suffer them, as they stand together in the verse, so, in our care and regard, joynly to keep time and go together. So much for them.

2 King. 13. 14.

2 Cor. 10. 4.

And now to enquire into the reason of this coupling. VVhy, now? why, at this time (in war) a giving over sin. For that (indeed) they be not barely joyned; but, so joyned, as one is made the antecedent, the other the consequent. One, the time, and (as it were) the reason to infer the other. Truly MOSES word [15] will bear both, either Quando or Quia: When thou goest, then keep; or Because thou goest, therefore, keep thy self from sin. VVith the same word I speaketh the vertuous Lady to King DAVID, Quia praeliis praelia Domini, ideo non invenietur in te iniquitas. Because thou fightest the LORDS battails, therefore let there not any iniquity be found in thee, all thy dayes.

III.

The Reason of the conjunction.

1 Sam. 25. 28.

Sin (certainly) at all times is to be forborn. VVhen it is war: and not only when it is war, but when it is peace too, Take ye heed, lest at any time (saith CHRIST) Your hearts be over-laid with surfeiting, with drink, &c. Not allowing us any time, to be wicked in. But though at all times we be to refrain sin; Yet, not at all times, alike (saith MOSES) here. For it is, as if he should say: Be it at other times, sin may better be born with. It is lesse perilous: But, when thou goest forth with an Host: Then, then, with an high accent, with an emphasis (that is) then especially, then, above all other times, then, if ever, it importeth you to have least to do with it. Good LORD, how croffe and opposite is mans conceit to GODS, and how contrary our thoughts unto his! For, even ad oppositum, to this position of His, We see (for the most part) that even they, that are Goers forth, seem to perswade themselves, that, Then, they may do what they list; that at that time, any sin is lawful: that, war is rather a Placard, than an Inhibition of sin. A thing so common, that it made the Heathen man hold, that between Militia and Malitia, there was as little difference in sense, as in sound: And the Prophet DAVID, to call Sauls Companies in his dayes, Torrentes Belial, the Land-floods of wickedness. VVhich being well considered, We may cease to murre or to marvaile, if our going forth have not been been ever with such successe, as we wished. GOD, who would give the successe, commanding then a restraint; and man, that should need it, then, taking most liberty. Verily, if we will learn of GOD, if He shall teach us, Sin is never so untimely, as in the time of vvar: never so out of season, as then: for, that is the time of all times, we should have leaft to do with it. To insift then a little upon this point, because it is the main point, and to shew the vigour of this consequent.

Mat. 12. 24.

1 From the very nature of war, first: Which is an act of Justice, and of Justice corrective, whose office is to punish sin. Now then, consider and judge, even in reason; What a thing this is, how great, grosse, and foul an incongruity it is, to poure out our selves into sin, at the very time, when we go forth to correct sin: To set forth to punish rebels, when we our selves are in rebellion against GOD, His words, and Spirit. Which, what is it but to cast out Devils by the power of Beelzebub? Sure, our hearts must needs strike us in the midst of our sin, and tels us, we are in great and grievous prevarication; allowing that, in our selves, that we go to condemn and to stone to death, in others. Therefore, since to go to War, is to go to punish sin: Certainly, the time of punishing sin is not a time to sin in.

Esay 10. 5.

Jer. 50. 23.

2 Sam. 2. 14.

Verse 26.

2 Secondly, from war, in respect of GOD. I know not what we reckon of War: Peace is His blessing (we are sure) and a special favour it is from him (as the Prophets account it) for a land to spend more iron in sitches, and plow-shares, then in sword-blades or spear-heads. And, if peace be a blessing, and a chief of His blessings, we may deduce from thence what War is. To make no otherwise of it then it is, the rod of Gods wrath (as Esay termeth it:) his iron stile (as Amos:) the hammer of the earth (as Jeremy) whereby he dasheth two nations together; One of them must in pieces; both, the worse for it. War is no matter of sport. Indeed, I see Abner esteem of it as of a sport; Let the young men rise (saith he to Joab) and shew us some sport. But I see the same Abner, before the end of the same Chapter, weary of his sport, and treating with Joab for an end of it: How long shall the sword devour (saith he) shall it not be bitterness in the end? So, it may be sport in the beginning; it will be bitterness in the end, if it hold long. War then being GODS rod, His fearful rod, and that so fearful that King David (though a Warriour too) when both were in his choice, preferred the Plague before it, and desired it of the twain: VVhen Gods hand, with this rod, this His fearful rod, is over us, to be so far from fear, and all due regard, as, then, not to shun sin any whit the more, but to fall to it as fast as ever: it cannot be, but a high contempt; yea, a kind of defiance and despite, then, to do it: Do we provoke the LORD to anger, are we stronger than he? Then, since VVar is GODS rod, choose some other time: under the rod, sin not; then, forbear it: Certainly, that time is no time to sin.

2 Cor. 10. 22.

3 The rather, for that, sin it is, and the not keeping from sin, but our keeping to it and with it, that hath made this rod, and put it into His hand. For, sure it is, that for the transgression of a people, GOD suffereth these divisions of Reuben within; GOD stirreth up the spirit of Princes abroad to take peace from the earth: thereby to chasten men, by pating the growth of their wealth, with this His hired razor; by wasting their strong men (the band of the enemies eating them up;) by making widowes and fatherlesse children; by other like consequents of war. If then our sins (common unto us, with other nations) and that our Unthankfulness (peculiar to us alone) have brought all this upon us; if this enemy have stirred up these enemies; if war be the sickness, and sin the surer, should we not (at least-wise now, while the shivering fit of our sins is upon us) diet our selves a little and keep some order? but drink iniquity as water, and distemper our selves as though we were in perfect state of health? Shall we make our disease desperate, and hasten our ruin by not containing from sin? that hath cast us in it? Know we, what time this is? Is this a time of sin? Certainly; we cannot devise a worse. In the time of VVar, it is high time, to keep us from sin.

4 But, above all (which will touch us nearest, and therefore again and again must be told us over,) that the safe and speedy coming again of them that now go forth (whose prosperity we are to seek with all our possible endeavours) that their good speed dependeth upon GODS going forth with them: and GODS going or staying dependeth very much upon this point. Most certain it is, the event of war is most uncertain. VVhen Benhadad went forth with an army, that the dust of Samaria was not enough to give every one in his camp a handful, it was told him (and he found it true) No glorietur accinctus, &c. He that bucklath on his armour must not boast, as he that puts it off. They that fight can hardly set down, what name the place shall have that they fight in: It may be the valley of Achor (that is, sorrow) by reason of a foil, as that of Iosua; It may be the valley of Beratha (that is, blessing) by means of a victory, as that of Iosaphat. All is, as GOD is, and as he will have it. * Once, * twice, and * thrice, by David, by Salomon, by Iosaphat, we are told it, that It is neither sword nor bow; It is neither Chariot nor horse; It is neither multitude nor valour of an Host will serve: But that the battail is GODS and He giveth the upper hand. VVe need not be perswaded of this; we all are perswaded (I hope) & we say with Moses, If thy presence go not with us, carry us not hence. Then, if we shall need GODS favour and help in prospering our journey, and to make that sure which is so uncertain; it will stand us in hand, to make sure of Him, in this, this needful time; and to keep Him sure, if it may be. For if He keep with the Host, and take their parts, Rebelles inierunt quasi nihil (saith Esay;) and these smoking sailes of firebrands, shall quickly be quenched. But, if GOD either go not with them, or retire from them; If there were among them but naked or wounded men; (what speak I of men? If but frogs or flies) they shall be sufficient to trouble them.

Esay 7. 7.

Now then, we are at the point. For, if we will have hold of GOD, make him sure, be certain of of Him; we must break with sin, needs. Sin and Satan, are His enemies; and no fellowship nor communion, no concord, no agreement, no part, no portion between them. If we will draw Him into league, we must profess our selves enemies unto his enemies, that He may do the like to ours. At one and the same time enter, as an outward war with wicked rebels, so an inward hostility with our wicked rebellious lusts. For that if we keep our selves from the one, He will keep us from the other: and these being suppressed, those shall not be able to stand. Thus doing, the sword of the LORD shall be with the sword of Gedeon: GOD shall be with us, Ishiel; and we shall prevail, Ucal. For where Ishiel is, Ucal will not be away. But if we will needs hold on our league with hell, and continue our wonted intercourse with wickedness still, and go forth unto it when it beckens or calls, and be so far from keeping from it, that we keep it as the apple of our eye, and cherish it between our breasts: If we retain the mark of it in our very fore-heads, and the price of it in the skirts of our garment: for not keeping from it, He will keep from us, and with-draw His help from us, and put us clean out of His protection.

2 Cor. 6. 15.

Prov. 30. 19

Therefore, without keeping from sin, there is no keeping GOD; out of whose keeping there is no safety.

This advise being so full of behoofe, so agreeable to reason and religion both, so every way for their and our good: it remaineth, we set our selves to think of it and keep it: * Every one returning to his own heart, to know there (as Salomon saith) his own plague, even the sin wherewith he hath grieved GOD; and to make a covenant with Himself, from henceforth more carefully to stand upon his guard; and not to go forth to sin, or entertain it as a friend, but to repute it as an enemy, and to keep him from it.

of the Instruction, to keep from sin.
* 1 King. 3. 38.

First, for the term of keeping. When thou goest forth against thy enemy, go forth against sin. We should indeed go forth against sin, and practise those military impressions, that are done in camp against the enemy: Give it the assault, annoy it, pursue it, never leave it till we have driven it away. These we should do against it. But, the Scripture offereth more grace; and bids us (if we list not go forth against it: only not to go forth to it) but keep our selves (that is) stand upon our defence, to keep good watch, that it surprise us not, that it get not dominion over us: do but this against sin, and it shall suffice.

Rom. 6. 12.

But this must extend to all wickedness. Wherein yet, we do humanum dicere, propter infirmitatem nostram, speak after the manner of men, because of our infirmity: retching [All] no further, then humane infirmity, then the frailty of our nature will bear; then this corruptible flesh wherewith we are compassed, and this corrupt world in the midst whereof we live, will suffer and give us leave. In the body, we put a difference between the soyl, which, by insensible evacuations goeth from our bodies, keep we our selves never so carefully; and that, vvhich is drawn forth by chafing or sweate, or otherwise gotten by touching such things vvhether vve may be defiled: That, cannot be refrained: This, falleth vvvithin restraint. And even so, there is a soyl of sin, that of it self vaporeth from our nature (let the best do his best:) I say not, we should keep our selves from this. But, from provoking it, by suffering our minds to vvander in it; by not keeping our eares from such company, and our eyes from such occasions, as will procure it (as the Prophet speaketh) by putting the stumbling block of iniquity before our faces. From that, by the help of GOD, vve may keep our selves vvell enough. From sin lightning upon our thoughts, it is impossible; it cannot be: but from making there a nest, or hatching ought; that, vve are vvilled to look to, and that (by Gods grace) we may. And the vvord that Moses useth here אמר it not vvithout a Dixit (at least) in corde; not vvithout a saying within us. This, or that, I vvill do. It must be dictum, or conditum, said to, and said yea to, or else it is not אמר. The heart not resolving or saying, content; but keeping it self, from going forth to any act: though wickedness be not kept from us, because of the temptation; yet vve are kept from it, because of the repulse: and vvith that, vvill Moses be content at our hands, as our estate novv is.

Rom. 6. 19.

Ezek. 14. 3.

But vvith these proviso's. We say generally, they that go forth, keep from all: from all such both deeds, and vvords, as justly may be censured to be vvickedly, either spoken or done. Words (I say) as vvell as deeds. For the vvord דבר beares both. And indeed, if in good words (as in prayers) there be force to help: I make no question, but, in wicked words (as blasphemies, irreligious sayings, locus fulminis dignis) there is force also, to do mischief. Therefore keep from all: All those especially (as very reason vvill lead us) vvich have been the ruin of armies: in former times a view vvhereof vve may take, vvhen vve vvill, out of Liber Bellorum Domini, the Book of GODS battailes.

Wicked words first. Presumptuous terms of trust in own our strength: I will go: I will pursue and over-take: I will divide the spoil: Pharaohs vvords, the cause of his perishing and all his Host (Ex. 15.) To keep them from that. Rabsakehs black-mouthed blasphemy: Let not Hexekiah cause you to trust in GOD over-much: the eminent cause of the over-throv of the Host of Ashur (Esay 36.) to keep them from that.

Exod. 15. 9.

And, if from words; from wicked works much rather. Achans sin, that is, sacrilege: Anathema in medio tui, non poteris stare coram hostibus tuis (GODS own words to Iosua;) The cause of the armies miscarrying, before Ai. To keep them, from that wickedness. Such shameful abuses as was that at Gibea: the expresse cause of the destruction of a whole Tribe. To keep them from that. Amos 1. 11. Monarchy. To keep themselves from that. Corrupting our compassion, and casting off pity quite, and spilling blood like water: the sin of Edom, and the cause he took such a foil, as he was never a people since. To keep them from that wickedness. From these and from the rest; you shall have a time to read them, I have not, to speak them. Arming themselves with a mind to cease from sin; keeping their vessels holy: having pay wherewith they may be content, and being content with their pay: Et neminem concutientes (saith S. John Baptist;) nor being Torrentes Belial, land-floods of wickedness. Or, if this will not be, that private conformity will not keep them; at least, that publick authority do it: that kept they may be, one way or other from it. If Achan will so far forget himself, as to sin in the execrable thing: Or, Zamri, to play the wretch, and abuse himself in the camp: Let Josua find out Achan, and see him have his due; and Phinees follow Zamri, and reward him for his desert. That the ravine of the one, and the villany of the other be removed, as it is committed; and so kept from polluting and pulling down G O D S wrath upon the whole Host. For, sure it is, Phinees standing up and executing judgement, hath the force of a prayer, no lesse than Moses standing in the gap, to make intercession: and both alike forcible, to turn away G O D S anger, and to remove evil from the midst of Israel.

This advise is to take place, as in them that go (as before hath been touched) so, in us likewise that stay at home: that what the one build, the other destroy not. Not, by Moses exercise of prayer, and uncessant prayer; or Iosaphat's exercise of fasting and abstinence, 2 Chron. 20. (both, are out of the compass of the text:) but (that which is in it) by turning from sin to G O D, and that, with a serious, not shallow; and an inward, not hollow repentance. Out confessing our sins to day, and committing them to morrow: But every one saying, Dixi custodiam I have said, I will hence-forth more narrowly look to my ways; at least, while the sound of war is in our eares. Thinking with our selves, it is now war; it is now no time to offend G O D, and separate between Him and us; in this needfull time of His help and protection: By entering into that good and vertuous consideration of URIA's: The Ark of the L O R D and all Israel and Juda dwell in tents, Joab and the servants of our Sovereign abide in the open fields, and shall we permit our selves as much as we would, in the time of peace, and not conform our selves, in abridging some part of our wonted liberty, and forbearing to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season? To conclude, if we shall or when we shall be tempted to any of our former sins, to think upon G O D S own counsel, even G O D S own counsel from G O D S own mouth, Memento belli & ne feceris. To remember the Camp, and not to do it: To think upon them in the field; and their danger; and for their sakes, and for their safeties to forbear it.

Thus, if we shall endeavour our selves, and eschew our own wickedness, our Hosts shall go forth in the strength of the Lord, and the LORD shall go with them and order their attempts to an happy issue.

He that made our forrein enemies like a wheel, to go round about us, and not to come neer us; shall make these as stubble before the wind: causing fear and faintness of heart to fall upon them as upon Madian: sending an evil spirit of disension among them as upon Abimelech, and the men of Sichem: causing their own woods to devour them, as rebellious Absalom; and their own waters to sweep them away, as it did Sisera: Yea, the stars of Heaven in their courses, to fight against them, as under Deborah's conduct, He did. Many such things are with Him; many such He hath done, and can do again, if, to our going forth, we joyn a going from sin.

Even so Lord, so let it be. Those whom thou now carriest forth, by thy mercy bring them back: by thy might, in this place, the place of thy holy Habitation: That Deborah may praise thee for the avenging of Israel, and for the people that offer themselves so willingly: For letting her ear hear, and her eye see the fall of the wicked that rise up against her: that she may praise thee and say, The Lord liveth, and blessed be my strange help, and praised be the God of my Salvation,

47. Even the God that seeth I be avenged, and subdueth the people unto me. It is He that delivereth me from my cruel enemies, and setteth me up above all my adversaries.

48. Great prosperity giveth He unto His Hand-maid, and sheweth still, and continually His loving-kindness to His Anointed: Praised be the LORD for evermore.

SERMON PRECHED

before Queen ELIZABETH, at White-hall, on the XVII. of February Anno Domini, MDCII. being ASHWEDNESDAY.

JER. Chap. VIII, &c.

- 4 Thus saith the LORD: Shall they fall and not arise? shall be turn away, and not turn again?
- 5 Wherefore is this people of Jerusalem turned back by a perpetual rebellion? they gave themselves to deceit, and would not return.
- 6 I barked and heard, but none spake aright: no man repented him of his wickednesse, saying, What have I done? Every one turned to their race, as the horse rusbeth into the battel.
- 7 Even the Storke in the aire knoweth her appointed times; and the Turtle, and the Crane, and the Swallow observe the time of their coming; but my people knoweth not the judgment of the Lord.

THE Apostles counsel is, Qui stat, videat ne cadat, He that standeth, let him take heed lest he fall. And, there is (saith Esay) a voyce behind us that crieth, Hæc est via, this is the right way, keep it, turn not from it. Good counsels, both; to those; quorum vita, via vita, whose life is a journey, and a journey to another, a better life: To look to their feet, they fall not; to look to their way they erre not. Good counsels indeed, but of which, we must say (with CHRIST) Qui potest capere capiat; Follow them that may. 1 Cor. 10. 12.
Esay 30. 12.
Mat. 19. 12

For true it is, that, not to fall nor erre; nor do amisse at all; is an higher perfection, than our nature (in state it is) can attain to. Being men (saith St. Chrysostome) ἀνθρώποι ὄντες, and mortals thus capax populus bearing about us this body of flesh, the steps whereof are so unstayed: καὶ ῥῆσιν ἀβυσσὸν ἵκνυνται, and walking in this world, the wayes whereof are so slippery. It is an Apostle that saith it, In multis, omnes, &c. In many things we offend all; and it is another that saith, that, whosoever saith otherwise (not, he is proud, and there is no humblenesse; but) he is a liar, and there is no truth in him. Jam. 3. 2.

1 Joh. 1. 8.

Our estate then (as it is) needeth some Scripture, that offereth more grace: And such there be (saith S. James) and, this, is such. That they which have not heard the Apostle and his counsel, Qui stat, &c. May yet hear the Prophet here and his Qui cecidit, let him up again. That they which have not heard Esayes voice, Ambulate; you are in the way, turn not from it; May yet hear Jeremies voice, Qui adversus est, &c. He that is out, let him get into it again. Jam. 4. 6.

So that, this is the summe of that I have read. If we have not been so happy, as to stand and keep our way; let us not be so unhappy, as not to rise, and turn to it again. Best it were, before we sin, to say to our selves, Quid facio, what am I now about to do? If we have not that, yet it will not be amisse, The Summe.

Pfal. 95. 7, 8.

amisse, after to say: What have I done? God will not be pleased, to hear us so say. We should not follow those fowles; we should have no wings to fly from God: but if in flying away, we have followed them; then, that we follow them too, in the retrive or second flight. In a word: Yesterday, if we have not heard his voice, To day if we will not hear His voice, not to harden our hearts, when He calleth us to repentance:

2 This is the summe. The manner of the delivery is not common, but some-what un-usual and full of
1 passion. For seeing, plain penitentiam agite doth but coldly affect us, It pleaseth God hinc vice, to take unto him the termes, the style, the accents of passion; thereby to give it an edge, that so it may make the speedier and deeper impression.

2 And, the Passion, He chooseth, is that of Sorrow: For, all these verses are to be pronounced, with a sorrowful key. Sorrow (many times) worketh us to that, by a melting compassion, which the more rough and violent passions cannot get at our hands.

3 This sorrow He expresseth, by way of complaint: (For, all the speech is so) which kind of speech maketh the better nature to relent; as moved, that by His means any should have cause to complain, and not find redresse for it.

4 That, He complains of is (not that we fall and erre, but) that we rise not, and return not; that is, still delay, still put off our repentance. And that 1. Contrary to our own course and custome in other things: we do it every where else; yet here we do it not. 2. Contrary to Gods expresse pleasure. For, glad and faine He would hear, we do it, yet we do it not. 3. Contrary to the very light of nature. For, the fowles here lie before us, and shew us the way to do it, yet we do it not for all that.

Which three He uttereth by three sundry wayes of treaty. 1. The first, by a gentle yet forcible expostulation (Ver. 4.) Will you not? Why will you not? 2. The second by an earnest protestation (Ver. 5.) How greatly He doth barken after it. 3. The third by a passionate Apostrophe (Ver. 7.) by turning Him away to the fowles of the aire, that do that naturally every year, which we cannot be got to, all our life long.

3 Of which Passions to say a word: It is certain, the immutable constancy of the Divine nature is not subject to them, howsoever here or els-where he presenteth himself, in them. I adde, that as it is not proper, so neither is it not fitting for God thus to expresse himself. But that He (not respecting what may best become Him, but what may best seem to move us and do us most good) chooseth of purpose that dialect, that Character, those termes, which are most meet and most likely to affect us.

And because good moral counsel plainly delivered enters, but faintly, and of passionate speeches we have a more quick apprehension, He attireth His speech in the habit, uttereth it in the phrase, figure, and accent of anger or sorrow, or such like, as may seem most fit and forcible to prevail with us.

1. Tertullian saith, the reason (this course is used) is ad exaggerandum malitia vim, to make the hainousnesse of our contempt appear the more. GOD (indeed) cannot complain: it falleth not into his nature to do it. But, if He could; if it were possible by any meanes in the world, He might; such are our contempts, so many, and so mighty, that we would force Him to it.

2. But S. Augustines reason is more praised: Exprimit in Se, ut exprimat de te, In Himself He expresseth them, that from us He may bring them: Sheweth himself in passion, that He may move us; and even in that passion whereto He would move us. As here now: As in griefe He complaineth of us, that we might be grieved and complain of our selves, that ever we gave Him such cause: And so consequently that, we might bethink our selves to give redresse to it; that so, His complaining might cease.

The Divine
son.

And from the complaint, it is no hard matter to extract the redresse: 1. To yeeld to but even as much, for Him (for Him? nay, for our selves) as, every where else, we use to do. 2. To speak that, which GOD so gladly would hear. 3. To learn that, which the poor fowles know, the season of our return; and to take it, as they do. Three wayes to give redresse to the three former grievances: These three:) and the same the three parts of this Text, orderly to be treated of.

TO make His motion the more reasonable, and His complaint the more just, he makes them Chancellors in their own cause: And, from their own practice other-where, God frameth and putteth a Case; and putteth it in question-wise: and therefore question-wise that they may answer it, and answering it condemn themselves by a verdict from their own mouth. Will they (this people) themselves fall, &c. Is there any, that if he turn, &c? In effect, as if He should say: Go whither you will, farre or care, was it never heard or seen, that any man, if his foot slipped and he took a fall; that he would lye still like a beast and not up again straight? Or if he lost his way, that he would wittingly go on, and not with all speed get into it again?

I proceed then. Men rise if they fall: and sin is a fall. We have taken up the term our selves, calling Adams sin, Adams fall. A fall, indeed; for it fowles as a fall; for it bruises as a fall; for it bringeth down as a fall; down, from the state of Paradise, down to the dust of death; down to the bar of judgment, down to the pit of hell.

Again: Men turn when they erre; And sin is an errour. Nonne errant omnes, &c. (saith Salomon) make you any doubt of it? I do not: No sure, an errour it is. What can be greater, than to go in the wayes (of wickednesse) they should not, and come to the end (of misery) they would not. It is then a fall and an errour.

Upon which he joyneth issue, and inferreth the fifth verse, Quare ergo? and why then? If there be no people so sottish, that when they fall will lie still, or when they erre, go on still, why do this people that, which no people else will do? Nay, seeing they themselves, if they be down, get up; and, if astray, turn back; how cometh it to passe, it holds not here to? That (here) they fall, and rise not? stray, and return not? Fall; and stray (peccando) and not rise and return (penitendo)? Will every people, and not they? Nay, will they, every where else and not here? Every where else, will they rise, if they fall; and turn again, if they turn away; and here, only here, will they fall, and not rise, turn away, and not turn again? In every fall, in every error of the feet, to do it, and to do it of our selves; and in that fall, and that error, which toucheth God and our souls, by no means, by no entreatie to be got to do it? What dealing call you this? Yet this is their strange dealing (saith the LORD.) Both theirs and ours: Which GOD wonders at and complaineth of; and who can complain of His wondering, or wonder at His complaining?

But what speak we of a fall, or an error? there is a word, in the fifth verse, (the word of rebellion) maketh it more grievous. For it is (as if he should say) I would it were nothing but a fall, or turning away: I would it were not a fall, or turning away into a rebellion. Nay, I would it were but that; but rebellion; and not a perpetual Rebellion: But, it is both: and that is it which I complain of.

There is sin, a fall: men fall against their wills: that, is sin of infirmity. There is Sin, an error: men erre from the way, of ignorance: that is sin of ignorance. The one, for want of power; The other, for lack of skill. But rebellion: the third kind (that hateful sinne of rebellion) can neither pretend ignorance, nor plead infirmity; for, wittingly they revolt from their known allegiance, and wilfully set themselves against their lawful Sovereigne: That is the sin of malice.

Take all together, Sinne, a fall, an error, a rebellion: (We see, sin aboundeth: will you see, how grace over-aboundeth?) Yet, not such a fall but we may be raised; not such a departure, but there is place left to return; no, nor such a rebellion, but (if it sue for) may hope for a pardon. For behold: He, even He, that GOD, from whom we thus fall, depart, revolt, reacheth His hand to them that fall; turneth not away from them, that turn to Him; is ready to receive, to grace them; even them, that rebelled against Him. It is so: for He speaketh to them; treateth with them, asketh of them, why they will not rise, retire, submit themselves.

Which is more yet. If ye marke, He doth not complain and challenge them, for any of all those three; for falling, straying, or for rebellion: The point He presseth, is not, our falling, but our lying still: not our departing, but our not returning; not our breaking off, but our holding out. It is not: why fall, or stray, or revolt? But, why rise ye not? Return ye not? Submit ye not your selves? Thus might He have framed His interrogatories: Shall they fall and not stand? He doth not; but, thus: Shall they fall and not rise? Shall they turn from the right and not keep it? No: But, shall they turn from it, and not turn to it? As much to say as; Be it you have fallen, yet lie not still; erred, yet go not on; Sinned, yet continue not in sin, and neither your fall, error, nor sin, erunt vobis in scandalum, shall be your destruction, or do you hurt.

Nay, which is farther, and that beyond all. It is not these, neither; (though this be wrong enough, yet upon the point, this is not the very matter.) Neither our lying still, nor our going on, nor standing out, so they have an end, they all; and every of them may have hope. Perpetual is the word, and perpetual is the thing. Not, why these, any of these; or all of these; but, why these perpetual? To do thus; to do it and never leave doing it; To make no end of sin, but our own end; To make a perpetuity of sin; Never to rise, return, repent, (for Repentance is opposite, not to sin, but to the continuance of it;) that is the point.

In sinne are these: 'The fall, 'The relapse, 'The wallow: it is none of these. It is not falling; not, though it be recidiva peccati, often relapsing. It is not lying still; not, though it be Voluntarium peccati, the wallow: It is none of all these: It is ad adulationem, the never ceasing, the perpetuity, the impunity of sin. To speak of sin, that is the sin out of measure sinful; that is the offence, that not only maketh culpable, but leaveth inexcusable. That fall, is not, Adams, but Lucifers fall; not to erre; but to perish from the right way; not Shimeis rebellion, but the very Apostasie and gain-saying of Corah.

This then, to adde sin to sin, to multiply sin, by sin to make it infinite, to eternize it as much as in us lyeth; that, is it, to which God crieth, O quare? Why do you so? Why perpetual?

VVhy perpetual? Indeed, why? For it would pose the best of us to find out the Quare? a true cause or reason for our doing?

Before, shew but an example: Now here, shew but a reason, and carry it. But they can shew no reason, why they will not. It were to be wished, we would repent or shew good cause to the contrary.

But as (before) we violate our own customs; so (here) we abandon reason; we throw them both to the ground (order, and reason) and stamp upon them both, when we make perpetuities. Verily true cause, or good reason there is none. Being called to shew cause why? They tell not: we see, they stand mute; they cannot tell, why: God himself is faine to tell them. VVhy, all the cause that is, is in the latter part of the verse Apprehenderunt, &c. that is, some Non causa pro causa, some lie or other they lay hold of, or else they would return, and not thus continue in it. To flatter it self that it may not repent, Mentis est iniquitas sibi, saith the Psalmist, Sinne doth even cozen it self, telling a faire tale to it self, which is (in the XI. Verse) Pax, Pax Pax, well enough; and that is a lie: for, there is no peace for all that. It is (saith the Apostle) the deceitfulness of sin, that hardeneth men men in it; that is, if there were not some grosse error, strong illusion; notable, fascinatio mentis, it could not be that sin should prove to a perpetuity. There is some error sure.

But why is not that error removed? G O D answereth that, too. But, the error hath not taken hold of them, for then it might be cured; but, they have taken hold of it; fast hold; and will not let it go. That is: it is not in the weaknesse of their wits, but in the stubbornnesse of their will. For, so is His conclusion. Nor, Non potuerunt, they could not: but, Noluerunt, they would not return. So saith David, It is a people that do erre, in their hearts: Their error is not in their heads; but in their hearts; and if it be there, forty years teaching will do them no good. If they had an heart to understand, they might, soon: but, they asst for themselves; they will not conceive aright of their estates. If they did, they could not choofe but return: But now, return they will not: that, is resolved: therefore they get them some lewd ir-religious lying positions, and with them close up their own eyes; even hood-wink themselves. Is it not thus? Yes sure: Rather then return, to apprehend a lye. This is a woful case: but let it be examined, and thus it is. It is a lye, they apprehend; that maketh they lye still. Peradventure, that error, inter alias, may be such an illusion as this: that if they should make meanes, it would be to no purpose; G O D would stop His eares, He would not hear of it. May it not be thus? Despaire of pardon hath made many a man desperate. Yes sure. And if that were it; if they would, and G O D would not, they had some shew of reason, to abandon themselves to all loosefesse of life. But it is contrary: they would not return. For, I for my part faine would (saith G O D:) It is their Not: and not mine. My Nolo is, Nolo ut moriatur: My Volo is, Volo ut convertatur. I will not their death; I will their conversions: This is my Volo. Nay, quosies volui? How often would I? Es noluisse, and ye would not.

My outward calling by My Word, inward movings by My Spirit, My often exhortations in your eares, My no lesse often inspirations in your hearts: Tactum mei, & tractum, My touches, and My twitches; My benefits not to be dissembled, My gentle chastisements, My deliverances more than ordinary, My Patience while I held My peace; such periods, as this, when I speak; My putting you to it by Quid debui facere? to set down, what I should have done and have not: these shew, Quosies volui, that many times I would when you would not. The two verses past, His compassionate complaint in them. And, is there no hope? VVill you not? O why will you not? Other where you will, and not here; why not here? You have no reason, why you will not, VVhy will you not? If not, why fall, or erre, or revolt, yet only why perpetual? These are evidences enough, He is willing enough therewithal. But (to put it out of all doubt) we see. He breaketh out into a protestation, that if thou be the lye, we lay hold of, we may let it go when we will. And sure how earnestly G O D affecteth the sinners conversion, we might be thought to mis-informe, and to blow abroad our own conceits, if this and such places were not our warrant. I not hear? VVhy, I stand wishing, and waiting, and longing, and listening to hear of it, Wishing, O that my people! Waiting, Expectat Dominus ut misereatur; Longing, even as a woman that is great after green fruit (Mic. 7. 1.) Listening, that I might but hear two good words from them, that might shew, that they were but thus forward as to think of this point. It is not all one; it is not neither here nor there with me, whether you do it; it is a special thing, I hearken after: No Merchant, for his commodity; no Athenian for his newes, more oft or more earnest.

Then, lay not hold on that lye, that I would not hear. Be your error what it will be, let it not be, that; let not the charge be mine, but yours, if you will needs cast away that; I would have saved. Should not this move us? Now truly, if all other regards failed, and men for them should not return: yet, for this, and this only, we ought to yeeld to it, that G O D should be listening so long for it, and in the end be deluded.

G O D harkneith and listneith: and (after) there is a kind of pause, to see what will come of it. And loe, this commeth of it, this un-kind, un-natural effect: After all this, not so much as le-entis sunt rellis, a good honest confession. Nay, not so little as this; Quid feci? VVhat have I done? He expecteth no great matter; no long proesse; but two words, but three Syllables: and those, with no loud voice, to spend their spirit or breath; but, even softly said, for He layeth His care and listneith for it.

Thus saith the L O R D. But, what say they? None of them, either audibly (for, I hearkned;) or softly (for, I listened;) said (no long solemne confession, but not this) Quid feci? G O D wot, this is not repentance: erre not, this is farre from it.

Mic. 7. 1.

From whence yet this we gain: VVhat G O D would hear from us, and when we saying, may give Him some kind of contentment. This, is but Mica's fruit (we spake of:;) which yet, He so much desired, that he will take it, green and unripe as it is. This is but a step unto a proffer; but yet began with this. Say it; Dic, Dic (saith Saint Augustine) sed, intus dic: say it, and say it from within; say it, as it should be said, not for forme, or with affectation, but, in truth and with affection. Do but this onward, and more will follow. Indeed as (before) we said of the Quare; so (here) we may say, of the Quid: If either of them; If but this latter were well weighed, rightly thought on, or rightly spoken, there is much more in it than one would think. What have I done? VVhat, in respect of it selfe: VVhat a foule, deformed, base, ignominious act! vvhich vve shame to have known; which we chill upon alone and no body but our selves. VVhat, in regard of God, so fearful in power, so so glorious in Majesty! VVhat, in regard of the object: for what a trifling profit for vvhich a transitory pleasure! VVhat, in respect of the consequent; To what prejudice of the state of our souls and bodies, both here and for ever! O vvhich have vve done? How did vve it? Sure, vvhich thus sinned, vve did we knew not what.

Sure

Sure to say it with the right touch; with the right accent, is worth the while. Say it then: say this, at least. Left, if you will not say, Quid feci? What have I done? When he hearkens; you may come into the case, you know not what to do; and say to Him, What shall I do? And, if you hear not, when He complains; one day, when you complain, He refuse to bow down His ear and hearken to you at all.

Yet one step further. Nothing they said: Is that all? have we done? Nay: He hears and sees (both) a worse matter. For in stead of this, He sees and hears, that forth they run to their carelessse course of life, tanquam equus ad praelium. We saw (before) their slownesse, in that: Now see we their vigour in this. VVherein observe: Here they go not, It is no soft pace; they run: Not, as men; but, as horses: And, not every kind of them neither; but, as the barbed horse for service: and he, not every way considered; but when he is enraged by noise and other accidents of war, VV rather rusheth, like a violent breach of waters (from whence it is taken) than runneth: ut 'lwn & wds pds (saith the Seventy) as a horse all of a white some, into the battel, where a thousand to one, he never commeth out again. That is, with as great fury, and as little consideration, as a war-horse runneth upon his own destruction. And all this, when G O D hearkneth and listeneth to hear and receive them; even then, and at no other time; then, so sling they from Him. All return to sin is brutish: Recidiva peccati, that, is tanquam canis ad vomitum: Volucrum peccati; that, is tanquam sus ad lutum: But, this fury and fiercenesse of sin, is tanquam equus ad praelium. Should there be no more regard in the rider, than, the beast, he rides on? should such a mind as this, be in men?

Prov. 26. 11.
2 Pet. 2. 22.
Verse 7.

No, verily, we be now gone from men: VVe be come among beasts. And, thither, doth G O D follow us. And, even among them (if we will but look to the lesse brutish sort) He hopes to do it: even among them, to point us to those, that, if we will learn, it will teach us as much as this commeth to. This is His Apostrophe of the last verse. VVhere breaking off (occasioned by their abrupt breaking off) He even sets down Himself upon the light of Nature, Well yet, the Stork, &c.

Two kinds of forcible reasons (or Apostrophe's) there are to move us. 1 One, To send the people of G O D, to hearken men, that would shame to deal with their Idols, as we do daily with the G O D of heaven: Get you to Chittim and to the Isles, (saith Jeremy 2 chapter) See if the like measure be offered by them, to their gods. Then the Conclusion is, Quis audivit talia? G O D S people, worse than the Heathen? This is such a thing, as the like was never heard. This was done in the first verse, If any fall, &c.

Jer. 2. 10.

2 Yet more effectual is it, when He goeth yet further; thus far. That, not finding, among men, with whom to fort them, because they keep no rules of men, He is forced to a second Apostrophe, to seek among beasts, with whom to suit them.

3 But then, if it come to this, that the beasts be not only compared with us (as in the last tanquam quis;) but preferred before, as better advised or disposed, than we (as in this, the swallow doth know, my people doth not:) that we, in the comparison, go not even with them, but are cast behind them; that, is quis in Equis (indeed) a foul check to our nature. And to that the Prophet crieth, Audite cali, H at ye Heavens, and be astonished at it. O the damp and myst of our sin! so great, that it darkeneth not only the light of Religion, which God teacheth; but even the light of nature, which her instinct teacheth, even the reasonlesse creature it self. VVith a very pachelical conclusion doth the Psalmist break off the XLIX. Psalm: Man being in honour, &c. but becommeth meet to be compared to the beasts that perish. VVhich is no small disgrace to our Nature, so to be matched. Profecto (saith Chrysostome) peius est comparari jumento, quam nasci jumentum, Now (sure) it is far worse to be matched with a beatt; than to be born a beatt. To be born, is no fault: we, nor they, make our selves. But, to be born a man, and to become matchable with beasts, that is our fault; our great fault: and therefore, the worse certainly.

Jer. 2. 12.

Psal. 49.

VVell; this Interrogate jumenta, in the Old; this Respicite Volatilia, in the New; this Apostrophe, this sending us to beasts and fowles to school; setting them before us, as patterns; setting them over us, as Tutors, to learn of them how to carry our selves, is (certainly) a bitter Apostrophe, a great upbraiding, to us; a great aggravating our sin, or our folly, or both.

Jobe 12. 7.
Matth. 6. 16.

Especially in them, who (as, in the next verse he saith) would hold it great scorn, to be reputed of, otherwise than as deep wisemen; that they, should passe their lives, with as little consideration (not, as Heathen men, for they be men; but with as little) yea, lesse, than the beasts in the field, or the fowles in the air. Thus speaketh G O D, often and with diverse. The stothful body He setteth to school to the Ant, (Prov. 6.) The unthankful person, to the Ox: the distrustful man, to the young Ravens: the Covetous wretch, to that beatt which reproved the madnesse of the Prophet, who for the wages of unrighteousnesse, was ready to make sale of his soul (that is) Balaams beatt, the Ass (2 Pet. 2. 16.) And, here now in this place, the wilful impenitent sinner, one so far gone, as He appointeth him not one (as to all the former) but, no lesse than four at once. Belike, either the number is great, that so many Ushers need (and so it is: Or, their capacity very dull and hard to take, that no fewer will serve them (and so, it is too:)) Or, He forteth them thus, that every countrey may be provided for, of one to teach in it. For though, in some places, all are not; yet, in all places, some of them are to be found.

Verse 8.

Prov. 6. 6.
Esay 1. 3.
Luke 12. 24.
2 Pet. 2. 15, 16.

The lesson, with these four (all of them, from the Stork in the top of the Firre-tree, to the Swallow that buildeth under every pent-house) would take us forth, is, that which they themselves are so perfect in, that they may be professors of it, And, it is of four sorts: 1. They have a time to return in. 2. That time, is certain, and certainly known. 3. They know it. 4. They observe it.

They have a time. The place, the Climate, which the cold of the weather maketh them to leave, they fail not, but find a time to turn back thither again. This they teach us, first: VVho, in this respect

2 Pet. 3. 9.

lesse careful, and more senselesse than they, find a time and times many, oft and long, to take our flight from GOD; occasioned, by no cold or evil weather (for commonly, we do it when times are best and fairest;) But we can find no time, not so much as half a time, to make our return in. This must be learned. Sure, we must (saith Saint Paul) συχάζειν τι νηΐα, take some time of vacancy and leisure: we must (saith Saint Peter) χαρῖσαι ἐς ὡραμίαν, take some several retiring place, where and when to do it to purpose; and ingend it not as a slight matter, but as one of the chiefest and most important affairs of our life. Sure, this adoe that GOD keeps about it, these passions, complaints, protestations, apostrophes, give it for no lesse.

Acts 16. 28.
Acts 14. 26.

a Ezek. 18. 21.
b Gen. 27. 38.
Heb. 12. 17.
c Mat. 25. 11.
d 1 Sam. 13. 13.
Eccles. 3. 1.

2 They have a time certain: When if you wait for them, you shall be sure to see them come; and come at their appointed season: they will not misse. It will not be long, but you shall see the Swallow here again. This they teach us, second: Us, who have sometime, some little perswasions, In modico (like Agrippa's) to do as Christian men should do, but (as Felix) we can never ὑπακούω, find a convenient set time for it. Return we will, that we will; but, are still to seek for our season: and ever, we will do, and never we do it. Verily though no time be amisse (but at what time soever we repent, that is the acceptable time, that the day of salvation;) yet Esau's tears when the time was past; and the five Virgins that came too short, and but a little too short; and that very word of GOD to Saul, Now was the time, Now, if thou hadest taken it: these plainly shew, that (as, for all things under the Sun, so) for this great and weighty business, there is not only ἔτι but ἔτιω; not only χρὶς but ῥῆς, not onely a time, but a set season. Which season is in time, as a joyn't, in a member: If you hit on the joyn't, you may easily divide; if on this side or beyond, you shall not do it, or not do it so well; therefore, to discern it, when it is.

They have their certain time, and they know it. What time of the year the time of their return is, is commonly known: who knows not, when Swallows time is? And our ignorance in not discerning this point, doth God justly upbraid us withal; and bids us, if we know not what time to take; to get us to these fowles, and to take their time, the time they return at; (that is) now, even this time, this season of the year; to return with the Swallows, and to take our flight back, when they do theirs. Rather do thus, than waste our lives (as we do) and take none at all; neither fair nor foul, neither hot nor cold, neither Fall nor Spring, to do it in. This is the third they teach us.

Luk. 10. 41, 42.

The last lesson is, to observe it. Opportunity (it self) is a great favour, even to have it; but a second grace it is, to discern it when we have it: and, a third (better than both) when we discern it, to observe and take it. And many are the errors of our life, but all the errors of our repentance come from one of these: either, our ignorance; that while we have it, discern it not: or our negligence, that when we discern it, observe it not. The one (our ignorance) CHRIST with bitter tears lamenteth: the other (our negligence) doth GOD (here) complain of. This is the last lesson.

There want not, that stretch it farther: that by these four fowles, there is not only taught the time, but even the manner also, how to perform our Repentance.

1. That vox surturis, which is gemebam, a mournful note: 2. That the very name and nature of the Stork קורקור of קורק full of mercy and compassion: 3. That the Swallows nest, so near the Altar of GOD, (Psal. 84.) 4. That the painful watching, and abstinence of the Crane, specially when they take their flight, so credibly recorded in the Natural Histories: That these (Emblem-wise) teach us the mournful bewailing of our life past; the breaking off our former sins, by works of mercy; the keeping near this place, the house, and Altar of GOD; the abstinence and watching to be performed, during this time of our return: That is, that all these are allied to the exercise of our Repentance, and are meet vertues to accompany and attend the practice of it.

This, the Turtle dove mourneth; the Swallow chattereth: this, all of them sound as well as they can: This, if they serve not (as Masters) to teach us, they shall serve (as a Quest) to condemn us, whom neither our own custom, reason, religion, before, nor (now) the lights of Nature can bring to know so much as they: either to learn it our selves, or to be taught it by others. This we should learn, but this we do not; therefore He taketh up His last complaint, But my people, &c.

The word Judgement receiveth two constructions: For, either by Judicium Domini is meant that within us, which is answerable to that secret instinct, whereby the fowles are inclined to do this, which is, the prick and distamen of our conscience. to ὑποῦς συνήθειαν, (the impression whereof is apparent in the most miscreant on earth; in whom Nature it self shrinketh and sigheth, when it hath done amisse; and joyeth and lifeth up it self, when it hath well done: and by which we are moved inwardly, as they by their instinct, to return, but that the motion (with us) passeth, and with them, not:) And then, the complaint is, that their parva naturalia carry them further, than our great judicials do us in this point.

Or else, by Judicium Domini, is meant His visitation, hanging over our heads; called therefore Judgment, because it cometh not casually, but judicially proceedeth from GOD; (that is) when GOD calleth to judgment, by invasion, by scarcity, by gentle, general diseases, and such like: and then the complaint is, that where we should imitate these fowles, and return against the sweet spring, and fair time of the year (that is, while the dayes of peace and prosperity last) we are so far behind them, as, not against fair, nay, not against foul (against neither) we can be brought to it: Not in the dayes of adversity, no, not against the winter of our life.

That they regard Natures inclinations, so as, every spring, sure to come : We have lost our regard so even of judgement and all, as neither vernal nor hibernal repentance we bring forth. Nay, not the everlasting judgement of the I O R D do we regard ; to which, sooner or later, we must all come, and there receive the sentence, under execution whereof we shall lie eternally.

Idola Moxas (saith S. Chrysostome) I embrace both senses : Both be good and profitable to men : Take whether you will, or both, if you will, you shall not take amiss : and if both, you shall be sure to take right, Regard judgement, when either it awaketh, from within, or when it threatneth, from without. And when any of these summon us before the great Judge, know (for a certainty) that, the time of returning is come : the Angel is descended, the water is moved ; let us have grace to go in ; Even then, ad aqua motum : We know not how long it will be, or whether it will be stirred again. Ioh. 5. 3.

And thus we be come to anchor, at this last word judgement. A word, which if with judgement we would but pause on, and rowle it a while : up and down in our thoughts, duly weighing it and the force of it, it would bring us about, and cause this whole Scripture to be fulfilled ; make us fly as fast back, as any fowl of them.

For indeed, the not judicial apprehending of this one word ; the shallow conceiving and slight regard of it is the cause, we fore-slow the time. The fore-slowing the time, the cause, we come not to Quid feci ? the not comming to that, the cause, why we run on still tanquam equus ; why we rise not ; return not, yeeld not, but stand out in perpetual rebellion. Did we hear this word ; hear it and regard it right ; and scire terrorem hunc, know the terrour of it ; that God hath fearful judgements in store, even here, to meet with us : Or (howsoever, here, we scape.) He hath (there) a perpetual judgement behind ; and that so straight, as the righteous shall scarce escape it ; so heavy, as the mightiest shall not endure it : Did we regard this one Point, we would find a with-drawing time, for this so serious a work ; we would say, and say that God should hear it, what have I done ? We would rise, return, repent ; and so, His whole complaint should cease. O judgement ! of the very mention of this word judgement, if a perfect view were taken of it, that only were enough. But without judgement or regard, we hear it ; and therefore the complaint continueth still. 1 Pet. 4. 18.

To conclude : VVe said at the beginning, God therefore sheweth Himself in passion, that he might move us ; and in that passion, vvhhereto He vould move : Thus complaineth G O D, that we might thus inferre, and say : And doth G O D thus complain ? VVhy it toucheth not G O D, it toucheth me ; He needeth not our repentance, and our unrighteousnes toucheth Him not. It is I, that shall vvin or loose by it ; even the best thing I have to loose, my soul : He is in no danger ; it is I, the hazard of vvhose eternal vveal, or vvo, lieth upon it. And yet doth God shew Himself sorry for me, and shall not I be sorry for my self ? Doth God thus complain of my sin, and shall not I be moved, or do as much for mine ovvn sin ? From this meditation to proceed, to propound the same questions, vvhich G O D here doth, and to ask them of our selves. What then, shall I continually fall and never rise, turn away and not once turn again ? Shall my rebellions be perpetual ? Do I this any vvhether else ? can I shew any reason vvhether not to do it, here ? Shall these Swallows flie over me and put me in mind, of my return ; and shall not I heed them ? Shall G O D still, in vain, harken for quid feci ? and shall I never speak that, He so fain vould hear ? Shall I never once seriously set before me, the judgements of the Lord ? Ask these : ask them, and answer them, and upon them, come to a resolution, saying : I vwill rise, and return, and submit my self, and from my heart say, quid feci ? I vwill consider volatilia celi ; I vwill not seem to flie, but I vwill think of the season of my returning : but, above all, I vwill not be vwithout regard of G O D S judgement, then vvhich, nothing (in this vworld) is more to be regarded. Ioh. 22. 3.

Because the time, the time is the main matter, and (ever) more ado about it, than the thing it self ; to have special care of that : knowing, that it vvas not but upon great cause, that our S A V I O U R, complaining of this point cried : if thou hadst but known, that this day had been the day of thy visitation ! and so vvas fain to break off, the tears comming so fast ; That he vvas not able to speak out, but forced to vweep out the rest of his sentence. O those tears shew, vvhether time is ; shew that opportunity it self is a grace, even to have of it, that it is a second grace, to know it ; and a third better than them both, to lay hold of it, and use it. That the greatest errors in this manner of repentance come from our ignorance, in not discerning of the time, vvhether vve may have it ; or our negligence, in not using it, vvhether vve discern it. Therefore, rather than fail, (or rather, that we may not fail) to take the time of the Text. And that time, is at this time, now : Now, do these fowles return. VVho knoweth whether he shall live to see them return any more ? It may be the last Spring, the last Swallow-time, the last Wednesday, of this name or nature, we shall ever live, to hear this point preached. VVhy do we not covenant then with our selves, not to let this time slip ? Surely, lest no time should be taken, the Prophet pointeth us at this ; and (ensuing the Prophets mind) the Church hath fixed her season at it. And nature it self seemeth to favour it, that at the rising of the year, we should rise ; and return, when the Zodiack returneth to the first sign. Luk. 19. 41, 43.

Let the Prophet, let the Church, let Nature, let something prevail with us, Et Dominus qui sic instat precepto, praecurrat auxilio, and Almighty G O D, the upholder of them that stand, the lifter up of those that be down ; that G O D, who is thus instant upon this point by his complaint, prevent us vwith His gracious help, that we may redresse it. Following, with His Spirit, where his word hath gone before, and making it effectual to our speedy conversion.

BEFORE

KING JAMES

At White-hal, on the X. of February, Anno Dom. MDCXIX
being ASHWEDNESDAY.

JOEL Chap. II. Verſ. XII, XIII.

Nunc ergo dicit Dominus : Convertimini ad me in toto corde vestro, in jejunio, & in fletu, & in planctu.

Et scindite corda vestra, & non vestimenta vestra, & convertimini ad Deum vestrum.

*Therefore also, now (saith the Lord;) Turn you unto Me, with all your heart, and with Fasting, and with Weeping, and with Mourning.
And rend your heart, and not your cloaths, and turn unto the Lord your God.*

AG. 15. 28.

Or this time hath the Church made choice of this Text. The time, wherein, howsoever we have dispensed with it all the year beside, she would have us seriously to intend, and make it our time of turning to the Lord.
And that, Now (the first word of the Text.)

For she holds it not safe, to leave us wholly to our selves, to take any time, it skills not when; lest we take none at all. Not now (saith Felix) but when I shall find a convenient time; and he never found any: and many (with him) perish, upon this not now. Take heed of thy intrusion, when I shall find a convenient time: It undid Felix, that.

She hath found, this same keeping of continual Sabbaths and fasts, this keeping the memory of CHRIST's Birsh and Resurrection all the year long, hath done no good: hurt rather. So, it hath seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to Her, to order, there shall be a solemn set return, once in the year at least. And reason: for, once a year, all things turn. And, that once is now, at this time: For, now at this time, is the turning of the year. In Heaven the Sun in his Equinoxial line, the Zodiague, and all the Constellations in it, do now turn about to the first point. The earth and all her planets, after a dead Winter, return to the first and best season of the year.

The

The creatures, the fowles of the Air, the Swallow and the Turtle, and the Crane, and the Stork know their seasons, and make their just return at this time, every year. Every thing now turning; that we also would make it our time to turn to GOD in.

Then, because we are to turn cum jejuniis, with fasting; and this day is known by the name of Caput jejunii, the first day of Lent; it fits well, as a welcome into this time: a time lent us (as it were) by God, let us by the Church, to make our turning in.

And beside the time, Now; the manner (How) is here also set down. For, as it is true, that repentance is the gift of God, (Si quo modo des Deus poenitentiam, saith the Apostle) and we by prayer to seek it of Him, that it would please Him to grant us true repentance; So, it is true withal, there is a Doctrine of repentance from dead works (as saith the same Apostle) and that is here taught us. 2 Tim. 2.25.
Heb. 6.1.

The Church turns us to these words here of the Prophet Joel; which, though they be a part of the Old Testament, yet for some special vertue in them (as we are to believe) She hath caused them to be read, for the Epistle of this day.

And surely, had there been a plainer than this, wherein the nature of true repentance had been more fully set forth, it behooveth us to think, the Church, inspired by the wisdom of God, would have looked it out for us, against this time, the time sacred by her to our turning.

Again, that the Church carrying to her children the tender heart of a mother, if there were a more easie or gentle repentance than this of Joel, She would have chosen that rather. For, this we are all bound to think, She takes no pleasure to make us sad, or to put upon us more, then needs She must. Which in that She hath not, we may well presume, this of Joel is it, She would have us hold our selves to: and that this is, and is to be, the mold of our Repentance.

I wot well, there is in this Text, somewhat of Sal terra, something of the grain of Mustard-seed in the Gospel: The points be such as we list not hear of. Fasting is durus sermo, an un-welcome point to flesh and blood: but, as for weeping and mourning, and renting the heart, who can abide it? The Prophet (it seemes) fore-saw, we would say as much: and therefore he takes up the word before us. They be the words next before these, Who can abide it? Abide what? These dayes, the abstinence in them? No, but the great and fearful Day of the LORD. If you speak of not abiding, who can abide that? As if he should say, If you could abide that Day when it comes, I would trouble you with none of these. But, no abiding of that. Turn it away you may: turn it into a joyful day, by this turning to the LORD. Thus you may: and, but thus, you cannot. Now therefore you see, how therefore comes in. Here is our choice: One of them we must take. And, better thus turn unto God in some of these little dayes, than be turned off by Him in that great Day, to another manner weeping than this of Joel: Even to weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth. Scientis igitur terrorem hunc, knowing therefore this fear, and that upon this turning, Cardo vertitur, the hing turns of our well or evil doing for ever; to be content to come to it, and to turn the Heathen mans Non emam, into emam tanti poenitere. To this turning then. Our charge is to preach to men, non qua volunt audire, sed qua volunt audisse, not, what for the present they would hear; but, what another day they would wish they had heard.

Repentance it self is nothing else, but redire ad principia, a kind of circling; to return to Him by repentance, from vvhom by sin, vve have turned avway. And much after a circle is this text: begins vvith the word turn, and returns about to the same vvord again. Which circle consists (to use the Prophets ovvn vvord) of two turnings, (for twice he repeates this vvord;) vvhich tvo must needs be tvo different motions. ' One, is to be done vvith the whole heart: ' The other vvith it broken and rent: So as one and the same it cannot be.

First, a turn, vvherein vve look forward to GOD, and vvith our whole heart resolve to turn to Him. Then, a turn again, vvherin vve look backward to our sins, vvherein vve have turned from GOD; and vvith beholding them, our very heart breaketh. These tvo, are tvo distinct, both in nature and names: One, Conversion from sin; the other, Contrition for sin. One, resolving to amend that vvhich is to come: the other, reflecting and sorrowing for that vvhich is past. One, declining from evil to be done hereafter: the other, sentencing it self for evil done heretofore. These tvo between them, make up a compleat repentance, or (to keep the vvord of the text) a perfect revolution.

And this and none other, doth Joel teach the Jews: and this, and none other doth Jonas teach the Gentiles. None other, the Prophets; nor none other the Apostles: For Saint James comes just to this of Joel, Enjoyning sinners to cleanse their hands, and to purge their hearts; which is the former: and then vvithal, to change their laughter into mourning, and their joy into heavinesse: Where videtis and uallipna, are as full for the Nevv, as Planctus and Fletus are for the Old. These tvo: both these, and neither to spare: and vve have not learned, vve hold not, vve teach not any other repentance. I speak it for this. There is a false imputation cast on us, that vve should teach, there goeth nothing to repentance but amendment of life: that these of fasting and the rest, vve let run by, as the waste of repentance: Nay, that (for fasting) vve do indicere jejunium jejunii, we proclaime a fast from it; and teach a penitence vvith no penal thing in it. That therefore, this Text by name; and such other, vve shun and shift, and dare not come neer them. Not come neer them? As neer as we can, by the grace of GOD, that the world may know, and all here bear witness we teach and vve presse both. Jam. 4. 8, 9

Indeed, (as Augustine well saith) Aliud est quod docemus, aliud quod sustinemus. VVhat vve are fain to bear vvith, is one thing; VVhat we preach, and fain vvould persvade, is another. Es va tibi flumen moris humani (saith he, and vve both;) VVoe to the strong current of a corrupt Customs, that hath taken such a head, as do vvhat vve can, it carries all head-long before it. But, vvhatsoever vve bear, this vve teach, though.

The Division.

I forget my self. I intend to proceed as the words lye. ¹ To turn, first: ² and to GOD; ³ To GOD, with the heart; ⁴ and with the whole heart. Then the Manner, with these four: ¹ Fasting, ² Weeping, ³ Mourning, ⁴ and a Rent heart. Of which the two former are the bodies task; Fasting and weeping: the two latter, the soules, mourning and renting the heart. The former (mourning) the affection of sorrow: the latter (renting) from anger, or indignation: Of both which affections, Repentance is compounded, and not of either alone. This for the manner, how.

Then last, for the time, when: Now to do it; Now therefore.

I.
Repentance a
1 Turn.

D iversly, and in sundry terms doth the Scripture set forth unto us the nature of repentance. Of renewing, as from a decay (Heb. 6.6.) Of refining, as from dross (Jer. 6.29.) Of recovering, as from a malady (Dan. 4.24.) Of cleansing, as from soil; Of rising, as from a fall (Jer. 8.4.) In no one, either for sense more full; or for use more often, than in this of turning.

To turn, is a counsel properly to them that are out of their right way. For going on still, and turning are motions opposite. Both of them with reference to a way. For, if the way be good, we are to hold on: if otherwise, to turn and take another.

Whether a way be good or no, we principally pronounce, by the end. If (saith Chrysostome) it be to a Feast, good; though it be thorow a blind lane: if to execution, not good, though thorow the fairest street in the City. S. Chrysostome was bidden to a marriage dinner; was to go to it thorow divers lanes, and alleyes; crossing the high street, he met with one led thorow it to be executed: he told it his Auditory, that non quâ, sed quò, was it.

If then our life be a way (as a way it is termed, in all writers both holy and humane; via mortis no lesse, than via pedum;) the end of this way is to bring us to our end, to our sovereign good, which we call Happiness. Which happiness, not finding here, but full of flaws, and of no lasting neither, we are set to seek it, and put in hope to find it with GOD, in whose presence; is the fulnesse of joy, and at whose right hand, pleasures for evermore.

Gen. 3. 21.

From GOD then, as from the journeyes end of our life, our way, we are never to turn our steps; or our eyes, but with Enoch (as of him it is said) still to walk with God, all our life long. Then should we never need to hear this convertite.

We are not so happy. There is one that maligneth, we should go this way, or come to this end: and therefore to divert us, holdeth out to us some Pleasure, Profit, or Preferment; which to pursue, we must step out of the way, and so do, full many times; even turn from GOD, to serve our own turnes.

And this is the way of sin, which is a turning from God. When having in chase some trifling transitory, I wot not what; to follow it, we even turn our backs upon God, and forsake the way of His Commandments. And here new we first need His counsel of Convertite.

1 Sam. 25. 21.

Rom. 2. 15.

For, being entred into this way, yer we go too far in it, wisdom would we stayed and were advised, whither this way will carry us, and where we shall find our selves at our journeyes end. And reason we have to doubt: For after we once left our first way, which was right, there takes us sometimes that same Singultus cordis (as Abigail well calls it) a throbbing of the heart; or (as the Apostle) certain accusing thoughts present themselves unto us, which will not suffer us to go on quietly: our minds still misgiving us, that we are wrong.

Esay 30. 21.

Besides, when any danger of death is neer: Nay, if we do but sadly think on it, a certain chillnesse takes us, and we cannot (with any comfort) think on our journeyes end: And hear (as it were) a voice of one crying behind us, Hæc est via; that, is not the way, you have taken; this that you have lost, is your way, walk in it. Which voice if we hear not, it is long of the noise about us. If we would sometime go aside into some retired place, or in the still of the night hearken after it, we might peradventure hear it.

Esay 46. 8.

A great blessing of God it is; for, without it, thousands would perish in the error of their life, and never return to their right way again. Redire pravificatores ad cor, that sinners would turn to their own hearts. And this is the first degree, to help us a little forward to this turning.

James 3. 6.

Being thus turned to our hearts, we turn again, and behold the τροχός whorles (as St. James termeth it) the wheel of our nature, that it turned apace, and turns off daily some, and them younger than we; and that within a while, our turn will come, that our breath also must go forth, and we turn again to our dust.

Psal. 94. 15.

Psal. 9. 18.

And when that is past, another of the Prophet, That Righteousness shall turn again to judgment: Mercy that now sits in the Throne, shall rise up and give place: Justice also shall have her turn. And then comes the last turn, Convertentur peccatores in infernum, the sinners shall be turned into hell, and all the people that forget, in time, to turn unto GOD. There was wont to be a ceremony of giving ashes this day, to put us in mind of this converteria, I fear with the ceremony the substance is gone too. If that conversion into ashes, be well thought on, it will help forward our turning.

This returning to our heart, the sad and serious bethinking us there, of natures conversion into dust; of sin into ashes (for, ashes ever presuppose fire;) that the wheel turns apace, and if we turn not the rather, these turnings may over-take us: Gods Spirit assisting, may so work with us, as we shall think Joels counsel good: that, if we have not been so happy, as to keep the way; yet we be not so unhappy, as not to turn again from a way, the issues whereof surely will not be good.

And

And would GOD these would serve to work it. If they will not, then must Conversus sum in arumna, dum configitur spina; some thorne in our sides, some bodily or worldly grief must come and procure it. But, that is not to turn, but to be turned: And, there is great odds between these two. As, one thing it is, to take up the crosse; another, to have it laid upon us. Psal. 33.4.

To be turned I call, when by some crosse of body or mind (as it were, with a ring in our nose) we are brought about, whether we will or no, to look how we have gone astray.

To turn I call, when the world minneth unto us no cause of heaviness; all is ex sententiâ: yet, even then, the grace of GOD moving us, we set our selves about; and representing those former conversions before us, we work it out, having from without, no heavy accident to force us to it.

We condemn, not Conversus sum in arumna: Many are so turned; and GOD is gracious and rejects them not. But we commend this latter, when (without wrench or skrew) we turn, of our selves, And that man, who being under no arrest, no bridle in his jawes, shall in the dayes of his peace, resolve of a time to turn in, and take it, that man hath great cause to rejoyce, and to rejoyce before GOD. And thus much for Convertite, or (if it may not be had) for Convertimini.

Turn, and turn to Me: and He that saith it, is GOD. Why, whether should we turn from sin, but to GOD? Yes, we may be sure, it is not for nothing, GOD setteth down this. In Jeremy, it is more plain: If ye return, return to me, saith the LORD: Which had been needlesse, if we could turn to nothing else; were it not possible, to find divers turnings; leaving one by-way to take another; from this extreme, turn to that, and never to God at all. They that have been fleshly given, if they cease to be so, they turn: but, if they become as worldly now, as they were fleshly before, they turn not to GOD. They, that from the drage of superstition, run into the phrensie of prophanes: They, that from abhorring Idols; fall to commit sacrilege; howsoever they turn, to GOD they turn not. Rom. 2. 22. 1

And this is even the motus diurnus, the common turning of the world (as Moses expresseth it) to adde drunkenesse to thirst: from too little to too much; from one extreme to runne into another. Would GOD it were not needful for me to make this note. But, the true turn is ad Me: So from sinne, as to GOD. Else, in very deed, we turn from this sinne; to that sinne; but, not from sinne: Or (to speak more properly) we turn sinne, we turn not from sinne, if we give over one evil way to take another. Deut. 29. 19.

To me then: and wish the heart. And, this also is needful. For (I know not how, but) by some, our conversion is conceived to be a turning of the brain only (by doting too much on the word resipiscere) as a matter mee-ly mental. Where before, thus and thus we thought, such and such positions we held; now, we are of another mind than before; and there is our turning. This of Jool's is a matter of the heart, sure. This? Nay (to say truth) where is conversion mentioned, but it is in a manner intended with in corde? And so requireth not only an alteration of the minde, but of the will: a change, not, of certain notions only in the head, but of the affections of the heart too. Else, it is vertigo capitis, but not conversio cordis. 3 With the heart.

Neither doth this [in corde] stand only against the brain; but is commonly in opposition to the whole outward man. Else, the heart may be fixed like a Pole, and the body (like a sphere) turn round about it. Nay, heart and all must turn. Not the face, for shame; or the feet, for fear? but the heart for very hatred of sinne also. Hypocrisie is a sin: being we are to turn from sin, we are to turn from it also; and not have our body the right way, and our hearts still wandering in the by-paths of sin. But, if we forbear the act, which the eye of man beholdeth, to make a conscience of the thoughts too; for unto them also, the eye of GOD pierceth. Thus it should be: Else, Conversion it may be, but heart it hath none.

With the heart; and with the whole heart. As not to divide the heart from the body; So, neither to divide the heart in it self. The devil to hinder us from true turning, turns himself (like Proteus) into all shapes. First, turn not at all, you are well enough. If you will needs turn, turn whither you will, but not to GOD. If to GOD, leave your heart behind you, and turn and spare not. If with the heart, be it in corde, but not in toto; with some ends or fractions, with some few broken affections, but, not entirely, In modico (saith Agrippa) somewhat, there is a piece of the heart. In modico & in toto (saith S. Paul) somewhat and altogether; there is the whole heart. For which cause, as if some converted with the brimme, or upper part only, doth the Psalm call for it, de profundis; and the Prophet, from the bottom of the heart. 4 With the whole heart..

To rend the heart in this part, is a fault; which is a vertue in the next. For it makes us have two hearts hovering (as it were) and in motu trepidationis: and faine we would let go sinne, but not all that belongs to it: And turn we would, from our evil way; but not from that which will bring us back again, the Occasion, the Object, the Company: from which, except we turn too, we are in continual danger, to leave our vay again, and to turn back to our former folly; the second ever worse than the first.

When the heart is thus parcel'd out, it is easily seen. See you one would play with fire, and not be burned; touch pitch, and not be defiled with it; love peril, and not perish in it; dallying with his conversion; turning, like a doore upon the hinges, open and shut, and shut and open again; with vult & non vult; he would, and yet he would not? Be bold to say of that man, he is out of the compasse of conversion: back again he will ad voluntabrum luti. Eccle. 1. 3. 1 Eccle. 3. 17.

And

Luk. 3. 10.

And as easily it is seen, when one goes to his turning with his whole heart. He will come to his Quid faciemus? Set him down, what he should do, and he will do it. Not come neer the place where sinne dwelleth: Refraine the wandering of his sense, whereby sinne is awaked; fulnesse and idlenesse, whereof sinne breedeth: but chiefly, corrupt company, whither sin resorteth. For, conversion hath no greater enemy, than conversing with such, of whom our heart telleth us, there is neither faith nor fear of GOD in them. To all these he will come. Draw that mans apologie, pronounce of him, he is turned, and with his whole heart turned to God. And so may we turn, and, such may all our conversion be: ¹ Voluntary, without compulsion: ² To God, without declining: ³ With the heart, not in Speculation: ⁴ With the whole heart entire, no purpose of recidivation.

I I.
The manner of
it.

All this shall be done: we will turn, with the heart, with the whole heart. Is this all? No; here is a Cum, we must take with us; Cum jejuniis, with fasting. Take heed of turning Cum into sine: To say, with it, or without it, we may turn well enough: Since, it is GOD Himself, that to our turning joyneth jejunium, we may not turn without it. Indeed (as I told you) this is but the half-turn. Hitherto, we have but looked forward, we must also turn back our eye, and reflect upon our sinnes past, be sorry for them, before our turning be, as it should. The Hemisphere of our sinnes (not to be under the Horizon, clean out of our sight) must ascend up, and we set them before us; and we testifie by these four that follow, how we like our selves for committing of them.

I know, we would have the sentence end here, the other stripped off; have the matter between our hearts and us, that there we may end it, within: and no more adoe: and there, we should do well enough. But the Prophet tells us farther (or God himself rather; for, He it is that here speaketh) that our repentance is to be incorporate into the body, no lesse than the sin was. Hers hath been the delight of sin, and she to bear a part of the penaltie: that the heart within, and the body without, may both turn, since both have gone astray. It is a taxe, a tribute, it hath pleased God to lay upon our sinns, and we must bear it.

I speak it for this. It is a World, what strange conceits there are abroad, touching this point. To the animalis homo, flesh and blood reveals a farre more easie way, not encumbered with any of these. To turn, and yet not loose a meale all the year long; and not shed a teare; and not rent either heart or garment; and yet do full well. And with this conceit, they passe their lives; and with this they passe out of their lives; as it seemes, resolved to put their souls in a venture, and to come to heaven after their own fashion, or not come there at all: Change Joel into Jaël; take a draught of Milke out of her bottle, and wrap them warm, and lay them down, and never rise more.

Jud. 3. 4, 17.

And (that which is worse) they would not, by their good-will, have any other spoken of. For, this is a disease of our nature: Look how much we are (of our selves) disposed to do, just so much, and no more, must be preached to us. For, more than we have a liking to perform, we cannot at any hand abide, should be urged as needful. But these conceits must be left, or else we must tell JOEL, we can turn to GOD; without any of these, But, it is not JOEL; GOD it is, that speaketh, who best knoweth, what turning it is, that pleaseth him best: and whom we must needs leave to prescribe the manner, how He would have us to turn unto Him.

To speak after the manner of men, in very congruities, when after a long aversion, we are to turn and present our selves before God, there would be a forme set down, how to behave our selves, in what sort to performe it. This is it; how for our cheare, our countenance, how for our carriage every way. Very duty will teach us, if we will not break all the rules of Decorum, we should do it suitably to such as have stood out in a long rebellion, and being in a just disgrace for it are to approach the high-est MAJESTIE upon earth. Now, would they (being to returne) make a feast the same day they are to do it, with light merry hearts, with cheerful looks? and not rather, with shame in their countenance, fear in their hearts, grief in their eyes? As they would, so let us. Still and ever remembring what the Prophet saith, Magnus Rex JEHOVAH, GOD is a more High and mighty Prince than any on earth, stands on His State, will not be thus turned to, thus slightly; with, or without, it skills not. But, we in our turning, to come before Him, all abashed and confounded in our selves; that for a trifle, a matter of nothing, certaine caracts of gaine, a few minutes of delight (base creatures that we be) so and so often, Sic & sic faciendo, by such and such sinns, have offended so presumptuously against so Glorious a MAJESTIE; so desperately, against so Omnipotent a POWER; so unkindly against so Sovereign a BOUNTY, so gracious a God and so kind and loving a SAVIOUR.

With Fasting.

To take them as they stand. Fasting: Which, were there nothing else but this, that the Church maketh this time of our return a time of fast, it shews plainly, in her opinion, how neer these two are allyed, how well they sort together. Which Fast, the Church prescribeth, not only by way of regiment to keep the body low, that it may be a lesse mellovv soile for the sinnes of the flesh, (for, this pertaineth to the former part) so to prevent sinne to come; but avwards it, as a chastisement for sinne already past. For, to be abridged, whether by others or by our selves, of that which otherwise we might freely use, hath in it the nature of a punishment. They be the words of the Psalme, I wept and chastened my self with fasting: Chastened himself; So, a chastisement it is.

Psal. 69. 10.

And thus preach we fasting: Neither as the Physicians enjoyne it in their Aphorismes, to digest some former surfet. Nor, as the Philosophers in their Morals, to keep the sense subtil. Nor, as the States politike in their Proclamations, to preserve the breed of Cattel, or increase of strength by Sea

Sea. But as the holy Prophets of God, as Joel straight after, we do Sanctificare jejunium, prescribe that it, to a religious end: Even to chasten our selves for sinne by this forbearance. So, no Physical, Philosophical, Political; but a Prophetical, yea an Evangelical fast. For, if in very sorrow, we are to fast, when the Bridegroom is taken away; Much more, when we our selves by our sinnes committed, have been the cause of His taking, nay, of His very driving away from us. Ver. 15. Mar. 9. 15.

And must we then fast? Indeed we must, or get us a new Epistle for the day, and a new Gospel too. For, as GOD here (in the Epistle) commands it; So CHRIST (in the Gospel) presupposeth it with His Cum jejunatis, taking it as granted, We will fast. That sure, fast we must, or else wipe out this cum jejunio, and that Cum jejunatis, and tell GOD and CHRIST they are not well advised; we have found out a way beyond them, to turn unto GOD without any fasting at all. Mat. 6. 16.

But, how fast? To relieve all we may: When we speak of Fasting, Humanum dicimus propter infirmitatem vestram; we intend not, mens knees should grow weak with fasting. Two kinds of fasting, we find in Scripture: 1. Dauids, who fasted, tasted neither bread nor ought else, till the Sun was down: No meat at all: That is too hard. 2. VVhat say you to Daniels fast? He did eat and drink, but not cibos desiderii, no meats of delight, and (namely) eat no flesh. The Church (as an indulgent mother) mitigates all she may: Enjoynes not for fast, that of David (and yet, qui potest capere capiat, for all that:) She only requires of us that other of Daniel, to forbear cibos desiderii (and flesh is there expressly named) Meats and drinks provoking the appetite, full of nourishment, kindling the blood: Content to suiteine Nature, and not purvey for the flesh, to satisfie the lust thereof. And thus (by the grace of GOD) we may: if not Dauids, yet Daniels. For, if Dauids we cannot, and Daniels we list not, I know not what fast we will leave, for a third I find not. Rom. 6. 19. Psal. 109. 24. 2 Sam. 3. 35. Dan. 10. 3. Mat. 19. 12. Rom. 13. 14.

And yet, even this also doth the Church release to such as are in Timothies case; have crebras infirmitates, It is not the decay of nature, but the chastisement of sin she seeketh. But, at this door, all scape through; we are all weak and crasse, when we would repent; but, lusty and strong, when to commit sin. Our Physicians are easie to tell us, and we easie to believe any that will tell us, Propitius esto tibi, favour your self, for it is not for you. 1 Tim. 5. 23. Mat. 16. 23.

Take heed, God is not mocked, who would have sin chastened. VVho sees (I fear) the pleasing of our appetite is the true cause; the not endangering our health is but a pretence. And He will not have His Ordinance thus dallied with, fast or loose. Said it must be, that Joel here saith: Turn to God with fasting, or be ready to shew a good cause why: And to shew it to GOD. It is He (here) calls for it (the pen is but Joels;) He best knowes, what turning it is will serve our turne, will turn away Ira ventura, which Quis poteris sustinere, who is able to abide? And, take this with you: when fasting and all is in, if it be, Quis scit, si conversatur Deus? If we leave, what we please out, then it will be Quis scit? indeed. Ver. 14.

The next point (and GOD send us well to discharge it) is Weeping. Can we not be dispensed with that neither, but we must weep too? Truly, even in this point, somewhat would be done too: Else Joel will not be satisfied, but call on us still. There is (saith the Psalme) a flagon provided by God of purpose for them: Therefore, some would come; some few drops at least. Nor, as the Saints of old: No; humanum dicimus here too. a Job's eyes poured forth tears to GOD: b David's eyes gushed out with water, He all to wet his pillow, with them: c Mary Magdalen wept enough to have made a bath. VVe urge not these. But if not pour out, not gush forth, Nonna stillabis oculi noster (saith Jeremy) shall not our eye afford a drop or twain? 2 With weeping Psal. 56. 8. a Job. 16. 20. b Psal. 119. 136. c Luk. 7. 38. Jer. 13. 17.

Stay a little, turn and look back upon our sinnes past: it may be, if we could get our selves to do it in kind, if set them before us and look sadly, and not glance over them apace: Think of them not once; but (as EZEKIA did) recognitare, think them over and over; consider the motives, the base motives; and weigh the circumstances, the grievous circumstances; and tell over our many flittings, our often relapsing, our wretched continuing in them: It would set our sorrow in passion, it would bring down some; Some would come: our bowels would turn, our repentings roule together; and lament we would the death of our soul, as we do other-while the death of a friend; and for the unkindnesse, we have shewed to GOD, as for the unkindnesse we doe, that man sheweth us. Efav 38. 15.

But, this will ask time. It would not be posted through, as our manner is: we have done straight. It is not a businesse of a few minutes: It will aske Saint Peter's χωρησας, retired place, and Saint Paul's σκηναζων, vacant time. It would aske a Nazarites vow, to do it as it should be done: Even a sequestering our selves for a time, as they did: In other respects (I grant;) but among others, for this also, even to performe to GOD, a Votive repentance. This (I wish) we would trie. But, we seek no place; we allow no time for it. Our other affaires take up so much, as we can spare little or none for this; which, the time will come, when we shall think it the vveightiest affaire of all. 2 Pet. 2. 9. 1 Cor. 7. 5.

And yet it may be, when all is done, none vwill come though. For, vvho hath tears at command? VVho can weep vvhen he list? I knowv it vvell, they be the over-flowings of sorrow; not of every sorrow, but of the sensual parts: and being an act of the inferiour parts, reason cannot command them at all times, they vvill not be had.

ing.
1 Cor. 5. 2.

But if they will not, the Prophet hath here put an ἀσκήσαντες instead of it (for, so do the Fathers all take it: Mourn. If weep we cannot, mourn we can: and mourn we must. Et vos non luxistis (saith the Apostle:) He saith not, Et vos non flevistis, and you have not wept; But, and you have not mourned; as if he should say, that you should have done at the least. Mourning they call, the sorrow which reason it self can yeeld. In Schools, they term it Dolorem appetitatum, valuing what should be; rating what the sinnes deserve, though we have it not to lay down: yet what they deserve, we should; and, that we can. These and these sins I have committed, so many, so heinous: so oft iterate, so long lye in: these deserve to be bewailed even with tears of blood.

Jer. 9. 1.

2 This we can, and this too, wish with the Prophet (and so let us wish) O that my head were full of water, and my eyes fountains of tears, to do it as it should be done? This we can.

Psal. 114. 8.

3 And pray we can, that He which turneth the flint stone into a springing well, would vouchsafe us (even as drie as flints) gratiam lacrymarum (as the Fathers call it) some small portion of that grace to that end. Though weep we cannot, yet wish for it, and pray for it we can.

Esay 24. 16.

4 And complain we can, and bemoan our selves (as doth the Prophet) with a very little variation from him: My leanness, my leanness (saith he) woe is me: My drinesse, my drinesse (may each of us say) woe is me. The transgressors have offended, the transgressors have grievously offended. Grievously offend we can; grievously lament we cannot; My drinesse, My drinesse, woe is me. Nay, we need not vary, we may even let leanness alone, his own word. For, dry and lean both is our sorrow (GOD wor) GOD help us, This mourn we can.

5 And lastly, this we can: even humbly beseech our merciful GOD and Father, in default of ours, to accept of the strong crying, and bitter tears, which in the dayes of His flesh, His blessed SON, in great agonie shed for us: for us (I say) that should, but are not able to do the like for our selves: that what is wanting in ours, may be supplied from thence. These (by the grace of GOD) we may do, in discharge of this point. These let us do, and it will be accepted.

ing your hearts.
* Gen. 27. 38.
† 1 Kin. 21. 27.

And so now to the last. Rent your hearts. You see, first and last, to the heart we come. For indeed, a meal may be missed, a tear or two let fall, and the heart not affected, for all that. * Esa wept; † Ahab gave over his meat; their hearts both swelling and apostumate still. To shew, that though these be requisite (all) yet that the passion of the heart is caput poenitentiae: to the heart He cometh again alwayes, to verifie, that, in both and in all, quod cor non facit non fit; if it be not done with the heart, if the heart do it not, nothing is done. As in conversion, the purpose of amendment must proceed from the heart: So in our contrition, the sorrow, the anger, for our turning away must pierce to the heart: Some cardiack passion to be; the heart to suffer.

Psal. 51. 17.

And, what must it suffer? Contritio: It should even conteri, be ground to powder. A contritus heart, it should be: If not that, not contritum, yet cor contritum, a broken heart; broken in pieces, though not so small. If neither of these; yet with this qualifying here, cor con-scissum, with some rent, or clef. Solutio continui, somewhat there is to be opened; Not only that the apostumate matter may breath forth, but much more (which is the proper of this part) that feeling the smart there, we may say, and say it with feeling, Quod malum, & amarum, that an evil thing it is, and a bitter, to have turned away and forsaken the LORD. Some such thing is the heart to feel, or elie nothing is done.

Jer. 2. 19.

Now, this renting (if we mark it well) doth not so properly pertain to the passion of sorrow; but rather to another; even to that of anger. a Their hearts rent for anger (it is said Act. 7.) And, it easily appeareth; For we use violence to that we rend. b Ephraims smiting his thigh, c the Publican his breast: both, the acts of anger, rather than heaviness. The Apostle puts into his repentance, indignation and revenge, no lesse than he doth sorrow.

* Act. 7. 54.
b Gen. 34. 19.
c Luk. 18. 13.

2 Cor. 7. 11.

To say truth, they are to go together. Sorrow if it have no power to revenge, growes to be but a heavy dull passion: But, if it have power, indignation and it go together. One cannot truly be said to be grieved with the thing done, but he must be angry with the doer. And we, if we be sorry indeed for our sin, we will be angry with the sinner. So was Job: Therefore I abhor myself, My self (saith he:) Not so much the sin, which was done and past, and so incapable of anger; as my self, for the sin. Which if it be indignation indeed in us (and not a gentle word) will seek revenge some way or other: Grind to powder, break in pieces, at least make a rent, Contritio, Confractio, Con-scissio, Compunctio. Somewhat it will be.

Job. 42. 6.

But, when we return to enquire, whether and which of these two Acts hath in it the very true essence of Repentance? In conversion I find it not: Why? For, after I converted, I repented (saith Jeremy.) and Nihil prius aut posterius seipso, Nothing is after it self. Conversio then, is not it. And, when we seek for it in this latter: First, in Sorrow it is not: Why? for tristitia operatur poenitentiam (saith the Apostle) Mark [operatur] works it, therefore is not it: For, nihil sui causa. It remains then, of force, that it is in this now of indignation. So that now, (and not before) are we come to the essence of it indeed. And, set down that: that ἀγανάκτησις, Indignation is the essential passion; and ἐκδίκησις, revenge (or this renting here) the principal and most proper act of a true returning unto GOD.

Jer. 31. 19.
2 Cor. 7. 10.

Now, if you ask, how or which way we can come to make a rent in the heart; since no hand may touch it and we live? the meaning is not literal: but that, the heart by reflecting on it self, is able to make such an impression on it, as the Prophet may well call a rent in the heart. As first, even by by good moral respects, wherewith the very heathen set themselves in passion against vice. That it is a brutish thing; So against the nobleness of reason: that a shameful; So, against publike honesty: that, ignominious; So, against our credit and good name: That pernicious, as shutting us out of heaven (whither we would come) the greatest losse, and pæna damni; and pressing us down to hell (which we faintest would flie) the greatest torment, and pæna sensus: (For, even the heathen beleevd the joyes and paines of another world:) And yet we for all this, so evil advised as to commit it.

But, these are but æar' a' d'pawoy, drawn from man: the Christian man's is to be a's God, his eye to G O D. Who, with great indignation, cannot but abhor himself for the manifold indignities offered to God thereby. To the Law of His Justice, to the awe of His Majesty, the reverend regard of His Presence, the dread of His Power, the long-suffering of His Love: That (being a creature of so vile and brittle confidence) he hath not sticked, for some lying vanity, some trifling pleasure or peltring profit, to offend so many ways at once; all, odious in themselves and able to make a rent in any heart that shall weigh them aright.

Sure, if we take the impression right, So G O D may work with us, as these may work in us, a just indignation: which, if once it be in fervor, what the hand can come to, it will smite; and would the heart also; if it could reach it in. And, if it be in kind, it will award the body to fast, and the mind to spend some time, in these meditations. And this is the Act of venting (as the Prophet;) of revènge (as the Apostle.) And these two, between them both, in Joel and in Paul, make up the full power and consummation est, of our Conversion and Contrition both.

It remains, that we set not the Church to teach us that, which we never mean to learn: but, that we intend and endeavour to do, as we have been taught.

And to do it now For, (as in a circle) I return to the first word [Now] which giveth us our time, when we should enter our first degree: Now therefore. And when all is done, we shall have something to do, to bring this to a Nunc, to a time present. But besides that, now at this time, it is the time that all things turn; Now is the only sure part of our time. That which is past, is come and gone. That which is to come, may peradventure never come. Till to morrow, till this Evening, till an hour hence, we have no assurance. Now therefore. Or if not now: as neer now, with as little distance from it, as may be; If not this day, this time now ensuing.

For, though no time be amiss, to turn in; yet seeing many times go over our heads, and still we cannot find a time to do it in, the Church (as I said) willing to reduce the diffusedness of our repentance at large, to the certainty of some one set time, hath placed this [now] upon the time now begun, and commends it to us for the time of our turning to God.

And we by a kind of form which we perform, by the altering of our diet to a lesse desireful, by oftner resort hither to Sermons than at other times (every week twice) these make, as if we did agree; seem in a manner to promise, as if we would perform somewhat now, that we have not all the year before.

Sure, the Christian Church ever looked otherwise, had another manner of face; going in the street, you should have seen by mens countenances, what time of the year it was: more grave, more composed, than at other times.

Performe it then: And when our turn is done, God shall begin His, Et poenitentiam suam gratificabitur nostræ, Our repentance shall beget His. If we turn from the evil we have done, He will turn from us the evil that should have been done to us. Where there was Communion read, with many curses; He shall turn them away, and in stead of them, shall leave a blessing behind Him. We shall turn His very stile, which at first was, ad Me, and in the end is, ad Dominum Deum vestrum: and so make a chang in Him.

In nullo detrimentum patiemini (saith the Apostle) we shall be no losers by it. A lesse sorrow shall turn away a greater, by a great deale. Weigh the endless sorrow we shall escape by it; it admits no comparison. The Contristation is but apo's Day (saith he) for an hour; the Consolation is, for ever and ever. 2 Cor. 7. 9.

To this lugentes there belongeth a Beati, Blessed they that thus mourn. To this hunger and thirst, Mat. 4. 4. 6.

a saturabimini. It is so set by the Church (the time of it) that our Lent shall end with an Easter, the highest and most solemn Feast in the year; the memory of CHRISTS rising, and the pledge of our bles-

A SERMON PREACHED

before King JAMES, at White-hall, on the

XIV. of February Anno Domini, MDCXXI.

being ASHWEDNESDAY.

MATTH. Chap. VI. Vers. XVI.

Cum autem jejunatis, nolite fieri sicut hypocritæ tristes; Exterminant enim facies suas, ut appareant hominibus jejunantes: Amen dico vobis, quia receperunt mercedem suam.

* Or be not like sowre hypocrites.

Moreover, when you fast, * look not sowre as the hypocrites; for they disfigure their faces, that they might seem unto men to fast: Verily I say unto you that they have their reward.

Joel 2 12

THE Lessons which this day have been, and yearly, as upon this day, are read in our eares, do all speak to us of Fasting. The Lesson of the Old Testament, Turn to me with fasting. The Lesson of the New, as you have heard: When you fast, &c. All, either (as the Epistle (telling us, what we should do (Fast;) Or (as the Gospel) taking it for granted, that we will fast, and teaching us, how to fast, so as we may receive a reward for it at GOD'S hands.

These being the Lessons, this the tenour of them; by them there is intimation given us, that the matter of these Lessons, that a Fast is at hand; that, this when is now. How in our practice it will fall out I know not; but certainly, in the Churches meaning, now. Who would not

(we may be sure) look out an Epistle for us beginning with turn to me, cum jejunio, with fasting; and a Gospel beginning with cum jejunatis when ye fast, &c. but when she presumeth, we mean to fast, to dispose our selves that way. It were all out of season to seek and select Scriptures, what to avoid, how to behave our selves in our fasting, if we mean no such matter; if it shall be with us, as yesterday and the day before it was, and no otherwise.

This being the Churches intent; this, her Time; and this her Text; What She commends to us, we commend to you, that you would take notice of it, and prepare your selves for it accordingly: that the Epistle be not sent, and the Gospel brought you, and both, in vain.

The Church thus reaching it forth, I took this Text: And I took it rather (if it might be) to stop the mouths of them that maligne it; at least, to remove from it the slander of any untrue imputation. They preach it, they print it, and (no remedy) so they vwill have it, that the Locusts (Apoc. 9.) must needs mean us here. Why? The Locust is all belly, and vve are all for the belly; hostes jejunorum, the profest enemies of fasting and of all abstinence. That vve (the Preachers) entertaine you vvith nothing but vvith discourse about the mystery of Godlinesse: but never vvith exhortation to the exercise of it. That, you (the Hearers) fall sad, and (as the hypocrites here in the Text) look sowre, not at the act, but at the very name and mention of fasting, at the reading of a Text that tends but that vvay, as it might be, of this, novv.

Sure,

Sure, for fasting, how we practise it, every one is to answer for himself: But, that we preach it, I take, this day, you all to witnesse. Joel shall beare record with his Cum jejuniis, And now C H R I S T, with his Cum jejuniis, that we call for it. If it come not, it is not our fault, it is not for want of calling for. We speak to a thing that hath no cares: but we speak though: Liberamus animas nostras, We deliver our own soules, and we deliver our Church from that false slander of theirs. Ezek. 3. 19.

To follow then, whither the Scripture leads us, we are to understand, that as the Morall Law of GOD (in the Chapter before:) and as Almes and Prayers (in this Chapter) going through the Pharisees hands, had gathered much dross; So had the exercise of fasting, likewise. It is the manner of the world, and so it is of the Prince of the world, to sophisticate ever the best things with hypocrisie, with superstition, with a thousand devils more. Our SAVIOUR then, as He had done to the other of the Law, to Almes and Prayer; So, here now He comes to fasting: and comes with his fan in his hand, to do to it, as He had done to them before: to sever the precious from the vile, the corne in his floor, from the chaff. Cum jejuniis, is his floor; molite, his fan; hypocrisie, the chaff to be blown away. His purpose is, He would have all stand and continue in force; as the Law, it self, is the lawfull and laudable practice of almes, prayer, and fasting, all three. And it is, as if He should say: That you give almes, pray, and fast, I like it well: do so still. Only, take this Caveat from me, When ye fast, beware of the sower leaven of hypocrisie in your looks, and of the love of videamini ab hominibus, to be seen of men, in your hearts, and all is well: Fast on and spare not, To GOD it is, you fast; and GOD your heavenly Father shall see it in secret, and shall reward you for it openly. Luk. 12. 1. Veri. 5.

The parts arise of their own accord; and, at the first view, give forth themselves, two: For fasting, one: Against hypocrisie, the other. As it were a blast of the trumpet of Sion, to the former: A retireis, from the latter. Cum jejuniis is set downe to be kept: Nolite esse sicut is fanned away, to be left; the leaven of the Pharisees (which is hypocrisie) is cast out. The Division

In the former, we are to doe two things, to settle the duty in both words, 1. In jejuniis, (first) fasting it selfe: 2. After, in Cum, the time when.

In the latter, two things more: 1. The act of separation and casting out the old leaven, first. 2. And then the danger, if we doe it not. The Separation: that we be not like the hypocrites, or not like sower hypocrites. Not like them in two things. 1. Not, in making it our labour to compose our outside or countenance. 2. Nor, in making it our end, Ut videamini, to be seen of men.

But what if we doe? Then followeth the punishment: Ton have received your reward. A gentle punishment (one would think) to receive a reward: but a Punishment, and a grievous one, when we shall weigh, how filly a thing it is, they receive, Mens breath: and how great a one they loose by it GOD'S reward.

Thus stand the parts. Of which, the former (I feare) will take up this time, Cum jejuniis, only, and no more.

Cum jejuniis: Two questions there be: 1. One, about jejuniis; whether we will fast at all: 2. The other, about Cum, when we will do it. Best get us a fast first; and get us a time, after. If the thing, if fasting it selfe be loose, the time will be to seeke: God knowes, when. The first thing then we are to do, is to possesse mens minds with a true conceit touching it. Men seeme but faintly perswaded of it, as it were no needfull part of a Christian mans duty. When ye fast, yea when we fast: What make you of this? This leaves us to our selves: When, is no precept, to enioyne it. Take it right: Here is Cum jejuniis, in the Epistle: Cum jejuniis, in the Gospel. The Precept is in Joel: Turne to me with fasting: And (within a verse after) Sanctifie Me a fast: That is a Precept (I am sure.) Here, it stands thus: What Joel imposeth, Christ supposeth: implies the thing out of the Prophet, and supplyeth the manner how, from himselfe.

But, if we stand upon a Precept, we may go higher then Joel: Even ad Legem (saith Esay) Goe to the Law it selfe, and there is one. Nay there are more then one. One, for a standing fast every year, enioyned with a severe pain: he that fasted it not was to be cut off from the people of God, (Numb. 29.) One, for a voluntary fast, (Numb. 30.) For, whatsoever is votive, is voluntary of it selfe, but who so took it on him by vow, was bound to performe it. One for (both) Integrale, an entire fast, from all, upon the Kippurim day (Levit. 16.) And another for Portionale Jejunium, the Nazarites fast, from some and not from other (Numb. 6.) The Law will be for it: The Law it selfe was given at a fast to Moses; a fast of forty dayes.

The Prophets are for it too: Under them, and by their direction, to the standing fast in the Law, you have five more added. One, in Est. 4. four, in Zachary: all enioyned.

It went then, as now it does; The common sort (by their good wills) would neither have holy day nor fasting day. In Amos they complain of the Sabbath, Quando transibis? When will it be over? They thought it as long as any two dayes, that they might be at vendamus merces, opening their shops and selling their wares. In Zachary, they shrugge at their fasts, What and must we fast still, Yet more fasting? have we not fasted enough, and have done it thus and thus long? A sign, they would have been rid of their fasting. Willingly, had the shambles open, as well as the shops. But it would not be, they could not obtain it: The Prophet held them to it, and would not release them.

Mar. 2. 20.

But, this is Old Testament: When the New came, what then? I had rather you heard S. Augustine than myself: Ego (saith he) animo evolvens, &c. I going over in my mind, the writings of the Evangelists and Apostles in the New Testament [video jejunium esse preceptum] [see fasting is commanded, there is a precept for fasting. So fasting is in precept there, if we will trust S. Augustines eyes. And we may: He that (in this place) saith [Cum jejunatis] when ye fast: saith, in another, Tum jejunabunt, Then they shall fast: and that amounts to a Precept (I trow.)

Here you see Cum jejunatis a part of the Gospel, a head in Christ's first and most famous sermon, His sermon in the mount.

So that, if there should be a meeting about it (such as happened in the holy mount at the transfiguration of CHRIST) of Moses for the Law, Elias for the Prophets, CHRIST for the Gospel, famous all three for their fasts, and for one kind of fast, all (the fast we now begin) all would be for it: at no time to be left, but, in all three estates to be retained; to have the force of a precept in all.

But lawes and their precepts do often sleep and grow into dis-use. How is jejunatis for practice? Hath it beene used, and when hath it? The fast of Ai, under Iosua; At Gibea, under the Judges; At Mizpa, under Samuel; At Hebron, under David; Of Ieremie, before the Captivitie; Of Daniel, under it; Of Zachary, after it: At Jerusalem, of the Jewes, at the preaching of Iosel; At Ninive, of the Gentiles, at the preaching of Ionas: All of these shew when, and that it was no stranger with Gods people, so long as the Law and Prophets were in force.

And what was it, when the Gospel came in? At Antioch (where the Disciples were first called Christians) we find them at their fast: the Prophets of the New Testament there, as well as the Prophets of the old. Our Saviour said to them, When He was gone they should fast. So they did. S. Paul for one; he did it oft (2 Cor. 11.) And for the rest they approved themselves CHRISTS Ministers (inter alia, by this proof for one) by their fasting (2 Cor. 6.) And, what themselves did they advised others to do; even to exhort them, to make them a vacant time to fast in. So that where the Church for this day (otherwise then her custome is, on other dayes) hath sorted us an Epistle, out of the Old Testament, and a Gospel, out of the New (both use to be out of the New) She did it for this end, to shew, that fasting hath the wings of both Cherubins to cover it: both Testaments Old and New; Iosel, for the one; Christ, for the other. So at all hands to commend it to us.

Sure, in the prime of Christianity, it cannot be denied, it was in high esteem (fasting) in frequent practice, of admirable Performance. Which of the Fathers have not Homilies yet extant in the praise of it? What Story of their lives, but reports strange things of them, in this kind? That, either we must cancell all Antiquity, or we must acknowledge the constant use and observation of it in the Church of Christ. That Christ said not here [Cum jejunatis] for nothing. They that were under Grace, went far beyond them under the Law, in their Cum, and in their jejunatis, both.

Precept then, or practice it wanted not. Neither did they want a ground. It was then holden) and so may yet, for ought that I know) that, when we fast, we exercise the act of more virtues then one. First, an act of that branch of the virtue of Temperance that consist. (not in the moderate using, but) in abstaining wholly. Abstinence is a virtue. Sure I am, the primordiale peccatum, the primordiale fin was not abstaining. Secondly, an act or fruit of repentance: there is pœna in penitentie, in the very body of the word; something penal in penitence. And of that penal part is fasting: And so an act of Iustice corrective, reduced to S. Paul's vindicta, or his vindicta, Castigo Corpus meum. Thirdly, an act of humiliation; to humble the soul, which is both the first and most usual term for fasting, in the Law and Prophets. For sure, keep the body up, you shall but evilly, you shall have much adoe to bring or keep the soule down, to humble it. Fourthly, They that are CHRISTS (saith the Apostle) have and doe crucifie the flesh with the lusts of it. Fasting is one of the nails of the Crosse, to which the flesh is fastned, that it rise not, lust not against the Spirit: At least, fasting, we fulfill not the lusts of the flesh. Fifthly, Nay, they goe further, and out of Iosel's Sanctificate jejunium, and out of Luk. 2. 37. Where the good old Widow is said to have served GOD (and the word is adspedo) by fasting and prayer (not by prayer only, but by fasting and prayer) they have not doubted, but that there is Sanctificatio in it, nor to entitle it an act of the Service of GOD: that we serve GOD by it. Sixthly, And serve Him with the chiefe service of all; even of Sacrifice. For sure, they are all of one assay (these three) Almes, Prayer, and Fasting. If the other two, if Almes be a Sacrifice (with such sacrifices GOD is pleased;) If Prayer be one (one, and therefore called the calves of our lips;) no reason, to deny Fasting to be one too. If a troubled spirit be a sacrifice to God, why not a troubled body likewise? (And it troubles us to fast, that is too plaine;) Since we are to offer our bodies as well as our soules, both a Sacrifice to God: As our soule by devotion, So our body by mortification. And these three, to offer to God our soule by prayer, our body by abstinence, our goods by almes-deeds, hath beene ever counted tergemina bestia, the triple or threefold Christian Holocaust or whole burnt offering. Seventhly, and last, the exercise of it, by inuring our selves to this part of true Christian Discipline, serves to enable us to have venire moratum, the mastery of our bellie against need be: The Fathers call it exercitatio, and those that used it exercitatio. S. Paul gave it the word first (Act. 24. 16) and saith, he took it himself, 1 Cor. 9. 27.

Use is much; for if before we need, we be not used in some sort, at times, to abridge our selves, but still fill and fat our bodies, weeks, months, years together; habituate our selves in it; what need soever there should be, what occasion though never to pressing (suppose God should call us to fast, as Esa. 22. 12.

Say

Say the dayes should come of the losse of the bride-groom) we should not be able for our lives, to break our selves of that, which all our lives long we have been accustomed unto, But, as it is said of Dionysius lying at a siege and forced to keep order, he fell sick because he kept order and surfeited not still (that, having been the corrupt custome of his former life.) So should we. Or for lack of it, grow as impatient as Esau, rather than loose our broth, for our birth-right. Or as they in Numb. 11. 5. Gen. 25. 30. not part with our flesh-pots to die for it, but sit by them, and die by them, and so with them alio be buried in the graves of lust.

The want of which enuring, you see what it hath brought us to. VVe are so evil able to do it, as we are scarce able to hear of it. Our Saviour, when He speakes of fasting, points at this: Having been so long at our old wine, we cannot away, nor relish new. VVe see the experience in our preaching it. Our bottles are so used to the old, that they leak with the new; as fast as we pour it in, it runs out again. VVe must provide us new vessels. Else, all we speak of this theme, will be spoken into the fire. But I forget my self. Chap. 9. 17.

To come to the Text: Cum jejunatis, When ye fast: To work out of it a little. I say first, this very when shews CHRIST'S liking of it; that there is a time allowed. Else would he allow it no Cum, no when, no time at all. For videte ne quando, not a moment for ryot, or for any thing, God hath not required. And, if for no idle word, for no idle act (we may be sure) is there any Cum allowed. Luke 21. 34.

Again, when ye fast: This when, is a presupposing at least: and qui supponit, ponit. For, can any man phantasie, that Christ would presuppose ought that were not required of us by God? to be asked by the Prophet (or rather by God himself): Quis ista quasivit de manibus vestris? Who ever required of you to do any such thing? Esay 1. 12.

Nay, His manner of the delivery, thus breaking into it with a Cum autem, But when you fast (as fast you will, I make no doubt;) here, But when, is plain positive: Nay, it is of the nature of a Postulatum; takes it as granted; layes it for a ground. This (say I) is a precept, and more than a precept; more binding. Ever more forcible is that which is presumed, than that which is enjoyed. One, we are confident, will be yeilded to straight; needs no injunction. The other, we must use our authority, and well if we so get it. 3

The very things he comforts it with (to wit) Almes and Prayer (for, them and this He marshals in one and the same rank, cares for them all alike, rewards them all alike: and they (I trust) are in precept: Yet they are no otherwise but presupposed, even as this is, When ye fast, when ye pray. 4

Then the paines He takes with it, to fan it, to purge the old leaven from it, to rectifie and reduce it to the right manner and end: He would never have taken these paines, but that he held it worth His paines; but that He would have us use it, and use it not seldome. For, things seldome to happen the Law takes no order for. 5

The parties to whom He speaks this; they be his Disciples. Whereby it will fall out to be, not a duty only, but a Christian duty; because they were Christians, the first Christians of all, to whom this Cum jejunatis here is spoken. It is for them too; they are not exempted from it. 6

Nay, He likes it so well, as he goes about even to prepare even hypocrites, and to frame them fit for it. A sign, it was not their double fast, but their double face, (that is) their dissembling first, and then their disdaine of other, He found fault with. 7

And (to conclude) a double promise He annexeth: First, to answer their complaint (Esay 58. 3.) Why do we fast and thou seest it not; punish our selves and thou regardest it not? That they shall never need to fear, their fasting shall be begged for concealed; though it were never so secret done, though not a man on earth see them, He from heaven will cast his eye on them and regard them. 8

And second, as He shall not want an eye to see, so neither shall He a hand to reward them for it: They shall not fast for nothing. His heavenly father that sees them in secretes, shall reward them openly: the upshot of all. 9

All these, 1 The manner, He delivers it in: 2 The Parties, He delivers it to: 3 The things, He marshals it with, 4 The honour, He doth it, 5 The Care, He shewes of it, 6 That He frames his Disciples, 7 That He frames even hypocrites for it, 8, 9 The double promise He assureth upon it: All these are so many passings thorow the furnace. Would He do all this and not hold it a duty required by God, and acceptable to Him? Have we a Precept, a Practice, a Promise; a flat Precept, constant Practice, and an ample Promise, and doubt we yet whether we should do it or no? No sure. As long as these words shall stand in S. Matthew, Jejunatis must stand, and have a Cum, a time when allowed for it. And now to that Cum let us come.

Allowing jejunatis, the thing, we cannot but allow it a time, when. For, * there is a time when for every thing under the Sun. Only, when that when shall be, we shall not so easily agree. VVe would fain have our fast loose, be left to our selves for the time: This when to be, when our selves please. And, when will it be? Indeed, the practice of the world would make one think, this when to be without a then; a time (as they say) in nubibus. A case but put; When, (that is) when we list, and if we list, and not else. As if CHRIST had said; If ever you do, if at any time you feel your self disposed, then to observe this caution. Otherwise, left to our own liberty, when that shall be, or whether it shall be, or no. Cum The time for fasting: Eccles. 3. 1.

If this should be so, I have hit upon a very happy Text. For, if this be all; It is no sooner said than done; done every where all this Land over. Nay, we may say with the Young-man in the Gospel, All this have we done from our youth up. For, when we fast, we look not sowre, we disfigure not our faces, we never seek to be seen of men. I say, when we fast: for, the truth is, we fast not at all: but when we fast, all this is kept. That if this should be the meaning, we have done, before we begin. Luke 18. 27.

To destroy a Text, is not so evil, as to make a Text destroy it self; which, by this sense will come to passe. But, if this sense be senslesse, this glosse (as a viper) eats out the bowels of the Text. We must then resolve, this is no case put; it is a ground laid. No Hypothetical fast, if you shall; but, Categorical, when you do. For except it be, all that follows is to no purpose. To what purpose is it, to direct what not to do, what to do is our fast, if we never mean to fast? for CHRIST to set us down instructions how to carry our selves, in that, we never mean to go about? Plain dealing were, to tell Him, we would use His counsel, in some other matter: as for fasting, we find our selves no way disposed to it. But, by the grace of G O D, we are not so far gone yet. VVe see, His will is, we should do it; and take a time to do it we will, and when is that? When ye fast? when fast ye? A time (we said) there is, if for all things under the Sun, then for that.

Let us speak but after the manner of men, go to it but naturâ tenus (as saith Tertullian) and Nature it self will teach us when. Mark but when Nature will yeeld to it; when and in what case, the natural man will fast, without eye to God, or Christ, or Religion at all. So shall we be within the Apostle's. Doth not nature it self teach you?

1 Cor. 11. 14.

I Natures time
1 VWhen in fear.
Acts 27. 21. 33.

The time of fear, is a time of fasting with the natural man, Nec est sibi tempus in periculo, for in time of danger men have no mind of meat. They in the ship with S. Paul when they looked every hour to be cast away (the tempest was such,) there was (saith S. Luke) word acria, no spending of vituals, all that while. VWill we naturally fast for fear of the wrack of our ship, and not be afraid as much of the wrack of our souls by sin, and fast for that? Doth not Nature teach us this? There is one when.

a Eccles. 3. 4.
b Joel 2. 12.

VWhen the natural man is in any inward grief of heart, it will take away his stomach, he will fast; semper mororis sequela jejuniûm, ut latitia accessio sagina (saith Tertullian) fasting followeth mourning, as feasting doth mirth. The time of mourning is one of Salomons times: VWhy that is our time of Fasting. Fasting and mourning Joel joyns them both. The afflicted soul, in his prayer (Psal. 102. 4.) My heart was smitten with heaviness, how then? So that I forgot to eat my bread. Our Saviour Christ shewes it best: He was asked, Why fast not your Disciples? He answers not, how can they fast? (as He should, for that was their question:) but how can they mourn, while the Bridegroom is with them? As much to say as, if they could mourn, they would not fail but fast certainly. So (we see) did Anna, Elebat, & non capiebat cibos. So (we see) did David, for the death of Jonathan: and again when his child lay adying, mourned and fasted for both. Upon sorrow for the death of a friend, or a child, can we fast then, distante naturâ; and can we not do as much for our sins, the death of our souls? Doth not Nature teach us that? Nor for the death of Christ neither, which our sins were the cause of? There is another, a second when.

1 King. 21. 4.

Thirdly, Anger him thoroughly, the natural will to his fast: Ahab, for curst heart that he could not have his will, Naboth would not let him have his Vineyard: to bed he goes, and no meat will down with him. Could he, out of his pure naturals, for curst heart, leave his meat and fast, and cannot we do the like for just indignation at our selves; for provoking Gods anger with the curled thoughts of our heart, and words of our mouth, and deeds of our whole body? cannot we be got to it? Will not Nature teach us, this? A third when.

1 Sam. 14. 24.
When in a longing desire.

Fourthly, The natural man, when he is in the fervour of his desire (if it be an earnest desire) he will pursue that he desires so hard, as he will forget his meat quite. Not a man so hardy as to eat anything till Sun set, saith Saul, when he had his enemies in chase: Such was his desire of victory.

What speak we of victory? we see Esau so eager in following his sport, that he came home at night so faint, and he paid dear for his Supper; yet felt it not all day, while he was hot on his game.

Did we hunger and thirst for the recovery of GODS favour (as did Saul for his victory, or Esau for his sport) we would not think it much to fast as they did. VWill not Nature teach us this neither? A fourth when. Put the natural man into any of these passions kindly, you shall need proclaim no fast for him, he will do it of himself.

Now mark these four well: 1 Fear, 2 Sorrow, 3 Anger, and 4 Desire, and look into 2 Cor. 7. 11. if they be not there made (as it were) the four elements of repentance, the constitutive causes of it. 1 Fear, the middle point, the center of it. 2 Sorrow, that works it. And if sorry for sin, then of necessity, 3 Angry with the sinner (that is our selves) for committing it. It is there called indignation, and no slight one, but proceeding ad vindictam, to be wreaked on our selves for it. 4 And Desire is there too, and Zeal joyned with it to give it an edge. These four the proper passions all of repentance, and these four carry every one (as we say) his fast on his back. Much more, where they all meet, as, in true earnest repentance, they all should.

It is sure, God planted these passions in our nature, to be bestowed chiefly upon their Chief objects. And their chief objects are: 1 Of fear, that which is most fearful, the wrath of God. 2 Of anger, that which most certainly procureth it (that is) our sin. Of Desire, that, than which nothing is more to be desired, Gods favour. 4 Of Sorrow, that we have most cause to be sorry for, the losse of it. There then to shew them, there to bestow them: which if we did in kind, we need never take thought for a cum to our jejunatio.

For grief of heart, for worldly losse, for bodily fear of drowning, for bitter anger we can do it: why not, for the grief of our grievous offences? for fear of being drowned in perdition eternal? VVhy not, for indignation of our many indignities offered GOD? Alas, it but shews our affections of sorrow, anger, fear, desire, are quick, have life, are very affections (indeed) in secular matters: but dead and dull, and indeed no affections at all, but plain counterfeits, in things pertaining to God, or that concern the estate and hazard of our souls.

To take down a peccant humour (as we call it) in our body, whereby we fear impair of our health, we can and do enter into a strict and tedious diet, and hold out well: We can forbear this and that, as we are bidden (though we love it well) if we be but told, it will do us hurt. If for the health of our body, we will do that, which, for our souls health, we will not, I cannot tell what to say to us.

What speak I of health? To win but a prize at a running or a wrestling, Abstinet se ab omnibus 1 Cor. 9. 25. (saith the Apostle, 1 Cor. 9.) They will abstaine from all things, and undergo a strict regiment for a long time before: and all is but for a poore Silver game. What shall I say then, if we cannot be got to endure so much, to obtain the heavenly prize, which is in part done (as there he saith) by castigo corpus meum? This for the naturall mans cum when he will fast. Ibid. Ver. 27.

VVill ye now see the Scriptures when, when that sets us out our time? They be in a manner the very same: Scripture and Nature vary not, dictate to us the same time, both. The Scriptures. when.

Our first when: VVhat time any great danger hangs and hovers over our heads; that, is Gods time VVhen is danger. (saith Esay 22. 12.) GOD Himselfe doth then call us to fasting. No time then, to kill oxen, or dresse sheep, eat flesh and drink wine: A great pain is there set upon it. God must needs take it ill, if when he bids us fast, we fall to feast. And this when, is of greatest example: None so frequent in all the Bible, as fasts of this nature. Never came their danger toward them, of plague, but David: of famine, but Iosiel: of war, but Iosaphat: of any destruction threatned, but not onely good Queene Hester, but wicked Ahab; nay, even the heathen King of Nimive, to their fasts straight; flying to it, as to a forcible meanes (and so they ever found it) to turne away GODS wrath, and so the danger the matter of their feare. This is a time When: and we (then) to do it. a 2 Sam. 24. b Joel 2. 12. c 2 Chro. 20. 3. d Ester 4. 16. e 1 Kin. 21. 27. f Jon. 3. 5.

Now, if for the effect we fast; for the cause much more. Of these, of all other our miseries, the cause is within our selves. Our sin, whereby GODS anger is kindled and these ever follow upon it. VVhen therefore we would proceed against our selves for sin humble our selves (the phrase of the Law) chasten our selves (of the Psalme) punish our selves (of the Prophets) take reveng of our selves (the Apostles phrase) cum jejunabunt in die illo: this, is a way; then, is a time to do it. Fasting is a punishment to the flesh, Modicum panis and paucillum aqua was a part of Micheas punishment. By it, as to amerce our selves (as it were) for abusing our liberty before, and making it an occasion to the flesh, and thereby to prevent his judgement by judging our selves: Do de me penas ut illo parcat (it is Augustine.) This so proceeding of ours to take punishment on our selves, it is illa misericordia (saith Tertullian) it allures, inclines God to mercy; when he sees us angry with our selves in good earnest, and doe somewhat, His anger ceases: Nam qui culpā offenditur, pena placatur, whom the faults offends, the punishment appeases; whether His punishment, or ours. But, He had rather, ours then His: that we should it, than He.

And this to extend to the body also, and to the chastening of it. For, doth the soul only sin? Doth not the body also? And shall the soul suffer sorrow for sin, and shall the body suffer nothing, and yet was in the same transgression? If it shall, then at least pena damni (for pena sensus I am sure, we would be more loath to come to.) And what pena damni but abstinerē a licitis quia illicita concupivit, To deny our selves, that we might, for doing that we might not? There is another Cum.

Secondly, As it is a chastisement for sin, when it is done: So hath it alwayes been held to have in it a medicinable force, a special good remedy to prevent sin, when it is not yet fallen on us, or we into it; but grudges us only (as it were) and whereinto we are like to fall, for that we are now leading, even entering into temptation. This is also a time when. And this time we ground upon Christs time of fasting: His fasting went immediately before His temptation. To prevent it. Mat. 4. 1, 2.

No wayes needful for Himself was Christs fast. None is so simple as to think, the Tempter would have prevailed against Him, though He had taken His meals; eat, and drunk, the forty dayes before. It was not for Himself, it was for us His fast: Exemplarily to teach us, it will be a great vantage, if (prepared by this exercise) we shall encounter the evil Spirit. Specially if it be some kind of them, if an unclean spirit: For, that kind is not cast out (no not kept out) but, either by jejuniis, or not at all. CHRIST'S fasting then before His temptation, is to shew us, it is good fasting against temptation. At least, this way we shall weaken his forces, by keeping down our fleshly lusts, which (saith S. Peter) fight against the soul, and lying in our own bosome, oft betray us to the Fiend. For, when all is said that can be, Bernard's saying will be found true; that Nutriuntur cum carne & vitia carnis. And, if Religion did not, experience teacheth us, that. Ply the body apace, let it be kept high, how mellow a soile it proves for the sins of the flesh! and that, if by abstinence we crop not the buds of Sensuality, they will ripen and seed to the ruin of our souls. So, there is use both wayes of it. Use of castigo corpus, For the time past: Use of in servitutem redigo for the time to come. Jejuna, quia peccasti, Jejuna ut ne pecces, both (saith Chrysostome.) One, as a punishment, with reference to sin already committed: The other as a preservative for noli amplius peccare, that we commit it not again. Two causes more, and two times, When. 1 Pet. 2. 11. 1 Cor. 9. 27.

of some good.
Hest. 4. 16.
Neb. 9. 1, 2.

But, hath fasting his use in evil things only, and repelling them? hath it not also in good things, and procuring them? Yes sure. I demand, doth there never happen us, that we have some cause more than ordinary, the procuring of GODS favour whereto, and the successe whereof, with more than ordinary prayer we would commend to GOD? Why there then, is another Cum. As, when Hester would move the King, for the safety of her people: or Nehemias, for the new building of the wall of Hierusalem; Both found good of this, that when there is use of earnest and hearty prayer, it will be the more earnest and hearty, if cum jejunitis do also go with it. We have other-while extraordinary occasions in our worldly affairs, and then, we make no account of a meales losse: have we none such in spiritualibus to GOD-ward? None but vulgar there? Never any, but such as we can entertain with our common dull devotion? Need none other, but as if the businessse, between GOD and our soul, were the silliest and poorest businessse we had to go about?

When in spiritual exercise.
† 2 Pet. 3. 7
† 1 Cor. 7. 5.

But say we have none; shall we at no time sequester our selves, and for some small time χωρησας, (it is * Saints Peters word) get us a with-drawing-place; συχωδῶν (it is † S. Pauls) make us a vacant time, of purpose, to intend devout and ghostly meditation throughly? A case, which S. Paul presumes, at one time or other, every good Christian man and woman will not fail but do. Then, hath fasting a time too; and one vacancy to serve for both.

Psal. 141. 8.

It is a special friend to prayer; to feather it, to put a vigour or fervour into it. Therefore, where (almost) shall you find them but coupled, fast and pray, one following straight in the neck of another? Even here, presently before, was CHRIST in a treaty of prayer: and here now, immediately after it, He falls to speak of fasting. This was not for nothing: But, as if He should give thereby a special Item, that there is a mutual reciprocal correspondence; nay, an alliance between them, to sanctifie and support either the other. And namely, a special virtue in fasting, to awake up and quicken our devotion, thereby the better to elevate our minds unto GOD. We feel this, or we feel nothing; that dull is our devotion, and our prayers full of yawning, when the brain is thick with the vapour, and the heart pressed down with the charge of the stomach: And that our devotion and all else, is performed (as Tertullian saith) pollentiore mente, and vivacior corde, our wits more fresh, our spirits more about us, while we are in virgine saliva, yet in our fasting spittle; when fasting and prayer are not asunder, but we serve God in both. Our Morning prayer, that, that is the Intense (saith the Psalms :) Our Evening, is but the stretching out of our hands, in comparison of it, faint and heavy.

These then: the time, † Of fear of the danger sin will draw upon us: † Of indignation at our sin the cause of it: † Of sorrow for that we have done. † Of care, that we do so no more: † Of taking down the flesh: † Of lifting up the spirit: † Of averting evil: † Of procuring good, † Of giving our selves wholly to Spiritual exercise: These are all causes, why: These are all times, when; all of the Scriptures limiting; all, of the Saints practice, there.

Chap. 9. 15.
Psal. 137. 2.

And indeed, all of Christ's own assigning. For, venient dies, tunc erunt dies (saith CHRIST.) Do those dayes never come? When come they? Verily when evil dayes come upon us, we may hang up our harps then, the marriage feast is at an end with us, and we then to fast (saith CHRIST) according to the letter.

But, goes He from us only corporally by adversity? Goes he not spiritually also? Yes: and whenever we fall into any grievous sin, though the piping may continue (perhaps) yet the Bridegroom is gone; assure your self, gone he is; Et cum jejunabunt, et tunc fasti we must: Why? even for very grief, that by our wretched folly, we have set Him gone. For, if when He is taken from us, fast we must: must we not much more, when we our selves, by our lewd carriage have been the cause (I say not, of His taking, but) even of His very chasing and driving away from us?

Thirdly, against temptation, we need to fast; for, against His temptation Christ fasted, that needed it not.

4
And last, His close so joyning, and so oft, of these two († fasting, and † prayer) so together still, makes that the time of fervent prayer is a time of CHRISTs appointing too; and that so intimated, even in this very place here.

The Application to the time of Lent.

Jer. 35. 6.

Prov. 1. 8.
17. 35.

1 Cor. 11. 16.

But, all this while we have been speaking of when we are to fast at large; or when upon some occasion: In the mean-time, we say nothing of this time now at hand, This is not upon any occasion: it is a yearly recurrent fast: Will this also come within the lists of Cum jejunitis? I take it, it will. For shall our fasting be altogether when we will our selves? shall it not also be sometime when the Church will? May we bind our selves, and may not she also bind us? Hath she no interest in us, no power over us? The Synagogue of the Jewes (we see) had power to prescribe fasts, and did: Hath the Church of CHRIST none? Is she in worse case than the Synagogue? No indeed. If Recab might enjoyn his sons, She may hers. She is our Mother, she hath the power of a Mother over us; and a Mother hath power to give laws to her children. And so Cum jejunitis is, When you fast by the Churches appointment, also: the Churches cum. This is sure: No man hath GOD to his Father, that hath not the Church for his Mother: and that, once and twice in the Proverbs, order is taken, as to keep the precepts of our Father, so not to set light by the laws of our Mother. Ira Patris and dolor Matris, are together in one verse: He that grieves her, angers him. And he cannot but grieve her, that little sets by her wholesome orders. The Apostle (we see) S. Paul by name, though he had been in the third heaven, yet he deferred to salem consuetudinem, the Churches custome, and rests in it. We must learn to do the like, and not set light by them, as our manner is.

This

This I may say for this Cum, It is no Custom lately taken up; No Law of the Church our Mother that now is; She is grown old, and her senses fail her: She erres, or at least is said to erre, at every bodies pleasure. It is a custome (this) of the Church, while it was a à Christo recens, yet fresh and warme from Christ, The Church, which was the Mother of the Apostles themselves, at all times kept; every where observed, then, and ever since. Some to shift it, frame to themselves a fear of (I wot not what) superstition, where no fear is. Before any superstition was stirring, any poperie hatched, it was, this fast was. Lex abstinenti in Quadragesimâ semper fuit in Ecclesia (saith the Oracle of Antiquity, Theophilus Alexandrinus) Lent was ever in the Church. Nos unam Quadragesimam, secundum traditionem Apostolorum, (the Montanists had three) but that one was delivered us by the Apostles (saith S. Hierome.) VVhy should I weary you with reckoning them up? VVhat one more ancient VVriter than other is there, but you shall find it in him expressly, even up to Ignatius, who lived with the Apostles themselves? Apostolike then, it is; and for such S. Hierome avowes it; and when that is said, enough is said for it, I think. Yet it is good (you know it) the fast so delivered, and by the Church ever and every where so kept, the Council of Gangra hath laid an Anathema on them that keep it not, avoid it how they can that keep it not

And sure in general, that this power should remain in the Church, to prescribe us set times, was most behoofeful. Every man (so we would have it) to be left to himself, for Prayer, Fasting, Sacrament, Nay for Religion too (now) and all? For G O D'S sake let it not be so, let us not be left altogether to our selves; No, not in Prayer. Private prayer doth well; but let us be ordered to come to Church, and to do it there, Pharisees, Publicans, Peter and John and all: Let us have our dayes appointed and houres set for it. If all were left to us, God knowes, I durst not promise, what should become of Prayer it self. The like say I for the Sacrament. Let us have a cum when to come to that, too. And so for Fasting: Fast privately in G O D'S name: But hear you, let not the Church trust to that. Nor she hath not held it wisdom so to do: but, as in both them, (Prayer and the Sacrament.) So in this, holds us to our order of dayes and times established. Them if we keep, so it is: Otherwise, were it not for the Churches times, I doubt there would be taken scarce any time at all. Now yet, somewhat is done: but leave us once at liberty, liberty hath lost us some already, and will loose us the rest, if it be not looked to in time.

The rest, are matters of Discipline rather than Doctrine: 'The number of forty': 'The season of the year': 'The manner of abstinence'. Somewhat may be said to content us: But remember, it came from the Apostles: that is it that binds us; that is it, that sets it fast.

That which hath been said, is for some set time at large, for a cum: but, why this cum, at this time, now? VVhy forty dayes? VVhy before Easter? VVhy this fast? It is of all hands confest, that ordained it was, as a part of the Discipline of repentance: And much was done in it, about public Penitents. Yet not for them only. But, even with them, out of the bowels of a Mother, the Church her self would become a Penitent, and have all her children do the like. Her self become one; For the whole body of the Church hath her faults (beside the private offences of every particular member) for which there was a severall set sacrifice in the Law. For us: to become penitents likewise for who knows whether we be not as faulty in private, as they (the open penitents) in publike? As great sinners as they, though not known for such?

So the cause is general, that she wish them, and we wish her and wish them: wish them and for them: For them, and for our selves, in whole and in part, all in one, uniformly might performe a solemn annual Repentance to God.

As to the number of dayes G O D saith in the Revelation † Dedici tempus ad penitendum. He gave a time for to repent in: What time was that he gave? The time that God gave was 'forty dayes', The number of 40 dayes. in the famous Repentance of Ninive: happy for the issue; recommended by CHRISTS own mouth, and propounded to us as a pattern. Other set time (save this) she found not. She took the same then: She could not tell how or when to take a better, than that of G O D'S own giving. This The rather, that Moses, Elias, and CHRIST himself had hit upon the same number in there fast. It is not nothing that it containeth, though it be but an imperfect expressing of the pattern of so worthy authors; of CHRISTS specially. Ignatius hath said it before me: I dare say it after him.

For the season: The Prophet hath said it, if we know not when to lay our fast, our returning to God, lay it with the * Stork and the Swallow; take their time, do it cum hirundinibus, rather than fail. 2 The Season: In the Spring. * Jer. 8. 7. Against Easter. Zach. 8: 19. But besides that, the Church hath laid it most conveniently to end with the feast of Christs rising, and so to go immediately before it: that against that time (as the Fathers in the first great Council of Nice with it) all being restored, and all prepared by it, we may of all hands celebrate that high Day, and bring to God a pure offering (the very words of the Council.) Then to end with that high feast, that the laying of Zachary may be fulfilled, that our fast shall be to us turned into high Feasts; as that is the highest and greatest of our Religion; for which cause this fast is called, jejunium Paschale, with reference to it. For Easter and Lent stand upon one base; both stand and fall together.

As to the manner of our abstinence. It is sure, the fast in kind was in these three, 'Panem non comedit, ' potum non bibit, ' ad vesperam: neither eat nor drink at all till night. But non omnes The Manner. 3 capiunt sermonem hunc, all are not capable of this saying: Yet, he that can, let him. But for them that cannot, the Church (as a tender indulgent Mother unto all) that she may win somewhat, is content to remit of the rigour of this; turns her on all sides, to lay no more on us than we can endure, if she can find ought in Scriptures to relieve us. And that doth she three ways.

Dan. 10. 3.

2 Tobies fast.

Tob. 2. 4.

3 Cornelius & Peters fast.

A&C. 10. 13.

1 Non panem, No manner meat: None at all: Nay, not no manner meat at all (too hard that.) What say you to non talem, not altogether none, but not such or such meat? Non panem desiderabilem, no dainty alluring meats, and namely, no flesh (Dan. 10.) Now we do alter the quality yet, Daniels fast we termed it, on which the Church did ground her Εποποιΐα, and ours may ground her easing of fish (say what we will) a lesse pleasing diet, and lesse desired by us.

2 Again, Non comedit; Not eat at all, not altogether any? That were too strict. VVhat say you to Non tantum? To some, but not so much? Before, altered the quality: here, abates of the quantity. Not in that quantity, not so much, not so oft as at other times. To cut off one meal if both you cannot. They call it Tobies fast, quando derelinquebatur prandium, he left his dinner: (Dinner or Supper. all is one, so one be left,) nec ventrem cibo oneres duplicato, (It is S. Hierome, and we do not double ballast our bellies.) And these two we call portionale jejunium: takes not away all, takes some, and leaves some; leaves an honest portion, leaves us a meal. Some kind and some measure (only) abridged.

3 Not usque ad vesperam, not till night, forbear: too long, that. VVhat say you to (as before not so oft, so here) not so soon, as at other times? Put off the time of our repast: Make our molestus cliens break his hours a little: it not ad vesperam, as neer vesperam as we may. Cornelius fast they call it: he was fasting at the ninth hour: (that is) our three at afternoon, till then. Peters fast they find, and that is the lowelt; he was fasting till past the sixth hour: till then. Thus indulgent she is: for these are not without example in Scripture (we see) nor unknown to Antiquity. But, for Antiquity, then, they pressed forward as much as they could; and we draw backward all that ever we can. These then, or as many, or as much of these as we can; so to make some manner shew, some countenance toward it: that, if not keep pace with the ancient Church, yet not to give them over clean; not to fall behind them so far, till we lose the sight of them quite, and so fall to abandon Cum jejunatis altogether. And thus much for this Cum, this very time, and the manner of jejunatis, our fasting in it.

And, now we have found us a time for our fast, God send us to get a fast for our time, a jejunatis for our Cum. For, this Cum is now come. Here then is the place and time to answer CHRIST when ye fast, to ask, when fast we? Every one to enter into his own heart and convent himself about the taking of these times, how oft we have taken them. How oft? I would it were come to that. I fear, it must be whether we have taken them at all or no? VVhether any of them? And if this question should be put us, I report me to our consciences (a many of us) whether it would not appose us to tell, when this when last was.

But if (as I doubt) we have not taken them; then I ask why have we not? Have we no sins to be censured? are we in no fear of wrath to come? Our case (sure) is fearful, if we fear not.

Are our souls so very bumble, our bodies so in subjection, we need it not? I marvel, it should be so; it should be needful for S. Paul; his body should need chastening; ours none. What, is the Bridegroom alway with us? He with us, & we wish him alway? do we never part? doth that time never come? Never all our life long? Yes, yes: we want no times, nor we want no causes: we want will. VVhereof sure we should do well to be think our selves better, lest we be out of the Gospel quite. CHRIST cannot say to us, when ye fast, if we fast not at all. Somewhat would be done (sure) if it were but to make CHRIST speak to some purpose: Somewhat; or all that hath been said, and that shall be is to no purpose. No use of it, of a Caution how to do that, we have no meaning ever once to do at all.

I should have now come to the Cautions: and (if God will) so I will: but at some other time. But as our times are inclined to leave sensuality to our own (which we would fain have called Christian) liberty; we had need to bend, and to spend our whole exhortation, not so much against hypocrisie, as for fasting, to keep life in it. As our age falls out, that is not so necessary. Time was, when fasting was in credit: And when a thing is in request, then is counterfeiting to be feared, then take heed of hypocrisie. But now, when little it attributed to the true, then should (I think) there need little fear of the false. So that it were not altogether without reason, as the world goes, not to stand on the later so much; but even let it go; and, so men would fast, let their countenances be as pleased them: let them look as sowre as they list.

Should I say so, I might well enough, for any fear, fasting vvill novv be made matter of vain-glory. But, that vv ere to extend my Commission: I dare not; but leave it as CHRIST hath left it, and say vvith the Apostle, Quod accepi à Domino, What I have received of the Lord, that, and no other thing; and, as I have received it of the Lord, so, and no otherwise, deliver I it unto you; And persvade, exhort, intreat, and even beseech you to do it; but not as Hypocrites: and back again, not as hypocrites to do it; not so; yet in any vvise to do it; to fulfil, to make good Christi Cum jejunatis.

1 Cor. 11. 23.. Jejunatis, you know vvhat tense it is. In the present tense He hath put it, for at the present time He requireth it. It is not, Cum jejunabitis, or Cum jejunaturi estis, vvhen you shall fast, but vvhen you do. He speaks, as if He vvould have us fall in hand vvith it presently, make no future fast of it. This Cum, is already come; and vv e to do it, novv it is come: to make answer to CHRIST's When you fast, vvith Now we fast, novv vv e are at it, this day commonly called Caput jejunii, the head of it: to vv hich head (I trust) vv e vv ill allowv a body, and so make a fast of it.

And even so then, let us do. And He that saith it, vvill see it, and seeing it, vvill see it shall not go vvithout a reward at His hands; See, that, any hunger or thirst, for Him and upon His vvord suffered, shall be satisfied at His heavenly table, at the great Easter-day, the Day of the last resurrection; vvhere there shall be no fasting any more, but a Feast vvith all joy and Jubilee for ever.

A SERMON PREACHED

before King JAMES, at White-hall, on the
VI. of March, Anno Domini, MDCXXII.
being ASHWEDNESDAY.

MATTH. Chap. VI. Vers. XVI.

Cum autem jejunatis, nolite fieri sicut hypocritæ tristes; Exterminant enim facies suas, ut appareant hominibus jejunantes: Amen dico vobis, quia receperunt mercedem suam.

*Moreover, when you fast, * look not sorrow as the hypocrites; for they disfigure their faces, that they might seem unto men to fast: Verily I say unto you that they have their reward.*

 Or, be not like sorrow hypocrites.*

OUR last yeares endeavours were out of the two first words, Cum jejunatis, When ye fast; to settle a true conceit, what every good Christian man is to hold, both of jejunatis fasting it self, and of Cum, the time when. And that not without great need; the most part seem so faintly perswaded of fasting, as if it were no needful part of a Christian mans duty: And, of the time, as if CHRISTS Cum did never come.

And this, we did, as for liberasti animam tuam, to deliver our own souls; so to deliver the Doctrine of our Church, from a malicious slander cast on it, as if it favoured any way the filling or farcing our selves, at this no lesse than at other times; and did not require and enjoyne a more strict and penitential kind of life, at this time, than all the year beside.

VVherein, if GOD have so blessed our endeavours, that these two points be settled, we may then go forward to the rest; that is, Be not like the hypocrites. If we resolve, that CHRIST'S when shall have a then, and then, fast we will.

The next point is a Caveat, vvhat we are to take heed of, vvhen we fast: That we fast in secret; make no shew of it: Our fast be to God and not to men: that we fast not for vain-glory as hypocrites do.

I confesse, I proceed to this second part, as to that, vvhereof there is not so much need; And, but that I take my self bound to prosecute the text, I have begun, I vvould choose rather to spend the hour in speaking again for the duty, to have it done; than to deale vvith the Caution, vvhat to eschevv in the doing. VVe cannot get men to it (to fast:) vvhat need we then spend any speech, hovy they should not do it, vvhen they do it not?

VVe divided the Text into two parts: One, for fasting; the other, against hypocrisie. As our times are, there is more need, to speak for fasting, then against hypocrisie. And yet against that too: (God forbid; that, or any vice should be favoured:) but, not against hypocrisie, in fasting. There is little fear of that. Men fast not like hypocrites, vvhen they fast not at all.

But;

But you will be pleased to call to minde how we then left, and wherewith we concluded the last year. That, we must not think any thing more then needs, in any speech of CHRIST. That, what we have received of the Lord, that and no other thing; And as we have received it of the Lord, so and no otherwise are we to deliver it unto you. And, from him we have received both Cum jejunitatis, and Ne Sitis; the one as well as the other. And so we set forward, to Ne sis sicut, the Caution. Yet so as our first caution ever be, we omit not to fast. Not, at other times: but not at this especially, when the Church, or rather, God, by the Church her ancient order and custome calls us to it.

For when we are to look to all this, what time? Why, When we fast: That when is still to be kept in mind; to that we must come. That, the ground of all; thither we must return again in the end.

The Summe, & Division. We say then, Cum jejunitatis, is the good seed-corne which CHRIST Himself hath sowed. All besides, is but chaffe to be blown away. And, now He takes His fan in his hand, to fan away this chaffe. For, quid palea ad triticum (saith God, in Jeremy) wheat and chaffe, what should they do together? These must be severed: One to be laid up in the Garner, the other to be burnt with unquenchable fire.

- I. 1 The fan in these words. Nolite fieri sicut, Be not like. The Chaffe, is in the word Hypocrites. First then, Hypocrisie in general to be avoided.
- II. 2 But here is a special kind, sicut hypocrita tristes, Not, sowre, like hypocrites: Or, not like sowre hypocrites. Not like them.
- III. 3 Not like them, wherein? In two points upon which the fan goes. 1 Not like them, in their Sicut: 2 Not like them, in their Ut. Not, in their manner how: Not, in their end, why. 1 Not in their manner how: Why, what do they? they are all for their countenance; and that they disfigure. In making it their labour, to have it appear in their countenance. 2 And why do they so? That is, men may know them for fasters. In making it their end, to be seen of men. These two He fannes away.
- IV. 4 But, what if one could find in his heart to fast, and yet would have men see it, and commend him for it, Ad quod damnum, what hurt will come of it? One would think, none: CHRIST sayes Amen to it. They make it their reward, to be seen of men: Why, it shall be their reward, they shall be seen of men: that is all, they would have to come. VVhy, this, one would never think a punishment: But it is one. And think it not a small one, for though it seem no great harm to receive a reward of praise: yet when we shall lay together, how poor a thing it is they receive, Man's praise: And, how great an one they lose by the meanes, Gods reward: they had better be without it. For, when they have that, there is all, all that shall come of their fasting: Acceperunt suam, amiserunt meam, They have received their reward, they have lost mine; and CHRIST to say Amen to it; This say I, is sure a heavie punishment. Therefore look to it.

Luke 12, 1:

And, when the Chaffe is blown away, and the floore purged: when the old leaven, which is hypocrisie, is cast out; of the rest, we are to make our sweet-bread, now against the great feast of our Passover, we make ready for.

I. The Fanne. Be not like.

Mat. 4, 3.

a Psal. 69, 22.

c Gen. 25, 30.

d Luke 18, 12.

WHen we have got past the two first words; when the thing is won, and the time; and we resolved, that fast we will; and when we will; and we set our selves seriously to it: What, is all safe? Will the Devil be gone his way? Shall we hear no more of him, as soon as he sees us so set? No, indeed: but hovers about us still; as if there were yet somewhat for him to do. Our Blessed SAVIOUR when the Spirit led Him into the wilderness, and He fell to His fast, it is said, that then the tempter came to Him: So, we must make reckoning, He will to us. It is exceeding behooveful for us, to take notice of this: as they say, to know the length of the Devils chains: That, neither full nor fasting, we are out of his reach, but he will be busie with us in them both. Attends our Feasts, to make our table a snare: Attends our Fasts, to turn them (as well as our prayers) into sinne. Eating, he is busie with us, to make us eat like Esan. Fasting; no lesse busie, to make us fast like the Pharisee. And look what in this, in the rest: Both Alms and Prayer too, are subject to it. Therefore, in and through all, whether we give Almes, pray, or fast, to have an eye to him; in all. Praying, Fasting, giving Almes, he leaves us not; gives us not over, till he have corrupted the manner, perverted the end: till, one way or other he have set them awry. His first essay is, Ne bonum, we do not that which is good, we fast not at all: His second is, Ne bonum bene, we do it not, as we should; by putting to it a wrong sicut, an undue manner; or a wrong Ut, an undue end; that so, we may do what GOD commands us, for the Devils end. Sure, it is not enough to be exercised in doing good; we must look to both the Sicut, the manner how we do it; and to the Ut, the end, why we do it: or he may hap go beyond us; and both spoil them, and spoil us of our reward for them.

But then again, take heed ye be not caught here; and for doubt ye may do it amisse, be brought not to do it at all, but let all alone. That is another of his tricks: For his method and manner of proceeding, in this point, is well worth our observings: Nosse hac salus est. It is one of the Profunda Satana (as the Revelation calls them) the deep fetches, or policies of Satan. For, would any man think, he would use this Text, these very words of our Saviour [Be not like hypocrites] to draw men from fasting? He doth. For, finding here, fasting, and Hypocrites thus close together; and so, that hypocrites use to fast; he perswades some (and such, as ween themselves no fooles) to think, they cannot fast, but they must ipso facto prove hypocrites. Sets up this for a scar-crow, to raise up a vain fear in them, and so to chafe them from it. Will ye fast? Gods Lord take heed what you do; do it not: why? Ne sis isicut hypocrita; for, and you do, you will be taken for an hypocrite.

And mark the double taking of Ne sis is: Ne sis is, Be not like (saith CHRIST:) Ne sis is, Lest you be like (saith he.) Now, the belly is apt and easie enough to apprehend any fear in this kind; any opposition, or exposition, any thing that makes for it.

Nay, hereby he prevailes with them, not onely to give over fasting themselves: but draws them further to grow jealous, lest every one that fasts, be not tainted that way: and, lest every one that preaches for it, be not justly to be suspected, as that way given; as having in him some sparks of a Pharisee. Thus doth he.

And, will you see how compendious a way he deviseth, to rid us clean of all hypocrisie? Thus: to keep no Lent; not to fast at all: and so, he will warrant us, we shall be sure to be clear from being any hypocrites. So, to avoid hypocrisie, he voids fasting quite.

But, what is this, but to cast out devils by the power of Beelzebub, one devil with another? To cast out hypocrisie by gluttony? To cast out superstition with the prophanenesse of Esau? VVho, rather than offend his belly, cared not what became of his birth-right. To bring in Ne jejunatis, Fast not; under colour of Ne sis is hypocrita, not Being like hypocrites. To cast out Ne sis is hypocrita, Be no hypocrites, with sis is Epicuri, Die not in debt to your bellies. The Devils only way, to rid hypocrisie, by engrossing Epicurisme.

But (alas) what will this avail us? what is gotten by this? Small ease will it be (GOD knowes) for any, not to be condemned as an hypocrite, Seeing he that fell to eat and drink with good fellowes (in the XXIV. Chapter after) had his portion given him with hypocrites, as good a trencher-man as he had been; all his life time. So that, both come into one room, both lye together, and fry together in one place of torments. And, thither it is he would bring us, he cares not whither way. This is his first assay: and much hurt he hath done this way.

I know not how, but fasting is laid aside: In a manner clean gone: Few or none keep it. How is it gone? what is pretended, or given out for it? But for fear of doing that, which persons do that are superstitiously given; fear, of being like them. For, no fear of hypocrisie, now: Sicut hypocrita is now gone. But, by this one precedent, this one ne sis is sicut, he can make more. As now, in place of Be not like hypocrites, is come a fear of, Be not like Papists: we shall be like Papists, if we do. And not to fast, is made a Supersedeas of all Popery; as if that alone were enough, to make us truly reformed. This is all our fear now.

But, ibi trepidaverunt timore, ubi non erat timor, there were they afraid, where no fear was. This is but a scar-crow neither. First set down this: we must do something, that hypocrites and superstitious persons do, or we must give over Alms too, and Prayer as well as Fasting; for, they have a like Ne sis is upon them. You shall find Hypocrita in, at all three.

Then the second: we may do what hypocrites do, and yet not do it, as they do it. And it is the sicut, the manner (not the thing itself) that CHRIST here excepts to. So, that fear is at an end.

Lastly, these words being directed by CHRIST, and by Him spoken to His Disciples, by the grace of GOD all be not hypocrites, or superstitious, that fast; For, CHRIST'S Disciples were neither. We may fast then like CHRIST'S Disciples, we may be of their number. And indeed the truth is; CHRIST'S Disciples are only truly seised of it. Hypocrites do but encroach upon it, or rather on the out-side of it, as doth the Wolfe upon the sheeps clothing. But neither is the sheep to leave or lay down his fleece; nor the Christian man, his fast; because other-while, the Wolfe is found in the one, or the hypocrite, at the other.

In three short words CHRIST teacheth us as a way to answer both. His ne sis is sicut will make both fly away, as chasse before the fan, and Cum jejunatis never be stirred, but lye still. Do the Hypocrites fast, to be seene, doe they? And do the Papists fast, with opinion of merit? Why, Be not like hypocrites, but yet fast: Nor, be not like Papists, no more than like hypocrites, yet fast though. CHRIST'S ne sis is will serve for these, and for as many as the Devil can devise. Fast not like them, fast like CHRIST'S Disciples, and all is well. And this, for his first way of turning CHRIST'S Cum jejunatis into Ne jejunatis, upon fear of being like hypocrites, if we so do.

But if, this way he succeed not to keep us from it, but fast we will; then comes he about, with a new stratagem. And that by way of wholesome counsel; that, if we will needs fast, we would do it to some purpose: (that is) do it so, as we may be known to do it, in any wise. For, to what purpose will it be to do it in tenebris? It is no work of darkness; or, as good in a blind corner, where no man can take notice of it; as if we were ashamed to be seen about so good a work. Nay, in any wise; take heed of concealment of your fast, of hiding it under a bushel. And, good reason; they be works of light (all three) Alms, Prayer, and Fasting; and so love to be brought to lights, to be set on a Candlestick, and to be seen. Therefore, as before, in our Alms; he had devised we should call our Alms-folk about us with a Trumpet: and, as in Prayer, that we should do it in choice places, where folk may come by, and see us at it; and to be a good deal longer than ordinary, that so, we may seem somewhat singular: and to have more in us, than our fellowes. So, here now, when it is Fasting-day with with us, to get us a fasting-day face, at any hand. For that, except we be somewhat altered in countenance, no man will look at us, or mark us; there will be no notice taken of it; and so as good not fast at all: But if it appear in our faces, we shall both get reputation to our selves, and our Profession shall receive credit besides. Thus doth he meddle his chaff; mold in his source leaven into CHRIST'S nova conspersio; to make us do, what God would have us, for his owne; to do Gods work, for the Devils end. Sanctifie me a fast, (as I told) shews, there is sanctity in it; a holy duty it is, and he seeks to breed moths in it. For, so the Fathers call hypocrisie (vineam sanitatis) the moth that frets in sunder all, that holy or good is; and so by that meanes, make it a meer moth-eaten fast.

Thus whithersoever we turn our selves, he meets with us still. These are his designs: this doth he, diversis itineribus, by contrary wayes, seek to circumvent us. First, down he sits in his Court, and offers us a licence, not to keep Lent, to keep what dies we will: And if we refuse it, threatens us, he will get us presented for hypocrites. But if that move us not, but we stand out resolute for all his scarcrow, then, out he comes in a new style; fals to commend to us, as good orderly men: but (withal) to advise us friendly to do all so, as may be for our best behoof: which is, to have it seen in any wise. And (that which is strange) scars us with that, in the beginning, which he brings us to, in the end: Even, to do that in hypocrisie, that (before) he wished us, in no wise to do, for fear of hypocrisie. So as, upon the matter, now it is come to fitis hypocrita, though not in so broad terms; but, so is his meaning, do it like hypocrites to be seen.

II.
The Chaffe.
1 Not like bypocrites in general.

This is the proper place: here now comes CHRIST with his fanne, and severs the precious from the vile, with Ne fitis sicut. And think it never a whit the worse for this Ne fitis. Almas hath the same before; and so hath Prayer the very same: And many a Ne fitis belong to these, and to every good duty. They are not the worse; the better rather, for the fanning: they are rid by it of much refuse stuffe. And, even to this of fasting, there belongs more Be not like's than one. Not like the Manathes, that thought the creatures unclean. Not like them, whose fast is a Communion of Gluttony. Not like them, that fast to save charges. Not like them that make it an opus operatum: and so it be done, it skils not how with them; it skils not for any Sicut. Nos like any of these. One Ne fitis serves them all, sends them all going one after another, as many as come. Ne fitis to them all, and to every, or any of them all. And so, you shall not need give over your fasting for any of them all. I would fast, but for being like one of these: why, be not like any one of these, and yet fast notwithstanding.

Mark. 7. 18.

Not like any one of these, But specially (saith CHRIST here) not like Hypocrites. Why, not like them? For, then, the Pharisees fasted, and their disciples: and John fasted, and his disciples: there was, then, fasting on all hands. And then is the time of hypocrisie: Then doth it abound most, when things are in request, when most used; then, is most danger of counterfeiting. And hypocrisie is but a kind of counterfasting (as I shall shew you.) Therefore as those times were, Be not like Hypocrites.

Hypocrites:
that is, stage-players.

Not like them? and them, of all other, one would choose to be like, they of all others are more like to fast; they look as if they fasted, they carry their fast in their face, they. Why, that, CHRIST likes not; the carrying it in their face: tels us plainly, they be not the men, we take them for: no true fasters, they be but hypocrites.

Hypocrites? What is that? We must needs stay a little, to search out the true sense of that word: They be so baited, all the Gospel thorow; there be so many Woes cried against them. The word Hypocrite is neither English nor Latine, but as a Denison. Originally, it is a known Greek word; and is (in that tongue) the ordinary and proper name for those, whom the Latine term Histriones, and we in English Stage-players, Such as in disguised attire and haire present themselves on a Stage, and there oft represent those, whom (GOD knowes) they are far from; but yet outwardly take upon them their persons; as if they were.

And the ground of the word is, they are therefore called Hypocrites, for that, to give a true judgement of them, you must scrupulously judge them (not by their Players coat above, but) by that, they are underneath in their own, when their gorgeous and gay attire is off. That, may be gallant and brave: they themselves are, it skils not what; Peradventure, he that plai'd the Souldan, but a Sowter.

The word (in the tongue CHRIST spake) is as much as to say, as one in a vizour, Assumens vultum, a face-taker; one that hath got him a taken-on-face, which is none of his own, nor nothing like it; as in Plays and Shews, the manner is. But, we hold us to the word Hypocrite. The dative sense of the word you see: and it is, as if He had said in plain English; When ye fast, be not like these same Stage-players. So, it signifies at the first. And at the second hand, all others, which do off of the Stage, that which they do upon it; and in Courts, City, or Countrie, carry themselves with other faces than their own, as these do on the Stage at Playhouses.

The Heathen man long since observed, that Mundus, scena; that, in his conceit, the world, for all the world, was like a stage or theater; scarce a true face in it: all in a manner personate. And the actions in the world, not much unlike to their acting of their parts in the Acts and Scenes of a Stage-play. But our Saviour CHRIST, he goes further: he tels us here, of a stranger matter. That, there want not, that make his Church a very Stage; and play with Religion, and play Religion and every part of it: So carrying themselves in things pertaining to GOD, as if they had some Play or Pageant in hand. It is but too true, this. If you will set up a Stage, I will find you Actors for it now.

Will you see Almes played? out comes Judas sagely, with a sentence in his mouth: Us quid perditionis hac? Alas it would have been better bestowed upon a many of poor people: why should there be such waste upon Christ's head? right, the supplication of beggars.

a Mat. 26. 8.
John 11. 5.

Will you see Prayer played? Look upon the Players in the XXIII. Chapter after that, under colour of^b a long prayer, now and then prey upon the houses and goods of a sort of seduced widows: and make as good gain of their Prayers, as Judas would have done of his Almes.

b Mat. 23. 14.

But, Sermons go away with it now; The Church is, then, full: and (G O D knows) a few true heavens: the rest are but a sort of Sermon-Hypocrites. The Scene is in the 33. of Ezekiel: O let us go hear the word: and the Prophet adds, So was the fashion then, and for fashion it was. And thither they come, and when they are come, here sit they, but their heart is elsewhere, wandering where it will. Either they attend not: or if they do, it is to make jests. Or, at the best, it is but, as they hear a song of one that hath a pleasant voice; and no more comes of the Sermon than of the Song. Or, if you love the New Testament better, there have you (in the 6 of Mark)^a Herod sending for John Baptist oft, and hearing him full devoutly, till (for a^b Non licet tibi, in one of his Sermons) he made his Head fly off his Shoulders. And in very deed, the Marriage at^c Sichem, and the Circumcision for it;^d Ab-solom's vow; ^e Ishb's sacrifice, what were they but very Plays, meer Masks, imitations of him that is Rescius in scena, the Master Hypocrite of all, who (in the Old Testament) got him on a mantle, and played^f Samuel at Endor: and (in the New) got him wings, and bright rayments, and came forth^g transformed into an Angel of light. To whose company they belong, and whose they are, that get them^h S. Paul's hippos ivocelas, the visor, or mask of Godliness; and make of it Saint Peter's wapen-luyck quias, a cloak, or cover, for every bad intent. They do no better, but even play religion. And of this Scenical, theatrical, histrionical godliness, there is good store abroad in the world: G O D grant it be not found in Israel. Be not like Stage Players, when about any religious act; Not, when about any.

But, of all parts of Religion, our Saviour (here) may seem to have made choice of the worst. To say, when ye fast, be not like Players, not then, of all times. For, a play and a fast suit not. A Play is lightly had at Fasts. Men when they fast are in heaviness: these agree not well. Well, as evil as they agree, for all that, Fasts have been played too. There was a Fast played, to get Naboth's vineyard: It cost him his Vineyard, and his life too. There was another played (Acts 23.) to have got S. Paul made away. And they say, there was one played against the fifth of November; and a Procession too; and all, to have made us all away. From such Fasts playing the Lord deliver us. But so you may have a fast played too, for a need.

Not like them
in fasting.

1 King. 21. 9.
Act. 23. 14.

That we may not marvel, these Hypocrites that play in fasts (CHRIST tells us) are a special sort by themselves. Be not like Hypocrites at all: but, of all other, not like them. Why? the common sort of Hypocrites abroad, seek to put on a better face than their own: but, here have you a Monster, exterminans vultum, out-lawing (as it were) and banishing his own natural countenance, aparte is CHRIST'S word, defacing his face, as you can hardly know, it is he: taking to himself a worse face far, than ever G O D made him. To lay on a little (I wot not what) to the end, to look the more faire, the better coloured, of a clearer complexion; that, is not strange: But, to affect a look more dim, more hollow, more evil favoured; and to be-leven his face to that end, that passes; that, is a new kind of Hypocrisis, per se; a kind by it self, that. Yet, such there be. There were, that wore a coarse garment to deceive (saith Zachary): So, there is not only gay, but ragged hypocrisis. And, there were (saith CHRIST here) that rough-cast their countenance, and that, to deceive too. That, there is not only fucus, but fermentum pietatis. Not onely sleering, but lowring; not onely well complexioned, but pale coloured hypocrisis. Such are they, that play in CHRIST'S fast, here; tristes, sorvi, austeri, the word is subpauus; which is (properly) the look of a wild beast (a Lion, or a Bear robbed of their whelps) grim and ghast; one would be afraid to look on them. These would CHRIST have us not be like; as indeed who would be like them, but such hypocrites as they?

2
some Hypo-
crites.

Zach. 12. 4.

Not like them? Why, how do they? Exterminans vultum. We begin with vultum, The hypocrites whole labour is but his look. Blame him not; for he is nothing but look. Nothing but face, and case; but a very out-side onely. As for any inward matter, he never looks after.

1 Not like them in their Sicut, their manner.

In which point, they suit well with Players, whose names they bear. It is a very fit resemblance for them, that are nothing but resemblance. In the very true and lively person of a Prince, the outward pomp or shew is the lefs part, by far: the Regal qualities, the Princely virtues are they, we chiefly admire; A religious heart, high wisdom, heroical courage, clemency, like that of G O D, without measure or end. In him that plays the King, it is quite otherwise. No Royal quality is required at all; No Princely virtue needs, he never cares for them. But, gesture and gate, the carriage of his countenance, to say his part, to pronounce and to act it well; that is all that is cared for by him, or that is looked for at his hands. And even so it fares here: Contrition of spirit, a broken heart, unfeigned humility, truth in the inward parts; these are most requisite in the true fast. It skills not a whit for any of these, in the Stage-fast; So he can set his countenance well, have the clouds in his forehead, his eyes somewhat hollow, certain wrinkles in his cheek, carry his head like a bulrush, and look like leaven; all is well. As for any inward accomplishment, he never takes thought for any. Vultum only is it; He goes no further. Only to be like, to be sicut; as one, though (indeed) none.

Psal. 51. 6.

Not like
them in their
Vt their end.

But why do they take all these paines to disfigure themselves? That do they, Ut videantur, that they might be seen of men, and seem to men, appear to them in the likeness of such as fast indeed. The leven of hypocrisie in their looks, is from the love of a Videantur in their hearts. Vain-glory, the ground of hypocrisie, ever. And, here now, they match again. The hypocrites end, is as the Players end; Both, to be seen. You never see the play begin, till the Spectators be come, so many as they can get. Nor, no more shall you see this fast acted, unless there be some, to eye and to note it. He will not fast on the ground; there must be a Stage set up for him; where I dare say, they wish the scaffolds full to see them: the more, the better.

Both match in videantur; and it must be ab hominibus, of men. Angels eyes, Gods eyes will not serve the Hypocrites turn. Other eyes then, there must be entreated, to gaze on them, or ye get no fast.

Why, is there any harm in mens eyes, that they may not see, nor we may not be seen of them? Verè oculi hominum (saith Bernard) basilisci sunt bonorum operum: Now truly there is in mens eyes venome, like that of the Cockatrice, to infect our well-doing; with a well-meening of our selves. O now, I am seen! O ego quantus sum, mundo cense! O what a holy mortified man am I taken for! It troubled Alms before (this:) it troubled Prayer: and now, fasting: It troubles all. In all, this, is the point, this is the Ut, to be seen of men. Not, that it is unlawful to be seen well doing: You will easily put a difference, between, to be seen to do well; and, to do well, to be seen: between facere & videri; and facere, ut videare. Do, and be seen, may be casual, never thought on by us. Do, to be seen; that is the Ut (and that Ut is it) the very end, we do it for, and otherwise we should not do it. It happens otherwise, many good people do well, and are seen so doing, as it falls out: but, beside their purpose quite. But, none, save this masked crew, sacrifice themselves and their fasts to the eyes of men; and do, what they do, for no other end but that.

You shall easily discern them. You shall not get one of them, to do as CHRIST did, get Him aside out of the way into the wilderness, fast there: No: CHRIST was not so well advised, to do it there, in a desert desolate place, where there was no body to meet Him, or see Him at it. They be all for the eye (these:) a perspective fast, or not at all. Nothing out of sight; never by their good-will, where no body to look on. Jejunium oculare, opus operum; this. The Heathen man said well: Ergo, iste, in tenebris, non servaret hominè; Such a one would not be entreated to save a mans life in the dark (if he might) Not, but by torch-light. For, all is lost, he is clean undone, if no body see or look upon him.

Well, if it were the Spirit of GOD led CHRIST into the wilderness to fast there, like an Hermit; you may well know, what spirit it is, that sets one up a Stage; there, to fast like an hypocrite. To be seen then, is their Ut, the very But they aim at.

And wherefore to be seen? in the play, that they may have a plaudite: So plain as they even crave it in their last words. So, in this eye-serving fast, seen they must be: And why must they be seen? To be given out, for such an one is a great faster. And why that? That men seeing that good work of theirs, might glorifie GOD? No indeed: but, them: the earthly child; not, the heavenly Father. And, mark it, when you will: There is no Animal so ambitious, no Chameleon so pants after air, as doth the hypocrite after popular praise. For it, he fasts; and so hungry and thirsty he is after it, as you shall hear him even beg for it: Honora me coram populo hoc; saith one of them (it is Saul:) O grace me for the love of GOD; seem to honour me in the peoples eyes. Loquimini in auribus populi huius, saith another (it is Abimelech) O give it out in the peoples ears; I am thus and thus. Mark: the peoples eyes, and the peoples ears; for, hypocrisie is ever popular: for their, for mens applause, all in all.

May then, will ye hear them expostulate for it, and that, even with GOD himselfe? Wherefore (say they, in the 58. of Esay) fast we, and thou seest it not? So, they would be seen. And, why do we pinch and punish our selves, and thou regardest it not? So, they must be regarded, or they will not take it well. To be short: the putting forth of the finger (as Esay there calls it) or (as the Poet) Digno monstrari, to be pointed at, and dicier Hic est, and said, Look ye, there he goes: To have it whispered, That is He: To be magnified up and down the Peoples mouth, that, is even the consummation of all this Stage-devotion.

Which very point makes the fast loose; and indeed, makes it to be no fast at all: They exterminate their countenances so long, that they exterminate fast and all. This very Ut videantur makes, that it seems to be, but is (indeed) none. For, in the true fast, It is as David saith of his; I sorrowed, and my soul fasted: It is an humbling of the soul. Else, if it go no further than the body, it is a fast without a soul. But these though their stomachs be empty, yet their souls do feed and feast all the while. Nam est quædam sagina laudis (saith the Heathen man:) Praise will feed and fill both. And, it is our meat and drink (and so we call it) that we take delight in. And sure, if Esay be right, that one may be drunk, and no cup come at his head; it is like possible, one may surfeit, and yet no meat come in his belly. And with pride both. As for meat and drink the Devil never takes any; keeps a perpetual fast for that matter: but, feeds on pride, as one doth on his meale; and surfeits that way, as much as any Epicure: And even so (for ought I know) one may eat and drink no more than the Devil, and yet be as proud as the Devil: why not? So as upon the matter, their fast is but even the Devils fast, and no better.

Fasting then being an act of humility, if the Devil can make it matter of pride, habetur propositum, he hath what he would; he will give you good leave to fast and spare not. And, even matter of pride, he makes it. The Pharisees, whom CHRIST would have us Non sicut, they were, in their own conceits, the Non sicut of the world. They tell it GOD, Non sicut alii, not like other men. Others did but fast once a week, if that: they twice, & never missed. And in the Ecclesiastical story, there is a rare example example of it. He, that same Iohn the Patriarch of Constantinople, that first took upon him the proud title of Univerſall Biſhop, that very man was called and known by the name of Iohannes Teſtauror, Iohn the great faſter. So pride will grow of faſting. Being then ordained to take down the ſoul, if he can bring it to puſſe it up, and ſo, turn our faſt into ſin; that is even a Faſt of the Devils own chooſing. One, which (he is ſure) GOD will never look at. The Prophet gives the reaſon: If we faſt for mens eyes, we faſt for men, not for God. If we faſt for our own praiſe, we faſt for our ſelves, not for GOD neither. Now, what GOD ſhould reward, ſhould be done for GOD. And, with GOD, a righteous thing it is, to put men over to receive their rewards, at their hands for whom they faſted: that they pay them their wages, that ſet them on work: For, at His hands, they are like to receive notice, ſeeing, for Him they did it: nor: He was not the Mr of their faſting. And this is the laſt point. As before; not like them in their Sicut; So, not here in their Mr neither, neither in their manner, nor in their end.

Zach. 7. 5, 6.

Suppoſe now, one may be ſo in love with the praiſe of men, as he is altogether out of love with an inviſible faſt, and muſt needs look a little that way; what harm will come of it? Amen dico vobis, quiſi receperint mercedem ſuam: This muſt needs be their puniſhment; for, there is none other but this. And ſure, as ſtrange a puniſhment, as you ſhall read of: To ſay Amen to that, one deſires; to ſay, one ſhall receive a reward. Can it be a puniſhment to receive, to receive a reward and a reward of our own deſiring? It is ſurely none. You do it, to be ſeen; you ſhall be ſeen; to be praiſed; Why, you ſhall be praiſed: This is your end; your end be it. You hunger and thirſt for mens praiſe, ſaine you would have it; you ſhall have it; There it is, take it to you, much good doe it you with it. Call you this a puniſhment, to receive a reward, to have ones deſire? Surely, it ſeemes but an eaſe one, if it be one.

True, if the reward be worth the while firſt. And ſecondly, if by receiving, it, we forfeit not one incomparably greater. But, in theſe two caſes, ' If the reward, be but ſome ſlight thing, little worth. And then, if by getting it, we looſe another above all worth, then have we no great cauſe to rejoyce at our receiving: then, in ſtead of a reward, it is a puniſhment, ſay I; and that an heavie one, whenſoever both theſe caſes meet.

Now, both theſe caſes meet here. Firſt, it is but a poore thing, they receive. Shall we value it as it is? I meane this goodly reward, of popular praiſe, which they ſo itch after. What is the popularite, but a ſort of men nothing judiciall? Not one among an hundred. Not praiſing, but out of paſſion (ſlightly) if that: and not conſtant in that paſſion neither.

Praiſe if it be judiciall, is ſomewhat worth; and ſo worth the deſiring. The popular is not ſo. CHRIST ſaith; they have alwayes ſpoken all good of the false Prophets: as for the true, they have ever followed them with all diſgrace: And, then, what judgement is there in them? CHRIST himſelf, will ye hear their verdict of Him? Some there were ſaid, He was a good man; but ſome other (and the greater ſumme) ſaid, No, but a very ſeducer, a coſener of the people: And then, who can think, there is any judgement in them? In the 19. of the Acts, the whole multitude was together, and when Demetrius had ſet them in, for two houres they never left crying, Great is Diana; and the moſt part of them never knew why they were come together, nor why they tried ſo: And then what judgement is there in them? No ſure: out of lightneſſe of mind; out of paſſion it is, they praiſe or diſpraiſe, magnifie, or vilifie a man, for the moſt part.

But is this (be it paſſion, or what it will) of any endurance? Will it hold? No indeed. Sicut luna mutatur, Every; new moone, a new mind? nay, every quarter. No better witneſſe of this, than our, Saviour himſelf, who heard Hosanna in the higheſt, and Nor Him but Barabbas, both, within the ſpace of a seven-night. St. Paul was yet ſhorter, for he was firſt a murderer, and ſuddenly, a God and no leſſe, in a manner with one breath. There is their conſtancie, this the hold you can have of it. No lock nor key, to ſhut up our reward in: No tenendum to our habendum, to hold it when we have it. And who then would much eſteem it?

But, ſay there were both lock and key; yet, what is praiſe but words? and words but wind? what is ſpeech but breath? breath but aire? tanuiſſimus fructus, a thin reward (God wot.) For, what is more thin than aire? This is ſure, no great reward. Mibi pro minimo eſt: So, Paul makes but a minim of it, we make ſo much of.

And yet even this, ſlight as it is, were it onely to receive it, and that were all, there were no great hurt in it. But, now comes the hurt, For, when it ſhall come to this, that we are ſo to receive it, as in full payment: (for, ſo it is; not exovo, have it; but anovo, have it for all, that ever they ſhall have) So to receive it; tanquam mercedem, as it ſhall be our laſt pay, our finall and full recompence and ſatisfaction, for all that ever we have done, then it goes hard.

And that is it, CHRIST meaneth: And that is it every good mind feareth: That here ſhall be all; a few good words, a little warme breath, a blaſt of vaine praiſe, of a ſort of vain men. And when we have this, we have no more for ever to receive or look for beſide this. That, as CHRIST tels us (in the firſt verſe of the Chapter) this acceperunt infers an amiſerunt: Acceperunt ſuum here, an Amiſerunt meum elſewhere. And that, where (of all) we would leaſt be without it. That the receiving of this, cuts us off from another, infinitely above and more worth than this. The reward we receive; no thing leſſe to be regarded: the reward we loſe, the damage we incur; nothing more to be feared. Lay theſe together, mercedem juxta mercedem, we ſhall find it a puniſhment; ſuch a puniſhment, as no man would ever wiſh his very enemy more.

Of this Amen here, of these words [they have received their reward] you shall read in S. Gregory, that there never did any saying so sound in his ears, so run in his head, reign in his heart, work upon his conscience (as he deeply protests) as did these. This, he took for one of the most fearful sayings in the whole Bible: that what he did here receive (were it praise, or preference, or what other earthly thing) it should be his last receipt, his final reward, his portion for ever, his Amen: for Amen is the last word (we know) that, ends all. For, so are we in a manner proceeded against, and deprived of all hope of further reward, at the last great receipt of all.

The praise of men, which we here sought and found, shall deprive us of hearing Euge Serve bone; One syllable whereof, is more worth, than all the Panegyrics that ever were. And not only of that, but of Intra in gaudium Domini besides, much more to be esteemed than all the Euges in the world, nay, than the world itself. That the winning of one shall be the losing of the other.

And now judge, whether this receiving be not a loss unvaluable; this reward, a punishment insufferable; this Amen, to be prayed against of all. Nay, whether there be any to penal a punishment, so heavy a censure: This shall be your punishment, that this shall be your reward; and never more but this.

For, do but ask: Why do they this wrong to their faces? To seem to men to fast. And what then? Then they shall be commended of men. And what then? Nay, there is all. And GOD comes to a point with them: saith, Let them be commended for it: And they have no wrong, they making it their end, if GOD make it so too.

To punish one by his own desires; to say (as GOD doth in Osee) Because Ephraim will have altars to sin, they shall be to sin; because you make this your reward, it shall be your reward, take it for your reward: To say, So be it, to have our fast to conclude with the Hypocrites Amen: no more fearful punishment in the world.

Not to do it as these, yet in any wise to do it. To fast to GOD; not to the world: to our own hearts, not to other men's eyes: to conscience, not to form, Not, to set us up a stage to do it; but (with CHRIST) to do it apart, in secret. And think not, if men see it not, it shall not be seen (be it never so secret:) that you shall do it without witness. Beside the witness, Testis in corde (set by the Heathen man as a thousand witnesses) there is (as Job calls Him) Testis in celo, One in heaven who sees it; needs no light to see it by: whose theatre is the dark, and beholds us as clearly when the candle is put out, as when it burns. Fast then, do it to be seen of Him; and being done not for men, but for him, Him shall you be sure of, to cast His eyes to look on it, to like it; to regard it and reward it, both.

So much doth CHRIST undertake in the verse following; and that, in His Fathers name: and seal it with His Verily, that most certain it shall be so. Our secret fast shall have his open reward. It may be, even here upon earth, He will make our light break forth as the Morning. If here He do not; there, He will. The lesse earth answereth, the more heaven reserveth. * Euge Serve bone, in that day is another manner praise, if praise be it: Intra in gaudium Domini, another manner reward, than earth hath any. Both together Merces magnanimis, Abrahams reward, an exceeding great reward: sed non ascendit in cor hominis: it exceedeth the heart of man, to think how exceeding great.

Which reward Almighty GOD grant we may set before us, and seek it in all our doings: So seek it here on earth, in this life, as we may there find it in heaven, in the life to come, to our endless comfort and content, through CHRIST our LORD.

A SER.

A SERMON PREACHED

BEFORE

King James,

At WHITE-HAL, on the XXVI. of FEBRUARY,
Anno Domini, MDCXXIII; being
ASHWEDNESDAY.

MATTH. Chap. III. Verſe VIII.

--Progenies viperarum, quis demonſtravit vobis fugere à ventura ira?

Facite ergo fructum dignum poenitentiae (Vel, Pro-ferte igitur fructus dignos poenitentia.)

--O generation of vipers, who hath fore-warned you to flee from the anger to come?

Bring forth therefore fruits worthy * amendment of life.

* Or repentance.

O ſpeak of repentance, at the time of faſting, or of faſting at the time of repentance, is no way out of ſeaſon: As tree and fruit, they ſtand.
Of theſe fruits faſting is one. And this, we now begin, a worthy fruit ever from year to year, religiously brought forth in the Church of Chriſt. That we go not from one, when we fall upon the other.
The time of repentance will fall out to be a Cum jejunitis.

Repentance is here brought in, and preſented to us, as a tree with fruit upon it. The tree of Gods planting; The fruit medicinal; of the nature of a counter-poſſon, againſt our bair taken by the fruit of another tree. The fruit of the forbidden tree had envenomed our Nature: the fruit of this tree, to expel it, to recover and cure us of it.

Gen. 3. 6.

Now this Metaphor (of trees and fruit) puts us in mind, that the manner of fruit-trees is, once a year they bear fruit. All do ſo; once at leaſt: And if all, this tree likewise, within the ſame compaſſe, to bring forth hers.

And, though at no time repentance comes amisse; good all the year long; it may be taken every day (for, repentance would be as familiar to us; as sinne it self; and, as the one, so the other, daily: Yet at sometime, more than other: and at this time, most proper: for then we have special use of it. That the body and the soul may keep time: and when we take physick for the body, we may do likewise for the other. If all were well known; of the twaine, the soul hath more need.

This medicine is to be taken fasting; as the rules of Physick are, and as medicines use to be. Men come neither eating nor drinking to take Physick: when we will take that, we take nothing else. Thus fasting is a friend to Physick both of soul and body. When we repent, no man will advise us to do it upon a full stomach, but Cum jejunis.

Of this tree and fruit, GOD (knowing the great need we have) hath a special care, we be not without it: that it be planted and growing still in our gardens; and that it beares us fruit, whereof we have so continual use. As that in Paradise, was termed the forbidden fruit; So may this (as truly) the fruit bidden, it is so enjoyned, so called for of us.

Mar. 22. 36, 37.

And that, first called for, and before all other, as the first fruits of the Spirit returning to GOD. There was a first commandement in the Law: This, I may justly say, was the first Commandement of the Gospel.

Verse 2.

Go no further, but even where we are, where the Book opens; Saint John is at it, at first. It is his very first word [Repent] Sermo in apertione oris, the opening of his mouth. So begins He: And so begins CHRIST; takes it up after him, word for word the same: Repent, for the Kingdoms of Heaven is at hand: neither more nor lesse. It is the first fruit of their lips both. And as our Saviour CHRIST began with it himself; So gives He it in charge to his Apostles; they with it, to begin likewise. Both, when He sent them to preach, to the Jewes first; And again after when, at His Ascension, He renewed and enlarged their Commission, and sent them to all Nations. That repentance first; (first that;) and then, remission of sins (after) should be preached in His name.

Heb. 6. 1.

Which was accordingly by them pursued. Ever, they stood on it, as the ground-work, the fundamental point of all the rest. So it is expressly termed, Heb. 6. the foundation of repentance from good works. On which foundation, would GOD, more cost were bestowed: that, while we are busie aloft on the Scaffolds, in our high points, the groundfils of Religion decay not for want of looking to. To lay them surely: VVhich S. John doth here, and we may all learn of him.

Verse 3.

For, having begun (above at the 2. verse) with his penitentiam agite: when he saw, in the throng of his Auditory, diverse Scribes and Pharisees hypocrites, he knew where they would be straight: (we should have an Agite; a repentance with a penitential face, and all acted:) Repent? Yes, in any wise, that they would, and could do it full well, and never trouble themselves with any such matter as fruit. This made him lay it anew; to his Agite, to put a Facite; to Agite penitentiam, a Facite fructus. Else, he disclaimes fruitlesse repentance. It is none of his: it will do them no good: it will never quit them of the wrath to come.

Ver. 7.

Where we see the good of repentance, what it is: To free us from ira ventura propter peccata praterita: Which, theirs will never do: Which none will ever do, unlesse, beside penitentiam agite (that is, the Act) there be also fructum facite, matter of fact besides; some real fruits. And S. John asks, Who did it? and marvels much that any should do it: teach them any other way, how to escape wrath to come. Tells them directly there is no other way: but that they do but beguile themselves, while they vainly imagine, to slip thorow GODS wrath with this fruitlesse, formal, slight kind of repentance.

If they will go to it indeed; and do it, and so do it, as it may be available to rid them of wrath to come, then must it not be barren, but bring forth, and that, fruit: and that, not such slight and slender fruit, as they commonly put it over with, but worthy fruits, and such as may well be-seem repentance indeed.

The Summe.

The points we are to take into our consideration, are: ' That there is wrath to come: but, it is yet but to come. That it will come. There is no falling into it, when it comes: nor no abiding, till it comes. Fly from it we must, and fly from it we may. It may be fled from, is in the Text: we may be shewen a way, how. Who shall shew it us? That will S. John here; who well can: He was sent to prepare it. But (it seems) we may be shewed a wrong way too; the Pharisees way: But S. Johns is the right. He that takes any other, the wrath of God will come on him, which is to come upon all impenitent sinners.

The Division.

All which may be reduced to these two heads, which S. John would have imprinted in them and us: 1. There is no flying Gods wrath, but by a true repentance. 2. There is no true repentance, without fruits, and those worthy, and well becoming it. Bring forth fruits therefore.

Prov. 25. 11:

V.

Of which words there is not any waste or to spare. Every one of them is verbum vigilans (as Saint Augustine speaks) awake all; never an one asleep among them, Each hath his weight. Nor, never an one out of his place, but (as Salomon speakes) upon his right wheel, standing just where it should. We will take them as they lye, 1. Bring forth. 2. Bring forth fruits. 3. Bring forth fruit therefore: wherefore? That you may fly the wrath to come: There, will that fall in. It is the only true way: Let no man teach you any other way to fly it. 4. Then, fruits of repentance. And repentance beares fruits, then it is a tree. ' Of the tree then first, that beares them. ' Then, of the fruits it beares: Repentance's fruits. 5. And last, that they be worthy fruits of Repentance. Bring forth fruits therefore, &c. So fall they in order, of themselves. To order them otherwise, were but to disarray them and do them wrong.

Bring

Bring forth: At vvhich, at the very first, vve shall have some sticking, as the vworld goes. All, Bin carrying in: little in bringing forth. For, to take our Age at the best, and our ordinary Professors in the time of their profession, and this is our virtue; vve carry vvell in, vve are still carrying in: but nothing, or as good as nothing comes from us, bring vve forth. So, this vword comes very opposite to our times. All our time, is spent in hearing; in carrying in Repentance-seeds, and other good seeds many. All, in hearing in a manner; none, in doing vvhath vve hear: None, in bringing forth repentance, or any other good fruit.

At Athens they said of S. Paul: Nova quadam infers auribus nostris. It is our case right, infers auribus: but it is an infers without a profers; any profers at all. In, at our ears, there goes I know not how many Sermons: and every day more and more, if we might have our wills. Infers auribus, into the ears they go; the ears and all filled, and even forced with them: but there, the ear is all.

It puts me in mind of the great absurdity, as Saint Paul reckons it. What, is all hearing? (saith he) All hearing? Yes: all is hearing with us. But that all should be hearing is as much as if all one's body should be nothing but an ear, and that were a strange body. But, that absurdity are we fallen into. The corps, the whole body of some mens profession; all godlinesse with some, what is it, but hearing a sermon? The ear is all, the ear doth all that is done: and but by our ear-marke, no man should know us to be Christians. They were wont to talke much of Auricular Confession: I cannot tell, but now, all is turned to an auricular Profession. And (to keep us to Proferte;) Our Profession is an inning Profession. In it goes, but brings nothing out; nothing comes from it again.

But, Proferte, bring forth (saith Saint John;) be not alwayes loading in. And there is reason for it. As, there is a time for Exiit qui seminat seminare semen suum (in the Parable) wherein the Sower goeth forth and carrieth with him good seed, and casts it in. So is there a time too (saith the Psalms;) for Rediit messor ferens manipulos secum, that the Reaper comes back and brings his sheaves with him; the sheaves, which the seed (he carried in) brought forth. But, with us, it is otherwise. For a wonderful thing it is, how many Sermons, and Sermons upon Sermons (as it were, so many measures of seed) are thrown in daily; and what becomes of them, no man can tell. Turn they all to wind? Or run they all thorow? For, fruit there comes none. Omnia te adversum, all in: Nulla retrorsum, None out. It went hard (saith Aggee) when, for twenty measures of seed, there came but ten of grain; but half in half: Why, we would think our selves happy, if that were our case. Nay, it was worse with Esay, an Homer of seed yelded but an Epha of corn; that, was but one in ten. It were well with us, might one but say that: for that were somewhat yet. To be wished we might see more: but, till more come, see but even that.

Now, that ground (saith the Apostle) that receives such a quantity of Seed, and returns no more for it, is neer a curse. And that tree (saith the Gospel) that was well leaved, and no fruit found on it, was so neer, that it had a curse. And those ears that have (I know not how many) Sermons and Lectures, and all in a manner sine fructu, without any fruit that can be seen, are not far from it, from a curse.

Which I would not have drawn to be spoken any way against hearing; but against our evil proportioned hearing: Not to flake our devotion in receiving good Seed; but to make a conscience, in some degree, to proportion our fruit to our seed: To reduce our infers and our proferte to some analogy. For, if there be an analogy of faith; so is there of hearing also. Sure, if the body thrive not with it, and yet be alwayes hungry, it is no good signe. It is a disease, which they call Buxia, or Canina appetentia; and would be looked to.

Well; there hath been old carrying in, and little else: let us have some bringing forth another while. Be not alwayes lading in: bring forth somewhat: Else we stumble at the very threshold of the Text, and are not come to the first word of it, Proferte, bring forth.

Bring forth fruit. VVith much adoe, at last somewhat there comes. Forth they bring; but what is it? It is well known, trees bring forth somewhat else, before fruit. And, somewhat brought forth there is, but it is but leaves. Fruit it should be, leaves it is: there is all our product. So that here, we shall be staid again. Leaves come of the kernel, as well as the fruit: so doth chaffe, of the Seed, as well as good graine, VVhat of that? VVe plant not for leaves; nor we sow not for chaffe. VVe count that no bringing forth. Quid palea ad triticum? (saith the Prophet;) And, Quid foliis ad fructum, may we say? It is not chaffe, or leaves; fruit it is, we are willed to Bring forth.

Vitis frondosa Israel we find in Hosee, and Ficus frondosa, we have in the Gospel. A Vine and a Fig-tree, that brought forth, both; and so passed the first; but stumble at this second: For, fruit it was not: But, as for leaves, well taken both; store of them. And so, to many a tree shall CHRIST come among us, and find leaves possibly; but, that will not serve. It is bring forth fruit. VVhat became of Hosee's Vine we may there read: what, of the Fig-tree, we all know.

VVill you know, what these leaves be: Saint Augustine tells us (No man can do it better;) It is to hear a Sermon, and to praise the Preacher: There comes somewhat; some leaves. His words are: Audiuistis, laudastis, Deo gratias; Semen accepistis, verba reddidistis. Laudes vestra gravant nos potius, & in periculum mittunt. Toleramus illas, & tremimus inter illas. Tamen, fratres mei, laudes vestra folia sunt: modo fructus queritur. Thou hear, and you commend (saith Augustine;) well, thanks be be to GOD. Good seed you receive, good words you give back. These good words profit us not; peradventure, do us hurt other-while. Bear with them we must; tremble at them we should. Yet, when all is done (good brethren) good words are but leaves; and it is fruit, fruit is it, we preach for. Not the fruit of your lips; they be but leaves: but, fructus operis, that fruit.

Now if you marke, what it is our best Sermons bring forth, we shall easily observe, the most is a few good words of some point or other in the Sermon, handled (peradventure) not amisse: and (hear you) well, if that: but, if that, look for no more; there's all. And this leafe, it lasts not long neither; fades quickly, as did the leaves of Jona's gourd; One day green, the next dry.

Prov. 11. 29.

And, is this the fruit of our labours? Is not this the Pharisees Acceptistis mercedem vestram? If the fruit of our labours be but the fruit of mens lips, we are like to make but a cold reckoning of it, to inherit the wind. As if we came hither to bring forth a leaf of praise; to preach art, and not Spirit: Art, to draw from men a vain applause; And not Spirit, to bring forth the fruits of the Spirit, fructifying to newnesse of life, by fructus facie; fruit, that may abound to your account and ours: Tours, that did; Ours, that preached to have them done.

Acts 2. 37:

The only true praise of a Sermon is, some evil left, or some good done, upon the hearing of it. One such fruit, so brought forth, were a more ample commendation, than many mouths full of good words spent, and copies taken, and printing, and I wot not what. And sure it is, On whome a Sermon works aright, it leaves him no leasure to say much, to use many words, but makes him rather full of thoughts. And when all comes to all, fructus factus, the deed done, is it. And, it is no good signe in a tree, when all the sap goes up into leaves; is spent that way: Nor, in an auditor, when all is verbal that comes, and nothing else: No reality at all.

Verse 9.

Saint John himself (in the next words following) tells us, the fruit he means, it is not Dicentes: And begin not (saith he) to Say: For, it is no matter of saying, either to your selves, or to others. This is but a green leaf; and, with the fruit, doth not amisse; without it, is little worth. It is not repentance in the leaves, but with the fruit, he calleth for.

I will shut up this point with St. Augustines prayer, before one of his Sermons: that God would vouchsafe, quod utiliter meditatume est cor meum, what my heart hath profitably thought on, to bring it thence into my tongue, and from thence into your ears, and from thence into your hearts, and from thence into your deeds: that so all may end in Proferre fructum, Bring forth fruits.

III.

Bring forth fruit, therefore.
The Root or Reason.
Esay 37. 31:

Proferre fructum igitur. Igitur, every where you find, slip it you must not: the whole weight of the sentence lyeth upon it. There is in it the ground and reason, wherefore; and so is indeed the root, all these fruits must grow from. And the Prophets Rule is, to look to the root downward, before to the fruit upward. First then, to find a wherefore for this therefore. Therefore, is the known note of a conclusion: Then must there be a Sylogisme: and here it is, Quicunque vult, Whosoever of you will fly from the wrath to come, he is to bring forth fruit worthy of repentance; But you are all of this mind, that you would fly from the wrath to come; Bring forth fruit therefore.

Flying from the wrath to come.

We must then cast our eye back to this flying from the wrath to come, which is the medius terminus, or cardo, whereupon all the argument runs, and the very life of the whole inducement. There is wrath to come: That must you fly from: Fly from it you cannot, but by this igitur: Proferre fructum igitur.

Rom. 2. 4:

Verse 2.

Many are the Therefore's, why we should repent, and of divers natures. The goodnesse of God (saith the Apostle) doth (even) lead us to repentance: And well is him that will be led. But these (here) would not lead. St. John had used that before (ver. 2.) Do it; Repent, and the Kingdome of heaven is at hand, hard by you. One would think, this would have done it; have even led them to it. It stirred them not: He is faine to lay Heaven by, and the life, joy, glory to come; And to take him to Hell, to the anguish, tribulation, torments there (for, all these are in the wrath to come.) So, to drive them (if it may be) to it, since leading will not serve.

Strange: but such is our indoles. The Kingdome of Heaven works not with us, as doth Wrath to come: So doth sin bewitch us. For the losse of Heaven if that were all, we would never abstaine from it: if no ira ventura, never care for the losse of Heaven. Repent, or you lose Heaven, will not: Repent, or you must to Hell (the place of wrath to come) that bites soon; that makes an igitur; that will move us: And, to fly from it, makes us fly to Repentance.

Ventura, it is
come.

Saint John takes the course to shew us somewhat to come: He chooseth ventura: For, the things present carry us and keep us from Repentance. Present good cheer, present sport and mirth, present good company, present twenty things else, they make us no fit soil, for these fruits to grow in. But then (as GOD would have it) besides these present things, there are ventura, some other to come, that would be thought on. For, in all our jollity, before we venture too farre, it will not be amisse, to look to those ventura, and what will come of it. There is an ira ventura for peccata praterita.

Deut. 32. 29.

Jer. 5. 31.

Luke 19. 41,
42.

Knowing the vertue of this piece of perspective, Moses doth wish but this, o Si, O that men would but look חזק, look but that way to the hindmost dayes, to the latter end! There is somewhat, there vworth our sight. The Prophets do the like: Populus meus dilexit talia (it is Jeremy:) My People, this sin they like; and that sin they love, Sed quid fiet in novissimo, but what will be the end of this? What vwill become of it, at the last? Yea, our blessed Saviour Himself (and He should move us) most earnestly vvith teares in his eyes: O that thou hadst known in this thy day! and could not speak out the rest for weeping: His meaning vvwas, the ventura, what vvwas to come upon them. So much doth it import us, sometime to open a vvindow that vvay. The clapping it to, and the putting them them from us out of our sight, makes us, we care not, never look after the tree, or the fruit. Ventura would much help forrward this Proferre fructus igitur.

These Ventura (three of them) follow here close in the tenth and twelfth verses: the Axe,² the Fanne,³ and the Fire: I will onely touch them. The Axe first: For sure, our dayes be numbered: there is a line stretched upon every one of our lives, and it is no long line neither, quia velox est depositio tabernaculi huius, the taking down of this Tabernacle is not farre hence: death vwill come with his axe and down we go. For it is not (saith St. John) laid to the branches, but, to the root; and then, we are past fruit-bearing for ever. Proferre fructus igitur.

After the Axe, comes the Fan, to shew whether our bringing forth be corn or chaffe; which is our doom after death. So long agoe told of by old Enoch in his Maranatha, that the Lord will come, come to Judgment: Et omnes stabimus, and we shall all stand before His Judgment Seat, and the fan go over us: And there by these fruits here; and by these fruits only, all shall go: for none is in Heaven, but by it. Sinners, both they in Heaven, and they in Hell: only, this difference; they in Heaven had these fruits, they in hell had them not. And then, seeing they vwill be all in all, Proferre fructus igitur.

These two ventura, come they vwill to all, and to all alike: vve hear not of wrath yet? But, here it comes. I go further and ask, Ventura, to come: to come, vwhat? Ira ventura, wrath to come. VVhose wrath? His, vvho when He hath killed the body, can cast both body and soul into hell fire.

For, after the Fan comes the Fire. The fan divides the corn and the chaffe, sends each to his own place, the Corn to the Garner, the chaffe to the fire; and every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, thither too. Proferre fructus igitur: Else, how will you scape the wrath to come (saith St. John) How will you scape the damnation of Hell (saith CHRIST?) and mean the same thing. That of CHRIST is but a Commentary of this of St. John. Ire and fire are but one thing.

Now the noise of fire will startle any of us, even at midnight; out of his dead sleep. Of any fire: but, much more, of this: Non est iste ignis sicut qui ardet in foco suo (saith Augustine.) This fire is another manner fire, than that on our hearths. Why? ours may be quenched: that, is (saith the twelfth verse) unquenchable fire. A worm ever gnawing, and never dying: So doth our Sazzi-

Now will I but ask the Prophet Esay's question, (Chap. 33.) who of us can dwell in consuming fire? That, is our fire, which as it consumes, so will it be consumed it self: But then, he comes over again, but who is able to abide in everlasting burnings? That can none do: Proferre fructus igitur. This (lo:) is the wrath, the very dregs of the wrath to come. But who regardeth the power of this wrath? They (I fear me) least, that shall feel it most.

I have purposely stood upon this a little, For that, as upon this day they were wont, by the ceremony of giving ashes; to put men in mind of this fire: For, ashes were not given to put men in mind of their mortality: dust had been more proper to have done that. Our mortality is grounded upon Pulvis es & in pulverem. But, ashes, they come not without fire: where they are, fire must have been first. And, so they most meet to represent fire and make us think of it. The ashes, they be blown away; but, not the memory of them (I hope.) Whatsoever becomes of the ceremony, the substance would not be blown away after it. Sure, these ashes laid well to the root of the tree, it hath been thought, will make it bear the sooner. The present fear of future wrath for sins past, will put some force into this igitur: If this will not, nothing will. This or nothing make the sap to ascend: This, or nothing bring them forth.

Scientes igitur terrorem hunc: you have seen the terror: Shall I open you a door of hope in the valley of Achor? All is not terror in ventura: there is some comfort, that it is but to come (this wrath;) it is yet to come. So, while it is yet to come, there is time given us to take order for it, before it come: that the fruit may come before the wrath, and not the wrath before the fruit: for then we are gone for ever.

There is another comfort: that though the axe and the fanne shall come upon all; and none fly from either of them, so shall not wrath. That shall not come upon all; but all may, and some shall fly from it. Fly from it (I say) for, there is no meeting it, no abiding of it when it comes: No standing it out, but fly from it we must (saith the Text;) and fly from it we may. There is a right way, if we may be shewed it; and there is no right way, but one, and who will shew us that? that will St. John teach us. He prepares it, and he is best able; and he knows no way but by Proferre igitur.

But if there be a flight, there is no flying it, not with the wings of an Eagle; not with the six wings of a Seraphin, onely the wings of repentance, will fly from it. But, there is no flight intended: Proferre igitur will serve: onely stand and bear this fruit, and it shall be a Superseadus to all wrath to come. You need not fly; you need not stir, no more than a tree; but keep your standing, and bear your fruit, and it shall not come neer you, but fly over you, as did the destroying Angel, their houses in Egypt. To come it is (this wrath:) fly from it we may: this, the way to do it.

Yea, this is one way: but, is there no way but this? It seems, there was some body shewing some other way besides, that St. John was a little stirred, and asked, Who hath shewed you it, who? Whofoever he was, he had shewed them a wrong way. So that, even then, even in CHRISTs time and St. Iohns, some there were that took a phansie, they had found a neerer way to cut between, to fly this wrath, and yet let tree and fruit alone, and care for neither. And (as it follows) by a dicentes ita se, said within themselves (somewhat strange things men will say there) fruits are for them, that have not Abraham for their father, but we have him for our Father: and so took themselves pri-privileged from fruit-bearing, by that. Christ shews them their folly: Have you so; have you Abraham to your Father? then do the works of Abraham: that is, bring forth the fruits that he did. For, Abraham himself brought forth these fruits, went no other way but this, by Proferre igitur.

Luke 11. 76.

The same may be said to another Dicentes intra se of some of us. We have Abraham to our Father, so they: We have CHRIST to our Saviour, so we: and make a short cut and step to CHRIST straight, and lay hold on Him by faith, without any more ado: Thrust by St. John Baptist; Him, and his Repentance, Both. Indeed, so some goe (but with more haste than good speed) that vainly imagine to come to remission of sins, per saltum, over repentance head. But, it will not be: Esay's qui crediderit, ne festinet, is good counsel in this sense; Not to cast away all, with making too much haste, but take St. John in their way. To him it is said, Tuon shalt go before His face to prepare His way: And, but by that way, he prepares, CHRIST will not be come to. If he prepare one way, and you go another, you will never come at Christ. Therefore he wonders, Quis offendit? who hath shewed them any other way. St. John knew it not; CHRIST knew it not: And I cannot tell what to say, but, they that goe it, I pray God it deceive them not.

Luke 13. 3. 5.

But, for this [of no other way] CHRIST Himself is more peremptory than St. John. See you any, Hear you of any that perish? Nisi, &c, Unless you repent, and scape that way, so shall you too: that is flat. There is no Iron, no Adamant binds so hard as Christ's Nisi. If any but CHRIST had said it, we might have sought some evasion: Now when it is He that tells us, there are but two wayes, Repent, or Perish, choose you whether; Repent here, for a time; or perish there under Gods wrath for ever; Not to repent, and not to perish, is not possible.

Jon. 3. 4.

Psal. 34. 12.

VVhich Dilemma of CHRIST'S (no way to be avoided) makes of the twain to choose this fruit of Repentance, rather than to fall into the Wrath to come: To fly to the one, to fly from the other: which otherwise we are of our selves but coldly affected to. For, though it be somewhat bitter (this fruit) yet (sure we are) if it were ten times more, the bitter pains of ira ventura are far beyond it. Now, the Physick of the body and soul stand upon one Maxime both, Melior est modica amaritudo in faucibus, quam aeternum tormentum in visceribus: Better the bitter Electuary than a burning Ague: Better a short distaste in the mouth, than a perpetual torment in the bowels: Better Repent Ninive for forty dayes, than no Ninive at forty dayes end.

Shall we conclude then with the Psalmist, What man is he that would deliver his Soul from the wrath to come? And they all began at once to say; that would I; Yea, even they that shall not escape it, will yet say, That would I. VVhy, by the bringing, or not bringing forth of this fruit all goes; depends the coming; or not coming of this wrath: coming if you do not; Not coming, if you do bring them forth. Proferre fructus igitur.

And, now we have been at the root downward, to come upward to the tree, the fruits, the worth of the fruits, (three points yet behind) which will aske more time than is left; Nay, more than hath been already spent; and so the work of some other time. A word or two, of Proferre, and I have done.

Precept.
Mark 1. 21.
Chap. 8. 9.

First, take it not (this Proferre) by way of advice, or, as the wish of a well-willing friend. No; St. John delivers it, quasi auctoritatem habens, as a Precept, or Injunction: the word will warrant it. To say, do this, belongs to authority; (the Centurion will tell you so:) and requireth obedience, Do this, and He doth it.

2
a Conclusion.

Then, beside authority to enjoin us, there is reason, to conclude us. It is not made a Proposition barely, Doe; It is (beside) a binding Conclusion, Bring forth therefore; whereto we in reason, to conforme our selves, and conclude, vve vwill so bring them.

3 Proferre, an injunction with a penalty.

Last, besides both these, it bindes the harder by the penalty annexed to it, As you vwill avoid the wrath to come: And falling into it, you fall from the fruition of Heaven to the damnation of Hell. VVhich is poena penarum, the penalty of all penalties most penal. This is the three-fold cord that bindes it about: Let some, or all of them prevail vvith us to bring them forth.

The Time:
now, Proferre:
in the Present
Tense.

But oft it falls out, vvhen vve are agreed of the thing, vve are not so, for the time. VVill vve at all bring them forth? If vve vwill, vve vwill take some time to do it in. Some time: yes, that vve all agree to. At vvhat time then? It is not proponite, or promittite, purpose or promise to do it, hereafter to bring them forth; but Proferre. VVhat Tense is Proferre? The Present: Do it then in Present. It requires an act instantly to be done, Bring them forth out of hand. This is a small note: but, it is no small matter, to get this small note borne vvell avay; to get our Repentance into the Present Tense.

In the Aorist.

Nay, then it fits neerer: for to tell you the truth as it is, The vvord, is not Bring forth, at this time, now; then, it should be vvagere, in the Present: But, it is not: It is vvagere, in the Aorist; (a tense the Latine hath not, nor our Tongue neither.) It signifies rather Have done bringing forth; rather than, Bring forth presently. And I would to GOD vve had even done so: had done bringing them forth; for then, all fear vvere past. Vventura is to come, but come it vwill, and, vvhen vve know not. Both, are yet to come (for ought I see) wrath, and our fruit. If the fruit come before the wrath come, it is vvell: But, if the wrath come, before the fruit come, vvhere are vvethen? VVe are past recovery.

But, vvhat speaks he to us, of having done? VVe have scarce yet begun, scarce set the root that should bear this fruit: VVell yet, this shewvs us, it is time vve vvere about it, seeing Saint John saith, it is more than time, vve had done bringing them forth.

But

But, well, to take no advantage of that tense, we will be content with the present, if we may obtaine that. And so would he have it, now: For, now (saith he) is the axe laid to the root: Now then, or not at all. Nay, not now: this is not a time; we have appointed other businesse which we cannot put off. Well, one question more will make an end; if not at this time; at what time? If not now, when? But then, this must be set down, now before we stir hence; And so set down, as if it be not now, it be as neere now, as may be, for fear ventura come not too soon, and take tree and all. This is sure; the sooner the better, because the more likely; the later, the worse, because the lesse certain.

But, when we speak of the present, we shut it not up in ipso nunc, in a day or two or three. Fruits require a time to bring them forth: who ever heard of fruits brought forth on a sudden? Saw ever any man such a thing? (It is Esay) Shall the tree bring, or the fruit be brought forth at once? A Gourd or a Mushrome may shoot up in a night; So cannot fruit: It askes time. I take it to be an error, and that of dangerous consequence; teaching repentance, to think it a matter of no more moment, than to be dispatched in a moment. Commonly, our repentance is too soon done.

GOD knew it well; and therefore He allows a time for it: Ecce dedi ei tempus (saith He to the Church of Thyatira) He gave a time to repent, to bring forth these fruits. VVhat time might that be? He never gave certain time, but to Ninive; and that was forty Dayes. You know, where we are now, and what that means.

We are not against allowance of time, so it be not to slip the collar, to be still uncertain. But, I like not his saying Εἶρα ὡραῖον, yea, when I find a convenient time; then He that said it, never found it: had it then, never found it after.

But, if we mean, as we say, would do it at a convenient time, we cannot find so convenient a time as this. Take it first, as the time of the Fast; that time may seem to claim a property in it. They go always together; In the Law, their solemn repentance was ever at the time of their general Fast. In the Prophets, Joel tells us the best turning to GOD (that is, repentance) is cum jejuniis. They that had not the Law (as Ninive) Nature itself taught them to do it fasting; when they took this fruit, to taste nothing. In the Gospel, John Baptist the Preacher of repentance, came neither eating nor drinking. And our Saviour though He did both, yet this fast He kept, though not for any need He had of it Himself, but (as in other) for Exemplum dedi vobis, to give us an example, and to point at us that had need, what time to do it in. Which hath ever since; from year to year been religiously observed; both, as a time of publike penance, and as a time of General abstinence in the Church of CHRIST, Convenient, for the time of Fast.

And, convenient, for the time of the year. For, if it will be the tree in the I. Psalm, to bring forth fruit in due season, this way it fits our turn: that season is at this season. It is now tempus proferendi: when can we better say Proferre fructus igitur? You can never bring forth at a better time. The season is now come; and bringing forth will shortly be in season, of which the Poet saith — Nunc omnis ager, nunc omnis parturit arbor, when the trees will fall in travaile, and they and the earth (both) make proffer toward, and give pledges in their buds and blossomes, of fruit that is comming, and will follow in due time.

We are made these offers, choose which we will; If we will keep time with the heavens. Now the heavens return again to their first degree: It is turning time in heaven. If with the fowles of heaven (and them CHRIST bids us look to) they know their times just, and just at this time make their return; the poor swallowes and all; And so let us; that the Prophet Jeremy upbraid us not with them. So, whether we will go by heaven and the fowles of heaven; or, by earth and the fruits of the earth, they all invite us to the dispensation of this season. Yea, if we will give our souls leave to keep time with our bodies, the time we take physick for one, may be (if we will) allowed in like sort for the other: The opening of the year for both. Equal need is of both: if any odds, on the souls side.

Nay, it hath so fallen out, that Repentance, Fasting, and the very season of the year (for the most part) hit together. That of Ninive the most famous: by the springing up of Iona's gourd, we may guesse, what time it was: we know what time it is, when gourds spring. And, for our Saviour CHRIST, if we will take up His time, it is supposed, He laid His also much about this time. For, when the people were baptized, then was CHRIST also with them, as St. Luke saith: And immediately after His Baptisme, He was carried away into the wilderness, and there began His forty dayes fast. Exemplum dedi vobis, A pattern for us; both for our fast, and for our time of it.

It is true, the solemn fast in the Law, was in Tisri, which answers our September: But then, take this wiche; vvhen it vvas so in Tisri, Tisri vvas vvith them their first moneth. So they also began their repentance vvith the beginning of the year.

And, take this besides, that, in that first moneth, the trumpets first blast of all, vvas to assemble them to their Kipher, their great Repentance-day, That, vvas their first vvork of all.

Novv I shall tell you, hovv it vvas. Betvveen the Fast and the Sabboth, it is vvell knowvn, there vvas neer alliance, inso much as the Fast is called a Sabboth, and both are said to be sanctified. Sanctifie a fast, as vvell as Sanctifie the Sabboth. Their Sabboth vvas the seventh day; their Fast vvas the seventh moneth. And it may vvell be thought, by vvhom and vvhen the Sabboth vvas removed from the seventh day to the first; by the same persons, and at the same time, vvas the Fast removed from the seventh moneth to the first, from Tisri to Nisan the first moneth of all. Novv Nisan is also called Abib of the first bringing forth fruits in it.

Novv, in Nisan, vvas the time vvhen their Paschal Lamb vvas slain and eaten. The same is also

That time more than a moment. Esay 66.

Exod. 12. 8. And we, now at this time, to set those seven herbs, and see them come up, wherewith the Paschever is to be eaten; which are nothing else but these fruits of Repentance. Now, to set them; that then, we may gather them to serve us for saviour to the Paschal Lamb. Thus every way, we may say (with the Apostle) Ecce, &c. Behold this is the due season, Behold, now is the convenient time. Now then; Bring them forth.

2 Cor. 6. 2. And, now all that hath been spoken, would GOD it might bring forth but this; that, seeing the time serveth so well, we can no way except to it, we would not slip it. If we did but truly apprehend the words in a ventura, our eyes would not sleep, nor our eye-lids slumber, nor the temples of our heads take any rest, till we had taken straight order with our selves, for the when, when it should be; At what time we should not fail but to do it; and nothing should let us, but perform it once to purpose, and seal to our selves this fruit; that, yet once we may assure our selves, we are in good earnest, and that done it is, and such and such were the fruits, we had of it.

And, when come back again to St. John Baptists, and to bring him word, you have brought forth this fruit, he will then shew you Agnus Dei: And, then is (indeed) the shewing of Him in kind, and the right time of Seeing Him. And, that sight shall be worth all: we will think, we never saw Him before.

We shall be sure to fly the wrath to come. Nay, it shall fly from us; by us, or over us, but, from us sure Wrath shall fly; and in stead of it, the Kingdom of heaven shall come neer to us, and we to it. For, Repent, and it is at hand, say St. John and CHRIST, both. It is our daily Prayer, it may come; and, this is the way to make it come. What shall I say? we shall sanctifie thereby this time of fast; and as it hath ever bin counted, make it an holy time: And we in it shall have our fruit in holynesse, and the end everlasting life.

A. SER.

A SERMON PRE- PARED TO BE PREACHED

On the Xth. of Februarie, A. D. MDCXXIV.

being ASH-WEDNESDAY.

MATTH. Chap. III. Ver. VIII.

Proferte Fructus igitur dignos poenitentiae.

Bring forth Fruits, therefore, worthy amendment of life (or Repentance.)

Of this Text, three points we have gone through; these three; 'Proferre, Bring forth, be not always carrying in: 'Proferre fructus, Bring forth fruit; Leaves will not serve: 'Proferre fructus igitur, Bring forth fruits therefore: Wherefore? that so you may escape the wrath to come. There is no way to escape it, but that. Now we goe on.

Bring forth fruits therefore. What fruits? Fruits of repentance; fruits growing on a tree called Repentance: For, the fruits ever carry us to the tree that carries them. If we be to have fruit, it must be brought forth: If brought forth it must be, there must be a tree to bring it forth. That tree is Repentance.

The reason, that St. John in his whole Sermon runs all upon this metaphor of tree and fruits, and axe, and root; that he, brings in Repentance as a tree, I have touched formerly. It seemes to refer us (this tacere) to another, the forbidden tree. That tree had fruit: This tree to have so too: Tree for tree, fruit for fruit. The worthy fruits of Repentance, for the unworthy fruits of disobedience. The fruit of that tree was our bane; the fruit of this to be our medicine. The fruit of that made it a ventura to come; The fruit of this will turne it away.

Gen. 3. 17th

It is true; the fruits of this tree of Repentance, they were not prima intentionis, first or principally intended. There was another more excellent plant, called the tree of innocence; the fruit whereof, Ne peccetis, not to sin at all. There were no fruit to that, if it were to be had. But, where shall we find that? Where growes the tree that beares that fruit? Who is there that sinneth not? The forbidden fruit was no sooner taken, but, that tree withered and died; could never be got to grow in our nature since. No talking of that.

Rom. 3. 23.

That tree failing, it pleased GOD, of his great goodnesse, to graft upon a new stock, this second plant, the Plant of Repentance: To the end it might serve for a counterpoison: the fruit of it against the venome of the forbidden fruit. To the end also that it might serve to supply that other of Innocency (they be Elisha's words in Job, to restore unto man his innocency. For, quem pariter peccasse penè est innocens, (could the Heathen man say) the next degree to Innocency, is Penitency. That if we cannot present God with the fruit of Innocency, at the seat of His Justice, yet, with the fruit of Repentance, we may, at the throne of his grace.

Job 3. 26

And this tree will grow in our soil; our soil will bear it, and with good tending, bring forth fruits, worthy fruits, which we may offer unto God, and He will take it in good worth. And this is the tree we must trust to, now: and blessed be God, that so we may.

V.

To keep us close to our metaphore. We say first, that Repentance, if it be right, is no Log, no dry piece of wood: A Tree it is; hath life in it; vegetable life at the least.

2 A Tree, and that no barren tree: Such there be, that for all their root, bring forth no fruit at all. This tree is a bearing tree, you may say Proferre to it. It will bring forth.

3 Bring forth, and what? That, it was set for. It was not set for shadow, not for fewel. It was planted for fruit, and fruit it is to bring.

4 But, will any fruit serve? No: trees there be that carry fruit, but fruit, of no worth; porcis comedenda, for swins (perhaps) not for men. Neither for meat nor medicine. Neither meet to be presented to God, nor useful for the service of men. So¹ a tree: ² a bearing tree: ³ a fruit-bearing tree; and ⁴ the fruit it beares worthy the tree that beares it. ¹ If it be a dead stocke, and no live tree. ² If it be a tree, but bare and barren; No proferre; Bring not forth. ³ If it bring forth, be it what it will, if it be not fruit. ⁴ If it be fruit and not dignos, fruit, but such as is nothing worth, it comes not hence: St. John acknowledges it not. None of his tree; some bastard slip it is: None of his setting. His, lies laire before us. Bring forth therefore, &c. Of these four we are to proceed. ¹ Of the tree, ² The bearing of the tree, ³ The fruit it beares, ⁴ The worth of the fruit: and a word (if you will) of the fruit time, the time of all this: which will fall out to be at this very time.

I.
Of the Tree.

Heb. 6. 1.

WE are to treat of Repentance, as a tree, first. To speak properly; Repentance is a Vertue, a moral Vertue, a branch of Justice, of Justice corrective; and so should be delivered in moral termes, as (in the Ethicks) other Vertues use to be. It is not, though: you shall seldom find it so: but most what set out in the termes of some one passion of the mind or other. And why so? For no other cause, but that we are so dead and dull, when, we are about it (this businesse) as if Repentance were a very log, and no quick or live tree. Which cannot be; Repentance being from dead works, and therefore cannot be a dead thing it selfe, but have life in it. Marke it when you will, the Holy Ghost (as it were of purpose) still chooleth to expresse it under some terme of passion (as sorrow, fear, anger, and the like) rather than the other way: Rather in Pathetical, than in Ethical termes. And this he doth in a manner continually. For, Passions be quicke, there is life in them. Therefore, their termes he chooleth, to put life in us. To shew He would have us affectionate, when we are about this worke: and not so cold and so calme, as we use to be. And indeed, these affections be the very radical humour or sap: If they goe up, there is hope of some fruit: If down, and rise not, no proferre to be looked for.

Pal. 129. 36

Now, if affections give life, the quicker the affection, the more life it gives. And there is none quicker than that of Anger. For which cause, when time was, you may remember, we made it the chief Ingredient into Repentance. Even, Anger at our selves, we were so evil advised as to bring our selves into the anger of GOD. Whose anger when it comes, Quis poterit, who can, who is able (that is, none can, none is able) to abide. And why found we it so? Because most life and spirit appears in that: Fear and Sorrow and the rest, are but dull and heavie in comparison of it.

And this, I now mention the rather, because the passion of Anger (if you marke it) strikes upon ira ventura in the Text: doth even in a manner lead us by the hand unto it. One anger to another: God's anger, to ours: God's to come, to ours for the present. For by our anger for the present, we turn away His to come. Our anger is a superseadeas to His. Or, if you will have it in termes of Justice, judging our selves, we shall not be judged of the Lord.

But our Anger, and (generally) all our affections, are well compared to lime. Out of the water, where they should be hot, no heat appears in them: in water where they should be cold, there they boile and take on. Used there most, where they should be least: and again least, where they should be most. For, take me a worldly man, and let him but over-reach himself, in some good bargain, in matter of profit, you shall see him so angrie, so out of patience with himselfe, as oft it casts him into some disease. There (lo) is repentance in kind: there, is that which makes it a tree, the Spirit of life. Ours (for the most part) towards GOD is dull and blockish; neither life nor soule in it.

I I.
The Bearing
of the Tree.

Math. 5. 15.

Iam. 31 18.

But we may not stand thus about the tree: We are called on for Proferre, to bring somewhat forth: Else how shall we know, it is a tree, and no log? Small ods or none at all, between a dead stocke and a barren tree; one brings forth as much as the other. It is the bringing forth, that makes the difference.

Bringing forth is opposite to keeping in, we must have no kept-in-repentance. Forth it must come, forth it must be brought. From whence? from within. Carrying in (before:) Keeping in (now:) all within's are against, utterly against Proferre.

St. John saw well, which way the world would goe: Men would have their repentance proveres intus peragenda, a matter to be sped, dispatched, shuffled up within, between their conscience and them (forsooth.) And then they would tell you great matters, what they are within. There, within, they have it, that they have; where no body can see what they have. Under the bushel much, but nothing on the candlestick, that any man can see. So, instead of Proferre, we should have Præferre, nothing but pretending. Nay, no Præferre: Proferre (saith St. John) No bosomo repentance: Bring it out, shew it. For upon St. John's Proferre is grounded St. James Ostende mihi, Shew me thy faith: And it holds, in repentance too. Tell them not of a repentance under the ground; down in the root; within, in the bollow hollow of the bark: They will not hear of it, Ut in penitentia, sola conscientia praeferatur; sed ut aliquo etiam externo actu administratur: Not only a pretence, or faire shew to be made of our conscience within; but some outward thing to be done and executed upon it: Somewhat to be brought forth. Take heed of this errour, as if repentance were a matter merely mental or intentional. It is not, good notions in the brain, nor good motions in the mind will serve, these are but the sap within: Look to the branches; what set you there? Look to Proferre, what is brought forth.

Bring forth then: And what, Many things doth a tree bring forth, and divers of them as fore-runners to the fruit, as boughs, and leaves, and buds and blossoms. Saint John mentions none of them; passeth by them all: stayes at none, till he come to the fruits. That is it, the tree was planted for. Not to make materials, not to give shadow: Not for the green boughs; nor the gay blossoms, not for any thing but for the fruit. The tree is for the fruit; and, but for the fruit, there had been no tree. Fruit it was, for which it was first set, and for which it is let grow: and when there is no longer hope of bringing forth fruit, downe with it (saith the Lord of the soile) why troubles it the ground any longer? And then comes Ira ventura with his axe, layes it to the root, and down it goeth, and into the fire it is cast: and seeing it will not serve for fruit, make it serve for fuel; the end of all unfruitful trees. Marke it well, this. It is the fruit of repentance; not repentance it selfe, but the fruit it is: is sought for. That, is all in all. So, not only a bearing, but a fruit-bearing repentance.

And, good reason. For, if the one tree (sinne) if that have brought forth fruit, so must repentance (the other tree) doe likewise. It is true, in sinne, the sense (and so the soule) is first in fault. In at that gate it first comes, and out at that, it must first goe. But, sinne hath her fruit in the body: So, is repentance to have hers too. Repentance is to be incorporate, and bring forth her fruits in the body. The soule alone; not to be put to penance; all laid upon it: The body to share, as in the pleasure, so in the paine.

Perhaps, in the sinne, that lies smothering in the thought within, never comes in action, there may be some question, whether Repentance alone may not serve. But, if it have brought forth the forbidden fruit (the body:) the body must have her fruit in Repentance also. To both, said it is, said it must be, Proferre igitur fructus.

And what be these fruits? To let goe the metaphor, if you would know in plain termes what fruit meane, Saint Paul will tell you without any figure. He saith (Acts 26. 20.) he preached; Men should turne to God, and doe workes worthy of repentance. Look ye: St. John's fruits (Saint Paul being his Commenter) are nothing but workes. Both mean the same thing: Saint Paul's workes are Saint John's fruits: fruits and workes are all one. In omni opere bono fructificantes (It is the Apostles, Col. 1. 10.) Every good work is a good fruit. To doe a worke then of Repentance, is to bring forth the fruits of Repentance.

There is no worke at all but hath her proper act or worke: but not any vertue of them all, so proper as repentance. For, of repentance it is said, agere penitentiam: So, it is not, of any besides. That in a worke, it may seem to claim a propriety, above and before all the rest. And that it so requires an Act, as, no Act, no Repentance: Now because we have taken up a distinction; that an Act is but a thing transient, but a fact, that is permanent. Therefore (to make all sure) besides penitentiam agere, you have qua fructum non fecerit. So, both agere and facere: Act and Fact both. And the fact, that is the fruit; that, hath some reality in it. So some fruit is to come; Something to be done: Not, thought, or said; but done, actually done. Otherwise, facitur non agitur penitentia (It is Augustine) we doe but dally, all is but counterfeit. No serious Repentance, if somewhat be not done.

For, that somewhat is to be done, is so sure, as ye shall not find any man in the minde or way to repent; but (ever) his first question is, What must I doe? And that, even by the very instinct of reason. Lord what wilt thou have me to doe? (Saint Paul's first words; when he began:) Quid oportet me facere? The Gaulers first words (being now a Convert) to St. Paul, when he began. As much as to say: Somewhat I am to doe; if I knew what. Thrice together you have this question here immediately after, Quid faciamus? Say the Publicans: What shall we doe? Say the Soldiers: What shall we doe? Say all the people to St. John, when they came to the baptisme of repentance. All agreeing in this, all implying, somewhat there was to be done, whatsoever it was: that the fruit of repentance is in the work.

And, what is that work? I will answer first in general. In moral Divinity (if we goe that way) the proper work of Justice, is to give to each his due. Of corrective Justice, to doe justice, to inflict correction, where it is due: And to sin it is due. The difference only is: Correction (for the most part) is done upon others: in repentance, it reflects, and is done upon our selves.

If you will put more life into it, and utter it more pathetically, goe by the way of affections; Anger is the predominant affection (we said.) The proper work of anger is to be avenged. What, shall I not avenge? Shall not my soul be avenged on such an indignity? saith Indignation. As anger then the chief Passion; so, that, the chief action. The Apostle therefore leaves not off, till he have asked; Yea, but qua vindicta? what revenge? what punishment? That is his last question: Comes not to his period, till he have shut up all with that. For till that be done, all is not done. That is the very Consummation est of all true repentance.

To grow to more particulars. We sort the workes of repentance, as they may best answer and suit with the workes of sinne. Now, all sinnes grow out of these three heads; and may be reduced

III.
The fruit it beareth.

Luk. 13. 7.

That fruit is workes.

Acts 9. 6,
Acts 16. 30;
Luk. 3. 10.
14.

Jer. 5. 6.
2 Cor. 7. 10.

What these workes are.

In particular.
1 Joh. 2. 16.

to one of them, the Spirit, the Flesh, and the World: and are corrected each of them, by his contrary. In Physicke it holds, Every thing is cured: In Iustice it holds, Every thing is best corrected, by his contrary. Now, it is contrary, much against each of these, to be deprived of that, it loves and delights in.

Prayer, &c.

The Spirit loves to be at liberty, to range and to scatter it selfe in many manner of thoughts: Or, if it fix, to doe it, upon some pleasing object. Confinde the spirit, make it undertake some task of devotion, let it to pray: to read, to meditate, which is a dry object, and nothing pleasing to it: fix it so, and you punish it. For, nothing is more irksome. It is vexatio spiritus.

The Flesh, that loves to fare well, put it to fast: loves to sleep and take her ease; put it to watch, or to lie hard: loves vestiri molliori; gird it with sackcloth: loves mirth and good company; make it retire and sit pensive: abridge it of these all or any, and you punish it more or lesse, I warrant you.

The World and the Worldling, they love to part with as little as they can. Charge them with any thing that shall be to them chargeable, it punisheth them shrewdly, and is to them a punishment.

Thus then those three, they may be met with, each of them if they have made a fault. For neglect of servng of God, with some task of devotion more than ordinary: For fulnesse of bread, with that truly sacra fames, the exercise of fasting. For loosnesse of life, with works tending to the taking down of the flesh, and making it lesse fleshy. For taking that which was others, to depart with that which is our owne. For want of bowels, with works of mercy. In a word, with suffering that we would not, for doing that we should not. So, punishing our evil concupiscence, in that it is so bent to; and making it leave that; for which it left GOD. So the triplicity stands thus: for spiritual finnes; Prayer, and works of devotion: for fleshy; works pertaining to castigo corpus meum: for worldly; Alms, and works of charity and compassion. Let me shew you them briefly.

1 Cor. 9. 27.

I

For the first, Simon Magnus went not through with his bargaine; did but think the Holy Ghost had been ware for his money; all was but thinking; went no further than the Spirit. St. Peter prescribes him what to do, To fall to prayer: pray (saith he) if it be possible, this thought of thy heart may be forgiven thee. Prayer serves, where it goes no further than thought.

Acts 8. 12.

For the second, The King of Ninive and his people, they fell to fasting on all hands. What was their sin? Nabum will best tell us that: He wrote the burden of Ninive. This it was: Because of the fornications of the harlot. For that kinde of fleshy sin, that was the proper fruit.

Jon. 3. 5.

For the third, One example shall be the King of Babylon. He had been a mighty oppressor of his people. There have ye now a worldly sinne. Break off thine iniquity with mercy to the poor, is Daniels prescribe to him. That is the right fruit for finnes of that nature. All may be comprised under these three: 1. Works of devotion, as Prayer: 2. Works of chastisement of the body, as Fasting: 3. Works of mercy, as Almes. These three, between them, make up the corrective or penal part of repentance.

Dan. 4. 7.

I

Prayer is a fruit of Repentance. For this cause (saith the Penitential Psalm) even for this and for no other cause, shall every one that is so disposed make his prayer unto thee. The penitent Publicans first moving was, he went up to the Temple to pray. Let them pray and say: Spare thy people, O LORD, and give not over thine inheritance to be a reproach unto the heathen: (saith JOEL in his repentance.) Let them cry mightily unto the LORD, (say they of Ninive, in theirs.) And the prayers of DAVID, JONAS, MANASSES, for their own sins: of DANIEL, EZRA, NEHEMIAS, for the sins of the Land; and in a word, the Penitential Psalm shew this, that were chosen for no other end but to be a task for penitential persons. There is one fruit.

Psal. 32. 7.

Luk. 18. 10, 13.

Jer. 2. 17.

Jon. 3. 8.

Alms is another. A fruit, and so (by the name of fruit) expressly called, Rom. 15. 28. For, by mercy shewed, sins are forgiven (saith SALOMON;) He that seeks mercy is to shew mercy, Prov. 16. 6. DANIEL (you heard) did prescribe it to no lesse person then the King himself at Babylon. And the same at Jerusalem was a fruit too: witnesse, Esay 58. Break thy bread to the hungry, made by him, there a part of true repentance. And Zacharias shewed as much in his own happy practice upon himself, of our Saviour CHRIST'S high approbation. There is another fruit.

Prov. 11. 17.

Esay 58. 7.

Luk. 19. 8.

3

Fasting is a third fruit: and that a special one, and so hath alwayes been reputed. It appeareth by the three Kings, King DAVID, who was a religious Prince: Not only by him, but by King A H A B, who was scarce found in religion. Nor by them only, but by the King of N I N I V E a heathen man, who even by the light of Nature, brought forth this fruit.

1 Sam. 12. 16.

1 Reg. 21. 27.

Jon. 3. 6.

Gen. 3. 6.

We name it last, but it is (indeed) first: First in Nature: first, quoad nos. First, in nature, as opposite to the first transgression, which was by eating. First, (I am sure) quoad nos, speaking of us and our countrey. Excesse that way in fare and feeding, hath been and is counted our Gentile vitium, our National fault. So, no fruit, that our Nation is more bound to bring forth, than it. For Esca vesti, and venner escis, meat for the bellie, and the bellie for meat, it no where reigneth so much. This is a third fruit.

A fruit, which if we would frame our selves to bring forth in kind, there would come with it both the other fruits besides. For if we could so fast, as we should, it would abate lust certainly; which otherwise, keep the body high, you shall hardly bring low: (that fruit.) And if we could so fast, it would mend our devotion much; our Prayers would not be so full of yawning as we find them: (that fruit.) And if we could so fast, there would be the more left to enable us to be so much the more plentiful in Alms than we be: (that fruit.) So as a good encrease or yeeld would come of this third fruit well brought forth.

These three in special are chosen out; but in general, any as vvell as these. There is a vway, how h^owever it is possible, there is not a virtue of them all, but you may make the work of it a fruit of Repentance. In moral matters it holds ever. Finis dat formam, the end (that) gives the form, and so the true essence to every work: inasmuch as the work is reckoned a fruit, not of that virtue from whence it proceeds, by which it is done; but of that virtue to which it refers, for whose end it is done.

What these works are in general.

Nay, it falls out often so, as an act of virtue (as Prayer, Fasting, Alms), done for a visions end, (suppose, vain glory) looseth his own kind, and becomes the proper act of that vice; it is done for. So powerful a thing is the End, in moralibus. Whereby it comes to passe, the work of any virtue, be it what it will, undertaken with a mind and intent (or, as we say) animo corrigendi, conjoyned eo nomine, referred to that, alters the nature, and becomes a work of Justice corrective, and so a fruit of repentance.

For even in these three before remembered, so it goes. Alms, of it self, is a work of charity: Fasting (properly) an act of the virtue typhaleia, abstinence: Prayer of his own nature, a work of religious worship. But, Alms done some way to amerce our selves: Fasting done animo castigandi corpus: Prayer imposed as a taskwork, to spent so much time, to stand so long bend at it: all these thus referred still with an eye to that, change their nature and become acts penal, and so fruits of Repentance.

Of fruits, we said at first, two lives there are: First, to be offered as a present: So, JACOB sent them to the * Governour of Egypt. For the first: we have (in all) but three things to offer unto GOD, to present, to honour Him with; The * Spirit (or Soule) * the Body; and * our worldly goods. * The offering of the soul is, the pouring it out in prayer, and other works of that kind. * Of the body the chastity it by exercises that way tending: * Of our goods, by distributing and doing good with them in Alms and offerings.

The use of this fruit, As an offering, * Gen. 43: 11

Supposing the sin-offering in the Law best to suit with repentance (as it doth.) * A sorrowful spirit is a sacrifice to GOD (that we know;) * and no reason but a chastened body should be so likewise, * and why the price and charges of the sacrifice should not come into the reckoning, I see not, which was part of their worldly State; which being distributed and done good withal, in meat and drink offerings, this the Apostle calls a sacrifice wherewith GOD is well pleased. The first Use of these fruits brought forth.

Psal. 51. 17 Phil. 4: 18.

The second Use we spake of was, as they are medicinable. This difference there is between the punishment of Justice, and Repentance. Justice otherwhiles destroyes the delinquent; so doth repentance never, but saves always. So, it is more like the punishment of Physick than of Law. For, Physick though it be a cure, yet a penance it is to the body; if we deal with it thoroughly, and go through with it. And repentance is the Physick of the soul and body both. Sit obsecro sanatio (saith DANIEL) Let there be a cure done, when he exhorteth him to repent. Both are a cure: as Corrective of what is past, so preservative (or if you will, you may call it corrective too) of what is to come. When the sinner is corrected, hath correction given him, for the former, he correcteth his ways, amends his life for ever after. Castigo corpus serves for what hath been done: In servitutum Redigo serves, that he do it no more. Both to wreak our selves for so often offering to soul indignities to Heaven and the GOD of Heaven, in our former bad course of life: And to keep under the flesh, and hold the concupiscence in awe, that it runne not again into the former riot. This latter, we call amendment of life; which is not repentance, for it pertains rather to typhaleia, than to typhaleia, (being yet to come) but it never fails to follow it infallibly, in so much as if it do not, nothing is done.

2. As a medicine Dan. 4. 17. 1 Cor. 9. 27.

For I report me to you: Let it be but known to the flesh that this same light or slight repentance shall not serve the turn, but to a round reckoning it shall come and make full accompt to taste of these fruits thoroughly, without hope of being dispensed with; whether it will not take off the edge of our appetite, and make it more dull and fearful to offend? On the other side, let it be considered, whether this be not to lay the bridle on the neck of concupiscence to power it self into all riot, if (finning) it know, it shall be dispatched with any repentance, never so short and shallow, as do no more so; and all is well? Whether (I say) this will not make all the sap go down, as we shall never see fruit come: Nay, whether it be not to destroy fruit and tree and all?

Verily, they that for pure zeal and indignation at themselves for their sins, never shew a tear, nor misse a meal, nor break a sleep, nor do, nor suffer, nor part with ought; it may seem a question, whether they think not S. Iohn here over-seen in pressing that for so needful, which they can so easily dispense with.

But if when we come to Castigo Corpus, there we leave S. Paul; when to neither eating nor drinking, there we leave S. Iohn; and when to flevit amarè, there we leave S. Peter, and when to modo and zakhousa changing our mirth into persuensesse, there we leave S. James, I marvel, what manner of repentance we will leave before we have done, or what shall become of our fruits here?

1 Cor. 9: 27 Mat. 1: 18: 26: 75:

In our repenting (commonly) we make such haste, as we take away before the fruits come. But if there happen to come any, is not this even our case? Our tears, if any, dry straight: Our prayers, if any, quickly tedious: Our alms, indeed pitiful: O it fasts, fast or loose, upon any the least occasion: And so our repentance (if any) penitencia penitenda, a repentance needing another, a new, a second repentance, to repent us of it. To repent us, of our repentance, no less than of our sin it self.

IV. The worth of this fruit.

¹ Cor. 5. 10. So that, if any fruit, fruits of no worth. And if the fruit be of no worth, no more is the tree: unworthy one, unworthy both. Thus we are not yet where we should be, till unto fruits we have added dignos.

Nay then, if you fall to talk of worthinesse, we shall have satisfaction up again. And had we not best then to ask first, are there any worthy? for, if there be none such, bid S. JOHN beware how he talk of worthy fruits: bid Saint PAUL beware how he speak of worthy works of repentance. If none such be, they did ill to clog the bill with any such word. But they knew well, what they said: therefore, such there be (sure) get them where we can.

How it is worthy. Only, when we say worthy, it would be understood cum grano salis. How worthy? in what sense? whither referred? that we mistake not. I demand then first, shall we put them into the balance, to weigh the worthinesse of our fruits; with the unworthinesse of our sins, and the consequent of our sins the wrath of GOD? the dignity of the one, with the indignity of the other, and think by their dignity, to satisfy GODS great indignation? I trow not. At this beam, no fruits of ours will hold weight: None, so, found worthy: No, not if we could (I say not, shed, or pour out; but) even melt into tears, and every tear a drop of blood. No: Non sunt condigna passionis (saith the Apostle) we can suffer nothing worthy our sins, but (that, we cannot suffer) ira ventura, the wrath of God. The infinite incomparable high worth of Him, that in our sin is wronged; the foul contempt that is therein offered, are far above the worth of any our fruits; weigh them down as any feather. Why, all Lebanon (saith the Prophet) is not sufficient to find wood; nor, all the beast upon a thousand hills not enough for a sacrifice, to beekly rake to light all. Take them out of the scales, away with them, Non sunt digni; in that sense. In which sense, not the wicked prodigal child only, but even the good Centurion; nay then, even S. John Baptist here himself, cry all, Non sum dignus; neither their fruits, nor they. The honour of dignos (in this sense) belongs to the fruits of no tree, but the tree of the Crosse of Christ; to His sufferings, and to none but His.

Yet (I wot well) there hath been another manner of estimate by some men of their own fruits; but they weighed them with their own false weights, and made them a discharge both from pena and from culpa, and that stories quodis. Nay then, inventus est plus habens, they found a further surplussage too of: I know not what besides. What of that? CHRIST'S Caveat is here to take place: that needing out the sares, we take heed, we pluck not up together good corne and all. That to avoid certain wormes, that may hap breed in the fruit, if it be not the better looked to, we beat not all the fruit off the tree, and leave it all naked and bare; no fruits at all: and, for fear of teaching a proud, teach a fruitlesse repentance. Well: though not so compared, not this way, yet must we have fruits dignos.

How, worthy then? referred whither? As worthy, as the possibility of our Nature will reach to; as our soil will bear, or hath ever yeilded; as the Saints and Servants of GOD are reported to have brought forth in former ages: what say you to that dignos? That (indeed) were somewhat worth, if it might be had. They? they have become like bottles in the smoke, their knees have grown weak through fasting; they have also wet their pillows with their tears; they have restored bribes, and that four-fold; given in almes at once, half of all that ever they had. This were (indeed) somewhat worth: But, of this (I doubt) our worthinesse will be found short: or rather I dare not put it upon this dignos neither.

And yet, were there in us any portion of that heretical free spirit, of that Christian magnanimity that was in the Fathers of our Faith; (the Apostle bears them witnesse, that to their powers, nay, and beyond their powers they shewed themselves willing;) any never so poor fruit would not content us. But we, neither to our power, nor a great deal short of it, endeavour our selves: any never so slight, and slender will serve us well enough.

I wonder what we think? Do we think to post God off with any, it skills not what fruit? with wind-falls, with worm-eaten stuff? ESAYES sower grapes? JEREMIES rotten figs? Nothing comes amiss. Hold we Him in so vile account, as any is good enough for Him, it is well with Him, if He get any? Malachie tels us otherwise, That He holds us in great scorn: bids us go offer such fruit to our Prince: and see if He will take it well. Zaccary tels us so likewise: A goodly price (saith he) they value me at. Goodly fruit, is it not, they present me with? Nay (sure) we must have dignos too: Some worth there would be.

Is there any other way to take our dignos by? Compared with the justice of God, Not so: Nor with the great Heroes of our nature; Nor so neither. Nor (indeed) are they laid worthy of either of these; but how? Only, fruits worthy of Repentance: that is, such as may well beseech persons, as be truly penitent. Referred not to ought, but to Repentance it self. Laying by sin, as it is an aversion from an infinite good (for so it is infinite; admits no measure or degree;) but considering it, as it is a conversion to the creature, and that more or lesse: so, it falls within compasse of more or lesse worthy.

Say I this of my self? Saith not GODS Law the same secundum mensuram aestimationemque delicti, and promissura peccati? Is it not a clause there repeated more than once? If there be a measure of the one, so is there of the other: If an analogy of Faith, of Repentance too, why not? And, to that, we do apply our selves, in the magis or minus dignos of our fruits. This is once: Repentance may be too much, one may go to far in it: That, will be granted (I know.) And if too much, then too little: and we may fall too short the other way (that I am sure of.) Which part we should offend on (to choose) again in ayadaluon will soon teach us, that it would be home: rather, with the more than with the lesse. In the Corinthians case there it was too much; he was in danger to be swallowed up with sorrow. In Miriams case again, it was too little: for, though she were right penitent for her folly committed, yet yet because the quality of her offence required a larger and more worthy Repentance, she was shewn out of the host yet seven dayes longer, and then, and not before, received to pardon. If there be an ultra and a citra, then is there a tenuis. If too much, and too little, then is there a sufficit, enough. And, that, is the dignus we seek for.

But who shall tell us, this tenuis what it is? Who shall say sufficit? I think it is not best to say it to our selves; it is not safe, that. We are like enough to give ear to propitius esto tibi, to spare and favour our selves, and to think that worthy, that is not: to dismiss the matter with a do no more so, never to follow it to sentence. Or, if we do, to reprove our selves; and stay the execution. It hath been held no way safe for us, to make our own asseffment: and as safe a way as could be, would ever be taken for the soul. Better, some other body do it: and, who shall that other body be?

In the Law, every may was not left to himself. The offering for sin, which was to them a fruit of Repentance) it was rated ever, ever taxed בקרוב by the Priests. According to his ordering, so it went: he made the estimate, how much was enough, what would serve. And here now, in Saint John's time (which was the interval or passage, as it were, between the Law and the Gospel,) at the baptism of John, they knew not what to do, they were not so well skilled; to Saint John, they come with their quid faciemus? What shall we do? And what shall we do? All three one after another, the Publicans, the Souldiers, the Common sort; and they had all their answers severally. One answer served not all. Several kinds of sin required several sorts of fruits. And, under the Gospel; there (we see) for the Corinthian, S. Paul said, Sufficit viro huic: Thus much is enough, this shall serve: his conscience may be quiet; I restore him to the Churches peace. And the Canons penitential which were made in the times under persecution, the very best times of the Church, lay forth plainly, what is to be followed and observed in this kind.

And (sure) I take it to be an error added to the former, to think, the fruits of Repentance and the worth of them to be a matter, any common man can skill of well enough; needs never ask S. John, or S. Paul, what he should do; knows what he should do, as well as S. Paul, or S. John either: And that is not rather a matter, wherein we need the counsel and direction of such, as are professed that way. Truly it is neither the least nor the last part of our learning, to be able to give answer, and direction in this point. But, therefore laid aside, and neglected by us, because not sought after by you. Therefore not studied, but by very few, quia nemo nos interrogat, because it is grown out of request quite.

We have learned (I know not where) a new, a shorter course, which flesh and blood better likes of; to passe the whole course of our life, and, in the whole course of our life not to be able to set down where, or when, or what we did, when we did that, which we call Repenting: what fruits there came of it; what those fruits might be worth. And but even a little before our death (and, as little as may be) not, till the world have given us over, then (lo) to come to our quid faciemus? to ask, what we should do? when we are able to do nothing. And then must one come, and (as we call it) speak comfortably to us, that is, minister to us a little Divinity Elixir, rather stupefactive for the present, than doing any sound good: and so, take our leaves to go meet with ira ventura.

This way, this fashion of repenting, S. John knew it not: it is far from his fruits dignos: S. Paul knew it not; it is far from his opera digna: and I can say little to it, but I pray GOD it deceive us not. It is not good trying conclusions about our souls. Here is the plain way, this is the straight path laid out before us, by him that was sent to prepare the wayes of the Lord, and to make his paths straight: and go we which way we will, we shall hear the voice behind us, crying to us, Hac est via, ambulato in ea. Set your tree; bring forth your fruits; see to them: altogether unworthy they would not be; Somewhat worth, raised to some degree of worthinesse.

Quod petuit fecit, did CHRIST accept of Mary Magdalens case; and quod habuit dedit, in the poor Widows case, with her (but) two mites. We doing our endeavours to raise them, to what degree we can, He for His part, will not be behind, but relieve and help us out. For expectat Dominus, ut misereatur nostri; God (even) waits that He may have mercy on us. And therefore laying away His rigour, will not go exactly to work, but be ready to relieve and repute that worthy, that is not all out so. So in the Church of Sardis, we find, He saith, Non inveno opera tua plena, their works were not found to have the full poise, yet notwithstanding He saith, digni enim sunt, the Parties found worthy for all that.

All the worth is not intrinsecal, to the thing it self: When all is said that can be said, that which makes all full, the chief part of their worth lyeth in digni habebuntur. It is therefore CHRISTs counsel, Orate, ut digni habeamini, Pray, they may be found in so good a degree towards it, as God may count them, and so accounting make them: Quamquam sat digni si quos dignatur (saith the Christian Poet,) in one Chapter, we have them both in the 2 Thes. 2. counted worthy, at the 5 verse: made worthy at the 11 verse. Both come to one. Two words there are in the Greek ἀξιόβητος and ἀξιόβιος: Two in Latine, dignitas, and dignatio: And, as there is dignatio ex dignitate; So is there dignitas ex dignatione. And that is it: Worthy is the fruit, He so esteemeth; But, upon the point, rather dignatione Ejus, than dignitate sua, rather by His deigning or dignifying them; than by the intrinsecal, by their own dignity, they have in themselves.

Yet, let us never think, be so base as to conceive, He will hold for such, any at all, let them be what they will, it skils not how worthless, how far from all degrees toward it. No: But such, as wherein He seeth some conscience made, some care taken, some zealous desire, some earnest endeavour appear. Some proffers (at least) towards those seven degrees, in 2 Corin. 7. which may serve to assure our selves and to shew the world we dally not with Repentance, but make a serious matter of it, and go to it in good good earnest; In witness whereof this and this fruit we have brought forth. Somewhat like yet, somewhat befitting persons truly penitent, whereto he would say, sufficit tibi gratia mea, My grace is sufficient for thee. And, in that we may rest.

It remains, we examine our selves, touching these points: ¹ Our Repentance, is it like a live tree, and not a dull heavy mood, neither life nor soul in it? ² Have we set it on growing, brings it forth at all? ³ Is it fruit, it brings forth? For, whatsoever else it is, it is not for S. Johns turne. ⁴ The fruit it brings, is it ought worth, for the quantity, the quality, the well lasting of it? GOD grant it be so, and thanks be to GOD, if it be so.

V.
The fruit-
time.
Jonah 4. 6:

But this proferte will ask sometime. Jonas Repentance was not like Jonas gourd. His gourd was up in a night, suddenly: trees come not up so quickly: they require more time than so. Never trust a Repentance repentine; no sudden flash or brunt. It is altogether an error, to think; Repentance is a matter of no more moment, than to be dispatched in a moment.

1 Pet. 3. 9.

1 Cor. 7. 5.

There be two words (words of weight:) one is S. Peters, and that is ἐκπορεύειν ἑαυτοὺς to withdraw, go aside, to retire, and be private, to sequester our selves to our Repentance: The other S. Pauls ἐχολάζειν ἑαυτοὺς ὑποδύειν to take us a time, nay, to make us a time, a vacant time, a time of leisure to intend fasting and prayer, two fruits of Repentance. I ask then, did we never ἐκπορεύειν, withdraw our selves to that end? what was the place, where we so did? did we at any time ἐχολάζειν, take any such vacant time? what was the time and when, we so did? I doubt ours hath been rather a flash, a qualme, a brunt, than otherwise; rather, a gourd of Repentance, than any growing tree, A time there must needs be taken for this Proferte.

Now the time, S. JOHN gives, is, but while Ira ventura, the wrath to come is in coming. Ira ventura are two words: In that it is wrath, and GODS wrath, there is just matter of fear: In that it is ventura, to come, but to come, and not yet come; there is hope yet, some good may be done, before venit qua ventura, that come, that is to come.

If these fruits come, the wrath (when it comes) shall not come upon us, but passe by us, and not touch any fruit-bearing-tree. To take a time then.

Now, there cannot be a fitter time than that the Church hath set us forth; that is, (now) at this time of the year. For, now, is the time of the year to plant in it. In the picture of the months, the next month at hand, you shall see nothing but men grafting and setting trees: it is the Husbandry and business of the month: wonderful fitly chosen therefore, that this tree may keep time with the rest. And, now is the time that the sap goes up: So as there could not be a fitter time for S. JOHN to call upon us. Look abroad, they begin now to bring forth: now best speaking for Proferte. To which Proferte, Differte is clean contrary. Defer it not then, but take the time while it is in season.

Exod. 13. 12.

And with high wisdom is this time so set, that the time of our Repentance, the forty dayes of it end in the Passover, in the passing of ira ventura over us, as did the destroying Anger over the houses in Egypt. That the mortifying of sin might end in the rising of CHRIST in us. The use of fruit is fruition: And this is the fruition in this life, even the fruits of the Spirit, fear and love and joy in the HOLY GHOST. And in the life to come, the fruit of the Tree of Life in the midst of Paradise: in stead of Ira ventura, visa ventura, gandia ventura, the glory and joy eternal of the life to come.

To which Life, Glory and Joy, brings us Almighty GOD.

PSALME LXXV. Ver. III.

Liquefacta est terra, & omnes qui habitant in ea:
Ego confirmavi Columnas ejus.

The earth, and all the Inhabitants thereof are dissolved: but I will establish the Pillars of it.

IT was MOSES the Man of God, that, by special direction from GOD; first began, and brought up this order, to make Musick the conveyer of mens duties into their minds (Deut. 31. 19.) And DAVID thence hath continued it, and brought it to perfection, in this Booke, as having a special grace and felicity in this kind: He, for Songs; and his Sonne SALOMON for Proverbs. By which two (that is) by the unhappy Adage, and by a wanton Song Satan hath ever breathed most of his infection and poison into the mind of man.

Deut. 31. 19.

In which holy and heavenly use of his Harpe, he doth, by his tunes of Musick teach men how to set themselves in tune (Psal. 15.) How not onely to tune themselves, but how to tune their households (Psal. 101.) And not onely there, but (here) in this Psalme, how to preserve harmony, or (as he termeth it) how to sing Ne perdas, to a Common-wealth. So saith the Inscri- ption, which St. Augustine very fitly calleth the key of every Psalme.

For, the time of setting this song (by general consent of all Expositors) being the latter end of the long dissension, between the Houses of David and Saul; evident it is, the estate of the Land was very neare to a Perdas; and needed no Perdas to be sung unto it.

For, besides the great overthrow in the Mountains of Gilboa, given by the enemy, wherein the King and three of his sonnes were slain, and a great part of the Countrey surpris'd by the Philistin; the Desolation of a divided Kingdome, was come upon them too. For, within themselves, they were at Cujus est terra? (2 Sam. 3. 12.) even at civil wars: At the beginning, but a play; (So Abner termeth it, 2 Sam. 2. 14.) but bitternesse at the end, as the same Abner confesseth, vers. 26. Surely, it was a weake State and low brought: So much doth David imply (in the fore-part of the verse), that he found the Land a weak Land, by meanes, the strength and Pillars of it, were all out of course, by the mis-government of Saul. But then withal (in the latter part of the verse) he professeth, he will leave it a Land of strength, by re-establishing the Pillars, and re-edifying the State new again. The earth, &c.

The stile whereof runneth in the terms of Architecture: very aptly resembling the government, to a frame of building; the same set upon and borne up by certain Bases and Pillars (the strength whereof assureth, or the weaknesse endangereth the whole :) and David himself to a skilful Builder, surveying the Pillars, and searching into the decays; repairing their ruines, and setting them into course again.

The Division.

Whereout ariseth naturally the entreaty of these four points:

That the weaknesse, or strength of a Land, is a point of important consideration.

That the strength of a Land, is in the Pillars: And, what they are.

That the upholding of those Pillars appertaineth to David.

How, and in what sort Saul weaken'd them in his time; and David, in his, made them fast.

I.

First, David had read, that among the instructions delivered by Moses to the spies (Numb. 13. 19.) the very first and chief of all was, Whether the Land were weak or strong. So he had read; and so he believed it to be: and, so it is. For sure in such Lands, where this is their song, The Earth is weak; their Musick is all out of tune, For, the note is such, as affecteth the Inhabitants with fear. 1. Fear, in the inhabitant, for these two, Virtustestacea, and Cor cereum, strength like a potsherd; and a heart like wax: A weak Land, and a fearful Inhabitant go together. 2. Courage, in the enemy: For, where Rabsaketh knoweth but so much, that the Land is weak, you shall not intreat him to speak any thing but Hebrew, (Esay 36. 12.)

Psal. 12. 14, 15.

This Musick is heave: and therefore David saw, the song must be new set. And so he doth set it new, changeth it into a more pleasant note, But I will strengthen it. And when the note is so changed, in that day shall this Song be sung in the Land of JUDA, We have a strong City; Salvation hath GOD set, for the walls and bulwarks of it.

Esay. 26. 1.

This Musick hath life in it, and heartneth the inhabitant afresh; quaileth the enemy, and resolveth the neighbour to say, (1 Samuel 12. 18.) Thise are we O David, and on thy side, thou sonne of JESSE. When a Prince may say of his Land, as Moses did of Juda, Dent. 33. 7. His own hands are sufficient for him (if the Lord help him) against all his enemies: And the Land may say of the Prince, that which Salomon setteth down, as the high commendation of a Prince, that he is Rex Alkum (that is) Ne surgito, rise not; No rising, against him; for that, they which have risen, had better have fate still. And they both may send word to the enemy (if he threaten to come and visit them) the word that Joas sent (2 Reg. 14. 10.) Tarry at home, and provoke not evil against thy selfe. This Musick is blessed; and such hath hitherto been the song of our Nation.

Prov. 30. 31.

What Samuel said, when he pitched the Stone of Help (1 Sam. 7. 12.) we cannot deny, but we may say the same; Thus far hath God holpen us: whose arme is not shortened, though Pharaoh's heart be hardned. Hitherto, Salvation hath GOD set for our wals and bulwarks, and our Prince, Prince Alkum; and our enemy hath not boasted himself at the putting off his armour, as at the buckling it on: and our Neighbours glad to lay hold of our skirts and say, We will be yours, for we see, GOD is with you; (Zach. 8. 10.) The great blessing of GOD having been upon us (Dent. 28. 12.) Thou shalt lend to many Nations, but shalt borrow of none. Such hath hitherto been our song: and, such may it long be; yea, ever, O LORD. And, that it may so be, David teacheth the way of keeping it so still; Namely, by Setting fast the Pillars of it. Which is the second principal point: What this strength is; and what the Pillars are that bear it up.

1 Reg. 10. 11.

II.

The HOLY GHOST speaking of strength, nameth two (Gen. 32. 28.) as (indeed) the Scripture knoweth no more: The strength of Jacob; and the strength of Israel: Of Jacob, subplanting, or prevailing over men: and of Israel, prevailing with GOD.

1

JACOB'S strength I call, whatsoever the counsel or might of man affordeth; His prudent forecast, whereby he over-reached ESAU (Gen. 27. 36.) and LABAN (30. 37.) And his bow and sword, whereby he wanne from the Amorite (Gen. 48. 10.) Under these two, I comprehend all humane strength, the strength of Jacob.

Nahum 3. 8:

But, when all is done, we must reserve and keep a strength for GOD, saith David (Psal. 59. 9.) Who if he forsake Alexandria, though it have the Sea for his Ditch, it shall be carried captive: who if he he forsake Ephraim, though they be well harnessed and carry bowes, they shall turn themselves back in the day of battaile. Therefore, ever DOMINUS commeth in: (Dent. 23. 7.) Juda's own hands are sufficient to help, Sit in DOMINE, If thou Lord help him against the enemy: And Nisi Dominus, If that the LORD doe not keep the house, and watch the house, and make fast the Pillars, all is in vain (Psal. 127. 1.) Joyne (saith the Wiseman) Itiel (that is, Dominus tecum;) and then, Vcal (that is Prevalebo) will not carry from you: Vcal and He go ever together. Sever (saith David) Hii in curribus, Hii in equis, from in nomine Domini, the next newes, you shall hear of them, is, * Ibi ceciderunt, There they are brought down and fallen. Therefore we must allow Israel a strength, also; without which, Jacobs fore-cast shall fail: (for, He casteth out the counsels of Princes, Psal. 33. 10.) and his sword too: For, He can rebate the edge of the sword Psal. 89. 43.

Psal 77. 9.

Prov. 30. 1.

* Psal. 30. 8.

Two strengths then there are: and these two DAVID (here) termeth two Pillars (that we may know what be the Pillars of the Land. For, such was the manner of the Jewish building; arch-wise, upon two main pillars to set it. We may see it by Samsans desire, Judge. 16. 29. so to be placed, as the two Supporters of the Temple might be in his two hands, that bowing them, all the Church might come down upon their heads. Such an arch of government doth David here devise, and two Pillars bearing it up. He telleth us, they be two: and he telleth us, what they be; for, he hath already named them, in the two former Uses: * Celebrabimus te JEHOVA in the first: And, * Iustitias judicabo, in the second. GOD, and Right, the pillars, The worship of God; and the execution of Justice or right. With these two he beginneth; and with these two again he taketh his farewell; the regard of Religion (in the ninth;) and the care of Justice (in the last.) These two he teacheth us: For, these two (he saith) GOD taught him (1 Sam. 23. 3.) GOD (saith he) the strength of Israel spake to me and said, thou shalt bear rule over men, * Doing Justice, and guiding them in the fear of God. So that these two are the Pillars: * GOD, and * Right, Justice, and the feare of God. These two give strength, to that, and to all Lands: * Celebrabimus te JEHOVA; and * Iustitias judicabo. These two decay all, and weaken the Land, * Neglegimus te JEHOVA; and * Injurias judicabo.

GOD is a Pillar: So, is His most common name, in the Hebrew ADONAI; My Pillar: and His Sonne, a Rock; Not onely Peters Rock (Matthew 16. 19.) but, Davids Rock too (2 Sam. 22. 2.) the Rock both of Church and Kingdome: And His Spirit, a Spirit, not of Holinesse only and Truth; but, a Spirit of Judgment, to them that sit on the Throne; and a Spirit of strength for them that keep the battaile from the gate, Esay 36. 8. And his favour a shield, Psal. 5. 10. and his NAME, turris fortissima, Proverbs 18. 10. And therefore Celebrabimus te JEHOVA, we will praise thy name. For, the nearer thy name is to us and we to it, the more wondrous works wilt thou declare towards us. Arise O God into thy Resting place, Thou and the Arke of thy Strength, Psal. 132. 8. therefore the Arke sendeth forth a Strength. And Salomon when he called the two Pillars (which he set at the Temple gate) Strength and Steadinesse, meant, that; out of that Gate, there proceeded Strength and Stablishing to the whole Realme, 1 Reg. 7. 21.

Verse 1.

Jacob and Boaz

Heb. 11. 34.

Even the Strength and Stablishing of Sic credideris Stabilitur tibi, Esay 7. 6. By which, not only the Devils darts are repelled in the Spiritual, Ephes. 6. 16. but the armes of the aliens are put to flight in the earthly warfare, (Heb. 11. 34.) Therefore Moses made such reckoning of Celebrabimus, that having recounted (as the strength of Cains progeny) their inventing of the Tent, making of the Flute of brasse, and iron works, Gen. 4. 20. he opposeth to them all, as able to match them all (in the posterity of the Sons of God) the Invocation of his Name, begun and set on foot, first, by Enoch, verse 26. as the main pillar of strength which the People of God trust to. And Saint Paul is bold, 1 Tim. 2. 1. Where, laying (as it wer) the Chamber-beames and stories of each Christian Government; (Princes, first, by whose meanes Peace and Quietnesse; from thence knowledge of the truth; from it, godly and honest life; and from them, Salvation;) As the base or Pillar of all, and that which beareth up, and giveth Strength to all, setteth prayer: prayer to be made, that so, Princes preserved; that so, peace maintained; that so, knowledge intended; that so, a godly and honest life practised; that so, Salvation attained. Reckoning invocation as a special pillar of each state; And as a Prerogative Royal, prayer for all men, but above all men, for Princes. Thus doth Religion strengthen us, and is Israel with God: And not with God onely, but is Jacob also, and prevaleth with men too.

Indeed, nothing prevaleth so much, nor worketh so deep, with man, as doth it: And, no men more fast and faithful, than quorum DEUS corda tetigit, 1 Samuel 10. 26. DAVID therefore, undertaking, in this verse, to stablish the pillars; sheweth, how he will doe it, in the next: Dicam, by telling them their duty out of Divinity; by laying before them Deus est iudex, GODS judgement, and the dregges of the cup which He holdeth in His hand. To make so many men so many pillars, well and wisely said the Heathen man, Odium oportet peccandi non metum facias: To hate sinne, is the pillar; to fear it, is not: for, fear will fall away, if his understanding be removed, and where the duty is not grounded on Deus est iudex, it is no pillar to be built on. Certain it is; that (except GODS Law) all Lawes, fear of sinne they breed; but a kind hatred or conscience of sinne, they breed not. Well may they binde the hand, fetter the foot, and imprison the body; there is nothing can imprison the heart or thought, save Arma militia nostra. And thus is Religion, a Pillar among them also.

1 Cor. 10. 4.

For sure, the Christian duty of bearing wrong (where it is well perswaded) doth mainly strengthen the Civil, of doing no wrong: And, the Christian, of departing with our own charitably, doth strengthen the Civil of not taking other mens injuriously: And so, of the rest. That he called it not amiss, that call'd Divinity the Back-bone of the Princes Law; and consequently, Religion of the Common-wealth. So that, not only Moses and Paul, by calling on the name of God; but, Elias and Jeremie, by teaching the will of God (Not by Prayer only, but by Preaching) are the one; an Iron Pillar (Jer. 1. 48) the other, the chariot and horsemen of Israel, in his time.

2 King. 12.

Now, if all men had faith, Dicam would have served, and this one Pillar have been enough: But, because all men have not Religion, but there be in the world evil and absurd men (2 Thes. 3. 2.) therefore needed the second, therefore needed Justitias Inducabo. Indeed, meliores sunt, the better part be they quos dirigit amor, whom love leadeth: but plures sunt, quos corrigit timor, the greater by far, that feare driveth: Even such as will not be led with the cords of a man (that is,) inducements of Religion and reason, (Hos. 11. 4.) but they must be held with bit and bridle (that is) the curb of Justice, Psal. 32. 9.

Exod. 2. 11, 13.

VVhich kind of men are of two sorts (therefore is it Justitias.) 1. The enemie or Egyptian smiting Israel, from without. 2. The Injurious Israelite wronging his brother; from within. VVhy then, Sit nobis Rex, say the people, 1 Sam. 8. 20. (which is a perfect comprehension of this pillar of Justice) to do them right: And to defend them by VVar, when need is, against the forreine enimie; by Justice, when cause is, against the domestical oppressor. Against the one, Ishobaphat placeth gar-risons (2 Chro. 17. 2.) that is, against outward hostilitie: Against the other, he ordaineth Judges (2 Chron. 19. 5.) that is, inward injury.

Mic. 6. 5.

Dicens Cyro (saith God) Pastor meus, &c. (Esay 44. 28.) which say to Cyrus (the mighty Monarch) thou art my Shepheard. A Shepheard, by pastoral Justice, To see the flock safe from without, and quiet from within. From without, To keep the wild Boar of the Forrest from spoiling our lives and goods (Psal. 80. 13.) and from within, the ravenous Wolfe from making havock of our soules (Alis 20. 29.) Will you know, what these two mean? O my people, (saith God) Remember what Balak the King hath devised against you (speaking of a forreine Prince, of the Bore.) And what Balaam hath answered him (speaking of a false Prophet, of the Wolfe.) The case is very like ours, and God grant us a thankful remembrance and meditation of it: Of the long intelligence between Balack and Balaam, for our overthrow; and how graciously and marvellously God hath delivered us:

Verf. 45. 3.

Ezek. 34. 20:

Now, as without the fold, these beasts be busie, and God therefore hath girt the Prince with a sword: So, within, also, there are certain fed Rammes (saith Ezekiel) that with their hornes, push; and with their heeles, lay out against the poore weake sheep (that with vis and fraud, deceit and violence, keep evil rule within;) against whom He hath given into their right hand a Scepter, That, by the arrest of the Scepter, they might be quiet from within; and by the edge of the sword, safe from without: So intending the mysterie of godlinesse, and the knowledge thereof, and after it, the exerceise of godlinesse, and the practice thereof; that so after Stabilitur Regnum meum in this life, by Justice, we may come to Adveniat Regnum tuum in the life to come, by Religion. And this is the second pillar yeelding us Jacobs strength, who (as we said) was furnished both with his Staffe, to see good order in his flock, and with his sword and bow against the Amorite.

Gen. 31. 10. 48.

Thus have we the two pillars of the earth, each strengthening other: Religion rooting Justice within; Justice fencing Religion without, and they both making an arch of government irremovable,

III.

Yet, these two Pillars as strong and as steady as they are, except they be looked to, and upheld; except they have an Upholder; and that a good one, Religion will cleave, and Justice bend, and they both sinck, and the whole frame with them. Therefore mention is made here of a person, put in trust, with the bearing them up; which is the third point.

2 Sam. 15. 17.

Lam. 4. 20.

Which Person, is here, Ego autem, the first; that is, David; the first and the chiefe Person in any government. He it is upon whom both these leane: He is the Head, that guideth these two armes. He the breath of life in both these nostrils: Yea, of all the body (saith Jeremy of Iosias.) Even Christus Domini, the Annointed of the Lord, is the breath of all our nostrils.

Esay 22. 23.

Familiar it is, and but meane, but very full and forceable, the Simile of Esay: wherein he compareth the Prince to a naile driven into a wall, whereon are hanged all both the vessels of service, and the Instruments of Musick; (that is) He bears them up all. And great cause to desire God, fast may it stick and never stirre (this naile;) for, if it should, all our Cuppes would batter with the fall, and all the Musick of our Quire be marred: (that is) both Church and Countrie be put in danger. VVhich GOD willing to shew (saith Philo Judaeus) he did place the fifth Commandment (which is the Crown-commandment) deus in medio, as it were, in the middle, and confines of both Tables. Those touching Religion, and those touching Justice; that, with one arme He might stay Religion, and with the other stay Justice, and so uphold both.

And, where such support hath wanted, both have lyen on the ground. For, both of Mica's Idolatry (that is, corrupt Religion) and of the villany offered at Gibeab, and of the outrage committed by them of Dan, both in rising houses, and sacking whole Townes (that is) of open injustice, God rendereth no cause but this, Non erat Rex: the Pillars went down: Ego wanted. VVithout which (that is, an established government) we should have no Common-wealth, but a wild forrest, where Nim.

Nimrod and his crew would hunt and chase all others: No Common-wealth, but a Pond, where the great fish would devour the small: Nothing but a sort of sheep scattered without a Shepherd (saith Moses.) No more Oves Pasce, sheep of the Pasture, when their Governor is gone, but Ovis occisionis, sheep for the slaughter. Non populus, sed turba, No People, but a multitude; No building; nor Pillars, but a heap of stones. Therefore a joyful noise is the shoot of a King among them.

Joyful indeed every way; but joyful especial, if this Ego, be not Saul, but David. David, which giveth strength unto the Pillars, and not Saul, an impairer or Weaker of them. It is David's complaint, in the fore-part, he found the land weak, when he came to it. So, Saul had left it. It is his promise that, as Saul by his slackness, had brought the estate low; So he, by his vigilancy, would raise it up again. And this is the last point, how Saul decayed, and David restored the Pillars again.

The Wiseman saith, that evil looking to, will decay the principals of any building: and that was Saul's defect (as the Scripture recordeth.) Religion first: Instead of Celebramus, Negligimus JEHOVAM. King David, in his oration to the States of his Realm before his first Parliament, testifieth, the Ark was not sought to in the dayes of Saul: That Pillar, was not looked to. Sought to it was, after a sort (Religion:) but nothing so as it should. Come let us have the Ark (saith he.) And then, Go to, it skils not greatly; carry it back again: which, what was it, but to play fast and loose with Religion? To intend Paul (as Felix saith) at our idle time; and not to Redeem time, to that end? Judge of Religion's case, by the reverence of the Ephod: A daughter of his own bringing up (Mical) saw David; for honour of the Ark, wear it, and despised him in her heart. Judge of it, by the regard of the Priest, the keeper of the Ark: For very love to it, that calling was kept so low and bare, that they were tied to the allowance of their Shew-bread, the High priest had not a loaf in his house besides. This was the first root of his kingdom: The Ark not sought to; The Ephod in contempt, the Priest-hood impoverished: Et Saulo nihil horum cura, and Saul regarded not any of these things.

Such another indifferency for Church matters, we find in Jeroboam. Tush (saith he jestingly) let them kisse the calves, and spare not. Let it go which way it will. But therefore God sends him word by Abijah, that Israel should be like a reed in the water, bowing to and fro, at the devotion of every wave, and every wind, without any steadiness. And was it not so? Search the Chronicles. So GOD saw this mind in Saul to His Ark, and was wroth; with-drew from him his religious and good spirit, and sent upon him a prophane and ferious spirit, which carried him on, first to a sinful life; and never left him, till it had brought him to a shameful death. And God was even saying his disperdas, to the Kingdom, but David (here) entreated for a (Ne perdas) and promised a better care of Celebramus Jehovam.

Now where Religion thrives not, the other (of Justice) will not hold long: when one Staffe is broken, the other holdeth not whole, long after. And surely his Justice was suitable to the former, to his weak regard of Religion; That also was weak too.

1 Weak toward the enemy. It is said, there was want of necessary furniture of armour and munition, in his dayes. And there had been defect, in teaching them to shoot: which David supplied at his entrance.

2 Weak at home too: where, he did not justitias, but injurias indicare.

The parts of Justice are two (as we find in the tenth Verse.) To exalt the horns of the righteous; and to break the horns of the wicked.

1 For the first. Reason was, and so was promised too, that David should have been rewarded with Meroe his eldest daughters marriage. I know not how, one Adriel (an obscure fellow; never to have been nam'd, but to shew, such a one put David by) had his horn exalted above him. This for reward.

2 And his punishment was no better. Merciful to Agag (whose horns should have been broken) and in Abimelechs case, too rigorous, putting him, and eighty four more, to the sword for a dozen of bread.

And whereas, in kindly justice, the rigour of frangam cornua commeth not at first, but Clemency giveth gracious warning, with Dicam imprudentibus (verse 4.) So without regard hereof, as upon any displeasure, without any word at all, his Javelin went straight to nail men to the wall, they knew not, wherefore. Thus did justice decay after Religion, and one Pillar fall upon another, whereof ensued his overthrow, and the Land dangerously sick of the Palsey. Whereof David complaineth, and prayeth, Heal the sores thereof, for it shaketh.

Now, David, as when he read Abimelechs mishap in the Book of the Judges, he made his use of it as appeareth, 2 Sam. 11. 21. So here, when he saw, what had turned Saul to damage, took warning by it (Ruina precedentium, admonitio sequentium), and to make the Land strong, falletch to underfet the Pillars.

And first, of the first (that is) the stone which Saul and his builders cast aside. For, coming to the Kingdom, he consecrates all his Laws, with his Act De Archa reducenda: whereat he would needs be present in his own person, because it touched Celebramus Jehovam; and that with some disgrace, as Mical imagined: but he was resolute in that point, He could receive no dishonour, by doing honour to God's Ark. And, when it was brought back, set such an order for the service of it, by the Levites; for maintenance so bountiful; so reverend for regard; so decent for order; so every way sufficient, as the care of the Temple might seem to reign in his heart. As indeed it did; and as he professeth, he could not sleepe, till he had set a full order for Gods matters, and brought this Pillar to perfection.

The Kings power (saith he) loves judgment: Not power in injury, but power in judgment (saith David): Power to edification, (saith S. Paul) not to destruction: that is, to build up, not, to decay the building. Therefore, Vertue and Valour wanted not their reward in his time. He professeth after, in this Psalm, The wind should blow no man to preferment, out of what quarter soever it came, but God by his graces should point them to it. And sure, the diligent description, the Holy Ghost useth of his Worthies, and men of Place, sheweth him to have been most exact in this point: First, his Three; and then after, his thirty in their order; and that those thirty attained not unto the first three, but every one esteemed and regarded, in his worthinesse.

And Never did the dew of heaven more sweetly refresh the grasse, than doth a favourable saying pierce the inferior, from the mouth of a Prince. Therefore, there was no estate in the Land, but, in this Book (I will not say, he mildly said; but) he even sweetly sung their several duties unto them: To his Court (Psalms 101.) his Church (Psal. 45.) his Judges (Psal. 82.) his Commons all in one (Psalme 144.) I will adde this, that if David offended in ought, herein it was, in that he used Dicam too much, and Frangam not oft enough. Absalom could object it, when it served his turne: And, when David was to leave the world, it lay on his Conscience, his Clemency used in Joab's and Shimei's case. A deare and precious thing is the meanest blood in the eyes of David (so he saith:) And that made his people more afraid for him, than of him, and to value his life at ten thousand of their own: and that, to many Subjects, so many of his Guard: Not, so many Subjects, so many Conspirators, as Saul complained.

Yet, because Clemency is but one foot of the Throne; and Severitie, at some other time (for, Cum accipero tempus, time must be kept in this musicke) doth no lesse support it: Therefore, where laying will not serve, nor singing, Frangam must sometimes be used; where the Rod condemned, let the Sword be drawne. It is Gods owne course. If he, for all dicam, lift up his horn against God or good orders, saw of his horne; if he doe still mutila fronte minitari, Caput ejus mittetur ad te, was David's Justice, Take off his head. For, dicam is the charme he speaketh of: which (if the viper stop not his care) will doe him good: If it do not, contunde in theriacum, be must be bruised and made into Mithridate, that others may be amended by him, seeing he would not be amended by others.

Thus did David repaire Saul's ruines; these are his steppes, thus did he shew Himselfe as good as his promise (here) a Skillful Upholder of these two maine Pillars, which beare up and give strength to every Land. And by this meanes, he changed both the Nature and Name of his Countrey; finding it Jebus (that is) conculcata, (and so, indeed, it was a City contemned and trodden downe with every foot:) And leaving it a new name, Ierusalem; and so it was Salem Ieru; a City to be feared and envied of all round about it. So, the Land grew strong, and the Pillars fast; and David, for his fasting, in favour with God and man. GOD, whom he praised, graciously assisting him; and men, whom he preserved, willingly serving him.

The LORD who hath sent forth the like strength for our Land, stablish the good thing which

PSALM LXXVII. VER. XX.

Thou didst lead thy People like Sheep, by the hand of Moses and Aaron.

SOME, either present or imminent danger, and that no small one, had more than usually distressed the Prophet at the writing of this Psalm; wherewith his spirit, for a while being tossed to and fro in great anguish (as may appear by those three great billows in the 7, 8, 9, Verses) yet at last he cometh to an Anchor (in the tenth Verse) upon the remembrance of the right hand of the most High: Which right hand in one even tenor, throughout all ages, not onely to that of Dauids, but even to this of ours, hath ever shewed it self a right hand of pre-eminence and power, in the two points in the latter part of the Psalm specified, the special matter of his and all our comfort. 1. The final confusion of his enemies, though for a while exalted (until this Verse) 2. The final deliverance of his people, though for a while distressed (in this Verse.) Which twain, of many Psalms are the substance, and of this now before us; and indeed, all the whole story in a manner is nothing else but a Calendar of these two. That the Lord of Hosts, the God of Israel, is El Nekamoth, a God of Vengeance against his enemies; and but a letter changed, is El Nechamoth, a God of Comfort unto his people: That his Cherubims hold a flaming sword to repress the one, and have their wings spread to shadow and succor the other: That his Creatures; the cloud from above is a mist of darkness to confound the Egyptians; and the same cloud a pillar of light to conduct the Israelites: That the water from beneath, to the Egyptian is a gulf to devour them, but to the Israelite, a wall of defence on their right hand and on their left. We need not to seek far; in the Psalm next before, and again in the Psalm next after this, you shall finde these two coupled; as (indeed) for the most part they go still together.

And as they go still together, so still they end in the safeguard of the Church. Of all Prophecies, of all judgment, of all miracles, past or present; new or old, that is the Key and Conclusion. The last Verse (if I may so say) of the De'uge was the Rainbow; of the Egyptian bondage, was the Feast of Pass-over; and even here in this Psalm, after it hath, in the four Verses next before, rained and poured down, and lightned and thundred, and Heaven and Earth gone together, there doth in this Verse ensue a calm to Gods people. This is the blessed period that shutteth up the Psalms: Them that hated thy people, or dealt unkindly with thy servants, them thou drownedst and destroyedst. But, Thy people thou ledest like sheep by the hands of Moses and Aaron.

And in these two, may all Kingdoms and Countries read their own destinies, what they are to hope for, or to fear, at the hands of God. If they be Lo-ammi not his people; they may look back, what they finde in the Verse before, and that is storm and tempest. If they be his (and we I trust are his; and more and more his, he daily make us) this Verse is for us, that is, safe and quiet conduct: Thou didst lead thy, &c.

The Sum. In which Verse there is mention of three persons: 1. God. 2. Gods hand. 3. Gods people. 4. And of a blessing of benefit issuing from the first (that is) God; conveyed by the second (that is) Gods hands, Moses and Aaron; and received by the third (that is) Gods people; and it is the benefit of good guiding or government. This is the sum of the Verse.

The Division. As for order, I will seek no other, than as the Holy Ghost hath marshalled the words in the Text it self; which of it self is right exact; every word, in the body of it, containing matter worth the pausing on.

1. First, in the foremost word Tu, God who vouchsafed this benefit.
2. And secondly, in Duxisti: The benefit it self of guiding from him derived.
3. And thirdly, Derived to his people the parties that receive it.
4. And fourthly, Derived to his people by his hands, which hands are Moses and Aaron, the means that convey it.

I. Thou ledest thy people, &c.

The first part.
Thou.

TO begin with God; who beginneth the Verse, by whom and to whom we lead and are led, and in whom all right leading both beginneth and endeth.

It is, Thou (saith the Psalmist) that ledest thy people; and (in the next Psalms) it is He that carried his people in the wilderness like a flock; who is that He, or this Thou? It is God, saith the Prophet in the sixteenth Verse.

That is; whoe'er be the hands, God is the person, he is the Tu. Whose names soever we hear; whose hands soever we feel; whose countenance soever we behold; we must yet look up higher, and see God in every Government. To him we must make our Apostrophe, and say, Thou ledest, &c. For he it is ledesth properly; and, in strict propriety of speech, Moses and Aaron lead not; but God, by the hands of Moses and Aaron. And that thus it is, that God is the person that ledesth, and all other but hands under him and unto him, the Prophet giveth us in this same Verse, matter of three marks of difference, between him and them.

1. The first is in Duxisti, Thou didst lead (saith the Prophet;) Didst and doest lead; didst then, and doest still: But, Thou didst lead by Moses and Aaron; so doest thou not now. The hands are changed: then, Moses and Aaron; after, Joshua and Eliazar; after, Othniel and Phineas; after, others: Sed tu idem es, But thou art the same still, and thy years shall not fail: As if he should say, Their years (indeed) fail, and come to an end; within so many years they were not so led, and within so many more they shall not be. But God hath a Prerogative, That he is Rex a Saeculo, and Rex in Saeculum; Was our King of old, and shall be our King for ever and ever.

1 Tim. 6. 15.

Heb. 13. 14.
& 12. 2.

1 Pet. 5. 4.

Psal. 96. 10.

The second is in Populum tuum, Thy people; another limitation. For, this people are (in the sixteenth Verse before) said to be the sons of Jacob and Joseph: So far stretcheth Moses line, and no further. But, Tu Duxisti, Gods line, ivit in omnem terram, goeth over all Nations, even to the uttermost parts of the world. Gods leading hath no marches: This people, and all people are his; and he by special Prerogative is Rex universa terra, King (not of one people, or of one Country or Climate, but) of all the people of the whole earth.

The third is, Per manus, By the hands. For as he guideth the people by the hands, so he guideth the hands themselves, by whom he guideth: Ruleth by them, and ruleth them; ruleth by their hands; and ruleth in their hearts: Is both the Shepherd of Israel, leading them like sheep; and further ledesth Joseph also (their Leader) tanquam ovem, like a sheep: That is, they be Reges Gentium, Kings of the Nations, but he is Rex Regum, King over Kings themselves. Moses and they with him be ἡγούμενοι, Guides (as St. Paul calleth them;) but Jesus Christ is ἀρχηγός, the Arch-guide. Aaron and his family be ποιμένες, Shepherds (as St. Peter termeth them;) but Jesus Christ is ἀρχιποιμήν, the High and Sovereign Shepherd over all. Why then, Dicite in Gentibus, Tell it out among the Nations (saith the Prophet) that God is King; that he is the Tu, the Leader, the perpetual, the universal, principal Leader of his people.

From which plain note (that the Lord is Ruler) the Psalmist himself draweth a double use, containing matter both of comfort and fear.

Psal. 97. 1.

1. Of Comfort; (in the ninety seven Psalms) Dominus regnavit, exultet terra: The Lord is Ruler (or Leader) let the earth rejoice.

2. Of

2. Of fear (in the Ninety ninth Psalm) Dominus regnavit, contremiscat Populus: The Lord is Ruler (or Leader) let the people tremble.

First, From Gods ruling, matter of joy. For if we will be ruled by him, he will appoint over us, a Ruler according to his own heart, he will prevent her with the blessings of goodness: He will deliver the power of Sifera into her hands: He will sloath her enemies with shame, and make her crown flourish on her head, and set the days of her life as the days of Heaven.

Secondly, Matter of fear too. The Lord is Ruler, let the people tremble: For if they fall to be unruly, he can vindemiare spiritum principum, as easily gather to him the breath of a Prince, as we can slip off a cluster from the Vine. He can send them a Rehoboam without wisdom; or a Jeroboam without Religion; or Ashur (a stranger) to be their King; or (which is worst of all) Nullum Regem, a disordered Anarchy; quia non timuimus Jehovam. Therefore exultantes & tremantes in joy and trembling, let us acknowledge God and his supreme leading, that our parts may be long in Dominus regnavit, exultet terra. The Lord doth lead us, let the Land rejoyce.

Yet one point more, out of this Tu. By comparing it with the Verses before, on which it dependeth: That as it is the Person, and Power of God that is chief in every rule; so, not every power, but even that very power of his, whereby he worketh wonders. For the Prophet (in the Fourteenth Verse) having said of God; Thou art the God that doest wonders, and so particularizing; Thou thunderest from Heaven; Thou shakest the Earth; Thou dividest the Sea; at last cometh to this Thou, Thou leadest the people. Very strange it is, that he should sort the leading of the people with Gods wonders, and that not onely among them all, but after them all, as chief of all. Recount the Government of the people, as if it were some special miracle: And indeed, a miracle it is; and whosoever shall look into the nature and weight of a Monarchy, will so acknowledge it. The Rod of Government is a miraculous Rod; both that of Moses, for it would turn into a Serpent, and back again; and Aarons Rod too, for of a dry and fear stick, it came to blossom again, and to bear ripe Almonds: To shew, that every Government is miraculous, and containeth in it matter of wonder, and that in two respects.

For, whereas there is naturally in every man a seeking his own ease; to lie soaking in his broth (as Ezekiel speaketh;) not to be custos fratris, nor to afflict and vex his soul with the care of others: It is surely supernatural, to endure that cark and care which the Governors continually do (a matter that we inferiors can little skill of;) but to read Ea nocte dormire non potuit Rex: Such a night the King could not sleep: And again, Such a night no meat would down with the King, and he list not to hear any Musick. To endure this (I say) is supernatural, and it is God; which above all nature, by his mighty Spirit worketh it in them.

Again, whereas there is, in every inferior, a natural wildness or unwillingness to brook any Ruler, or Judge over them (as was told Moses flatly to his face;) for, by nature, the people are not like sheep: It is not (certainly) any power of man, but a meer supernatural thing, to keep the Nations of the Earth in such awe and order, as we see them in. Quis potest (saith Solomon) who is able to manage this mighty multitude, so huge in number, so unruly in affection? Nonne potestatem habeo? Have not I power (saith Pilate) but our Saviour Christ very fitly telleth him, Power he hath indeed, but it is not innata, but data de super; and except it were given him from above, he should have none at all. It is Tu dixisti that doth it; Even thou, O Lord, and thine Almighty power that holdest them under. And very fitly from the wonder in appeasing the Sea (in the last verse before) doth the Prophet pass (in this) to the leading of the people: Their natures are alike; himself in one Verse matcheth them, Thou rulest the raging of the Sea, and the noise of the Waves, and the madness of the people. That is, no less unruly and enraged, by nature, is the multitude, than the Sea. No less it roareth, Drumpanus vincula eorum, and Nolumus hunc regnare super nos, when God unlooseth it. Of one and the same power, it proceedeth to keep them both within their banks; thou that calmest the one, charmest also the other.

Wherefore when we see that careful minde in a Prince (I will use Moses own words) to carry a people in her arms, as if she had conceived them in her womb, as no Nurse, nor Mother more tender: And again, when we see the tumultuous and tempestuous body, this same Sea of popularity kept in a quiet calm, and infinite millions ebbing and flowing (as it were) that is, stirring and standing still, arming and disarming themselves, killing and being killed, and all at the monosyllables of one person. Go, and they go; Come, and they come; Do, and they do it: Let us see God sensibly in it, and the power of God, yea, the miraculous power of God, and say with the Prophet, Thou art the God that doest wonders; thou leadest thy people like sheep, by the hands of Moses and Aaron. And so much for the first part, first word, and person.

The second word compriseth the benefit issuing from God, which is a leading or conduct, the second part. A word of great compass, and includeth many leadings under it. For, to be our Jehovah Nissi, our Standard-bearer, and to lead our forces in the field; to be our Wonderful Counsellor, and to lead that honorable Boord; to sit in the midst of our Judges, and to lead them in giving sentence: All these, and more than these, are all in duxisti; and all these are especial favors; but the chief of all, and that whereof all these are but the train, is the leading us in his heavenly truth, and in the way of his Commandments, to the Land of the living. All the rest attend upon this; this is chief, and therefore the leading of principal intendment.

And in this leading there be these four points. For that it be a leading, it must be orderly without straying, skilfully without erring, gently without forcing, and certainly without missing our journeys end. First, Orderly without straying: Led, and not wandered. Secondly, skilfully without erring: Led, and not misled. Thirdly, gentle without forcing: Led, and not drawn. Fourthly, certainly without missing: Led, and not led about, ever going, but never coming to our place of repose.

- I. In the first whereof, we are but let see, the wandering and stay-less state we were in, till God vouchsafed to send us this gracious conduct: Sicut Oves, like Ezekiel's stray sheep, stragling upon every Valley, and upon every Hill. The very case these people here were in, when God in mercy sent them these two Guides, scattered all over the Land to seek stubble. Which estate of theirs, is the expresse pattern of the World, wandering in vanity, picking up straws, and things that shall not profit them, Seeking death in the error of their life, till God look mercifully upon them, and from this wilde wandering, reduce them into the right way.
2. Which right way is the second point; for else, it is not Duxisti, but Seduxisti; and as good no leading at all, as misleading. Now this right-way, if we ask where it lieth, the Prophet will tell us, Thy way, O God, is in the Sanctuary; that is, It is the Word of God which is the Leadstar, when God is the Leadsman. Sicut Oves it must be, and this is the voice of the true Shepherd, to be lifted to of all his flock, that will not rove and run headlong into the Wolfs den. This is the Pillar of the Cloud, in regard of this people here, to be kept in view of all those that will not perish in the Wilderness, wherein is no path. Indeed it is both; first, the Pillar of the Cloud before, directing us in the day; secondly, and the Voice of the Shepherd behinde us (as Isaiah saith) telling us when we miss, and crying, Hæc est via, ambulate in eâ, This is the way, the right way, walk in it.
3. And in this way, our guiding must be milde and gentle: Else it is not Duxisti, but Traxisti; drawing and driving, and no leading. Leni spiritu, non durâ manu, rather by an inward sweet influence to be led, than by an outward extrem violence to be forced forward: So did God lead this people here. Not the greatest pace (I wis) for they were a year marching that, they might have posted in eleven days, as Moses saith. No, nor yet in the nearest way neither, as Moses telleth us: For, he fetched a compass divers times; as all wise Governors by his example must do, that desire rather safely to lead, than hastily to drive forward. The Spirit of God leadeth this people (saith Isaiah) as an Horse is ridden down the Hill into a Valley; which must not be a gallop, lest Horse and Ruler both come down one over another; but warily and easily: And Sicut Oves still giveth us light, seeing the Text compareth it to a sheep-gate.
- Touching which kinde of Cattel to very good purpose, Jacob (a skilful Shepherd) answereth Esau (who would have had Jacob and his flocks have kept company with him in his hunting pace.) Nay not so Sir, (saith Jacob) it is a tender Cattel, that is under my hands, and must be softly driven, as they may endure; if one should over-drive them but one day, they would all die, or be laid up for many days after. Indeed, Rehoboam left ten parts of his flock behinde, onely for ignorance of this very point in Duxisti. For, when in boisterous manner he chased them before him, telling them what yokes he would make for them (a far unmeet occupation for a Prince to be a yoke-maker) they all shrunk from him presently, and falsified his prophesie clean. For whereas he told them sadly, His little finger should be as big as his Fathers whole body, it fell out clean contrary; for, his whole body proved not so big as his Fathers little finger. A gentle leading it must be; and in the beginning, such was the course. Therefore ye have the Kings of Canaan in Genesis, for the most part called by the name of Abimelech, that is, Pater Rex, a King in place, a Father in affection. Such was Moses our Leader here, a meek man above all the men on the earth: Such was David himself, who full bitterly complaineth, Al these sons of Zervia are too hard, too full of execution for me. And (to end this point) thus describeth he his good Prince (in the Seventy two Psalm) He shall come down (not like hail-stones on a house top, but) like the dew into a fleece of wool; that is, sweetly and mildly, without any noise or violence at all.
- Last of all. All this reducing and right leading and gentle leading, must end in an end; they must not go and go still in infinitum, that is, no leading but tiring out-right. It must be Sicut Oves, whom the good Shepherd (in the Three and twentieth Psalm) leadeth to a place, and to a place meet for them, where there is green pasture by the waters of comfort: So was it in this people here. They were led out of Egypt to sacrifice to God, and to learn his Law in the Mount of God, Sinai; and from thence also to Sion itself, his own rest, and holy habitation. And even so our people are led from the wandrings of this world, unto the Folds of Gods Church, where (as the Prophet saith in the Seventy third Psalm) first, God will a while guide them with his counsel, and after will receive them into his glory. And this is the end of all leading: To bring us all from the vain proffers of the world, which we shall all finde (as Solomon found it) vanitas vanitatum & omnia vanitas, to the sound comfort of His Word in this Book, which is indeed veritas veritatum & omnia veritas: In the knowledge and practice whereof when they shall have fulfilled their course here, God will bring them to his own rest, to his heavenly Jerusalem, where is and ever shall be felicitas felicitatum & omnia felicitas.
- But in this life here, we come no further than the borders of his Sanctuary, (as he telleth us in the next Psalm) in the way whereof, if God lead us constantly, constantly; not after our wanton manner, out and in when we list, all the other inferior leadings shall accompany this one; for, this leading leadeth them all. He shall lead our Counsellors, that they shall advise the counsels of his own heart: He shall lead our Judges, that they shall pronounce the judgments of his own mouth: He shall lead our forces into Edom, the strong Cities and holds of the enemy: He shall lead our Navy in the Sea, by unknown paths, to the place it would go; and I can say no more. Thorow all the dreads and dangers of the world, thorow the perils of the Red Sea, thorow the perils of the Desert, thorow the malice of all our enemies: He shall safely lead us, and surely bring us to his promised Kingdom, where we shall see the goodness of the Lord, in the Land of the living. And this is the benefit, and thus much for that part.
- The third part. The value of which benefit we shall the better esteem, if we consider the state of the parties, on whom it is bestowed, set down in these words, Populum Tuum; which is the third part. That all this good is for the people, worthy not so much as the least part of it. For, what is the people? Let Moses speak (for,

(for, he knew them) Siccine popule stulte & insipiens? And Aaron too (for, he had occasion to try them) This people is even set on mischief; and (if you will) David also, Inter belluas populum. And to conclude, God himself, Populus iste dura cervicis est. This is the people. We may briefly take a view of all these. Will you see the folly and giddiness of this multitude? Ye may, Acts 19. there, they be at the Town-house, some crying one thing, some another; and the more part knew not why they were come together. Therefore Moses truly said, it was a fond and giddy-headed people.

Will ye see the brutishness of the people? In Acts 22. you shall see them taking up a cry, upon a word spoken by St. Paul, and casting off their cloaths, and throwing dust into the air, as if they were quite decayed of reason; that David truly might say, Inter belluas populum.

Will ye see the spite and malice of the people? In the Sixteenth of Numbers, for Corahs death they challenge Moses and Aaron, ye have persecuted and killed the people of the Lord. Yet neither did Moses once touch them, but God himself from Heaven, by visible judgment, shewed them to be as they were. Neither were Corah and his crew, the people of God, but the sons of Belial. But that is their manner, in despite of Moses, if for ought they like him not, presently to canonize Corah and his complices, and make them the Saints of God. That Aaron said truly of them, This people is even set on mischief.

Lastly, If ye will see their head-strongness, look upon them in the Eighth of the First of Samuel, where having phansied to themselves an alteration of estate, though they were shewed plainly by Samuel, the sundry inconveniences of the Government, they so affected, they answer him with: No (for that is their Logic, to deny the conclusion) but we will be like other Countreys about us, and be guided as we think good our own selves. That (of all other) Gods saying is most true, It is a stiff-necked and head-strong generation.

And yet, for all these wants, so well weening of themselves, as they need no leading, they: Every one among them is meet to be a leader, to prescribe Moses and control Aaron in their proceedings: So that, where God setteth the sentence thus, Thou ledest thy people like sheep by the hands of Moses and Aaron; might they have their wills, they would take the sentence by the end, and turn it thus, Thou ledest Moses and Aaron like sheep by the hands of thy people.

And this is the people, Populus: And surely, no evil can be said too much of this word people, if Tuum ye take it apart by itself, Populus without Tuum, The people, and not Thy people. But then, here is amends for all the evil before, in this word Tuum; which qualifieth the former, and maketh them capable of any blessing or benefit.

A common thing in Scripture it is, thus to delate one word with another. Si peccaverit in te frater tuus: Peccaverit stirs our choler straight; but then, Frater makes us hold our hand again. Tolle festucam ex oculo: Festucam, a mote? Our zeal is kindled presently to remove it; but then Ex oculo, the tenderness of the part tempers us, and teacheth us to deal with it in great discretion. And so it is here: Populus so unruly a rout, as Moses and Aaron would disdain once to touch them; but when Tuum is added, it will make any of them, not onely to touch them, but to take them by the hand. For, it is much that lieth upon this pronoun Tuum; indeed, all lieth upon it: And put me Tuum out of the Verse, and neither God respecteth them, nor vouchsafeth them either Moses to govern, or Aaron to teach, or any heavenly benefit else. For, Populus is unworthy of them all; but for Tuum, nothing is too good.

For there is in Tuum, Not onely that they be men, and not beasts; Freemen, and not Villains; Athenians or Englishmen (that is, a civil) not a barbarous people (the three considerations of the Heathen Ruler;) but that they be Gods own people and flock; and that is all in all. His people, because he made them; and so, the lot of his inheritance. His people again, because he redeemed them from Egypt with his mighty arm; and so his peculiar people. His people, the third time, because he redeemed their Souls by his sufferings; and so, a people purchased most dearly, purchased even with the invaluable high price of his most precious blood. This is that, that sets the price on them: For over such a flock, so highly prized, so dearly beloved, and so dearly bought, it may well seem any to be a Guide. Moses with all his learning; Aaron with all his eloquence; yea, even Kings to be their Foster-fathers, and Queens to be their Nurses. No leading, no Leader too good for them. I conclude (with St. Augustine upon these words) Quandiu minimis istis fecistis fratribus meis, fecistis & mihi: Audis minimis (saith he) & contemnis; Thou hearest they be the base people, the minimis of the world, and thou settest thy foot on them: Audis & fratribus, take this with thee too. That they be Christs brethren, thou ledest: Es mihi crede, non est minima gloria horum minimorum salus: And trust me, it is no poor praise to protect this poor flock, but a high service it is, and shall be highly rewarded. Christ will take and reward it, as done to himself in person.

Sicut Oves standeth doubtful in the Verse; and may be referred, either to the manner of leading, thus; Thou ledest like sheep: Or, to the persons led, thus; Thy people like sheep. There we touched it before, in Duxisti, in every of the four manners of leading; and here now we take it in again, with the people, to whom it may have reference. And indeed there is no term, that the Holy Ghost more often sendeth for (than this of his flock) to express his people by; for in the estate of a flock, they may best see themselves. As here it is added respectively to Duxisti, to let them see, both what interest they have in it, and what need they have of it. I mean of Government.

First, as a note of difference between Ammi and Lo-ammi: Thy people, and the people: Gods people, and strange children: Every people is not Sicut Oves, nor every one among the people. There is a people (as the Psalmist speaks) Sicut Equus & Mulus, like the untamed Horse or Mule, in whom is no understanding: And among the people there be too many such. Surely by nature we are all so; wilde Job 11. 12. wilde and unbroken, as the As-colt (saith Job.) Which wildeness of nature when they are untaught, and taught to submit themselves to Government; to become gentle, and easie to be led, Sicut Oves, led to feeding, led to shearing, to feed those that feed them; tractable of nature, and profitable of yeeld: It is a good degree, and a great work is performed on them. For, by it, as by the first step, they become Gods people: For, his people are populus sicut oves, and they that are not his, are populus sicut Hirci, a people like He-Goats, in nature intractable, in use unserviceable.

Now, being his people, they come to have an interest in Duxisti, the benefit: For, populus sicut oves, must be led gently; but populus sicut hirci, must be driven forcibly. Duxisti is not for both; it is a privilege: And if there be any retain their wilde nature, or degenerate from sheep into goats (as divers do daily:) For them, Aaron hath a Rod to sever them from the Fold, by censure of the Church. And if that will not serve, Moses hath another, which he can turn into a Serpent and sting them; yea, if need so require, sting them to death by the power secular. For Nachab is leading, and (the sound remaining) Nacab is smiting; and a necessary use of both. The one, for thy people like sheep, who will be led; the other, for the strange children like goats, who will not stir a foot, further than they be forced. And this is the interest.

2. But now again, when they be brought thus far, to be like sheep; they are but like sheep, though; that is, a weak and unwise cattel, far unable to guide themselves. Which sheweth them their need of good Government; and though they be the people of God, yet that Moses and Aaron be not superfluous. For a feeble poor Beast (we all know) a sheep is; of little or no strength for resistance in the world; and therefore in danger to be preyed on by every Wolf; and, as of little strength, so of little reach. None so easily strayeth of itself; none is so easily led awry by others. Every strange whistle maketh the sheep; every Eccē hic maketh the people cast up their heads, as if some great matter were in hand.

Match. 14. 23. 24. These two defects do mainly enforce the necessity of a Leader: For, they that want sight (as blind-men) and they that want strength (as little children) stir not without great peril, except they have one to lead them: And both these wants are in sheep, and in the people too.

If then they be sicut Oves, like sheep: What is both their wisdom? Sure, to be in the unity of the flock; and, what is their strength? truly, to be under the conduct of a Shepherd: In these two is their safety. For, if either they single themselves and stray from the fold, or if they be a fold, and yet want a Shepherd; none more miserable than they. And indeed, in the Holy Ghosts phrase, It is the ordinary note of a private mans misery, to be Tanquam ovis erratica, as a stray sheep from the flock; and of the misery of every Estate Politick, to be Tanquam grex absque Pastore, as a flock without a Shepherd; therefore guiding they need: Both the staff of unity (Bands) to reduce them from straying, and the staff of order (Beauty) to lead them so reduced. And would God they would see their own feebleness and shallowness, and learn to acknowledge the absolute necessity of this benefit; in all duty receiving it, in all humility praying for the continuance of it, that God break not the fold, and smite not the Shepherd, for the flocks unthankfulness.

The fourth part.
Per manus Mo-si & Aaronis.

Psal. 74. 12.

By the hands of Moses and Aaron.] This part of the Verse that is behinde, and containeth the means by whom God conveyeth this benefit to his people, had had no use, but might well have been left out, and the Verse ended at populum tuum, if [Author aliena potentia perdis suam] had been Gods rule. For, he needed no means, but immediately from himself, sine manibus, could have conveyed it, without any hands (save those that made us; that is, his Almighty power, but) without any arm or hand of flesh; without Moses or Aaron, without Men or Angels, he was able (himself) to have led us. And a principle fuit sic; for a time, he did so; of himself immediately, and of his own absolute sovereignty, held he court in the beginning, and proceeded against Adam, Eve, Cain, the old World; and there was none joyned in commission with him. He onely was our King of old (saith the Psalmist;) and for a space, the justice that was done on earth, he did it himself. And as he held court before all, so will he also hold one after all. Veniet, Veniet qui male iudicata rejudicabit dies: There will come a day, there is a day coming, wherein all evil judged cases, shall be judged over again. To which all appeals lie, even from the days of affliction in this world (as sometimes they be) to the day of Judgment in the world to come.

This estate of guiding being wholly invested in him, there being but one God and one Guide, he would not keep it unto himself alone, as he might, but it pleased him to send Moses his servant, and Aaron whom he had chosen, to associate them to himself, in the Commission of leading, and to make hominem homini Deum. One man a guide and god to another.

Per manum.

And those whom he thus honoreth, First, the Prophet calleth Gods hands, by whom he leadeth us; and secondly, telleth us who they be; Moses and Aaron.

Gods hands they be: For that, by them he reacheth unto us Duxisti, and in it, Religion, and Counsel, and Justice, and Victory, and whatsoever else is good. He sendeth his Word to Moses first, and by him (as it were through his hand) his Statutes and Ordinances unto all Israel.

Psal. 103. 7.

And not good things onely, but (if they so deserve) sometimes evil also. For as, if they be virtuous (such as Moses and Aaron) they be the good hand of God for our benefit, such as was upon Exra: so, if they be evil (such as Balaac and Balaam) they be the heavy hand of God for our chastisement, such as was upon Job. But the hand of God they be both. And a certain resemblance there is between this Government and the Hand: For, as we see the hand itself parted into divers fingers, and those again into sundry joints, for the more convenient and speedy service thereof; so is the estate of government, for ease and expedition, branched into the middle Offices, and they again (as fingers) into others under them. But the very meanest of them all, is a joint of some finger of this hand of God. Nazianzen (speaking of Rulers, Rulers, as of the Images of God) compareth the highest, to Pictures drawn clean thorow, even to the feet; the middle sort, to half Pictures drawn but to the Girdle; the meanest, to the lesser sort of Pictures drawn but to the Neck or Shoulders. But all, in some degree, carry the Image of God.

Out of which term (of the hands of God) the people first are taught their duty; so to esteem of them, as of Gods own hands: That as God ruleth them by the hands of Moses and Aaron (that is) by their ministry; so Moses and Aaron rule them by the hands of God (that is) by his authority. It is his Name, they wear; it is his Seat, they sit in; it is the Rod of God, that is in Moses and Aarons hands. If we fall down before them, it is he that is honored; if we rise up against them, it is he that is injured; and that Peccavi in oculum, & in te must be our confession, against Heaven and them: But first, against Heaven and God himself, when we commit any contempt against Moses or Aaron.

Luke 15. 17.

1. And the Rulers have their lesson too. First, That if they be Gods hands, then his Spirit is to open and shut them, stretch them out, and draw them in, wholly to guide and govern them; as the hand of man is guided and governed by the spirit that is in man. Heavenly and divine had those hands need be, which are to be the hands, and to work the work of God.

2. Again, they be not onely hands, but manus per quam (that is) hands in actu. Not to be wrapped up in soft furr, but by which an actual duty of leading is to be performed. Moses own hand (in the fourth of Exodus) when he had lodged it in his warm bosom, became leprous; but being stretched out, recovered again. Hands in actu then they must be: not loosely hanging down, or folded together in idleness; but stretched out; not onely to point others, but themselves to be foremost in the execution of every good work.

Exod. 4. 6.

3. Thirdly, Manus per quam ducuntur: That is, as not the leprous hand of Moses, so neither the withered hand of Jeroboam stretching it self out against God, by misleading his people, and making them to sin. Leading back again into Egypt (a thing expressly forbidden) either to the oppression and bondage of Egypt; or to the ignorance and false worship of Egypt, from whence Moses had led them. For as they be not entire bodies of themselves, but hands; and that not their own, but Gods: So, the people they lead, are not their own, but his, and by him, and to him to be led and directed. So much for Gods hands.

1 Reg. 13. 4.
Deut. 17. 16.

This honorable title (of the hand of God) is here given to two parties, Moses and Aaron, in regard of two distinct duties performed by them. Ye heard how we said before, The people of God were like sheep, in respect of a double want: First, want of strength, by means of their feebleness; secondly, and want of skill, by means of their simpleness. For this double want, here cometh a double supply, from the hand, first, of strength; and secondly, of cunning: For, both these are in the hand.

Moses and Aaron.

1. It is, of all members, the chief in might; as appeareth by the diversity of uses and services, it is put to. In Potentatibus dextra (saith the Prophet.)

Psal. 10. 6.

2. And secondly, It is also the part of greatest cunning; as appeareth by the variety of the works, which it yieldeth by the Pen, the Penfil, the Needle, and Instruments of Musick. In intellectu manuum (saith the Psalmist, in the end of the next Psalm; and let my right hand forget her cunning.)

Psal. 78. 72.
& 137. 5.

This hand of God then, by his strength affordeth protection to the feebleness of the flock; and again by his skill affordeth direction to the simpleness of the flock. And these are the two substantial parts of all leading.

These twain (as two arms) did God appoint in the wilderness, to lead his people by. Afterward, over these twain did he yet set another, even the power and authority Regal, in place of the Head (as himself termeth it;) and to it, as supream, united the regiment of both. The consideration of which Power, I meddle not with (as being not within the compass of this Vers) but onely with the hands of regiments Ecclesiastical and Civil. Which (as the two Cherubims did the Ark) over-spread and preserve every estate. One (saith Jehosaphat) dispensing Res Jehova, the Lords business; the other dealing in negotio Regis, the affairs of estate. One (saith David) intending the worship of the Tribes; the other, the Thrones for Justice. One (saith Paul) being for us in re regis Gods, things pertaining to God; the other in re civilis, matters of this present life. The one Pro aris, the other Pro focis, as the very Heathen acknowledge.

Psal. 122. 4, 5.

1 Cor. 6. 3.

1. These two are the hands, necessary to the body, and necessary each to other. First, they be (both) hands; and the hands (we know) are pairs. Not Moses the hand, and Aaron the foot; but either, and each the hand. And as they be a pair of hands, so be they also a pair of brethren. Not Moses de primis, and Aaron de novissimis populi; not Moses the head, and Aaron the tail; not Moses a quis (as St. Jerome speaketh, out of the Two and twentieth of Isaiah) and Aaron a quasi quis; but, both of one parentage, both one mans children.

Isai. 23.

2. Being (both) hands, neither of them is superfluous; no more to be spared, then may the hands: But both are absolutely necessary; and a maimed and lame estate it is, where either is wanting. The Estate of Israel (in the Seventeenth of the Judges) without a Civil Governor, proved a very mass of confusion. The very same Estate (in the Second of Chronicles, chap. 15.) Sine sacerdote descende, no less out of frame. Miserable first, if they lack Joshua, and be as sheep wanting that Shepherd. And miserable again, if they lack Jesuu, and be as sheep wanting that Shepherd. Moses is needful, in the want of Water, to strike the rock for us, and to procure us supply of bodily relief. Aaron is no less; for he in like manner reacheth to every one food of another kinde (which we may worse be without) even the Bread of Life, and Water out of the Spiritual Rock, which is Christ Jesus. Moses we need, to see our forces led against Amaleck, for safeguard of that little we hold here in this life: And Aaron no less, to preserve our free-hold in everlasting life: For the great and mighty Koraxenotropes, the legions of our sins, the very forces of the Prince of darkness are overthrown by the Spiritual

Weaponis

Weapons of Aarons warfare. Moses may not be spared from sitting and deciding the causes which are brought before him. No more may Aaron, whose Urim giveth answer in doubts no less important; and who not onely with his Urim and Thummin, giveth counsel, but by his incense and sacrifice obtaineth good success for all our counsels. In a word, If Moses Rod be requisite to sting and devour the wicked; Aarons is also, to receive the good, and to make them to fructifie. If Moses hand want, with the Sword to make us a way: Aarons hand wants too, with a Key to give us an entrance. And thus much will I say for Aaron (for the Devil hath now left to dispute about Moses body, and bendeth all against him) that, the very first note of difference in all the Bible, to know Gods people by, is, that as Cain and his race begun at the City walls first, and let Religion (as it might) come after, any it skilled not what: So the posterity of Seth (the people of God) began at the Church (Et ceptum est invocari) at the worship of God and his Tabernacle; as the point of principal necessity in their accompt, and (as Christ reckoned it) Unum necessarium. And truly, if we be not Populus, a people, but Populus tuus, Gods people, we will so esteem it too. For as for Justice and Law and execution of them both, Taliter fecit omni populo, it is every where to be had, even among the very Heathen and Turks themselves. So is not Gods Truth and Religion and the way of righteousness. No: Nous in Judâ deus (saith the Prophet in the last Psalms) that is onely to be had in the Church, and Nontaliter fecit omni populo, he hath not dealt so with every people. Every people have not knowledge of his Laws. So that, if the Governor be not meely Pastor agrestis, a Rural Shepherd, such as are in the Fields, and the people of God, in his eyes, no better than Pecora campi; so that, if he keep them one from goring another with their Horns, and one from eating up the others Lock of Hey, all is well and no more to be cared for of Gallio. But, that he be like the great Shepherd, the good Shepherd, the Prince of Shepherds, who was Pastor animarum (as St. Peter calleth him) a Shepherd of Souls; to see also that they be in good plight, that they be led in the way of Truth. It will easily be yielded to, that per manum Mosis, is no full point, but needeth [and Aaron] to be joyned to it. Moses himself saw this, and therefore (in the fourth of Exodus) when he had divers times shifted off this sole leading; while God stood still upon Ecce mittam te; at last, when God came further and said, Ecce Aaron frater tuus, mittam eum tecum, that contented him, and then he undertook it; as knowing, these were like hands, maimed, the one without the other; but that, Moses and Aaron make a compleat Government.

3. And what should I say more? They be hands, and the body needeth them both: They be hands, and they need each other. Moses needeth Aaron: For, Moses hands are heavy, and need a stay: And Aaron it is, that keepeth them steady, by continual putting the people in remembrance, that they be subject to principalities; by winning that at their hands by his continual dropping his Word upon them, which Moses, for the hardness of their hearts, is fain to yield to. By strengthening mainly Moses, debita legalia, duties of Parliament and Common Law, by his Debita moralia, duties of Conscience and Divinity. And whatsoever action Moses doth imprison, Aaron imprisoneth all the thoughts any way accessory to the action. Which thoughts, if they may, run at liberty, the action will surely be bailed, or make an escape, and not be long kept in durance. And so many ways doth Aaron support and make both more easie, and more steady, the hands of Moses.

And Moses (for his part) is not behinde, but a most jealous preserver of Aarons honor and right every where. Every where milde, save in Aarons quarrel, and with those onely that murmured against Aaron, and said, He took too much upon him. Take but his Prayer for all (because I would end;) his Prayer made for Aaron by name (in the 33. Deut.) and these three points in it. Bless, O Lord, his substance; therefore he would never have heard, Ut quid perditio hac? That all is lost that is spent on Aarons head. Then, Accept the work of his hands; therefore he would never easily have excepted to, or with a hard construction skanned all the doings of Aaron. Last of all, Smite through the loyns of them that rise up against him; therefore he would never have strengthened the hand of his evil willers, or said (with Saul to Doeg) Turn thou and fall upon the Priests.

To conclude, Moses and Aaron (both) have enemies: As Aaron hath Corah and Dathan, that repine at him; so hath Moses (too) Jannes and Jambres, that would withstand him: And he that at one time disputes about the body of Aaron, may also hereafter (for he hath done it heretofore) dispute about the body of Moses. It is good therefore they be respective each to other: Aaron help Moses in his lot; and Moses, Aaron in his; that they stand in the gap one for another, that so their unity may be hand in hand, as the unity of Brethren, strong and hard to break, as the bars of a Palace.

The Lord, by whose Almighty power all Governments do stand, those especially wherein the people are led in the way of his Sanctuary; as he hath graciously begun to lead us in that way, so leave us not, till we have finished our course with joy. Knit the hearts of Moses and Aaron, that they may joyn lovingly: Teach their hands, and fingers of their hands, that they lead skilfully: Touch the hearts of the people, that they may be led willingly: That by means of this happy conduct, surely without error, and safely without danger we may lead and be led forward, till we come to the fruition of his promise, the expectation of our blessed Hope, even the eternal joys of his Celestial Kingdom, through Jesuu Christ our Lord. MARK Chap. XIV. Ver. IV, V, VI.

Erant autem quidam indigne ferentes intra semet-ipsos, & dicentes, Ut quid perditio ista unguenti facta est? &c.

Therefore some disdained among themselves, and said, To what end is this waste of oyntment?

For, it might have been sold for more than three hundred pence, and been given to the poor: And they grudged against her.

But Jesus said: Let her alone; why trouble ye her? She hath wrought a good work on me.

His action of waste, (which by some is brought, and by Christ our Saviour, traversed) was against a woman (saith St. Mark, the Verse before;) which woman (as St. John hath it, Chap. II. Vers. 2.) was Mary Magdalen; now a glorious Saint in Heaven, sometime, a grievous sinner upon Earth.

St. Augustine noteth, Of all those that sought to Christ, she was the onely sinner, that for sin onely, and for no bodily grief or malady at all sued and sought to him. Of whom being received to grace, and obtaining a quietus est for her many sins (a benefit inestimable, Et quod nemo scit, nisi acceperit, which they onely know, and none but they, that have received it) as, much was forgiven her, so, much she loved. And seeking by all means to express her multam dilectionem propter multam remissionem (as Christ saith, Verf. 8.) Luke 7. 47. δὴ ὅταν ἐρωτήσῃ; nothing she had, was too dear. And having a precious confection or oyntment of Nardus, the chief of all oyntments; and, in it of nardus, the chief of all Nardi; and in it too, not of the leaf, but (of the very choice part thereof, of) the Spike, or flower; both, for the making, true; and for the value, costly; that did she bestow. And that frankly: For she did not drop, but pour; not a dram or two, but, a whole pound; not reserving any, but breaking box and all: And that, not now alone, but three several times one after another.

Psal. 45. 7.
1 John 2. 20.
2 Cor. 2. 25.

This she did; and (as it may seem) the coherence fell out not amiss. This outward ointment and sweet odor, she bestowed on Christ, for the oil of gladness; for the spiritual anointing (as St. John;) and the comfortable favor of his knowledge (as St. Paul calls it) he bestowed on her.

This as it was well done, so was it well taken of Christ; and so should have been, of all present, but for Judas (saith St. John.) Who, liking better odorem lucri ex re qualibet, than any sent in the Apothecaries shop, seeing that spent on Christs head, that he wished should have come into his purse; repined at it. But that, so cunningly, in so good words, with so colourable a motion, (1. That it was a needless expence, indeed a waste: 2. That it might have been bestowed much better to the relief of many poor people;) as that he drew the Disciples (some of them) to favor the motion, and to dislike of Mary Magdalen and her doing. So that, both they and he joyned in one Bill: But he, of a wretched covetous minde; they, of a simple plain intent and purpose, thinking, all that was well spoken, had been well meant.

Which action of theirs, for that it was brought, Not onely against her that bestowed it, but even, against Christ also that admitted it, though not so directly, (as it were, against her, with Ut quid perditio? against him, with Ut quid permissio?) For that also, it might be a dangerous precedent in ages to come, if nothing were said to it; and shut all boxes, and bar all ointments for ever: Our Saviour himself taketh on him to plead her cause; not onely excusing it (in Sinite illam) as no waste, but also commending it (in bonum opus) as a good work: That the ointment was not so pleasant to his sense, as her thankfulness acceptable to his Spirit: That the ointment, which then filled the house with the sent, should fill the whole world with the report of it; and as far and wide as the Gospel was preached, so far and wide should this act be remembered, as well for her commendation that did it, as for our imitation that should hear of it.

We see both the occasion and sum of these words read. Which may aptly be said to contain in them a disputation or plea about Mary Magdalens act, whether it were well done, or no: Whereof there are two principal parts; Judas, with some other ad oppositum against it; to have Mary Magdalen reformed, and her box converted to better uses. Christ for it, and against them: Sinite, that he would have it stand, yea, that he would have it acknowledged for that it was Bonum opus.

The Division.

I.

In the intreating whereof, these three points I purpose. First, Of Judas his motion; and in it, first, The speech it self, Ut quid perditio, &c? Secondly, The Speaker, some of them; thirdly, The minde or affection, though much.

II.

Secondly, Of Christs Apology: And in it, 1. That it is sufferable: 2. That it is commendable: 3. The reason of both, in me; for that on him.

III.

Last of all, Laying both together; (the former, That it is a good work; the latter, That yet grudged at;) That good actions oft-times meet with evil constructions; therefore, first, though we do well, yet we shall be evil spoken of; and again, secondly, though we be evil spoken of, yet we must proceed to do well. The use, we shall make, is (briefly) Ex factis facienda discre, by report of that which hath been done heretofore, to learn what to do in like case hereafter. Whereof, that I may speak, &c.

I.
Judas motion.
1. The speech.
Ut quid perditio.

Of the tongue, the Psalmist saith, it is the best member we have, (Psal. 108. 1.) and S. James (Chap. 3. 6.) it is the worst, and that it marreth all the rest. The nature of the tongue (thus being both good and bad) maketh, that our speech is of the same complexion, Good and bad likewise. Whereof this speech, (here) is a pregnant example, Good in substance, as I shall shew presently: Evil, in circumstance (as we shall afterward see) as neither well meant, nor well applied.

In the speech, I commend two good things: 1. The Abuse noted, Ut quid, &c. 2. The Use set down, Potuit, &c. Not only the Defect; Not thus wasted: but the Provision how; Turned into many, and distributed to the poor.

Rom. 6. 21.

Luke 13. 8.

We begin with the first: Ut quid perditio, &c? Surely a good speech, and of good use, and to be retained. Religion and Reason (both) teach us, In all things, to regard both Quid, and Ut Quid: No less to what end, we do, than what we do: And both of them censure, Not only what is done to an evil end, wickedly; but, what is done to no end: vainly, Quem fructum, what fruit? (saith S. Paul) A good question: and, if it have none, Ut quid terram occupas, why troublest it the ground? (saith Christ) So that Religion alloweth not waste; censureth idleness: and in all things calleth us to our Ut quid hoc?

And this, as in all things (in wast of time, waste words, addle questions:) so yet chiefly, in that which we call Bonum vile. The very goodness of which things is, in their use; and they, no longer good, than they have an use, which if they lose, they cease to be good. So that in them, not only those things that are mispent upon wicked uses; but, even those also that are idly spent to no use, they are lost, lavished, and no good cometh of them. And therefore in them, Ut quid perditio, indeed? is well said. This they learned of Christ himself: who in the gathering of the broken meat, gave charge ut ne quid perdat, that no wast should be be made. Indeed, Ut quid perditio ulla ? whereto, either this or any waste at all ? So that, Religion is an enemy to riot ; and good husbandry is good Divinity.

It is Gods will, that, of our goods Iustitia condus sit, Justice should be Purveyor ; and they rightly gotten : Temperantia promus ; Temperance the Steward ; and they not wastfully spent. Consequently, Neither waste, in buying : (but as Christ) ὅν ᾠχεῖται ἡ χροιά (Not ὅν ᾠχεῖται, but ὅν ᾠχεῖται ; Not, whereof we may have use, but, whereof we have need, and cannot be without it.)

Neither waste in spending : Ὁμολογία a dispensation, not a dissipation ; a laying forth, not δυσκοπία, a casting away ; a wary sowing, not a heedless scattering ; and a sowing χρῆσις ἡ δολανή, by handfuls, not by basketfuls (as the Heathen man well said.)

Neither waste in giving ; Not, making χάριτας πορνᾶς, the Graces (which be Virgins) not prostituting them and making them common ; but (as the apostles rule is) καθὼς ἡ χροιά ἔχει as need shall require. So that, to all, to needless laying out, to superfluous expence, to unnecessary largeness, Ut quid perditio ? may be said. The reason whereof is well set down : That, if we waste it in need's expences, we shall not have enough for necessary charges : if we lavish out in wasting, we shall leave but little for well doing. Whereof, our times do yield plentiful testimony ; In which, Nabals waste ; which being a subject, makes a feast like a King ; the Assyrians waste, every mean person, in apparel like a young Prince ; Esau waste, in carrying a retinue of four hundred at his heels ; Shallums waste, in inclosing our selves in cedar, and lifting up our gate on high : (Once for all, I protest, and desire it may be graciously received, I do not, so much as in thought, once aim at the estate of the Highest, whose glory I wish to match, yea, to surpass Solomon in all his royalty : but) This riotous mis-spending, where no need is, hath eaten up our Christian bestowing, where need is. Let's waste we must have, if we will have more good works. It is truly called perditio : It is the loss and destruction of all our good deeds ; and I pray God, it be not also, of our reward for them.

Ut quid perditio, is a fault : But, ut quid perditio hac, is a greater. For [hac] wanteth not his emphasis ; but is, as if he should say : If the sum had been little, or the value small, it might have been born : if twenty or thirty pence, it might have been winked : But, if it come once into the hundreds ; so great a sum, so much ; verily, it may not, it ought not to be suffered.

Thus much for Perditio, the idle waste, the abuse. Now followeth Judas plot, the use he wisheth it put too, For first, he maketh a perfect valuation and estimate of what it would rise to ; (and it may seem strange how he should be so skilfull an Auditor of the price of rich oynments ; But, he hit it well ; for, so (saith Plinie) the best Nardus was so worth : And that is a material point. For the greater the sum, the more colour of complaint ; Ut quid perditio ulla ; but specially, Ut quid perditio hac unguenti, of so rich an oynment ? Then, from his audit, he commeth to his Motion, Potuit vendi, &c. Sale to be made, the money to be divided, and the poor to be relieved. This is his application : and this second is better than the former. Indeed, Ut quid perditio, may be the speech of a Niggard : But this second that followeth, cannot but proceed from a liberal mind, Potuit vendi, &c. In that he speaketh not to have it spared ; but to have it converted to better uses. And, this is a blessed conjunction, when honest sparing, and charitable relieving ; when frugality and liberality go together. Such is this Motion : whereto no man can take exception. Naturally, our hearts yern, and we have an inward compassion, at the misery of our brethren : and, Gods Law willeth not to hide our selves from our own flesh, but, when we have served our need, to give to the poor.

The motion then, is both frugal and charitable : and besides, if we look more narrowly into it, there appeareth great zeal in it. All waste things, he wisheth, the poor had. Yea, it seemeth, he reckoneth it waste, that the poor is not the better for : that, to be mispent, that might be better spent, and is not. And very exactly driveth to this point : That our goods may go, not, to some end ; not to some good end ; but to the very best end of all, The relief of the poor. Sure, when I consider the sobriety, bounty, zeal of the speech, I think, many wise heads could not in so few words, have contrived a better or more pithy motion : That that which is otherwise lavished upon one, may be employed to the benefit of many : that these so many hundreds may be bestowed rather in nourishment, than in ointment ; rather on necessary relief, than upon needless delight : rather on a continual good, than on a transitory smell : rather, that many hungry bellies filled, than that one head anointed. Sure, howsoever it was meant, or applied, the speech (in it self considered) is to very good purpose : even Judas speech ; without Judas application.

We be now to enquire, of the person, by whom ; and after of the intent, wherewith it was spoken.

We are naturally carried, of a good speech to enquire the author : partly, in an honest inclination (as Salomon saith) to kiss the lips of him that answereth upright words : Partly, because it is a matter of importance, not only to weigh quid dicatur, but also quis dicat. ἐὼς πῶς ἰδοὺ ὁ ποιῶν τὸ λόγον ἐστὶν ὁ λόγος. Many times, we be more perswaded with the mind of the speaker, than with the body of the speech ; and their Positions move not so much, as do their Dispositions. It is very material, in all (and so, in this) to ask, quis hic loquitur ? For, who can choose, but speak all good of the speech ? Surely, if we had not been told otherwise, Zelota vocem, we must needs have thought it, to have been Simon Zelotes. Zelota vocem putas, Iscariota est : One would imagine, it was Simon the Zealous : It is not so, it was Judas the covetous. Some of them (saith St. Mark :) Of his Disciples (saith St. Mathew :) and namely Judas (saith St. John) who first stood up, and took his exception ; and, after him, some others. So that, it was Judas ; and, by his perswasion, Some besides : For, if he had not stirred, they would have taken it well enough : Such is the danger of sinister speeches. Let us begin with Judas.

And here first we begin somewhat to suspect: that it cometh from Judas. Judas, it is well known what he was. At that very instant, that this Ut quid was in his mouth, his fingers were in Christ's coffers, and one might have said it to him, Ut quid, &c. And, for all he spake against waste, he wasted and made hock of his Masters goods: And a little after, he might have been charged, with a worse matter: And yet, he prefers motions. Christ telleth us, what he was (John 17. 12.) Filius perditionis: and this term maereth all; that the child of perdition should find fault with perdition. The case is like, when they that have wasted many pounds, complaine of that peny waste which is done on Christ's body, the Church. Or, when they, that in their whole dealings (all the world sees) are un-reformed, seriously consult, how to reform the Church. When they, that do no good with their own, devise what good may be done with Mary Magdalens: they, that have spent and sold and consumed themselves, and never in their whole lives shewed any regard of the poor; when they talk of charitable uses, O dolor! (saith Augustine) Quis tulerit? (saith the Poet.) Ut quid perditio? doth but evil fit their mouthes. God help us, when Judas must reform Mary Magdalen.

Mark. 2. 18.

This, is a grief: would, this alone. But, a greater grief it is to see, how he is matched in this complaint: That, in this murmuring, some other; divers well disposed and of the better sort of Christ's Disciples joyn with him, and take part against Mary Magdalen, who, rather carried with the speech, than heeding the Speaker, were drawn into the society of the same repining. And this (sure) is Scandalum magnum, when evil counsel meeteth with easie belief, and subtilty findeth credulity. When the Pharisees can perswade John's Disciples to muster with them, and say, Why do we and John's Disciples fast? whom you cannot but say, are good men, whatsoever you think of us. When Judas can say: Why do I, and Christ's own Disciples reprove this? So it is with us; Not, to see homines perditos queri de perditione, them speak of waste, that have wasted themselves; (for, that might be digested;) but, to see grave and good men erre the same error, and draw in the same line with them. But (no doubt) that which carried these here, leadeth them too, Pretences: that, which was able to deceive Christ's Disciples, deceiveth them too. And this is the difference: That the Disciples, in a good meaning, went with him; because they saw, he said well: But Judas, upon a greedy covetous mind, to have his own turn served. For, cui bono? If it had come to the poor, who should have had the distribution? It was his office: so that it may be, he spake for himself. Which did plainly appear by the issue. For, upon better information given by Christ, the Disciples were answered, and remained content. But Judas grew enraged, and fell from evil to worse; from covetise, to malice; from sacriledg, to treason: Even to this dangerous resolution, Vendere nardum, (or if not) Vendere Christum; and to subvert Him, that he might not spoile. For all the world, as some in our time, that sought help of authority, while they had hope, that way to prevail: but, when that came not; since, begin to hold, they will and may do it, without stay for authority; and seek to subvert the State, they cannot form to their phantasie. My hope is, and so is my prayer; That those which have hitherto been carried with their plots and pretences, now they be informed and see what the truth is, may do (as the Disciples) leave Judas in his murmuring, and let Mary Magdalen be quiet.

I.
Gen. 27. 22.

That which we learn of this part, is: 1. From Judas; That a good speech may drop out of an evil mouth. As (sure) setting aside that the hands be Esaus's; the voice might become Jacob well enough. This instruction we have from Judas; It was Gods will, that even he should preach, and we learn some good lessons by him, And, this we may learn: That, No waste is to be made: And if we learn it, even he shall co-operate to our good. And, as from him we have this speech for our Oeconomy; so, from Caiphas (as bad as he) we have another full as good, for our Policy. That speech (which St. Bernard can never enough commend:) Melius est ut pereat unus quam unitas. Both evil meant (I grant:) but, both well spoken, where their place is. So it pleaseth God, that we should hear His wisdom justified (not only out of the mouth, of her own children, but) even out of the mouthes of the children of folly. That he might condemn evil things, even by evil men, and evil men non ex ore suo, not from His own, but from their own mouthes; and so their condemnation be just.

Prov. 14. 15.

From the Disciples too easie belief, we learn Credit omni verbo, not to trust phrases and oyled speeches too fast: Never, by the list, to conclude of the cloath. Seeing, not only Vasa electionis, but fili perditionis, say well. But, if we hear much ado about Ut quid perditio, to stay and think; May not this be Judas that speaketh now, as once it was? And if it be, to suspect, when he speaks well. Of this assuring our selves (what St. Paul telleth us of sadly;) that not only Mary Magdalen shall be reformed, and her ointment maligned, and the poor opposed, but even Christ Himself preached, obientu, under pretence. Therefore, it standeth us in hand, to look to the Disposition, as well as the Position; and not to run headlong, to say straight Ut quid, as fast as they. So much for the Speaker.

Phil. 1. 18.

The affection wherewith it was spoken:
indigne scentes, & infra se dicentes.

With the Person by whom, we propound the affection, wherewith it is spoken. For, as the Person is a presumption: So, if this can be had, it maketh a full evidence. And that is in these words, εὐχαριστοῖς ἐν αὐτοῖς, that he thought much with himself.

John 12. 6.

The speech, for the poor (if it be kindly) doth naturally come from the compassion of Charity, and not from the grudging of a greedy desire; as this is said to do. And so should we have conceived of this; that, from the care of the poor (no doubt:) but that, the Spirit of God maketh a window in his breast, and lets us see the secrets of his heart; and telleth us, it was not the care of the poor; Non, quia pernebat ad eum de pauperibus, but, quia fur erat, because he bare the bagge, and took order, it should never be over heavy, but that he might well bear it; and thought all too much that went beside it.

Which is a point of great use to be understood. It is one of the mysteries of iniquity, that ever there be two Quia's belonging to bad purposes (as S. Mark saith:) One, ἐν αὐτοῖς within, in heart: the other, ἔξωθεν without, without, in speech. Another quia, they think in their hearts; and another, they speak in our ears, which is the non quia. 1. The one, a true cause inwardly intended: 2. The other, onely a colour, outwardly pretended. As, in this: the true quia (ἐν εἰσότητι) a wretched humour to provide for himself: The pretended quia; (ἀνθρώποις) a charitable affection to provide for the poor. All fins have so. Mundus sequitur eum, the true cause (ἐν εἰσότητι); but, they told another quia; (ἀνθρώποις) Venient Romani, the safety of the State. Herod would learn where he might find Christ; the cause (indeed) to murder him; the cause (in shew) to worship him.

John 12.19.
John 11.48.
Mat. 2. 6, 8.

It is no new thing but common and usual, in all exceptions to Religion, the true cause is ἀγαθήννοις, a thinking all too much; a thinking, all is perditio, all lost that cometh not to us, that we gain not by. We see, it was the true reason, the men of Sichem made among themselves, why they would become of Jacobs Religion, and be circumcised: Nonne omnia quia habent, nostra erunt? Shall not all they have be ours? It was the very reason, whereby Haman went about to perswade Ahasuerus to suppress the Jews Religion: Let it be done, and I will weigh so many thousands to the Kings coffers. And in the New Testament, it was the very reason, Demetrius there useth: O, crie for Diana, Magnifie her, Quia inde nobis erit acquisitio, we shall be all gainers by it. God knows this is the true cause, and the Analogue of Religion to many: It was so to Judas: and, God grant, the like be not found in Israel.

Gen. 34. 34.
Ester 3. 9.
Acts 19. 25.

Now though this be the true, yet this in no wise must come into ἀνθρώποις, and be spoken. If Judas had dealt plainly, he should thus have framed his speech: Ut quid perditio: potuit vendi & missi in erumenam meam: but, that had been too harsh; for, that had been plain sacrifice: And, of Sacrilege, S. Paul seems to say, Rom. 2. 22. it is (if not worse, yet) as bad as Idolatry: Thou that puldest down Idols, committest thou sacrifice? As if he held, as good a false Religion, as a spoiling Religion. Therefore, that must be kept ἐν εἰσότητι and not come into ἀνθρώποις, but it must be shrowded; as indeed, the Heathen man said, Μόρον δεινὰν ἀποφάσεις ἢ ἀνομήν, Bad attempts need onely an handsome pretence: for, with the rest they can dispense with God, and His Word, and fear, and conscience and all: and, so a pretence had, it is all they desire.

Discern.
Rom. 2. 22.

Now, no pretence more fit (to make them perfect Maskers) than S. Pauls vizor ὑποπόρις δοκίμας; and S. Peters cloke ἐγκαλυμμα; the vizor of godliness, and the cloke of Religion. And, such was Judas here; a charitable, carefull provision for the relief of the poor. Whom though (the Holy Ghost saith expressly) he cared not for one jot, yet maketh he them his talking-horse; and Pauperibus is the point: that, is it, he seeketh for, and (God knoweth) nothing else.

2 Tim. 3. 5.
John 12. 6.

This his sacrilegious wicked humour he covereth under zeal of the poor. And so, to hide one fault, committeth two. First, Sacrilege; then, hypocrisie.

And, it is no new thing under the Sun (as Solomon tells us) to gild a potsherd with gold-foile, (that is) to over-lay a false heart, with zealous lips. Absoloms vow was the mask for his conspiracy against David. Jezabels fast, her vizor, for the oppressing of Naboth. And here, we have an invective against waste, a supplication for the poor, in Judas mouth, and yet seven abominations in his heart.

Prov. 26. 23.
2 Sam. 15. 7.
1 Kin. 21. 9.
Prov. 26. 25;

Is it not heaviness unto death, to consider this? Well said the Wiseman: O wicked abomination, whence art thou come to cover the earth with deceit?

But more need had we to beware, than complain. And indeed, all we learn from this point, is Novisse & Odisse, to know and avoid. To know, such there be, as cover sacrifice with zeal; and with good uses, cover no good intents. To know them and to avoid them. And, the better to do that, to mark the end of him, that here used it, and see, what became of him: How, from this sin, by Gods just judgement, he fell to perditio; and from it (after) to make away himself. To whom, in that case, truly might have been said, Ut quid perditio, indeed: But this was his end in this life, and in the other, he hath his portion with hypocrites, and they, with him, in the lake of fire and brimstone.

Mat. 24. 51.

So much for the 1 Speech it self; 2. For the Speaker; and, in him, both his person, 3 And his intent.

Now, as Justice would, let us hear alteram partem. These are shrewd presumptions: yet let us not resolve, but stay, till Christ have said; And if he mislike it too, Sell it and spare not.

II.
CHRISTS
Apologie.

But Jesus, &c. There was (saith Saint Gregory) no error of the Disciples, presente Magistro, while Christ was present with them, but it was Salutaris error, quia totius Mundi sustulit errorem, a wholesome and profitable error, for it rid the world of an error for ever after. We may well apply it to this. We should have been of Judas minde; and, that that carried the Disciples, have gone for currant, had not our Saviour Christ over-ruled the case, and stayed the sale of Mary Magdalens ointment; and in staying it, said enough to stop their mouths for ever, that make the like motions.

Which to do the more firmly, albeit Christ might well have excepted to Judas person, as unfit: (what, the son of perdition, talk of perdition?) Or laid open his intent, as wicked and execrable (Ut quid hoc sacrilegium? Ut quid hac hypocrisis?) Yet, the more sufficiently to do it, He waves both, and joyns issue upon the very point it self; admitting, all had been simply and honestly both said and meant.

Wherein, He keepeth this order: First, propoundeth that, what was done, it was sufferable, and the not to be troubled for it: Sinite illam, &c. Secondly, it was a good work: and therefore she not only to be excused, but to be commended, for it. Thirdly, the reason and warrant of both, (In me) for that, it was done upon Him: On whom, nothing that is bestowed can be said to be lost, but must and ought to be said, to be well bestowed. So that, there is a full answer to every point of Judas bill; Ut quid for Ut quid:
Hi

Ut quid molestia hac? for Ut quid perditio? Potuit vendi, is answered with Sinite, let alone: Perditio, with bonum opus: and pauperibus, with In Me, who is of more value than many poor; after whom it may well become the poor to be served.

It is sufficient.
Sinite illam.

To begin then, with the first. Sinite illam (saith Christ) Not, as they hoped, sistite illam, Stay her, indeed it is but a waste work she is about: but Sinite illam, let her alone, the work is good, suffer her to proceed. His meaning is: Such acts as this was, are to be let alone, and they, that so disposed, not to be troubled. Sure, He foresaw, many would be meddling; many Ut quid's would be framed, and many Potuit's devised, and much business be made, about Mary Magdalene's ointment, and about works of that nature: That every other while, some Motions, Petitions, Plots would be framed about the altering of it. To this day they will not let her alone, but disquiet her still. He hath therefore left in his Gospel these words, as a fit answer, to stay their hands and stop their mouths, for ever: Sinite illam, let them be; suffer them to remain: Ut quid molestia hac? a meet reply to Ut quid perditio hac? to the worlds end.

And this request (to my poor conceit) is very reasonable: (If in this kind, any thing may be allowed for reasonable. It is not, Immitamini illam; or, adjuvate illam: Do ye the like, contribute to her charge; further and help her, what you may; (which yet, He would have us:) That, would Judas never be got to: If Christ had wished him to like cost, what ado then would there have been? But this: do but let her alone. If you will not further, yet hinder her not; trouble her not. That she hath spent, of her ability she hath done it, she hath not had of you, one penny toward her three hundred; nor she asketh you none. Seeing you are at no cost, why should it grieve you? If you like not to follow her, yet let her alone.

Acts 9. 4.

2 Cor. 8. 23.

And, may not the same in like reason be said and entreated, at this day? That what our Fathers and Elders in the Christian Faith bounteously employed on Christ; what they (I say) have that way dedicated, if we will not add to it and imitate them, yet we will let it alone, and not trouble them; and at least be not with Judas, if we like not or list not to be with Mary Magdalene. (On Christ, it is, I dare boldly say; and if I say it, I shall have all the ancient Fathers on my side, and if I say it, St. Paul will warrant me; who in (1 Cor. 12. 12.) expressly calleth the Church Christ's Body: And he might well do it, the first speech, Christ ever spake to him, himself calleth the Church, Me (the word he here useth.) On Christ, it is spent, any part of Christ, be His glory more then other; and, on that Office and calling of the Church, which St. Paul (who best knew the dignity of it) calleth the glory of Christ. This (I say) under correction, is, as me thinketh, not unreasonable; that seeing, what superstition hath defiled, is removed and gone; touching that which is remaining, it be said, Sinite illam.

It is commendable.
Bonum opus operata est.

From this first degree of Sinite, our Saviour Christ ascendeth to a higher: and lest we should mistake as if He bare with her good mind and meaning, rather than allowed the work; he tells us, the very work it self is good: and so pleads and justifies it, not as sufferable only, but as commendable. For, that is the meaning of bonum opus operata est.

Wherein, first He answereth the principal reason, Perditio est. You may sell, (saith Judas) it is but waste: You must let it alone, (saith Christ) it is bonum opus. So that, as His former (of Sinite) crossed the Motion; So this (of bonum opus) overthroweth the Reason, perditio.

In which our Saviour Christ looseth the knot, and teacheth us a point: to enquire first, Ecquid perditio, whether it be a waste? before we come to Ut quid, to what end is it? If it be waste, it is well and truly said: but, this (He pleadeth) is not any: unless (which God forbid) good works be waste, with us. And therefore joyneth issue upon the word hac: that is, that is done upon Him, is no waste, at all, as Judas termeth it; but (as he christeneth it by a new name) bonum opus. Therefore, his reproof is nothing, sanguinem cadens in materiam indebitam, as lighting upon an unmeet matter, which deserveth no reproof, but rather commendation.

Indeed if Judas, sometime before, had said it to Mary Magdalene, in the dayes of her former vanity, when she wasted thus much and (paradventure) many penny more on her riot and wantonness; then (indeed) Ut quid perditio hac? had hit right. But, now it was not on her self, but on Christ's head, it is out of season. As, if our age (now) would apply to Nabals riotous feasts; to the Assyrians superfluous suits; to Esaus superfluous retinue; to the endless building, Jeremie findeth fault with; to our manifold idle excesses, many wayes; to every and each of these, an Ut quid perditio? there now, it were right: there indeed were the true place of Ut quid perditio? But, this is (among many) a strong illusion of these days: that whereas there are abroad in the world, so many true wastes; so much, in ointments, and perfumes, upon our selves; so many hundred denarii (indeed, no man can tell, what) daily lavished; we can neither see (our selves) nor patiently hear of others, ut quid perditiones ha? Here, all is well, all is well bestowed. Neither Ut quid, nor potuit dari pauperibus; the poor, never comes in our head. No where, but in Christ ought is amiss. Only, in that that is meant to Him, and spent on him, there comes out our Ut quid, there comes the poor into our mind. No way, to provide for them, but by sale of Christ's ointment. That, is the waste: and, none but that: and, none but that is maligned. We are perfect auditors, we can exactly reckon, how many hundreds Christ wasteth: but who keepeth any account of his own? To our selves too much is too little: To Him, too little is too much. And three hundred pence, that way bestowed, is a greater eye-fore than three hundred pounds (I dare be bold to say) to not so good uses.

Thus it is: and, it is to be lamented, that thus it is. But Christ teacheth us better, if we will learn of Him, and let Judas go, that we may better bestow our Ut quid any where, than upon upon him. And we shall find it true: The day will come, when that only, that goeth to him, shall be found to be no perditio; and all else perditio indeed, whatsoever, or upon whatsoever. To be lost indeed, and no fruit to come of it. That, which is sown in the flesh, to be lost in corruption; that, which on Gal. 6. 8. the belly, is seed-bearing; that, which on the back, in rags; that which on building, in rubbish; that, which to our heirs, in prodigality, riot and excess: And that, which is In Me, shall prove no perditio, waste, loss, or lavish, but bonum opus, a good deed; to be rewarded with a blessed remembrance on earth, and with a Crown of glory, in the Kingdom everlasting.

Thus (you see) Judas is answered, and the work quit from the name of perditio. So far from Perditio, that it is Bonum opus. A good work, indeed; as, proceeding from a good mind, possessed with the virtue of virtues, thankfulness. For, mercy bestowed on Him, who only is good, and goodness it self, who here alloweth it for good; causeth it to be registered in His Gospels, for good; in the day of Judgment shall pronounce it, good: Rewardeth it for good, in this World, with a good name; in that to come, with all the good of his Kingdom, where no good is wanting.

The third remaineth [Upon me] wherein (properly) is meant His natural body of flesh, which should not alway be with us. But they, of whom we have learned to interpret the Scripture (in a manner, all) extend it to his Mystical body too: and (as they think) by good consequence. That seeing He gave His natural body to be bought and sold, rent and torn, crucified and slain for his body mystical; His body mystical is (certainly) dearer to him, and better He loveth it: And then, if he will accept that, is done to the less, and make it Bonum opus; He will much more, that, which is done to the more beloved; and it shall never go for less: Never did I am sure. The Scriptures record (as a good work) that that was laid down at the Apostles feet, no less than this that was laid upon Christs own head: And, in them, Ananias a Church-robber, and Judas a Christ-robber, both, in one case. Satan is said to have filled both their hearts in that act: And like evil end came to both: And both are good remembrances for them, that seek and say, as they did. Yea, which would not be content to detain a part (Ananias and Judas went no farther:) but would seize of all gladly, if a Gracious Lady did not say, Sinise. AAs 5.

To conclude: It is St. Augustine (and, so say all the rest:) Tu intellige & de Ecclesiâ, Quia qui aliquid de Ecclesiâ praeatur Judae perditio comparatur: Understand this of the Church, and spare not: For he that taketh any thing (I say, any thing) from it, is in Judas case: For the sin, certainly; for the punishment, as it pleaseth God. Luke 22. 3. AAs 5. 3.

Now, we know what is meant by In Me, it is no waste Word. We will consider it (first) as a reason of the two former: and then, as a special answer to that, of the poor.

It answereth Ut quid: To what end? Why, In me, to me, and for my sake.

It answereth Perditio: In Me, why, it is spent on Christ, on Me; on whom nothing that is spent, is mispent.

It yieldeth a reason of Sinise: spare her; if not her, yet spare Me, trouble Me not. Ye cannot scrape off the ointment, but with My trouble.

And a reason of Bonum opus est: For, His [In Me] is warrant sufficient, why the work is to be reckoned good. Yea, in saying, it is not only good done, but done to Him, He giveth it a dignity, and lifteth up this work above.

But especially, it answereth the weight of Judas reason (Pauperibus, the Poor.) Our Saviour Christ plainly sheweth, that Judas is mistaken, and draweth a diameter, and maketh opposition between devotion toward CHRIST, and Alms to the poor. Tabitha was good to the poor: Mary Magdalen, to CHRIST. Must we put Mary Magdalen to death, to raise Tabitha again? and is there no other way? Yes indeed: Sinise illam (saith CHRIST, in this verse) let this stand: and yet, do those good too, Date elemosynam (in the next.) There be other means to provide for the poor, than by sale of Christs ointment: And we are not, in pretence of them, to omit this or any office or duty unto Christ. Ve. 6. 7.

Pauperibus, is not the only good work: this, is also. And, of the two, if any, to be preferred, it is In Me: He (certainly) to be served first. To which work, not only those of wealth (Mary Magdalen with her three hundred pence;) but, even poor and all (the poor widow with her mites) is bound, as we see: Even, to add something even to the offerings of GOD: And, if not, with Nardus, yet with oyle to anoint his head, as himself requireth. This, I say: if both could not stand. But, thanks be to God, there be ways, they may both stand; and not one fall, that the other may rise. Malachi telleth us a way; and it is a special one: to do as this virtuous woman here, Inferre in Apothecas meas, bring in to mine (that is, My Churches) treasures, and I will break the windows of heaven and send you such plenty, as you and the poor (both) shall eat and have enough, and yet leave in abundance. So that (we see) the next and kindest way, to have Judas complaint redressed, is, to speak and labour, that Mary Magdalens example may be followed. Mal. 3. 10.

Secondly, by In Me, it plainly appeareth, how Christ standeth affected to works of this kind, For, permitting them; standing for them; defending and commending them, He sheweth plainly, He will be content with such as it is. For albeit He were the very pattern of true frugality, and an enemy to all excess, yet this service (chargeable as it was) he well alloweth of. Shewing us this: that as He is Christus Parris, anointed by GOD His Father (quem unxit Dominus, AAs 10) so also He will be Christus noster (and that, passively) anointed by us (Quem unxit Maria, John 11.) That, as here He commendeth Mary Magdalen, for the supply of it: So (in Luke 7.) He giveth Simon an item (oleo capis) for being defective in this duty. AAs 10. 38. John 11. 2. Luke 7. 46.

I would gladly ask this question: If the ointment may be sold (as Judas saith) and bought lawfully; and they that buy, may lawfully use; if they may use it, why may not Christ? Num solis stultis apes mellificant, mellificant, do Bees make honey, and Nardus bear ointment for wicked men only? May any that payes for it, and may not Christ? Is He only, of all other, uncapable or unworthy?

If it be, because it is more than needs; Let that be a reason of all. Let the law hold us, as well as Him. But, if no man, but allows himself a more liberal diet and proportion of port, than in strict terms is needfull, for all the poor; why should we bind Christ alone to that rule? Except we mean to go further with Him; and not only except to Maries ointment, but even to Simons featt alio: Ut quid unguentum hoc? then. Ut quid convivium hoc, too? seeing a smaller repast might serve, and the rest be given to the poor. So that, His allowance shall be just as much, and no more than will serve to hold life and soul together. But, as He, without any barr to Ut quid, alloweth us, not only indumenta for nakedness, but ornamenta for comeliness; not only alimenta for emptiness, but oblectamenta for daintiness: So good reason it is, we think not much of his Nardus, and tye Him only to those rules, from which our selves plead exemption.

I demand again, if ointment might be spent on Aarons head, under the Law; seeing a greater than Aaron is here, why not on His too? I find, that neither under the Law, He liked of their motion, What should the Temple do with Cedar? neither, under the Gospel, of theirs, What should Christs head do, with Nardus? But that, to his praise he is recorded in the Old Testament, that said; Shall I dwell in my seeled house, and the Ark of God remain under Goats-skins? And she, in the New, that thought not her best ointment too good for Christs head, Surely, they, in Egypt, had their service of God, it may be in a barn, or in some corner of an house. Yet when Moses moved a costly Tabernacle, no man was found that once said, Our Fathers served God well enough, without one, Ut quid perditio hac? After that, many Judges, and Prophets, and righteous men were well, when they might worship before the Arke: yet, when Solomon moved a stately Temple, never any was found that would grudge and say, Why the Arke is enough; I pray God, we serve God no worse than they, that knew nothing but a Tent; Ut quid perditio hac? Only, in the days of the Gospel (which, of all other, least should) there steps up Judas, and dareth to say that against Christs Church, that no man durst ever, either against Moses Tent, or Solomons Temple.

And if Christ had taken it well, or passed it in silence, or said Sinite illam, suffer Judas motion to take place; we might have had some shew. But seeing He saith Molestus est, to Judas; Sinite illam, suffer Mary to go forward; and not that only but, Bonum opus, too: why should any, after Judas, be thought worth the answering.

Surely, as the Gospel (in this duty) hath, and so ought to exceed the Law; So, in the Gospel, we here and our Country above all other. I will but say with Chrysostome Appendo Christum ô homo: do but construe these two words [In Me] aright: Poize and prize Who it is; Et sufficit. It is Christ Jesus: Who hath not spared to anoint us with his own blood; and our souls, with all the comforts and graces of His Holy Spirit. If towards us, neither blood nor life were too dear, on His part; shall, on ours, any Nardus be too dear, or any cost too much, that is on Him bestowed?

Perhaps, our particular will more move us. It is Christ, that created for us Nard and all other delights whatsoever, either for use and necessity, we have; or, for fruition and pleasure, we enjoy. It is He, that hath enriched us, that we be able to bestow it, by this long prosperity, plenty and peace, as no other Kingdom under Heaven: Is there any good mind can think, that this is an indignity? that He is not worthy, hath not deserved, and double deserved this, and ten times more at our hands?

An extraordinary conceit is entred into the World (by a new found gloss) to make whatsoever we like not, or list not to do our selves, extraordinary: and so some deem of this, as extraordinary, and whereof no example is to be made. (No ancient Writer is of that mind; but that, for us it was written; and that, Vade tu & fac similiter, may be written upon her box) But, be it so. Why may not I wish on our parts, Let us be extraordinary? For, God hath not dealt ordinarily with us of this Land: He hath not been to us, a Wilderness or a barren Land: but hath (even our enemies being Judges) been extraordinary in his goodness towards us all. And sure, in us, ordinary common thankfulness is not enough. Shall I set my self to recount His benefits? An easie matter to find entrance; but when then should I make an end? In one, I will abridge them all. We speak of ointment: Verily, Christ hath anointed over us, and given us a most Gracious Sovereign, by whose happy and blessed reign, we long have (and longer may we, He grant) enjoyed both the inward and outward anointing: the inward, the holy and heavenly comfort of Gods truth, and true oyle of gladness, the outward, of earthly plenty and delight, which Nard or any rich confection may afford; and (in a word) whatsoever happiness can fall to any Nation under heaven. From the holy oyle of whose anointing (as the dew of Hermion on Sion, and as Aarons ointment upon the Skirts of his cloathing) there daily droppeth upon this whole Realm, pure Nard, and if any thing else be more precious, whether, in these earthly, or in those heavenly blessings. I speak no more then we all feel. This, is that one, I speak of; and in this one, is all, Even the Lords anointed. Whom (I make no question, but) the Lord hath, and will more and more bless for that Her Highness hath said, as Himself said, Sinite illam. And, blessed be God, that hath put into Her heart, so to say; to like well of Ut quid perditio; but, to have it so applied. I doubt not, but this Heroical virtue, among many others, shall make Her Scepter long to flourish; shall make her remembrance to be in blessing to all posterity, and shall be (among other) her rejoicing in the day of the Lord, and an everlasting crown of glory upon Her head.

This is that ointment, I speak of; that it self alone may make us all confess, we have received from Christ, extraordinary mercy, and are therefore to return more than ordinary duty. Non taliter fecit omni; Nay, Non taliter fecit ulli populo: He hath not dealt so with every; Nay, not so with any people, as with us: and therefore not any people, to deal so thankfully with Him again.

This,

This if it were extraordinary. Howbeit, if Antiquity may be admitted judg, this (as a good work) is to be ordinary with us. Since every thing done in this kind to Christ's Church, only upon a thankfull regard, is (with them) reckoned a dram of Mary Magdalens oynment.

Atleast if we will not come so far as operata est, we do yet thus far favor it, as to yield a Simile illam: Seeing, Mary Magdalen that gave it, paid for it; and it never came out of our purse.

And now, this question being thus dilated, it is every mans duty (saith Theophylast) to set down, cujus partis sit, whose part he will take, whose mind he will be of. Whether, with Judas, Perditio est; or, with Christ, Bonum opus est: whether Perit vendi; or, Simile illam.

But (I trust) we will stand to Christ's Judgment; and rather take part with Him, for Mary Magdalen, than with Judas, against her: that we may be with Mary Magdalen, that are of her mind; which, at the hour of death, we all shall desire.

The entrance I make. From this unhappy conjunction of Marie's work and Judas evil speech, this first consideration offereth it self (nothing pleasant, but wholesome and requisite to be called to mind, of all that mean to do well.) That, things well done shall be evil taken: and often, good affections have no good constructions; and that received with the left hand, that is reached with the right.

For this her act, that was well done, (if Christ knew, what it was to do well) Yet, we see, it is dis-aimed, grudged at, and she molested for it: (all three, are in my Text.) Whence we learn: Be a thing done to never so good purpose, yet some Judas will mutter, and maligne, and come forth with his Ux- quid? Some Judas will cast his dead flie into Mary Magdalens box of oynment.

No one creature had so good experience of this, as this poor woman had. Three special vertues of hers, the Gospels record: and in every one of the three, she was repined at. 1. When in the bitterness of her soul, she shewed her repentance with tears, Simon the Pharisee did what he could to disgrace her, (Luke 7.) 2. When in a hungry desire to receive comfort, by the word of grace she shewed her devotion in sitting at Christ's feet, Martha (her own sister) made complaint of her. 3. And now here again, the third time: when, in an honest regard of her duty, she sheweth her thankfulness for comfort received, Christ's own Disciples both grudge and speak against her. So that, if she washeth His feet with tears, it contents not: if she anoint His head with balm, it is matter of dislike: if she sit still, and say nothing; it is all one: Still, Mary is found fault with; ever her doings stand awry.

This is the lot and portion of all those, that will follow their steps. Not only we of private estate, but even great Personages, As, Nehemias by Geshem, to bring detriment to the state, by favouring the Churches case. Even Princes: David by Shimei, to be a bloody Persecuter, when (if in any thing he offended) it was, in too much lenity. Even Christ Himself the Son of God; who neither could have His feet, but Simon the Pharisee; nor His head anointed, but Judas (His Apostle) maligne and speak against it.

So that, not only Regium est (as the Heathen said) benè cum feceris, audire male, to have evil speech for good deeds; but Divinum, a heavenly thing (as Christ saith) de bono opere lapidari.

This, is their lot. And it serveth us to two purposes: 1. For judgment: to see this evil disease under the Sun: The evil aspect which the world looks with, on Mary Magdalen. Whereby many times that which is commended in Heaven, is condemned on earth: and Judas bag carrieth away even from Christ's. Whereby many times, all good is said of them, by whom little good is done, and some mens flagitia (which the heathen story lamenteth, in Drusus) shall find more favor and be better rewarded than Drusus's optimè cogitata, the good counsel and course of many a better man.

Such is the deceitfulness of the sons of men upon the weights. It serveth us (I say) to see and to sorrow at and to say with Augustine: Va tibi miser, bonus odor occidit te, Miserable man that thou art, how art thou choked with so good a sent? To sorrow it and to prepare our selves to it, and resolve, that though we do well, yet we shall be evil spoken of.

That, first: and second, this, for practise. That though we be evil spoken of, yet not to be dismayed or troubled with this hard measure; but to go on and do, as Mary Magdalen did; not once, or twice, but three several times one after another: Neither to hold our hand, or shut our box, nor spare our oynment, if things well done be evil taken. To look, not to Judas on earth, who disliketh; but to Christ in heaven, who approveth it, and in all three cases made answer for Mary Magdalen, against Martha, Simon and Judas and all her accusers. To know, that that which in Judas divinity is perditio, in Christ's divinity, is bonum opus. In regard therefore of our own duty, to be resolute with the Apostle, Quod facio, hoc & faciam, what I do, that will I do: In respect of misconstruction with them, Mibi pro minimo est: because we may truly say and in the sight of God, Sicut deceptores, & veraces, As deceivers, yet true: Or, (with Mary Magdalen) as masters, yet well-doers. Assuring our selves, that it is well done; and shall be both commended on earth, and rewarded in heaven. On earth: For, posterity shall better like of the shedding, than of the sale of this Oynment. In heaven: for the day will come, qui male judicatus rejudicabit, when all perverse judgments shall have judgment against them, and Mary Magdalen shall look cheerfully on him, on whom she bestowed it; and Judas rufully behold Him, from whom he sold it.

This is Mary Magdalens part, as Christ telleth: that howsoever Mary Magdalen be, in Simons house or in a corner, found fault with, amends shall be made her; and as wide as the world is, and as far as the Gospel shall sound, she shall be well spoken of. Ye, when the great and glorious acts of many Monarchs shall be buried in silence, this poor box of Nardus shall be matter of praise, and never die. And contrary, howsoever Judas motion may find favor and applause in the present, yet Posterity shall dislike and discommend it: and he be no less infamous and hateful, than Mary famous and wel spoken of, in all ages to the end of the world.

This is her portion from Christ: her soul refreshed with the sweet joyes of Heaven; and her name, as Nardus throughout all generations. This is his lot from the Lord: A name odious and lothsome to all that hear it; and his portion with hypocrites, in the lake of fire and brimstone. From which, &c. To which, &c.

LUKE Chap. XVII. Ver. XXXII.

Memores estote Uxoris LOT.

Remember LOTS Wife.

A Part of the Chapter read this Morning, by order of the Church, for II. Lesson.

He words are few, and the sentence short; no one in Scripture so short. But it fareth with Sentences as with Coines: In coines, they that in smallest compass contain greatest value, are best esteemed: and, in sentences, those that in fewest words comprise most matter, are most praised. Which, as of all sentences it is true; so specially of those that are marked with Memento. In them the shorter, the better; the better, and the better carried away, and the better kept; and the better called for when we need it. And such is this here; of rich contents, and withall exceeding compendious: So that, we must needs be without all excuse, it being but three words, and but five syllables, if we do not remember it.

The Sentence is our Saviours, uttered by Him upon this occasion. Before, (in Vers. 18.) He had said: that the dayes of the Son of man should be as the dayes of Lot, in two respects: 1. In respect of the suddenness of the destruction that should come: 2. And in respect of the security of the people, on whom it should come. For, the Sodomites laughed at it; and Lots wife (it should seem) but slightly regarded it. Being then in Lots story; very fitly, and by good consequence, out of that story, He leaveth us a Memento, before he leaveth it.

There are in Lots story, two very notable monuments of Gods Judgment. 1. The Lake of Sodom. 2. and Lots wives Pillar. The one, The punishment of resolute sin; the other, of faint vertue. For, the Sodomites are an example of impenitent wilfull Sinners: and Lots wife of imperseverant and relapsing righteous persons.

Both these are in it: but Christ, of both these, taketh the latter only. For, two sorts of men there are, for which these two Items are to be fitted: 1. To those in state of Sin that are wrong, the Lake of Sodom: 2. To those in state of Grace, that are well (if so they can keep them) Lots wives Pillar. To the first in state of Sin, Moses propoundeth the Vine of Sodom, and grapes of Gomora, qua contacta cinerescunt, that that if yee but touch them, turn to ashes. To the other in state of grace, Christ here, Lots wives Pillar. To the one, Jeremy crieth, Qui cecidit, adjiciat ut resurgat, To the other, Saint Paul : Qui stat, videat ne cadat, Agar, that is departed from Abrahams house, with her face toward Egypt, the Angel calleth to return, and not to persevere : Lots wife, that is gone out of Sodome, and in the right way to Zoar, the Angell willeth to persevere and not to return. So that, to them this Memento is by Christ directed; that being departed from the errors of Ur, are gone out from the Sins of Sodome, are entred into the profession of the truth, or into the course of a vertuous life. So that, if we lay it to our selves, we shall lay it aright; that Lots wife be our example, and that we sprinkle our selves with the Salt of her Pillar, ne putrescamus, that we turn not again to folly, or fall away from our own stedfastness. And, if it be meant to us, needfull it is, that we receive it. A point (no doubt) of important consideration and necessity, as well for Religion, to call on; as for our Nature to hear of. First, for Religion: her glory it is, no less, to be able to shew antiquos Discipulos, old Professors, as Manasson was, then daily to convert and make new Profelytes. And therefore, with Christ, we must not ever be dealing with Venise ad me; but sometimes too, with Manete in me; That, hath his place: Nor ever with stimuli, goades to incite them to; but, other while, with Clavi, nails to fasten them in. For as nature hath thought requisite as well the Brefts to bring up, as the Womb to bring forth: And Philosophy holdeth tueri of no less regard than querere: And with the Lawyers, Habendum is not the only thing, but Tenendum needfull too: And the Physitian as carefull of the regiment, and fearfull of the recidivation, as of the disease and cure. So Divinity is respective to both; both, to lay the ground-work surely; Ne corruiat, that it shake not with Esay's Nisi credideritis; and, to roof it carefully, Ne perluat, that it rain not thorow and rot the principals, with Pauls, Si permauseris, aliquin excideris & tu. Needfull then for Religion, to call on this vertue: and, as for Religion, to call on; so, for our Nature to be called on: Wherein, as there is senellum quid, a tender part not able to endure the cross, for which we need the vertue of Patientie: So is there also αἰσχρογῆμις a fitting humor, not able to endure the tediousness of any thing long; for which we no less need the vertue of Perseverance. The Prophet (in the 78 Psalm) saith, our Nature is as a Bow, which when it is bent to his full, except it be followed hard, till it be sure and fast, starts back again, and is as far off as ever it was. The Apostle compareth it to flesh (as it is) which will sine sale putrescere and if it be not corned, of it self bring forth corruption. And to help this our evil inclination forward, there be in all Ages dangerous examples, to draw on. The Israelites after they had passed the red Sea and all the perils of the desert, and were now come even to the borders of Canaan, even there say Bene nobis erat in Egypto, we were better in Egypt: Let us make a Captain and return thither. The Romans (in the New) at the first, so glorious Professors, that Saint Paul saith, All the world spake of their faith: After, when trouble arose, and Saint Paul was called coram, of the same Romans he saith, Nemo mihi adfuit, sed omnes deseruerunt, None stood by me, All shrunk away. And in these dangerous daves of ours, The falling away quite of divers, and some such, as have said of themselves (with Peter) Esse omnes, non ego; and others have said of them, Esse omnes, non ille: the declining of others, which (as Daniels image) decay by degrees; from a head of fine Gold fall to a silver brest, and from thence to loyns of brass, and thence to legs of iron, and last to feet of clay: The wavering and amaze of others that stand in the Plain (with Lots wife) looking about, and cannot tell, whether to go forward to little Zoar, or back again to the ease of Sodome; shew plainly that Lots wife is forgotten, and this is a needfull Memento, Remember Lots wife, If then it be ours, and so nearly concern us, let us see, quantum valent he quinque Syllaba. The Prophet Esay doth call us, that stand in this place, the Lords remembrancers: As to God, for the people, by the office of Prayers; So from God, to the People, by the office of Preaching. In which office of Preaching, we are employed as much about recognosce, as about cognosce; as much in calling to their minds the things they know and have forgot, as in teaching them the things they know not, or never learnt. The things are many, we have commission to put men in mind of. Some touching themselves: For, it is many times, too true, which the Philosopher saith: Nihil tam longè abest à nobis quàm ipsi nos, Nothing is so far from our minds, as we our selves. For, naturally (as saith the Apostle) we do τραγῶμεν, leak, and run out; and when we have looked in the glass, we straight forget our fashion again. Therefore we have in charge to put men in mind of many things, and to call upon them with divers Memento's, Memento quia sicut lutum tu, Remember the baseness of our mould what it is: Memento quia vita ventus, Remember the frailness of our life how short it is: Memento tenebrosi temporis, Remember, the dayes of darkness are comming, and they be many. All which we know well enough, and yet need to be put in mind of them. I.

enough for so many cases, as we need direction in. Needs must we then (as he here adviseth) interrogare generationem pristinam, ask the former age, what they did in like case: search the Records of former times; wherein, our cases we shall be able to match, and to pattern them all. Salomon saith excellently, Quid est quod fuit? Quod futurum est? What is that that hath been? That that shall be: and back again, What is that that shall be? That that hath been, Et nihil novum est sub Sole, and there is nothing under the Sun of which it may be said, it is new, but it hath been already in the former generations. So that, it is but turning the wheel, and setting before us some case of Antiquity, which may sample ours, and either remembering to follow it, if it fell out well; or to eschew it, if the success were thereafter. For example, by Abimelech's story, King David reproveth his Captains, for pursuing the enemy too near the wall, seeing Abimelech miscarried by like adventure; and so making use of remembering Abimelech. And by David's example (that, in want of all other bread, refused not the Shew-bread) Christ our Saviour defendeth His Disciples in like distress, and sheweth, that, upon such extremity, Necessitas doth even legem Legi dicere, give a Law, even to the Law itself.

Seven several times we are called upon to do it: 1. Memento dicrum antiquorum, (saith Moses) 2. Recordamini prioris Seculi, (Esay;) 3. State super vias antiquas, (Jeremy;) 4. Investiga patrum memoriam (Job;) 5. Exemplum sumite Prophetas, (James;) 6. Rememoramini dies priscos, (Paul;) 7. Remember Lots wife, Christ, here; that is, To lay our actions to those, we find there, and of like doings, to look for like ends. So read stories past, as we make not our selves matter for story to come.

II.
Of this of Lots
Wife.

Now, of and among them all, our Saviour Christ after a special manner commendeth unto us, this of Lots wife. Of which thus much we may say, That it is the only one story, which of all the stories of the Old Testament, He maketh His choice of, to put in His Memento; which he would have them, which have forgotten, to remember, and those that remember, never to forget. Oft to repair to this story, and to fetch salt from this Pillar: that they lose not that they have done, and so perish in the recidivation of Lots wife.

Then to descend into the particulars: I find, in stories, two sorts of Memento: 1. Memento & fac, Remember to follow: 2. Memento & fuge, Remember to flee the like. Mary Magdalens oymment, an example of one; Lots wives salt-stone, an example of the other. Or (to keep us, to this story) Lot looked not back, till he came safe to Zoar: memento & fac. Lots wife did, and died for it: memento & fuge.

The verse before sheweth, why Christ laid the memento upon her. Μη να στρατω. Μη επιστρατω, that we should not turn or return back, as she did: that we should not follow her, but, when we come at this Pillar, turn at it and take another way. That is, we should remember Lots wife, but follow Lot; remember her, but follow him.

Now in either of both memento's, to follow, or to flee, we alway enquire of two points (and so, here) 1. quid fecit, 2. quid passa est: what they did: whose story we read; and, how they sped: The Fact, and the Effect. The Fact, Vice or Virtue: The Effect, Reward or Punishment.

Gen. 19. 26.

Both which, concerning this unfortunate woman, we set down in one verse (in the XIX. of Genesis) what she did; that Shee drew back, or looked back: this was her Sin. The effect, that She was turned into a Salt-stone: this was her punishment. And these two, are the two Memorandum's concerning her, to be remembered. First of her faults.

I.
Her faults.

The Angel had given charge to Lot and his company (in the seventeenth of that Chapter) Scape for thy life: Stay not in the Plain: Look not once behind thee lest thou perish. Scape for thy life: She trifled for all that, as if no peril were. Stay not in the Plain, yet stayed she behind. Look not back lest thou die; she would, and did look back, to die for it. So that, she did all that she was forbid, and regarded none of the Angels words, but despised the counsel of God against her own soul. This was her sin, the sin of disobedience; but consisteth of sundry degrees by which she fell: needfull, all, to be remembered.

1 Wavering.

1. The first was: That she did not Severè custodire mandatum Dei, strictly keep her to the Angels charge, but, dallied with it, and regarded it by halves; that is, say what he would, she might use the matter as she would; go, or stay and look about as she list. Such like regard is like enough to have grown of a wandering distrust; left happily, she had left Sodom in vain, and the Angel feared them, with that which never should be. The Sun rose so clear, and it was so goodly a morning, she repented, she came away. Reckoning her Sons in Law more wise in staying still, than Lot and her self, in so unwisely departing. Which is the sin of unbelief, the bane both of Constancy and Perseverance. Constancy, in the purpose of our mind, and Perseverance in the tenour of our life.

2 Fainting.

2. From this grew the second, That she began to tire, and draw behind, and kept not pace with Lot and the Angels. An evil sign. For (ever) fainting is next step to forsaking; Sequebatur à longè, a preparative to a giving clean over: Occasionem quarit (saith Solomon) qui vult discedere ab amico, He that hath not list to follow, will pick some quarrel or other to be cast behind.

Prov. 18. 1.

3 Looking back.

3. This tiring, had it grown of weakness, or weariness, or want of breath, might have been born with; but, it came of another cause, which is the third degree. It was (saith the Text) at least to look back, and to cast her eye to the place, her soul longed after. Which sheweth, that the love of Sodom stuck in her still: that though her feet were come from thence, her heart stayed there behind: and that, in look and thought she returned thither, whither in body she might not; but (possibly) would in body too, if, as Ninive did, so Sodom had still remained.

4 Preferring
Sodom to Zoar.

4. Looking back might proceed of divers causes; So might this of hers, but that Christ's application, directs us. The verse before saith, something in the house, something left behind affected her: Of which he gives us warning. She grew weary of trouble, and of shifting so oft: From Ur to Haran; thence, to Canaan; thence, to Egypt; thence, to Canaan again; then to Sodom; and now to Zoar; and that, in her old old daies, when she would fainest have been at rest. Therefore, in this wearisome conceit of new trouble now to begin; and withal remembring the convenient seat, she had in Sodome, she even desired to dye by her flesh-pots, and to be buried in the graves of lust: wished them at Zoar, that would, and her self at Sodome again: desiring rather to end her life with ease in that Stately City, than to remove, and be safe, perhaps not, in the desolate mountains. And this was the sin of restines of soul, which affected her eyes and knees, and was the cause of all the former. When men weary of a good course, which long they have holden, for a little ease or wealth, or (I wote not what) other secular respect, fall away in the end: so loosing the praise and fruit of their former perseverance, and relapsing into the danger and destruction, from which they had so neer escaped.

Behold, these were the sins of Lot's Wife; A wavering of minde: Slow steps: the convulsion of her neck: all these caused her weariness and fear of new trouble, she preferred Sodoms ease before Zoars safety. Remember Lot's Wife.

This was her sin: and this her sin, was in her, made much more hainous by a double circumstance, The aggravation of her fall. well worth the remembring: as (ever) weighty circumstances are matter of special regard, in a story specially. 1. One, that she fell, after she had stood long. 2. The other, that she fell, even then, when God, by all means offered her safety, and so forsook her own mercy.

Touching the first. These (a) winter brooks, (as Job termeth flitting desultory Christians) if they dry; these (b) summer fruits (as Amos) if they putrifie: these (c) morning clouds (as Hosea) if they scatter; these (d) shallow-rooted corn, if they wither and come to nothing, it is the less grief. No man looked for other. (e) Pharaoh with his fits, that at every plague sent upon him, is godly on a sudden, and, O pray for me now; and when it is gone, as profane as ever he was, beginning nine times, and nine times breaking off again; he moves not much. To go further: Saul, that for two years; Judas, that for three; Nero, that for five kept well, and then fell away, though it be much, yet may it be born. But this woman had continued now thirty years (for, so they reckon from Abrahams going out of Ur, to the destruction of Sodome;) This, this is the grief, that she should persist all this time, and after all this time fall away. The rather, if we consider yet further, that not onely she continued many years, but sustained many things in her continuance, as being companion of Abraham and Lot, in their exile, their travel, and all their affliction. This is the grief, that after all these storms in the broad Sea well past, she should in this pittifull manner, be wracked in the haven. And when she had been in Egypt, and not poisoned with the superstitions of Egypt; when lived in Sodome, and not defiled with the sins of Sodome; not fallen away for the famine of Canaan, nor taken harm by the fulness of the City of the Plain; after all this she should loose the fruit of all this, and do and suffer so many things all in-vain. This is the first: Remember it.

The second is no whit inferiour: That, at that instant she wofully perished, when Gods special favour was proffer'd to preserve her: and that, when, of all other times she had means and cause to stand; then of all other times, she fell away. Many were the mercies she found and felt at Gods hand, by this very title, that she was Lot's Wife. For, by it, she was incorporated into the House and Family, and made partaker of the blessings of the faithfull Abraham. It was a mercy, to be delivered from the errors of Ur; a mercy, to be kept safe in Egypt; a mercy, to be preserved from the sin of Sodome; a mercy, to be delivered from the Captivity of the five Kings; and this the last and greatest mercy, that she was sought to be delivered from the perishing of the five Cities. This (no doubt) doth mightily aggravate the offence, that, so many waies before remembred by God in trouble, she so coldly remembred Him: and that now presently being offered grace, she knoweth not the day of her visitation: but being brought out of Sodome, and warned of the danger that might ensue; having the Angels to go before her, Lot to bear her company, her daughters to attend her, and being now at the entrance of Zoar, the haven of her rest; this very time, place and presence, she maketh choice of, to perish in, and to cast away that, which God would have saved; in respect of her self, desperately; of the Angels, contemptuously; of her husband and daughters, scandalously; of God and His favours, unthankfully; forsaking her own mercy, and perishing in the sin of wilfull defection.

Remember Lot's Wife and these two, 1. That she looked back, after so long time, and so many sufferings: 2. That she looked back, after so many, so mercifull, and so mighty protections. And remember this withall, That she looked back onely, and went not back: Would, it may be but that it was all on fire. But, whether she would or no, or whether we do or no, this fore-thinking our selves, we be gone out, this faint proceeding, this staying in the plaine, this convulsion of the neck, and writhing the eyes back; this irresolute wavering whether we should choose, either bodily pleasures in perishing Sodome, or the safety of our souls in little Zoar, was her sin; And this is the sin of so many as stand as she stood, and look as she looked, though they go not back: but, if they go back too, they shall justifie her, and heap upon themselves a more heave condemnation. So much for the sin, which we should remember, to avoid.

Now for her punishment, which we must remember, to escape.

This relapse in this manner, that the world might know it to be a sin highly displeasing his Majesty, God hath not onely marked it for a sin, but salted it too, that it might never be forgotten.

The wages and punishment of this sin of hers, was it, which is the wages of all sin, that is, Death. Death, in her (sure) worthily, that refused life with so easie conditions, as the holding of her head still, and would needs look back and dye.

The sound of Death is fearfull, what death soever: yet it is made more fearfull four waies; which all be in this of hers.

The aggravation of her fall.

2 Her Punishment.

Death. Rom. 6. 23.

1. Sudden. 1. We desire to die with respite; and sudden death, we fear and pray against. Her death was sudden, back she looked, and never looked forward more. It was her last look.
2. In the act of sin. 2. We desire to have remorse of sin ere we be taken away; and death in the very act of sin, is most dangerous. Her death was so. She died in the very convulsion; She died with her face to Sodom.
3. Misuse. 3. We would die the common death of mankind, and be visited after the visitation of other men: and an unusual strange death is full of terrour. Hers was so. Gods own hand from Heaven, by a strange and fearfull visitation.
4. Unbecom burial. 4. Our wish is, to die, and to be buried, and not to remain a spectacle above ground which Nature abhorreth: She so died, as she remained a spectacle of Gods wrath and a by-word to posterity, and as many as passed by. For until Christs time, and after, this monument was still extant, and remained undefaced so many hundred years. Josephus (a Writer of good account, which lived after this) saith ἰστέον αὐτὴν ἔτι καὶ νῦν διαμένει: I my self have seen and beholden it, for it stands to be seen to this day. A reed she was, a Pillar she is; which she seemed to be, but was not. She was melting water: She is congealed to salt. Thus have we both her fault and punishment: Let us remember both: To shun the fault, that the penalty light not on us.

III.
Our Lesson
from it is.

Now, this Pillar was erected, and this verdure given it, for our sakes. For, among the many waies that the wisdom of God useth to dispose of the sin of man, and out of evil to draw good, this is one, and a chief one, that he suffereth not their evil examples to vanish as a shadow, but maketh them to stand as Pillars for Ages to come, with the Heathen mans inscription, His ipse tibi tegor dorsus esto, Look on me, and learn by me, to serve God better.

And, an high benefit it is for us, that He not onely embalmeth the memory of the Just for our Imitation; but also powdred and maketh brine of the Evil, for our admonition: that, as a Scene from Mary Magdalens ointment; So, a relish from Lots wives pillar, should remain to all posterity.

Profane persons, in their perishing, God could dash to pieces, and root out their remembrance from off the earth. He doth not, but suffereth their Quarters (as it were) to be set up in stories, Ut poena Impi sit eruditio Justi, that their punishment may be our advertisement. Poureth not out their blood, nor casts it away, but saves it for a Bath, Ut lavet Justus pedes in sanguine peccatoris, that the Righteous may wash their footsteps in the blood of the ungodly: that all (even the ruine of the wicked) may cooperate to the good of them that fear God. This woman, in her inconstancy, could He have sunk into the earth, or blown up as salt-petre, that no remembrance should have remained of her: He doth not; but, for us, and for our sakes, He erecteth a Pillar: And not a Pillar onely, to point and gaze at; but a Pillar or rock of salt, whence we may and must fetch, wherewith to season whatsoever is unfavoury in our lives. And this, this, is the life and soul of memory: this is wisdom, The art of extracting salt, out of the wicked; Triacle, out of vipers; our own happiness, out of aliena pericula: and to make those that were unprofitable to themselves, profitable to us. For (sure) though Lots wife were evil, her salt is good. Let us see then, how to make her evil, our good; see, if we can draw any savoury thing from this example.

1. Perseverance. 1. That which we should draw out, is perseverance, Muria virtutum (as Gregory calleth it) the Preserver of virtues, without which (as Somer fruits) they will perish and putrifie: The Salt of the Covenant; without which, the flesh of our Sacrifice will take wind and corrupt. But S. Augustine (better) Regina virtutum, the Queen of virtues; for that, however the rest run and strive, and do masteries, yet, Perseverantia sola coronatur, Perseverance is the onely crowned virtue.

2. Care. 2. Now perseverance we shall attain, if we can possess our souls with the due care, and rid them of security. Of Lots wives security, as of water, was this Salt here made. And, if security (as water) do but touch it, it melts away presently. But Care will make us fix our eye, and gather up our feet, and, forgetting that which is behind, tendere in anteriora, to follow hard toward the prize of our high calling.

3. Fear. 3. And, to avoid Security, and to breed in us due care, S. Bernard saith. Fear will do it: Vix in timore securus esse? securitatem time; The onely way to be secure in fear, is to fear security. S. Paul had given the same counsel before, that, to persevere Si permanferis, no better advice, than Noli alium sapere, sed time.

Considerations out of her faith.

Now, from her Story, these considerations are yeilded, each one as an handfull of salt to keep us, and to make us keep.

First, that we see; as of Christs twelve, which he had sorted and selected from the rest, one miscarried; Et illum gregem non timuit lupus intrare, and that the Wolf feared not to seize, no, not upon that Flock: and as of Noahs eight that were saved from the Flood, one fell away too; So, that of Lots four, here, and but four in all, all came not to Zoar, one came short. So that, of twelve, of eight, of four; yea, a little after (ver. 35.) of two, one is refused: that we may remember, few there be that scape from Sodom in the Angels company; and of those (few though they be) all are not safe neither: Who would not fear, if one may perish in the company of Angels?

2. Secondly, That as one miscarrieth; so, not every one, but one that had continued so long, and suffered so many things, and after all this continuance, and all these sufferings, falls from her estate, and turns all out and in; and, by the inconstancy of one hour, maketh void the perseverance of so many years, and (as Ezekiel saith) In the day, they turn away to iniquity, all the former righteousness they have done, shall not be remembered.

3. Thirdly, That as she perisheth; So, at the same time, that Sodom: She, by it; and it, by her. That, one end cometh to the sinner without repentance, and to the just, without perseverance. One end, to the abomination of Sodome, and to the recidivation of Lots wife; Et non egredientes, & egredientes respicientes: They that go not out of her, perish; and they that go out of her, perish too, if they look back. Lacus Asphaltites, is a monument of the one, Lots Wives salt stone, a memorial of the other.

Lastly, That as one perisheth, and that such an one; So, that she perisheth at the gates, even hard at the entry of Zoar: which of all other, is most fearfull: So near her safety, so hard at the gates of her deliverance. Remember, that near to Zoar gates, there stands a salt stone.

These very thoughts, what her case was, these four waies; and what ours may be (who are no better than she was) will search us like salt, and teach us; that as, if we remember what we have been, we may (saith S. Bernard) erubescere; so, if we remember what we may be, we may contremiscere: that, we see our beginnings, but see not our ending: we see our Stadium, not our dolichum. And that as we have great need to pray (with the Prophet) Thou hast raised me from my youth up, until now, forsake me not in mine old age, now when I am gray-headed; So, we had need stir up our care of continuing, seeing we see it is nothing to begin, except we continue; nor to continue, except we do it to the end.

Psal. 71. 18.

Remember, we make not light account of the Angels Serva animam tuam: blessing our selves in our hearts, and saying, Non fiet tibi hoc; we shall come safe, go we never so soft: Zoar will not run away.

Mat. 16. 22.

Remember, we be not weary to go whither God would have us; not to Zoar, though a little one, if our souls may there live; and never buy the ease of our body, with the hazard of our soul, or a few daies of vanity with the loss of eternity.

Remember, we slack not our pace; nor stand still on the Plain. For, if we stand still, by still standing, we are meet to be made a Pillar; even to stand still, and never to remove.

Remember, we look not back, either with her, on the vain delights of Sodome left; or with Peter, on S. John behind us, to say, Domine, Quid isto? Both, will make us forget our following. None that casteth his eye thither way, is Udis: meet as he should be, meet for the Kingdom of God.

John 21. 20.

Luke 9. 62.

But specially remember we leave not our heart behind us, but that we take that with us, when we go out of Sodome: for if that stay, it will stay the feet, and wiche the eye, and neither the one nor the other will do their duty. Remember, that our hearts wander not, that our heart long not: This Gave, if it be fervent, will bring us Perseverance.

Now, that we may the better learn somewhat out of her punishment too: Let us remember also, that as to her, so to us, God may send some unusual visitation, and take us suddenly away, and in the act of sin too.

Our of her punishment.

Remember the danger and damage: It is no less matter we are about, than perdet animam. Which if we do, we frustrate and forfeit all the fruit of our former well-continued course; all we have done, is vain. Yea, all that Christ hath done for us is in vain; whose pains and sufferings we ought specially to tender, knowing, that Supra omnem laborem labor irritus, No labour to lost labour; and Christ then hath lost his labour for us.

Remember the folly: that beginning in the spirit we end in the flesh: turning our backs to Zoar, we turn our face to Sodome: joyning to a head of fine gold, feet of clay, and to a precious foundation, a covering of thatch.

Gal. 3. 3.

Remember the Disgrace: that we shall lose our credit and accompt, while we live, and shall hear that of Christ, Hic homo; and that other, Quid existis in desertum videre? A reed shaken with the wind.

Luke 14. 14.

Mat. 11. 7.

Remember the Scandal: That, falling our selves, we shall be a block for to make others fall: a sin no lighter; nor less, nor lighter than a mil-stone.

Mat. 18. 6.

Remember the Infamy: That we shall leave our memory remaining in stories, among Lots Wife, and Jobs Wife, Demas and Escholus, and the number of Relapsed, there to stand to be painted at, no less than this heap of Salt.

Remember the Judgement that is upon them after their relapse; though they live, that they do even (with her here) obrigescere, wax hard and numb, and serve others for a sear, wholly unprofitable for themselves.

Remember the difficulty of reclaiming to good: Seven evil spirits entring in stead of one, that their last state is worse than the first.

Mat. 12. 45.

And lastly, Remember that we shall justifie Sodome by so doing; and her frozen sin shall condemn our melting vertue. For, they in the wilfulness of their wickedness persisted till fire from heaven consumed them: And, they being thus obdurate in sin, ought not she (and we much more) to be constant in vertue? And, if the drunkard hold out, till he have lost his eyes; the unclean person, till he have wasted his loyns; the contentious, till he have consumed his wealth, Quis pudor quod infelix populus Dei non habet tantam in bono perseverantiam, quantum mali in malo! What shame is it, that Gods unhappy people should not be as constant in vertue, as these miscreants have been, and be in vice?

Each of these by it self; all these put together, will make a full Memento: which if she had remembered, she had been a Pillar of light in heaven, not of salt in earth. It is too late, for her: we, in due time yet, may remember it.

And, when we have remembered these, Remember Christ too, that gave the Memento: that He calleth Himself Alpha and Omega; not onely Alpha for His happy beginning; but Omega, for his thrice happy ending. For that he left us not, nor gave over the work of our redemption, till He had brought it to Consummatus est: And that, on our part, Summa Religionis est, imitari quem colis, The highest act of Religion, is, for the Christian to conform himself, not to Lots wife, but to Christ, whose Name he weareth. And though Verus amor non sumit vires de spe, True love (indeed) receiveth no manner of strength from hope; but, but, though it hope for nothing, loveth nevertheless; yet, to quicken our love, which oft is but faint, and, for a full Memento, Remember the reward. Remember, how Christ will remember us for it, which shall not be the wages of an hireling, or (Lease-wife) for time, and term of years, but αἰῶνις αἰῶνις, Eternity it self, never to expire, end, or determine, but to last and endure for ever and ever.

22. k 9. 4.

But this reward (saith Ezekiel) is for those, whose foreheads are marked with Tau, which (as Omega in Greek) is the last letter in the Hebrew Alphabet, and the mark of consummatus est, among them: They onely shall escape the wrath to come. And this crown is laid up for them, not of whom it may be said, Cur rebatis bene, Ye did run well; but, for those that can say (with S. Paul) Cursum consummavi, I have finished my course well.

Gal. 5. 7.

1 Tim. 4. 7.

And (thanks be to God) we have not hitherto wanted this salt, but remembered Leas wife well. So that, this exhortation, because we have prevented and done that which is called for, changeth his nature, and becometh a commendation, as all others do. A commendation (I say:) yet not so much of the people (whose onely felicity is to serve and be subject to one that is constant; for otherwise, we know how wavering a thing the multitude is) as of the Prince, whose constant standing giveth strength to many a weak knee otherwise. And Blessed be God and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, that we stand in the presence of such a Prince: who hath ever accounted of Perseverance, not onely as of Regina virinum, the Queen of virtues; but, as of virtus Reginarum, the virtue of a Queen. Who (like Zorobabel) first, by Princely magnanimity, laid the Corner-stone, in a troublesome time: and since, by Heroical constancy, through many both alluring proffers and threatening dangers, hath brought forth the Head-stone also, with the Prophets acclamation, Grace, grace, unto it. Grace, for so happy a beginning; and Grace, for so thrice happy an ending. No terrors, no enticement; no care of her safety hath removed her from her steadfastness: but, with a fixed eye, with straight steps, with a resolute minde, hath entred her self, and brought us into Zoar. It is a little one, but therein our souls shall live; and we are in safety, all the Cities of the Plaine being in combustion round about us. Of whom it shall be remembered, to her high praise, not onely that of the Heathen Illaque virgo viri; but, that of David, that, all her daies she served God, with a covenant of Salt, and with her Israel, from the first day until now. And of this be we perswaded, that He which began this good work in her, will perform it unto the day of Jesus Christ, to her everlasting praise, comfort and joy, and, in her, to the comfort, joy and happiness of us all.

2 Cor. 13. 5.

Yet it is not needles, but right requisite, that we, which are the Lords Remembrancers put you in minde, that as Perseverance is the Queen of virtues, quia ea sola coronatur; so is it also, quia Satanas ei soli insidiatur, for that, all Satan malice, and all his practices are against it: The more careful need we to be, to carry in our eye this example. Which God grant we may, and that our hearts may seriously regard, and our memories carefully keep it. Ut hac columna fulcias nos, & hic sal condias nos, that this Pillar may prop our weakness, and this salt season our sacrifice; that it may be remembered, and accepted, and rewarded in the day of the Lord. Which, &c.

LUKE Chap. XVI. Ver. XXV.

Fili, recordare, &c.

Son, remember that thou, in thy life time, receivedst thy pleasure (or good things;) and likewise Lazarus pains: Now therefore is he comforted, and thou art tormented.

His Scripture hath the name given it in the very first words, Recordare Fili, Son remember: It is a Remembrance.

There be many Sermons of remembrance here on earth: this, is one from Heaven, from the mouth of Abraham. Not now on earth, but in heaven, and from thence beholding (not in a glass of darke speech, but) intuitive, that which he telleth us: and He that saw it bare witness, and his witness is true.

John. 19. 35.

Which may somewhat move attention: Or, if that will not, let me ad farther,
That it is such a remembrance, that it toucheth our estate in everlasting life;
That is, the well or evil hearing of this Recordare, is as much as our eternal life is worth. For, we find both in it. That our Comfort or Torment eternal (Comfort, in Abrahams bosome; Torment, in the fire of hell) depend upon it: and therefore as much as we regard them, we are to regard it.

The Remembrance is directed to a Son of Abrahams; not so much for him, as for the rest. For, it is to be feared, that both the sons of Abraham, and the daughters of Sarah forget this point overmuch; and many of them (with this party here, to whom it is spoken) never remember it till it be too late.

To Abrahams sons then, all and every one. But specially, such of his sons, as presently are in the state that this son (here) sometime was, of whom it is said: He had received good things in his life. By vertue whereof, I find, this Recordare will reach home to us; for that we are within the compass of this Recepisti. For truly, the sum of our Receipt hath been great; No Nation so great: And, our Recordare, little; I will not say, how little, but (sure) too little for that, we have received.

Now, albeit it be all our case (for, we all have received) yet, not all our case alike; but of some, more than other. For, some have received in far more plentiful manner, than other some; and they therefore more deeply interested in it. And look, who among us have received most, them it most concerneth; and they (of all other) most need to look to it.

If you ask, Why they more than others? For that (besides the duty) to whom a great Recepiſti is given, of them a great Recordare will be required. The danger also helps them forward. For, so it oft happeneth unhappily: that, whereas Recepiſti is made (and so may well be) a motive, for us to remember: so cross is our nature, none is so great an enemy to Recordare as it. Our great receiving is oft occasion of our little remembering. And as a full diet in the vessels of our body; so, a plenteous receipt breeds stoppings in the mind, and memory, and the vital parts of our soul.

We have hereof a lively example before our eyes: : And such an one, as if it move us not, I know not what will. A receipt, for memories that suffer obstructions.

Our Saviour Christ unlocked hell gates to let us see it. In discovering what fighes and what sufferings are in the other world, he sheweth us our lying in them, to whom Abraham objecteth, that this frank receiving had marred his memory. And as he sheweth us his fault, so (withal) what came to him for it, in that strange and fearfull consequent: Now therefore thou art tormented.

Verse 9.

This example is told by our Saviour (in the XIII. verse) to other rich men, and troubled with the same lethargie. Who; when he put them in mind, it would not be amiss, while they were here, to make them friends of that they had received, that, when this failed them (as fail them it must) that might receive them into everlasting tabernacles: forget themselves so far, as they derided His counsel; not, in words, but per myſterium. Which maketh Him fall from Parables, to a plain story (for, so it is holden by the best Interpreters, both old and later:) and, from everlasting tabernacles, to everlasting torments: That, howsoever they regarded not His Recordare on earth, they had best give better ear to Abrahams, from Heaven.

It is his intent, in reporting of it, that our remembering of it should keep us from it. Non vult mortem, & minatur mortem, ne mittat in mortem, (saith Chrysostome:) He would not have us in that place; yet he telleth us of that place, to the end we never come in that place.

Yea, it is Abrahams desire too, we should not be overtaken, but think of it in time; and prevent it, before it prevent us. And therefore he lifteth up his voice and cryeth out of Heaven, Recordare fili.

Verse 27. 28.

And, not only Abraham, but he that was in the place it self, and best knew the terror, because he felt it; felt that, in it, as he heartily wisheth and instantly sueth, that they, whom he loveth, or any way wisheth well to, may some way take warning, Ne & ipsi veniant, That they also come not into that place of torments.

This use, Christ on earth, Abraham from Heaven, and he out of hell, wish we may have of it. And we (I trust) will wish our selves no worse than they: and therefore look to our Recordare, carry it in mind, and (in Recordare, there is Cor, too) take it to heart; and by both, in time take order, Ne & ipsi veniamus.

The Division

The verse it self (if we mark it well) is in figure and proportion, an exact cross. For, as a Cross, it consisteth of two barrs or beams so situate, as the one doth quarter the other. Thou receivedst good things, and Lazarus received evil. These two lye clean contrary: But meet both, at the middle word, Now therefore: and there, by a new Antithesis, cross each other: & dicit, He that received evil, is comforted: and dicit, thou that didst receive good, art tormented. And, to make it a perfect Cross, it hath a title or Inscription too, set over it: and this it is, Recordare fili. And sure, next to the Cross of Christ and the memory thereof, this cross of Abrahams invention and exaltation is (of all others) most effectual. And I verily persuade my self, if we often would fix it before our eyes, and well mark the inscription, it would be a special preparation to our Passeeover (meaning, by our Passeeover, our end) whereby pass we must, yea long, into another state either of misery or bliss: but, whether of misery, or bliss, it will lye much in the use of this word Recordare.

I.

II.

First then we will treat, 1. of the Cross: After, 2. of the Title.

We have in the Cross two Barres: But, with both, we will not meddle. For, why should we deal with Lazarus? This place is not for him; nor he no room in this Auditory. Therefore, waving his part, in this other (of the Rich mans) we have two quarters, representing unto us two estates: ^a The upper part, or head, Recepiſti bona in vita, his estate, in this life, ^b The nether, or foot, jam vero torqueris: his estate, in the other.

Of these two: 1. That, two they are: 2. which they be: 3. and how they be fastened, or tenanted the one to the other, with the Illative, therefore.

I.
Of the Cross.

TO quarter out this Cross: Two parts it stands of; which two parts are two estates; 1. One past, 2. The other, present: The one, in Memory: The other, in experience. Now, both memory and experience (memory of things past, and experience of things present) are (both) hand-maids to providence, and serve to provide for things to come. And, of all points of providence, for that which is the highest point of all, that our memory of it, keep us from experience of this place, this conclusion.

I.

The upper part of it; I be present estate. In vita tua recepiſti.

These two are set down: 1. The one estate, in the words Vita tua: 2. The other, in the words jam vero, but now. The former, past with him, and yet present with us: For, we yet receive. The latter, present with him, but (with us) yet to come, or rather (I trust) never to come: jam vero torqueris.

1 The first is the life in esse, which we all now live: which though it be one and the same, yet is there in it a sensible difference, Pauper & dives obviaverunt, of some poor, and some rich, every day meeting each other.

2 But

2 But, Nemo dives, semper dives: and again, Nemo pauper, semper pauper. They that be rich in it, shall not ever be rich; nor they that are poor, poor alway. It came to pass (saith the Scripture) that the beggar died (verse 22) Mortuus est etiam & dives, and the rich man (for all his riches) died also. There ends the first estate.

3 But, that end is no final end. For, after Vita tua there is a semper verò, still: a second state in reversion, to take place when the first is expired. Our hearts misgive us of some such estate: and (as the Heathen man said) they, that put it off with quis sit? who can tell, whether such estate be? shall never be able to rid their minds of quid sit? but, what if such a one be, how then? But, to put us (that be Christians) out of all doubt, our Saviour Christ, by this story, openeth us a Casement into the other life, and sheweth us, whither we go, when we go hence.

1. First, That, as in this life (though but one, yet) there are two diverse estates; to death (though it be, but one neither) hath two several passages: And, thorow it, as thorow one and the same City gate, the honest subject walketh abroad for his recreation, and the lewd malefactor is carried out to his execution.

2 Two states then there be, after death; and these two dis-joned in place, dislike in condition: both set down within the verse; 1. One, of comfort: 2. The other, of torment.

3 And, that both these take place jam, presently. For, immediatly after his death, and, while all his five brethren yet lived, and yet any of them were dead, he was in his torments, and did not expect the general Judgment, nor was not deferred to the end of the world.

4 And (to make it a compleat cross, for so it is) as the poor and rich meet here, so do they, there, also, otherwise; and go two contrary wayes, every one to his own place. Lazarus to his bosom, the rich man to his gulf: and, ones misery endeth in rest; the others purple and fine linnen in a flame of fire. Verè stupenda vices (saith Chrysostome) verily a strange change, a change to be wondred at: to be wondred at and feared, of those whom it may concern any manner of way, and (at any hand) to be had in remembrance.

To apply these two, to the party, we have in hand, and to begin with the first estate, first. Two things are in it set down by him: 1. The one, in the word Fili: 2. The other, in the word Recepisti.

First, that he was Abrahams son, and so, of the religion only true: and one, that (as himself saith of himself) had had Moses and the Prophets, though tanquam non habens, as though he had them not. For, little he used, and less he regarded them; yet, a Professor he was.

Secondly: as by nature, Abrahams son: so by condition or office, one of Gods Receivers. Receivers we are, every one of us, more or less: but yet, in receipts, there is a great latitude. Great, between her, that received two mites; and him, that received a thousand talents. Between them, that receive segmenta only, covering for their nakedness; and them, that receive ornamenta, rich attire also, for comeliness: and again, that receive alimenta, food for emptiness; and oblectamenta, delicious fare for daintiness. Now, he was not of the pety, but of the main receipt. It is said: He received good things, and it is told, what these good things were, Purple of the fairest, and linnen of the finest: and quotidie splendide, every day a double feast. Which one thing, though there were nothing else, asketh a great Receipt alone. Here, Rich; in this life; and who would not sue to succeed him in it? One would think, this wood would make no cross, nor these premises such a now therefore. But, to him, that was thus and had thus, all this plenty, all this pleasure; post tantas divitias, post tantas delicias; to him, it is spoken, but now thou art tormented. Which first estate, as it was rich, so it was short: therefore, I make short with it, to come to cruciaris. Which, though in syllables, it is shorter, yet it is in substance, that peece to which he is fastened, in length of continuance far beyond it.

Cruciaris is but one word, but much weight lieth in it: therefore it is not slightly to be passed over, as being the special object of our Recordare, and the principal part of the cross indeed. Two wayes our Saviour Christ expresseth it: 1. One while under the term basanos, which is torture: 2. Another, under the term idolus, which is anguish of the spirit: referring this, to the inward pain: and that, to the outward passion. The soul being there subjected by Gods justice, to sensual pain, for subjecting it self willingly to brutish sensuality, in this life, it being a more noble and celestial substance.

Of which pain, Saint Chrysostome noteth, that because many of us can skill, what torment the tongue hath, in extremity of a burning ague; and what pain our hand feeleth, when from the hearth some spark lighteth on it: Christ chose to expresse them in these two. Not, but that they be incomparably greater than these: yea, far above all we can speak, or think: but that flesh and blood conceiveth but what it feeleth, and must be spoken to, as it may understand. And it is a ground, that, in termes (here and elf-where) proportioned to our conceit, torments are uttered farre beyond all conceit: which, labouring to avoid, we may; but labouring to expresse, we shall never do it.

Yet, to help them somewhat, we shall the more deeply apprehend them, if we do but compare them: as we may; and never go out of the confines of our own verse.

With Recepisti, first. To consider this: that his torment is in the present tense, now upon him, Cruciaris. His good, all past and gone, Recepisti. Mark (saith S. Augustine) of his pleasure, omnia dicit de praterito; Dives erat, vestiebatur, Epulabatur, Recepisti: He was rich, did go, did fare, had received: was, did, and had; all past, and vanished away; all (like the counterpane of a Lease) expired; and our Abraham liketh it to wages, received and spent before-hand.

2. Secondly, If we lay together his torments, and bona tua in vitâ. For, we shall finde, they are of a diverse scantling. The one had an end with his life; and ô quam subito! The other, when it beginneth once, shall never have an end. That life is not like this. No: if all the lives of all, (I say not of men, women, and children, but of all) and every of the creatures, that ever lived upon the earth, or shall live to the worlds end, were all added one to another, and all spun into one life, this one exceedeth them all. This then (I make no question) will make another degree, to think, quod delectabas fuit momentaneum, quod cruciat est æternum.
3. Thirdly, If we match it with Lazarus autem; that is, with the sight of others in that estate, whence he is excluded: and in them, with sorrow to consider, what himself might have had and hath lost for ever. There shall be (saith Christ of this point) weeping, and gnashing of teeth, to see Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and all the Prophets in the Kingdom of God, and your selves thrust out of doors. Not onely weeping, for grief that themselves have lost it; but gnashing of teeth also, for very indignation, that others have obtained it. And, of others, not some other; but, that Lazarus iste, one of these poor people, whom we shun in the way, and drive our coaches apace to escape from: that, of them, it may fall, we may see some in blis, when they shall lye in hell like sheep (saith the Psalmist) that waiked on earth like Lions. Will not this bear a third?
4. But beyond all these, If we counterpoise it with the word παρηλαίται, is comforted, with which Abraham hath set it in opposition: Torment opposed to comfort: (that is) torment comfortless, wherein, no manner hope of any kind of comfort. Neither of the comfort of mitigation; for (in the verse next before) all hope of ῥῆσις, relief is denied, even to a drop of water: Neither of the comfort of delivery at last; for (in the verse next following) he is willed to know, that by reason of the great partition, their case is such, ut non possunt, that they cannot presently, or for ever, look for any passage from thence, but must there tarry in torments everlastingly. So, neither comfort of relief, nor of delivery: nor the poor comfort, which, in all miseries (here) doth not leave us — dabit Deus his quæq; finem;
- Verse 24. An end will come: Nay, no end will never come. Which [never] is never deeply enough imprinted, nor seriously enough considered. That this [now] shall be still now, and never have an end: and this cruciaris be cruciaris for ever, and never declined into the preter tense, as Recepisti was. This is an exaltation of this croffe, above all else: None shall ever come down from it: none shall ever beg our body, to lay it in our sepulchre.
- Verse 16. Fifthly, If we lay it to Recordare. For, may I not adde to all these, that, being in this case, he heareth Recordare, and is willed to remember, when his remembering will do him no good: but though he remember it, in sorrow, and in the bitterness of his soul: yea, though his sorrow be above measure sorrowfull, it will profit him nothing? I say, Grief both utterly comfortless, and altogether unprofitable.
5. These five make him that feels it (here) wish, that none of those, he wisheth well, may ever come there to know, how hot that fire, or how terrible that torment is.
- These five words are (all) within the compass of the Verse it self; and may serve (every one) as a nail to fasten our memory to this cross: that, we may ever remember it and never forget it, and, never forgetting it, never feel it.
- This then is his cross. We long (I know) to have it taken down; our ears are dainty, and the matter melancholike, and we little love to hear it stood on so long. But, Chrysostome saith well of that fire: Nunquid, si tacuimus, extinximus? If we speak not of it, will it go out? No, no: sive loquamur, sive tacuimus, ardet ille: speak we, or keep we silence, it burneth still, still it burneth. Therefore, let us speak, and think of it, and let it stand in the Name of God: Et exerceamus auditum (saith the good Father) ne ita mollescat, and keep our ears in exercise, that they grow not nice. If, to hear of it, be painfull; to feel it will be more. The invention is to keep the exaltation, to take it up. For, none so near it as they, qui non tollunt, donec super imponitur, that take it not up, till it be laid upon them.
3. Thus, we have severally seen the counter-points of this cross: the top, which is in vitâ, in this life; and the foot, which reacheth ad novissima inferni, to the bottom of hell. It remaineth we tenon both these together, as anecedent and consequent: Thou didst receive: Now therefore. 1. That they may be. 2. And then, how they may be joyned.
1. First then we find, that Recepisti is, and it ends; and that, by this example, it may end in cruciaris, and prove the one end of an heavy Cross. Which first bringeth us out of admiration of the riches of this life. When we see, that these good things, which (after the tax of the world) are counted, and (in a manner) titled the only good things, and in the deceitfull ballance of this world, weigh down Abrahams bosome; be not ever demonstrative signs of Gods special liking: Nor they, ipso facto highest in His favour, that receive them in greatest measure: Nor peradventure (as Christ saith) so highly accounted of in Heaven, as they be on earth. Therefore, they that have them, not to reflect too much on them; nor be ideò inflati (as saith Saint Augustine) quia obsecrati; as much pride in their soul, as purple on their body. And they that have them not, not to emulari, vex and grieve themselves at Nabals wealth, Hamans preferment, this mans table; seeing there cometh a Jam verò; and when that cometh, we shall see such an alteration in his state, as he that wisheth him worst, shall wish, that for every good thing, he received here, he had received a thousand; and (with S. Barnard) Ut omnes lapides converterentur in rosas, that every stone under his feet here had been turned into a rose. Such is his case, now: and such theirs, that come where he is.
2. Is this all? No. But, as it bringeth us out of admiration; so it bringeth us into fear. For, two things it offereth, either of which is, or may be matter of fear. 1. First, in that he is Abrahams son. That Abraham hath hath of his seed in hell: and that all his sons shall not rest in their Fathers bosome. Which offereth us occasion to fear, for all our Profession. For, though he were a son too, and so acknowledged by Abraham, yet, there he is now.

2. In that he is of Abraham's rich sons, and one that received good things in his life. Which minisheth new matter of fear: that (as the Prophet saith) Tophet is prepared of old, and that even for great ones; for such as go in purple, and wear fine linnen, and fare full daintily: Even for such, it is prepared. Not, as every prison, for common persons; but, as Tophet (or the Tower) for great Estates, so that it may seem, either of both these have their danger at their heels; For, that, they to him were; to many, they are: and to us they may be, as Amecdemus to an evil Consequent.

Esay 30. 33.

Men verily may flatter themselves: But sure, I can never think but there is more; in this Now therefore, than the World will allow. And that this Recordare or Abraham's is not a matter so slightly to be slipped over. There is some danger (no doubt) and that more than will willingly be acknowledged, to such as are wealthy, and well at ease in Sion. Saint Gregory confesseth by himself, that never any sentence entred so deep into his soul as this. And that, as Surge mortui was ever in Saint Hieroms ear: And Non in comestationibus, not in surfeiting, in Saint Augustines, by which he was first converted: So, this was with him; and he could not get it out of his mind. For, he sitting in the See of Rome, when he was grown rich and of great receipt, was (as he saith) still in doubt of Recepti: whether his exalting into that Chair might not be his recompence at Gods hands, and all that ever he should receive from Him, for all his service. And ever he doubted this Recepti (which we so easily pass over) and whether his case might not be like. Thus did the good Father; and (as I think) not unwisely: And, would God, his example herein, might make due impression, and work like fear, in so many as have, in the eyes of all men, received the good things in this life. For, this may daily be seen every where, that divers, that received them, if ever any did; and that, in a measure heaped up and running over; carry themselves so without remembrance or regard of this point, as if no such Simile were in the Scripture, as that of the Needles-eye: No such example, as of this Rich-man: No such Recordare as this of Abraham, which we have in hand. It should seem, they have learned a point of divinity, Abraham never knew: Balaams divinity (I fear) to love the wages of unrighteousnes and a gift in the bosome, and yet to cry Moriatur anima mea, his soul should go straight into Abraham's bosome for all that: And so, in effect, to deny Abraham's Consequence.

Amos 6. 1.

Rom. 13. 3.

Mat. 19. 24.

2 Pet. 2. 15.

Numb. 23. 1.

We must then joyn issue upon the main point, we cannot avoid it: To enquire, how this Now therefore commeth in: And how far, and to whom, this Consequent holdeth. I demand then: Was he therefore tormented, because he received good things? Is this the case of all them that wear purple and fare well in this life? Shall every one, to whom God reacheth such good things as these, be quit for ever from Abraham's bosome? By no means, For, Cujus est finis, whose is the bosome? Is it not Abraham's? And, what was Abraham? Look Genesis XIII. ver. II. Abraham was rich in cattel, in silver and gold. There is hope then for rich men, in a rich mans bosome. Then, the bosome it self is a rich mans, though a Lazarus be in it. Yea, though we find here Lazarus in it: Yet else-where, we find, he is not all. For, the great Lord that bare rule under Queen Candaces: The eldest Lady: Joseph of Arimathea, and the Areopagus (grave and wise Counsellors:) The Purple-seller (and if the Purple-seller, why not the Purple-wearer?) Yes, the Purple-wearer too, were in earth, Saints (as we read) and are (we doubt not) in Abraham's bosome also.

Acts 8. 27.

2 John 1.

Acts 17. 34.

16. 14.

Dan. 5. 29.

It was not therefore, because he was rich: for then must Abraham himself have been subject to the same sentence, Nay, one may be so rich, and so use his riches together, as they shall conclude in the other figure and end in salutis; and no wayes hinder, but help forward his accompt; and bring him a second receipt of the good things of that eternal life. And (if you mark it well) we have here, in this Scripture, two rich men: 1. One, that giveth the Recordare: 2. The other, to whom it is given. The example of a rich man, which rich men to avoid. The sentence of a rich man, which rich men to remember.

It is evident: It was not, for that he had received good things in this life: Seeing as truly as Abraham said to him, Son remember, thou didst receive good things: So truly might he have rejoyned, Father remember, thou didst receive, &c. It was not that.

Neither was it, because he came by them unduely, by such wayes and means, as the soul of God abhorreth: For, it is (saith Bernard) Recordare quia recepisti: not quia rapuisti, or quia decipisti, by ravin or deceit.

2.

Neither was it, because he received them, and wrapped them up. For, as his receipts are in this verse: So his expences, in the XIX. So much in purple, and linnen; So much in fasting.

3.

Neither was it, because receiving plenty, he took his portion of that, he received, in apparell or diet. For, Num solis stultis apes mellificant (saith the Philosopher) do Bees make honey, or Worms spin silk for the wicked or reprobate only? (Howbeit, it cannot be excused, that being but Homo quidam, he went like a Prince: for, purple was Princes wear.) Or, that he feasted, and that not meanly, but λαμπρως, in all sumptuous manner: and that, not at some set times, but καθημερινον, day by day: (for, this portion was beyond all proportion.)

4.

None of these it was. Yet we hold still, some danger there is; there is some: and this Recordare is not idle or needles.

What was it then, that brought him thither, or (as S. Bernard calleth it) what was his Scala inferni, the ladder by which he went down to hell? that we may know, what is the difference between Abraham's receipt and his: and when Recepti shall conclude with Cruciaris.

Saint

Mat. 6. 16.

Saint Chrysostome doth lay the weight on the word Recepisti, in his natural or proper sence. For, it is one thing (saith he) λαβεῖν (that is, accipere) to receive or take; another, ὠφελεῖν, (that is, recipere) to receive it, as it were in full discharge and final satisfaction. (And the same distinction doth Christ Himself observe in ἔχειν and ἀπείχειν, in the VI. Chapter of Saint Matthew.) Both have, and both receive: But, they that do λαβεῖν, receive them, as a pledge of Gods further favor: But they that do ὠφελεῖν, receive them, as a full and compleat reward, and have no more to receive, but must there-upon release, and quit claim all demands, in whatsoever else. Tanquam arrham, and tanquam mercedem is the distinction in Schools.

1. With God verily it is a righteous thing, to let every man receive, for any kind of good, he hath done here. Yea, even the Heathen for their moral vertues (as S. Augustine holdeth of the Romans, and the victories they received.)

2. But, the righteous it is also, that the Reubenites, which choose their lot in Gilead on this side of Jordan, and there seat themselves, should not after claim their part too, in the Land of Promise. Even so that they that will have, and have their receiving time, here, should not have it here, and else-where also.

3. Then, all is in the choice, where we will lay our Recepisti: whether here or there, in this or that life: In Purple, and Silk, and the delights of the world: or, in the rest and comfort of Abrahams bosome. Whether we will say: Lord, if I may so receive, that I may be received: If I may receive so the good of this life, that I be not barred the other to come; tanquam arrham, as the earnest of a better inheritance, Ecce me. But if my receiving here, shall be my last receipt: If I shall receive them tanquam mercedem, as my portion for ever; I renounce them, Put me out of this receipt, and reserve my part in store for the Land of the living. And of evil: If it must come here, or there (with S. Augustine) Domine, hic ure, hic seca; Ibi parce: Let my seering and smart be here; there let me be spared: And from Cruciaris, the torment to come, Libera me Domine.

To very good purpose saith the Ancient Father: Quisq; dives, quisq; pauper, nemo dives, nemo pauper: Animus omnia facit. It is somewhat, to be rich, or poor; it is nothing, to be rich, or poor; it is, as the mind is: The mind maketh all. Now (saith S. Chrysostome) what mind he caried, is gathered out of Abrahams doubling, and trebling, Tu tua and tua: Recepisti tu, bona tua, in vita tua: which words are working words (as he taketh them) and contain in them great Emphasis. Understanding (by tua) not so much that, the had in possession; as that he made special reckoning of: For, that, is most properly termed ours: Animus omnia facit.

1. This life is called his life; not because he lived in it, but because he so lived in it, as if there had been no other life but it. And in his accompt, there was no other; ὁδὲ μοι τὸ σήμερον λάβει οὐδὲ τὸ αὔριον, Give him this life; let this day be his day; take to morrow who will. This did not Abraham: For, he saw a day, and that after this life, that rejoiced him more than all the days of his life.

John 8. 56.

This life as it was His life; So the good of it, His good, Bona tua. This, His life, these the portion of His life: these He chose for His good: they, His; and He, theirs. They that make such a choice, their Recepisti may well end in Cruciaris.

This way, S. Chrysostome: by the mind. S. Augustine taketh another, by the memory, more proper to the Patriarch's meaning: and that four wayes:

Gen. 33. 9.
Luke 12. 19.

1 For (saith he) Abraham willing him to remember, he had received such things; implieth (in effect) that he had clean forgotten, that any such things he had ever received. Look how Esa speaketh, Habe bona plurima, I have enough, my Brother: And, as his pew-fellow here, Luke 12. Anima habes, Soul, thou hast goods enough: Even so for all the world, it seemeth, this party here, he had them: Sure he was, he had them: but that he received them, he never remembred, Now he is put in mind, quia recepisti: Now therefore thou art tormented.

2 Now, not remembring he had received them, no marvel if he forgot, why he received them, or with what condition: Forgetting God in heaven, no marvel if he remembred not Lazarus on earth. Verily, neither he or any man receive them, as Proprietaries; but as Stewards, and as Accomptants, as Christ telleth us, above in this Chapter. Not, for our selves only, or for our own use; but, for others too; And among others, for Lazarus by name. If Lazarus receive not, it was his fault, and not God's, who gave him enough to supply his own uses, and Lazarus want too. For both which too, he, and all receive, that receive at God's hand: But he (it seemeth) received them to and for himself alone, and no body else: that Abraham saith truly, Recepisti tu; tu & nemo alius: Thou, and yours, and no body besides. For, his Recepisti ended in himself, and he made himself Summam omnium receptorum. For, if you call him to accompt by the writ of Redde rationem, this must be his Audit: In purple and linnen, so much; and in belly-cheer, so much: So much on his back, and so much on his board, and in them endeth the total of his Receipt: Except you will put in his bounds too, which received of him, more than Lazarus might. This is indeed Recepisti tu solus. This did not Abraham: For, his receipt reacheth to strangers, and others besides himself; and, Lazarus he received in his bosome on earth, or else he had never been in heaven, to have him there.

Will you see [now therefore] the Consequent in kind? Therefore is this party now in the Gulf, because (living) himself was a gulf: It is now Gurges in gurgite, but one Gulf in another. While he lived, he was a Gulf swallowing all: Now therefore, the gulf hath swallowed him. Remember this, for it is a special point. For, if our purple and fine linnen swallow up our alms: If our too much lashing on, to do good to our selves, make us in state to do good, to none but our selves: If our riotous wasting on expences of vanity, be a gulf and devour our Christian Implying in works of charity, There is danger in Recepisti, even the danger of [Now therefore] Gurges eras & in gurgitem projicieris, a Gulf thou wert, and into the gulf shalt thou go. Ever, for the most part, you shall find these two coupled. In Sedome; Pride, and fulness of bread, with not stretching the hand to the poor. In Juda: Great bounts of wine, and rich beds of ivory, with little compassion on the misery of Joseph. And here: Going richly, and faring daintily, with Lazarus bosome and belly, both empty. The saying of S. Basil is highly commended, that ἀνὸν τὴν ἀσωνίαν φιλότητά, Pride is Prodigalities wherstone. And so it is (sure;) and sets such an edge upon it in our expences, that it cuts so deep into our receipt, and shares so much for purple and linnen, as it leaves but a little for Lazarus portion. Sure, so it is, less purple must content us; and somewhat must be cut off from quosidie splendide, if we will have Lazarus better provided for.

This, I have stood a little on, that it may be remembered. It is Christ's special drift, both in the Parable before, and in this Story here: and remember it we must, if either (as, in that) we will be received into everlasting Tabernacles; or (as in this) we will be delivered from everlasting torments.

3 Now I add, that in thus forgetting Lazarus, to remember himself, he remembered not himself neither; but failed in that too. For, whereas he consisted of two parts, 1. a body, and 2. a soul, he remembered the one so much, as he quite left the other out of his memento. For, his Recepisti tu was his body, and nothing else. Now reason would, the body should not take up the whole receipt; but that the poor soul should be thought upon too. Purple and silk, and Ede, bibe, they are but the bodies part: But almes and works of mercy, they, they be the souls. May not our souls be admitted suitors, that we would remember them (that is) remember Lazarus? for, that is the souls portion: For, the other part, he and we all remember fast enough.

4 Thus, remembering neither God nor Lazarus, nay, nor his own soul, his memory thus failing him, God provided and sent some, to put him in mind. Sure as he had received those former good things, so also had he received Moses and the Prophets, by his own confession: And in receiving them, he had received a great benefit, and (peradventure) greater in this than the other: And Moses had told him as much as Abraham tells him now: Utinam novissima providerent, Would God (saith Moses) men would remember the four Novissima; 1. That there is a death; 2. There is a Judgment; 3. There is a Heaven;

Deur. 32. 29.

Deur. 32. 22.

4. There is a Hell: But of all the four, Novissima inferni (in the same Chapter) the nethermost; Nunc igitur cruciarius, the place of torments. The Prophets said as much: Jeremy, Ever think, that an end there will be Et quid fiet in novissima, what shall become of us in that end? Who amongst us (saith Esay) can endure devouring fire? Who can dwell with ardores sempiterni, everlasting burnings? these he had: and if he had heard these, it is plainly affirmed, Audiant ipsos would have done it; they would have kept him, for ever coming in that place. But, these also living he strove to forget, and (as ingenderers of melancholly) to remove them farre away. And, that he might the more easily do it, it was thought not amiss, to call their authority in question, whether they were worth the hearing or no. It is (in effect) confessed by him: that his five brethren and he were of one opinion; that the hearing of Moses and the Prophets was a motive far unworthy to carry such men as they. An Angel from heaven, or one from the dead might (perhaps;) but, the Books of Moses should never move them. It was not, for nothing, he complaineth of his tongue: Illâ linguâ, with that tongue, he had scorned the Holy Oracles: peradventure, that place, wherein he now lay, with that tongue which, in that place, feeleth the greatest torment; and, from that place, the smallest comfort: both which it had before prophanelly derided.

Jer. 5. 31.

Esay 33. 14.

Thus then you see his Scalam inferni, the brief of his faults, for which his Receipt endeth in this bitter receipt of torments without end. 1. Epicurisme: no life but this: No good but these here, Good attire, good cheer. 2. This was his reward: Amen, dico vobis, recepistis. (Saint Chrysostome too) 1. Remembering neither God in heaven, nor Lazarus on earth; 2. but being a Gurges, a Gulf of all that he received, himself: 3. No not his own soul; 4. nor (last of all) this place of torments, before he was in it; and scorning at Moses for remembering him of it. This you see, And, in him, you see who they be, over whom Abraham shall read the like sentence, Qui habet aures, &c.

Mat. 6. 24.

Now then, we have set up both sides of this Cross, and fastened each part to other with Now therefore: Let us affix the Inscription, and so an end. That, is Recordare fili: The want of which brought him thither; The supply of it shall keep us thence.

II.

The title.
Recordare fili.

Fili recordare: Optime dictum, sed serò, Excellently well said, but too late (saith Saint Bernard.) For, alas I commeth Abraham in now, with Recordare? Doth he now affix the title? why, it is too late. True, it is so; But, till now, he would not suffer any to set it up. Before, while it was time, and when it might have done him good, then he would not endure it: Now he is fain (when it is out of time) to know, what in time might have done him good: and may do others, if (in time) they look to it. Indeed, to him now, it is of no use in the world; but only to let him see, by what Justice he is where he is; and what he suffereth, he suffereth deservedly. The best is, Abraham had more sons than this son; and they may take good by it, and have use of that, whereof he had none. With this son it is too late; with some other, it is not. Not with us: we are yet upon the stage: Our Jam verò is not yet come. And for us, is this inscription set up, and for our sakes, both Christ reported, and S. Luke recorded this Recordare.

If you ask, What good is that? What is the good of exemplary Justice? What good is it to see a malefactor punished, or to read in a paper the crime wherefore? What, but only that by reading what brought him thither, we may remember what will keep us from thence. The neglect of Recordare is the cause, he is there: why then, Recordare fili, and keep thee from thence. So, with one view of this inscription, we read both his ruine and our own remedy.

This is the right use of this title; God forbid we should have no use of it, till we come where he is. But, it is therefore set over his head in that life, that we may read it in this: read it, and remember it: remember it and never have title set over ours.

It will be good then, sometimes to keep some day holy to the exaltation of this Cross, and to set this title before our eyes: to approach it and read it over: Yea, not once, but often to record this Recordare. Indeed, it is that S. Gregory saith: Recordatione magis eget versus iste quam expositione: Indeed, it more needs a disposition to remember it, than an exposition to understand it.

We are yet: how long we shall, we know not, nor how soon vita tua will be gone, nor, how quickly this Jam vero will come in place. This we know: between his state and ours, there is only a puff of breath in our nostrils. That this life (short though it be, and in a manner, a moment, yet) hoc est momentum, unde pendet aeternitas: On it, no less matter dependeth than our eternity: or blifs or bane, comfort or torment. That in that place, without all hope either of relief, escape or end: and that from thence, neither our profession of truth, nor the greatness of our receiving shall deliver, but only this Recordare. It standeth us then in hand, to take perfect impressiō of this Recordare: and (as S. Augustine saith) Oblivisci quid simus, attendere quid futuri simus, to forget, what we now be; to consider, what we shall be without all question yer long, but we know not how soon: but, oft it falleth, the shorter and sooner, the less we think of it.

Three things then I wish, for conclusion: 1. that we may remember: 2. remember in time: 3. remember effectually. That we may remember the fire, the thirst, and the torments; and know what they mean, by memory rather than by sense. Abraham, from heaven calls to us to that end: The party in hell crieth, Ne veniant & ipsi.

1. That we do it in time? that we be not in this case, never lift up our eyes, till we be in hell; nor remember that may do us good, till it be too late.

2. That we do it effectually from the heart: For, there is a heart in Recordare: And that, this being our greatest business, we make it not our least care.

3. Our Remembering will be effectual, if we pray to God daily, we may so receive, as we may be received. And our remembering shall be effectual, if it have the effect, that is, make us remember Lazarus. Quotidie Lazarus: You may find Lazarus, if you seek him, every day: Nay, you shall find him, though you seek him not. Our present estate, by present occasion of the dearth now upon us, makes the memory more fresh, than at other times it would be. Remember then our being remembered there, lyeth on this their remembrance here; and, upon their receiving, our recipies, or rather recipieris. And remember that day, wherein what we have received shall be forgotten; and what He hath received of us shall be remembered; and nothing else shall be remembered, but quod uni ex minimis. The attaining everlasting tabernacles, the avoiding everlasting torments lye upon it. That which we remember now in Lazarus bosome, shall be remembered to us again in Abrahams bosome. To which, &c.

II CoR. Chap. XII. Ver. XV.

Ego autem libentissime impendam, & super-impendar ipse pro animabus vestris: etsi licet plus vos diligens, minus diligar.

And I will most gladly bestow, and will be bestowed for your souls; though, the more I love you, the less I am loved.

HE words be S. Pauls; and to the Corinthians. And, if we neither knew whose they were, nor to whom; yet this we might know by the words themselves, that it is Love that speaks, and unkindness, that is spoken to. Impendam; superimpendar; libentissime: this must needs be love, and that unkindness, that requiteth such love, with such an Etsi, Etsi minus diligar, Though the more I love, the less I be loved.

Many wayes it may be manifest, that S. Paul loved the Church of Corinth more than many other (loved them, for he laboured more for them.) By the time he spent with them, a year and a half full: Scarce with any so much. By his visiting them three several times: Not any so oft. By two of his largest Epistles sent to them: Not, to any the like. And in the one of them we see here, how frank and how kind a profession he maketh, in quâ omne verbum charitatis igne vaporatur, wherein, every word carrieth a sweet sent of Loves perfume: (it is S. Gregory.) These, each of these; but all these together, may prove his magis diligam, the abundance of His love to Corinth. Now there should be, in love, the vertue of the Load-stone, the vertue attractive, to draw like love to it again. There should be: but was not: For, their little love appeared by their many unloving exceptions which they took to him. To his Office: That, he was but an Apostle of the second head, and no wayes to be matched with the chief Apostles, verse 11. To his Person: That he was one of no presence: Somewhat good at an Epistle, but his Person (or presence) nothing worth (Chap. 10. 10.) To his preaching: that he was but ἰδιώτης τοῦ λόγου, not so eloquent by much, as divers of them were; nor his Sermons ex opere Corinthiaco, of the Corinthian fashion. Indeed, I know not how, but he could not hit on their vein.

This cold infusion of so faint regard on their parts, might have quenched his love. It did, Apollo's, for Apollo was once at Corinth, but found them so diverse to please, as he waxed weary and got him away; and when he was moved to return to them ἡ δὲ ψυχὴ αὐτοῦ οὐκ ἦν ἐν αὐτοῖς, his mind was not at all to come there again as yet, saith S. Paul (1 Cor. 16) It made *Apollo*s give over. So might it S. Paul too. But him it did not: Charitas qua edificabat, the love wherewith he built, was like lime, baked not, but rather kindled with water. For, notwithstanding all these, such was his zeal, and he ἡ δὲ ψυχὴ αὐτοῦ οὐκ ἦν ἐν αὐτοῖς, that we see his affection, that we hear his resolution what it is: unkind they might be, but no unkindness of theirs, or verdict never so hard, or censure never so sharp; no minus diligar should move him, or make him love their souls a whit the less.

4. Wherein, lest they might be jealous, he sought to Corinth so oft, for the ore of it, because the soil was rich, there was good to be done (as men are ever that way quick-eyed) he appeared to all his former course with them, that he had sought nothing hitherto. Nothing he had sought, nor nothing he would seek: And (to come to this our verse) not only seek nothing; 1. But he would bestow, 2. Bestow, and be bestowed himself; 3. and that, most willingly (indeed it is higher, ἡ δὲ ψυχὴ αὐτοῦ οὐκ ἦν ἐν αὐτοῖς, most gladly) 4. and all this (to use Chrysostome's words) not ἡ δὲ ψυχὴ αὐτοῦ οὐκ ἦν ἐν αὐτοῖς, for those that had not begun to love him first, but ἡ δὲ ψυχὴ αὐτοῦ οὐκ ἦν ἐν αὐτοῖς, for those that being loved first did not love him again. 5. And that not ἡ δὲ ψυχὴ αὐτοῦ οὐκ ἦν ἐν αὐτοῖς in equal measure (that, is not his complaint) but such, as the more (it is fuller, in the Greek, ἡ δὲ ψυχὴ αὐτοῦ οὐκ ἦν ἐν αὐτοῖς, the more abundantly) they were loved, loved him the less for it. The degrees are many: and look how many degrees, so many several points of elevation.

5. All which when I consider, I cannot chafe but marvel at his love; which truly is right admirable: And more at their minus, than his magis: But, at his heroical spirit, most of all, whom such and so great unkindness could not over-come. The rather, when I lay it to, and compare it with ours in these times: in which, a kind of love we have (such as it is) but such as will not endure Saint Paul's assay; Or, if in some degrees it do, if it be not respected straight (not as it deserveth, for so haply it is, but as it supposeth it self to deserve) if it be crossed with any unkindness, it groweth abrupt. Every minus diligar makes it abate; and far we are from this Christian magnanimity, to resolve with him (in the 11 Chap.) quod facio, hoc & faciam, what I do, that will I do still: Or, here, Love I will still, though, the more I love, the less I be loved.

The thing loved, is the Corinthians souls. And (as Corinth it self was situate in a narrow land, between two Seas) so are they, in the verse: having, on the one side, the Sea of self-love (in the former part :) and, on the other, the Gulf of unkindness (in the latter,) Through either of which, S. Paul maketh a first and second navigation, if haply he may to adire Corinthum, gain their souls to Christ, more precious to him, than Corinth it self and all the wealth in it.

The Division In the Love two things are offered. For, in the former moiety of the verse, he is encountred with self-love,

1. which bestoweth nothing; 2. but, least of all, his life: 3. Or if it do, it is not most gladly; nay, not gladly at all. These three he beateth down: the first, with Impendam; the second, with Impendar: the third, with libentissimè. Thus having vanquished the love of himself in the former; in the latter moiety, Unkindness riseth up. Unkindness, in them, for whom he had done all the former. Over which second enemy having a second conquest also, and triumphing over it, with his Esti; he sheweth his love to be a love of proof, to have all the perfections and signatures of Love: all which are within compass of this verse, Amor (as in Schools we reckon them) 1. Impensivus; 2. Expensivus; 3. Intensivus; and 4. Extensivus. The two former, in the two verbs; 1. Active, Impendam; and 2. Passive, Impendar; Bestowing, or spending; Bestowed, or spent it self. The two latter, in the Adverb and the Conjunction: 3. Intensive, straining it self to the highest degree, most gladly: and 4. Extensive, stretching it self to those that are farthest from love, and least deserve it Esti minus diligar. 1. To spend; 2. To spend and be spent; 3. To spend and be spent most willingly. If the full point were there, it were enough. 4. But, not only Libentissimè But, Libentissimè, Esti; most gladly, yea, though the more be, the less they, that is all in all.

II. But then, lest we mistake our term of love (as, easily we may, and confound it with lust) we must look to our pro in the second part. It is, Pro animabus; soul-love, he meaneth all the while. Love, the fruit of the spirit; Not lust, the weed of the flesh. Not, of this flesh sister to worms, and daughter to rottenness; but, of the Spirit allied to the Angels, and partaker, in hope, of the Divine nature it self. And, not of one only; but animabus, of souls: more than love of one soul; many souls, many thousands of souls, of a whole State or Countrey. Them to love, and to them thus to prove our love, is it, which S. Paul would teach; and it, which we need to learn. These be the two parts. Whereof, &c.

The 10. c.
Can. 6. 3.
Hofea 11. 4.

TO enter the treaty of the first part. We begin at the four points, 1. Impendam, 2. Impendar, 3. Libentissimè, and 4. Esti. If Love be an Exsign (as, Can. 6.) the Colours; if it be a Band (as Hof. 11.) the twists; if a Scale (as, Chrysostome) the ascents; if an Art, (as Bernard) the Rules of it. Indeed, they talk much of an Art of Love, and Books of verses have been written of it: but, above all verses, is Carmen hoc amoris. This verse hath more art than they all: and of this it may be said, Me legat, & lecto carmine doctus eris: Learn it, and say you learned Love. To take them as they lye, and with the first, first. Ego verò Impendam.

1 There

1 There was a world when one said, da mihi cor tuum, & sufficit: Bestow your heart on me, and I require no further bestowing; and the bestowing of love, though nothing but love, was something worth. 1. Amor impensivus: Impendit.

2 Such a world there was: But, that world is worn out. All goeth now by Impendamus: Love and all is put out to interest; the other empty-handed love, is long since banished the Court, the City and the Countrey. For, long since it is, that King Saul saw it, and said it to his Courtiers, that he was not regarded, but because he gave them fields, and vineyards, and offices over hundreds and thousands. Nor yet Diana in the City of Ephesus, magnified there by the Crafts-men, but, because by her Silver Shrines, they had their advantage. Nay, nor Christ Himself neither, in the Countrey, but because they are of the loves and were filled. For, many miracles had they seen much greater than that, yet never professed they so much, Sicut tunc exaurati, as when he bestowed a good meal on them. 1 Sam. 22. 7. Acts 19. 24. John 6. 16.

3 Such is now the worlds love, but specially at Corinth, where they do cauponari amorem indeed; set love to hire, and love to sale; and at so high a rate, as some were forced to give over, left paying for love, they might buy repentance too; and both too dear.

4 There is no remedy then: Saint Paul must apply himself to time and place, wherein (as all things else, so) love depends upon impendam, Yielding and Paying.

5 Now, there is nothing so plaint as Love; ever ready to transform itself, to whatsoever may have likelihood to prevail; and if it be Liberalis, into that too. For, that love is liberal (nay prodigal) the Greek Proverb noteth it, that faith, The Purse-strings of love are made of a Leek-blade; easily in sunder, and wide open with no great ado.

6. Saint Paul therefore commeth to it; and as he maketh his case a Father's case towards them (in the verse next before:) So he saith with the kind Father, (Luke 15.) Ecce omnia mea tua sunt. Fathers love, and all must be proved by Bestowing. Verse 14. Luke 15. 31.

7 Yea, I will bestow: Now alas, what can Paul bestow? Especially upon so wealthy Citizens? What hath he to part with, but his books and his parchments? Ware, at Athens perhaps somewhat; but at Corinth, little used and less regarded. Indeed if silver and gold be all, and nothing else worth the bestowing, nothing will come under Impendamus, but it: his bestowing is stalled. But, by the grace of God, there is something else. There be talents (so, the world will call them when they list, howsoever they esteem them scarce worth pence a peece.) And there be treasures of wisdom and knowledg, in Christ Jesus (saith Saint Paul) Indeed so had Saint Paul need so say; he had best magnifie his own Impendamus, for he hath nothing else to make of. Nay, it shall not stand upon his valuation. They that had both, both the wealth of Corinth and the wisdom of Paul, and both in abundance, as being both of them Prophets: The one of them (King David) preferreth this Impendamus of Paul's before gold, fine gold, much fine gold; and that we may know how much that much is, before thousands of gold and silver. This, was no poor Apostle. The other (King Solomon) saith directly: There is gold, and a multitude of rich stones; but the lips of knowledg, that, is the precious Jewel. And, not Policy; but Scientia Sacrorum, prudentia: the knowledg of holy things, is the wisdom he meaneth. And, it was no flourish: he was in earnest: For, it is well known he himself chose them before the other, when he was put to his choice; and, that his liking in that choice, was highly approved, by God's own liking. The truth is, Men have no sense of their souls, till they be ready to part with them; and then is S. Paul's impendam called for (and never seriously before;) when their case is such as they can little feel, what the bestowing is worth. 2 Tim. 4. 13 Col. 2. 3. Psal. 19. 10. 119. 72. Prov. 20. 15. Prov. 9. 10. 1 Reg. 3. 9. 12.

And, because they would not seek to feel it before, it is God's just punishment they feel it not then. But, if men will labour to have sense of that part in due time, they should find and feel such an estate of mind, as none know, but such as have felt: surely such, as they would acknowledg to be worth an Impendamus. Indeed, this it is, Saint Paul can bestow; and this it is, Corinth needs; and the more wealthy it is, the more. The other, as he hath it not, so they need it not, that is, Aurum & Argentum: Quod autem habet, but that he hath, he is ready to bestow. What would we have more? Fecit quod posuit, saith our Saviour in Mary Magdalens case; and dedit quod habuit, in the case of the poor Widow's mites; and, that is as much as God doth, or man can require. But, be it little, or be it much, he that giveth all, leaveth nothing ungiven, and therefore his impendam is at the highest. Acts 3. 6. Mark 14. 8. 12. 44. Luke 21. 4.

But, when it is at the highest, the Passive Impendar, is higher than it. Much more, to bestowed, than to bestow. And therefore it hath a Super-Impendar bestowed on it. 1 For first, they that bestow, give but of their fruits; but, he that is bestowed, giveth fruit, tree, and all. In that, the bestower remained unbested: here, he himself is in the deed of gift too. 2 Secondly, before there was but one act (of bestowing only;) here, in one, are both bestowing and being bestowed; and there being both must needs be better than one. 3 Thirdly, before, that which was bestowed, what was it? our good, not our blood; our living, not our life: Nondum ad sanguinem, nor yet so far as to the shedding of blood: Then, there is somewhat behind: But, if to the shedding of that, then is it love at the farthest: if it be as Solomon saith, Fortis sicut mors; dare throw death his gauntlet. Majorem hoc nemo (saith Christ) greater love hath no man, than this, to bestow his life. 4. And indeed, we see, many can be content to bestow frankly; but at no hand, to be bestowed themselves: Yea, that they may not be bestowed, care not what they bestow. For Self-love crieth to us, spare our living; but in any wise, Propitius esto tibi, to spare our life. Skin for skin is nothing but impendere ne impendamur; to spend all we have to spare our selves. But hither also will S. Paul come from Αναπαύειν, to ἐνδυναμῶσαι, without any reservation at all of himself: To do or suffer; so spend or to be spent. 2. Amor expensivus, Impendit. Heb. 12. 4. Contr. 8. 6. John 15. 13. Mat. 16. 26. Job. 2. 4.

How to be spent? will he die? Yea indeed: What presently here at Corinth? No; for at this time, and long after he was still alive: and yet he said truly impendar for all that. For, as before we said, to say we in this: If there be no way to be bestowed, but by dying out of hand: they that, in field, receive the bullet; or they that, at the stake, have the fire set to them; they, and they only may be said to be bestowed. That, is a way indeed, but not the only way: but other ways there be besides them too. As that is said to be bestowed, not only that, is defrayed at one entire payment; but, that, which by several sums is paid in; especially, if it be, when it was not due; nor could not be called for. This I mean: The Patriarch Lot, or the Prophet Jeremie, that dwelling where sin abounded, and seeing and hearing vexed their righteous souls with the daily transgressions of the people, and for their unkindness too; and thereby prevented their term and paid Nature's debt, yea their day came, bestowed themselves (say I) though, not at once. (For, hearts grief and heaviness do more than bestow, for they even consume and waste a mans life.) And Timothie, that he giving attendance to reading, meditation, and studie, grew into an anemia and often infirmities, and thereby shortened his time by much, bestowed himself (say I) though not at one instant. He that knew it bare witness, that that course of life is a wearying, yea, and a wearing of it too; and spends another manner substance than the sweat of the brows. This then, for the present, was S. Pauls impendar: By intensive meditation (for his books and parchment took somewhat from his sum;) By sorrow and grief of heart; for Quis scandalizatur, & ego non uxor? and that he said (and said truly) Quotidie morior, he bestowed himself by inch-meale; and might avow his impendar before God or man. And so far, it is the case of all them that be in this case: Sal terra, as Christ termeth them; which salt, by giving season, melts it self away, and ceaseth in short time to be that it was, Lux mundi, the light of the world. Aliis ministrando, seipfos consumendo, Lightning others, and wasting themselves: that is, abridging their natural course, and drawing on their untimely diseases and death, before their race be half run.

But, to make it a perfect impendar, and to give it his Super; after all this, he came to that other too. For so he did: in that point, like the poor labouring Ox (to which, in the IX Chapter of the former Epistle, he resembleth his state) spending his time, in earing the ground for corn, in inning the corn, in reading out the corn; his Neck yoked, and his mouth muzzled; and in the end when all is done, offered on the Altar too, and made a Sacrifice of. It was his case, and thither he came at last: and therefore in both cases he might truly say impendar, and Super-impendar both.

But to elevate it yet a point higher, we say, that as either of these are much; and both exceeding much: yet above both these is that, which (though we handle third, it) standeth first, the Adverb Libentissime. True it is which in Divinity we say: With God, the Adverb is above the Verb, and the inward affection (wherewith) above the outward action or Passion of Impendum or Impendar, either. With men, it is so too: When a displeasure is done us, say we not, We weigh not so much the injury it self, as the malicious mind of him that did offer it? And, if in evil it hold, why not in good much more? not so much Impendar, the thing which; as Libentissime, the good heart, wherewith it is bestowed. And, will you see the mind wherewith S. Paul will do both these? By this adverb libenter, you may look into his very heart. Bestow he will, and be bestowed too; and that, not Uncunque, in any sort, be contented to come to it; but willingly: willingly, nay, readily; readily, nay, gladly, (and the degree is somewhat, libenter) most gladly, in the very highest of all, in the Superlative degree. To spend, and spending to make no more reckoning of it, than of chaff: nay (it is more) to be glad of our loss; more glad, than others would be of their gain. To be spent, and in being spent, not to hold our life precious: Nor so, but to rejoice in it, and as if death were advantage; In hoc est charitas, certainly. Death (of it self) is bitter, and loss is not sweet: Then, so, to alter their natures, as to find sweetness in loss, whereat all repine; and gladness in death, which maketh all to mourn; verily, herein is love: Or, if not here, where? Nay, here it is indeed; and before now, we had it not. For, in flat terms, he avoweth (in the XIII Chapter before, of his former Epistle) if we sever this from the other two: One may part with all his goods to feed the poor, and yet have no love: One may give his body to be burnt, and yet have no love: And then, though he do impendere, bestow all he hath; and though he do impendi, be bestowed himself, nihil est, he is nothing; if he want this affection, which is love indeed, the very soul of love, and the other but συνίστα, but the skin and bones, and indeed nought else but the carcasse, without it. Therefore it was, that S. Paul set this in the first place before the other two, because the other two be but cyphers, and after this (the figure) set, they be tens and hundreds, and have their valuation: but without it of themselves they be but cyphers, just nothing. Thus much S. Paul hath said, in saying these three words, 1. Impendam, 2. Impendar, 3. Libentissime. Thus much they amount to.

And now must we pause a little, to see, what will become of all this, and what these three will work in the Corinthians.

We marvel at the Love: we shall more marvel, when we see, what manner of men, on whom it is bestowed. What his proofs are, we have heard; how large and how loving; and thus far is he come, only to win favour and like mutual love at their hands, without eye to any other thing in the world. No Vestra: (no) but Vos only. This is all. And, not this; not so much; Nay not so little, as this will come. Which if it did come, what singular thing were it? since the very Publicans do the like: Non enim, qui seipfos diligunt. Which we gather by his Ex. Wherein (as he may) in no loud and bitter manner he complaineth, but complainer though; that, seeking their love, and nothing else, so hard was his hap, he found it not: Not, in a greater, or as great a measure, as his; but, minors for magis; and so he a great loser by it. The more, the higher, the nearer his; the less, the lower, the further off, theirs: so that, little likelihood of ever meeting.

This

This is S. Pauls case, to meet with unkindness: and not only his, but Christ met with nine for one, too. Indeed, it is common, and not to be noted, but for commonness. De ingratia etiam ingrati queruntur, They that are unkind themselves inveigh against the unkindness of others. And, as it was said of them that made Caesar away; Oderunt tyrannum, non tyrannidem, so may it truly here: The Persons (that are unkind) they hate, rather than the vice it self. Yet, even to know this, doth no hurt, what Saint Paul met with in the Corinthians; and this too, that all unkind persons dwell not at Corinth. And, as he to be pitied, so they to be blamed. All other commodities return well from Corinth; only love is no traffick. Saint Paul cannot make his own again, but must be a great loser, withal. We cannot but pity the Apostle in this Minus of his. Saint Augustine saith well: Nulla est major ad amorem provocatio, quam prevenire amando. Nimis enim durus est animus, qui amorem etsi volebat impendere, nolit tamen rependere. No more kindly attractive of love, than in loving to prevent: For, exceeding stony is that heart, which, though it like not to Love first, will not Love again neither; neither first, nor second. Yet so hard were theirs that neither one way nor other, rectè, nor reflectè, would either begin, or follow. No not, provoked by all those so many forcible means, that S. Chrysostome maketh a wonder at it, Quomodo non converterentur in amorem, that they were not melted and resolved into love it self.

Luke 17. 14.
15. &c.

Which cold success openeth a way to the last point, the point indeed of highest admiration, and of hardest imitation of all the rest, in the conjunction Etsi: Which Conjunction is situated (much like Corinth it self) in a narrow land (as it were) between two Seas; beaten, upon the one with self-love, upon the other with unkindness: Hitherto we had to do, but with self-love, and his assaults: but now, unkindness also is up. These Corinthians (saith Saint Paul) my affection standeth toward them in all love; Love them and spare not (saith Self-love) but tene quod habes. Nay sure, Impendam, I will bestow it. Well; if there be no remedy: But (hear you?) Propitius esto tibi, for all that. Nay, nor that neither: Impendar, I will be bestowed my self too. Potesne bibere calicem hunc (saith Self-love?) and can you get it down, think you? Yea: Liberrissime exceeding gladly. There is the Conquest of Self-love.

4.
Amor extensis-
um.
Etsi minus dili-git.

Mt. 16. 22.
Mark. 10. 46.

But, all this while, he lived still under hope, hope of winning their love, for whose sakes, he had trod under foot the love of himself: Hope, that it had been but Impendam, all the while; he should have had returned his own again at least. But; at this Etsi, all is turned out and in. For, this is as much to say, as, All is to little purpose: for (to his grief) he must take notice, they care for none of them: nor for him ever a whit the more: yea, rather the less by a great deal. So that, all three be in vain: Et supra omnem laborem labor irritus, No labour to lost labour; Nor expence of life or goods, to that is spent in vain. For, that is not Impendam, but perdam, not spent, but cast away. Therefore the former, though it were funiculus triplex, a three-fold cord, and not easily broken, would not hold, but flie in pieces, but for this Etsi. To have then an Etsi in our love: this Etsi, this ei x̄i n̄i, though in vain, though our Impendam, prove a perdam: That is it. To be able to turn the sentence and say, Though the more I love, the less I be loved, Yet will I bestow; yea, be bestowed, and that most gladly, for all that. It is hard, I confess: but Solus amor erubescit nomen difficultatis, Love endureth not the name of difficulty, but shameth to confess any thing too hard, or too dangerous for it. For verily, unkindness is a mighty enemy, and the wounds of it, deep. Nay there be, that of themselves are most kind, in all the three degrees before remembered, as was King David, and as all noble natures are: why Self-love is nothing in their hands. But let them be encountered with unkindness (as David was in Nabal) they cannot stand the stroke; it woundeth deep: and the fester of Discontentment more dangerous than it. Indeed (saith David) this fellow, I see, I have done all in vain for him, for he rewardeth me evil for good: So and so do God to me, if he be alive to morrow by this time. Mark it in him; and in others infinite; and you shall see, whom self-love could not, unkindness hath overcome: and who passed well along the other three, at minus diligat their Love hath wracked, and from kind love, been turned to deadly hate.

1 Sam. 25. 15.

But neither can this appall the Apostle, or dislodge his love: but thorow all the rest, and thorow this too, he breaketh with his Etsi, and sheweth he will hold his resolution, maugre all unkindness: Minus diligat shall not do it; Unkindness must yield, Love will not.

And now we are come the highest, and never till now: but, now we are; that further we cannot go. The very highest pitch of well-doing, the Heathen man saw in part: for, he could say, Beneficium dare & perdere, to bestow love, and lose it, is well done: but, that is not it. This is it; Beneficium perdere & dare, to lose the first, and yet bestow the second; Etsi, yea, though the first were lost.

Seneca.

Yea, the Love of Loves; Christs own love, what was it? Majorem hanc charitatem nemo habet, quam ut vitam quis ponat pro amicis. Whereto Saint Bernard rejoyneth well, Tu majorem habuisti Domine, quia tu vitam posuisti etiam pro inimicis: Greater love than this hath no man, to bestow his life for his friends: Yet Lord (saith S. Bernard) Thou hadst greater, for thou bestowedst thy life for thy very enemies. And, to this love it is, that S. Paul aspireth; and near it he cometh; that in some sort we may likewise say to him, Tu majorem habuisti Paule, yea, thy love (Paul) was greater: for, thou art ready to do the like; not for thine enemies, but for thy unkind friends, the next degree to professed enemies. 1. To spend, 2. To spend, and be spent, 3. To spend, and be spent, and that most gladly: 4. Not only most gladly, but most gladly, Yea though.

John 15. 13.

Thus you have now his double conquest: Over the Love of himself first; and now, over Minus diligat, an unkind repulse too. And, in sign of victory, he setteth up his colours, even these four: 1. Impendam, 2. Impendar, 3. Liberrissime, and 4. Etsi. But Etsi is the chief; it is Christs colour; and, that the perfect Love, that wanteth Etsi.

Thus

II. Thus we have seen Love in his highest ascendent, and heard Love in his Magisterium, the hardest and highest, and indeed the Master-point of this Art. Which setteth us new on work, to pass over into the second part, and to enquire, what this object may be, so amiable, whereon Saint Paul hath set his affection so, that for it, he will do and suffer all this; and that so willingly without any exception, so constantly, without any giving over. All this is nothing but the zeal of souls, Zelus animarum facies hoc: It is, for their souls, all this. For their souls; and let their bodies go.

I. Which (first) draweth the diameter that maketh the partition between the two Loves: The love which S. Paul found; and the love which S. Paul left at Corinth. For, he found that which is Scelus corporum, the bodies unruly Affection, and infection too otherwhile; (if ever in any place, there, it abounded) but, he left Zelus animarum, the Souls perfection. Indeed, it falleth out sometimes; that in carnal love (or rather lust, than love) we may pattern all the former; and find (as the wiseman speaketh) some one destitute of understanding, wasting his whole substance, hazarding his life (and that, more willingly than wisely) perhaps to gain nothing but a scorn for his labour; and yet persisting in his folly still: and all this in the passion of concupiscence, to a vain creature; pleasing his phansie to the displeasing of God, and to the piercing of his soul one day with deep remorse for it: and except it do, to the utter ruine both of body and soul. We, have here at Corinth, a strange example of it, of * one, --- Ad cuius jacuit, Gracia tota fores, at whose doors, sundry of all sorts waited, suing and seeking, and (as one of them said) buying repentance at too dear a rate. But what need we fail to Corinth? even in our own age, we have enow fond examples of it: of Love set awry and forced amiss; diverted from the soul, where it should be bestowed, and lavished on the body, where a great deal less would serve. It is S. Augustines wish: O si excitare possemus homines & cum iis pariter excitari, ut tales amatores, &c! O that we could in this kind stir up others, and our selves (with them) be stirred up, but even to bestow such love on the immortal soul, as we see daily cast away on the corruptible body! What, but so much? and no more? Abstinere sic: sed minam vel sic: Till it might be more, would God, it were but as much in the mean time. Yet more, and much more it should be. Sed infelix Populus Dei non habet tantum fervorem in bono, quantum mali in malo, is S. Hierom's complaint. But the people of God (unhappy in that point) hath not that courage or constancie in the love of the Spirit, that the wicked world hath, in the lust of the flesh. That courage? Nay, nothing like: Ad erubescendum nostram dico, to our shame it must be spoken. Look but to the first point, Impendamus: doth not the body take it wholly up? And, if we fail in the lowest, what shall become of the rest? Well: S. Paul's love is, and ours must be, if it be right, pro animabus, Soul-love, which may serve for the first point of the sequestration.

2. But, why Pro animabus? what is there in the soul so lovely, that all this should be said or done for it? Why for souls? Why, take the soul out of the body which so much we dote on, but even half an hour, and the body will grow so out of our love, so deformed, so ugly, so every way loathsome, as they that now admire it, will then abhor it; and they that now cannot behold it enough, will not then, endure once to come near it, nor within the sight of it. This a natural man would answer: The soul is to be regarded of the body, for it maketh the body to be regarded. 2. But, a Christian man will say more for it. That the Love of Christ must be the rule of the love of Christians, and ours suitable to His. And Christ hath valued the soul, above the world it self, in direct affirming, That he, that to win the world, hazards his soul, makes but an unwise bargain: which bargain were wise enough, if he world were more worth. Appendere animam homo (saith Chrysostome) & Impendere in animam: If you would prize your souls better, you would bestow more on them. This is nothing: Christ hath valued your souls; valued and loved them above Himself; Himself, more worth than many worlds, yea, if they were ten thousand. I come now to the point. Is Christ to be loved? Why, all that S. Paul hitherto, hath professed all and every part of it, it was but to the Souls at second hand. His eye was upon Christ all the time of his profession. But, because Christ hath, by Deed enrolled, set over His love to mens souls, and willed us, toward them to shew, whatsoever to Him we profess; therefore, and for no other cause, it is, that he standeth thus affected. For that, those souls Christ so loved, that He loved not Himself, to love them. Dilexisti me Domine plus quam te, quando mori voluisti pro me (It is Augustine;) Dying for my soul (Lord) how shewd it, that my soul was dearer to thee, than thine own self. In love then to Christ, we are to love them that Christ loved; not sicut seipsum, as Himself, but plusquam seipsum, more than himself: and therefore, hath changed the Sicut of the Law, Sicut seipsum, as thy self, into a new Sicut, Sicut ego vos, as I have loved you. And, how did He love us? Even that He was the first that ever professed these four tous, 1. did bestow, 2. was bestowed, 3. most gladly, 4. yet though, the more He loved, the less we loved Him. Or (to give Him His right) a degree higher than Paul: Not, when we loved Him little, as faint friends; but hated Him greatly, as sworn enemies. For, He it was, that professed this art first. The words are indeed Christ's own: The primitive and most proper uttering them, belongeth to Him. None ever so fully or so fitly spake or can speak them, as the Son of God, on the Cross, from the chair of his profession. And, of Him there, Saint Paul learned Hoc carmen amoris. Himself confesseth as much (in the V. chapter of this Epistle) that it was love; not, his own love, but Christ's love (Charitas Christi extorsit) that brought these words from him. His, they be not, but ore tenus: the tongue his, but Christ the speaker: His they were; His they are, out of whose mouth, or from whose pensoever they come.

Were are come then now, where we may read Love in the very Original: even in the most complete perfection, that ever it was: Prostitute Christo, Christ Himself, the Professor saith, 1. Impendamus first: Bestow he will. If you will make port-sale of your love, none shall out-bid Him. Even whatsoever Himself is worth, He will bestow; His Kingdom, and the fulness of joy and glory in it for ever.

2. Impen-

2. Impendar. That? Why Consummaturum est; it is done already: all, hands and feet, head and heart Joh. 19. 30. opened wide; and all, even to the last drop of blood bestowed for us, on His Cross: where the love of souls triumphed over the love of His own life.

3. Libentissime, most gladly. Witness that speech: A Baptisme I have to be baptized with, and quomodo contritor, how am I pained, till I be at it! And, that too, That, to him that moved Him, not to bestow, but favour himself, he used no other terms than to the devil himself, Avoid Satan. Proof enough Mat. 16. 23. (say I) how willingly He went, and how unwillingly He would be kept from it.

4. And for His Esse: would God, it were not too plain: Both at His Cross; where the lowder their Crucifige, with the more strong crying and tears He prayed; Pater Ignosce: And ever since, usque hodie, till now, when (all may see) our regard is as little, as His love great; and he respected, as if he had done nothing for us. Every part of his Love, and the profession of his Love, but especially the Esse of his Love passeth all. For, Christ, by deed enrolled, hath set over his love to them. Which is that setteth such a price upon them, and maketh them so amiable, if not in their own kindness and loveliness, yet in the love of Christ himself. And it is the answer, that David, when he loseth his sleep, so think upon the people of God; that Moses, when he wearied himself in bearing causes from morning to night; that Joshua, when he fighteth the Lords battels, and jeopardis his life in the high places of the field; that any, that weares and spends himself in the common cause, may make, as well as S. Paul: Why, it is pro animabus, it is for souls, for safeguard of souls, those souls, which Christ hath so dearly loved, and so dearly bought; and to our loves so carefully commended: Siquis ego vobis, as he did or ever shall do for us, that we do for them. Whereto, if not the souls themselves (for the most part unthankful) yet this motive of love, of Christs love, doth in a manner violently constrain us: For, though nothing is less violent in the manner; yet, in the work, nothing worketh more violent than it. amst ord had blow

I conclude then with S. Bernard's demand: Quæ christiutilitas in sermone hoc? What use have we of all that hath been said? For, he that wrote it is dead; and they to whom it was written, are gone. But the Scripture still remaineth, and we are to take good by it. The Application.

It serveth first, To possess our souls of that excellent vertue, Major horum, the greatest of the three; nay, the vertrue, without which, the rest be but Cyphers; the vertue which shineth brightest in Christs example, and standeth highest in his commendation, Love.

But, Love, the action of vertue, not the passion of vice. Love, not of the body, the vile body (So the Holy Ghost termeth it, Phil. 3.) but of the soul, the precious soul of man, Pro. 6. Love of souls; the more, the more acceptable: If of a City, well; if of a County, better; if of a Country or Kingdom, best of all.

And for them and for their love to be ready to prove it by S. Pauls trial; to open our Impendam, to vow our Impendar, and as near as may be, to aspire to the same degree of Libentissime. Verily, they that neither (as the Apostle) for the winning of souls, or for the defence and safety of souls, many thousands of souls, the souls of an whole Estate, in high and heroical courage, have already past their Impendam, and are ready to offer themselves every day to Impendar, and with that resolute forwardness, which we all see (for, it is a case presently in all our eyes:) They that do thus, no good can be spoke of their love answerable to the desert of it. Heavenly it is, and in heaven to receive the reward.

But, when all is done, we must take notice of the worlds nature. For, as Saint Paul left it, so we shall find it (that is) we shall not perhaps meet with that regard, we promise our selves. Saint Pauls Magis diligam met with a Minus diligar.

Therefore above all remember his Esse. For to be kinde, and that to the unkind: to know, such we shall meet with; yea, to meet with them, and yet hold our Esse, and love nevertheless. This certainly is that love, Majorem quàm nemo; and, there is on earth no greater sign of a soul thoroughly settled in the love of Christ, than to stand thus minded: Come what will come, Magis or Minus, Si or Esse; frown or favour, respect or neglect; Quid facio, hoc & faciam, What I do, I will do, with eye to Christ, with hope of reward from Him, let the world be as it is, and as it ever hath been.

Samuel (this day in the first Lesson) when he had spent his life in a well ordered Government, that his very enemies could no way except to, in his old dayes was requited with Fac nobis Regem; only upon an humour of innovation. What then? Grew he discontent? No: non obstante, for all their ingratitude (Good man) this he professeth: God forbid (saith he) I should sin in ceasing to pray for you; yea, I will shew you the good and right way of the Lord, for all that. That may serve to match this, out of the Old Testament. For, here in like sort, we have Pauls Minus diligar, before our eyes; and we see, he is at his Libentissime, Esse, for all that. You learn then; as, that Minus diligar may come; so, in case it do come, what to do; even to consummate your Love with a triumph over unkindness. Learn this, and all is learned: Learn this, and the whole Art is had.

And we have, in this verse, and in the very first word of it, that, will enter us into this lesson.

First, from Ego verò: from his and from our own persons, we may begin to raise this duty. When we were deep in our Minus diligar, and smally regarded Christ; nay, Cum inimici essemus (to take as we should) when we were his enemies, of his over-abundant kindness it pleased him to call us from the blindness of error, to the knowledge of his truth: and from a deep consumption of our souls by sin, to the state of health and grace. And if S. Paul were loved, when he raged, and breathed Blasphemy against Christ and his Name, is it much, if for Christs sake, he swallow some unkindness at the Corinthians hands? Is it much if we let fall a duty upon them, upon whom God the Father droppeth his rain, and God the Son drops, ye sheds His blood, ut per æquacitatem & concordiam, upon evil and unthankful men.

Surely, if Love or well doing or any good must perish (which is the second Motive) and be lost through some some bodies default (where it lighteth) much better it is, that it perish in the Corinthians hands, than in Pauls; by them, in their evil receiving, than by him, in his not bestowing; through their unkindness, than through our abruptness. For, so, the sin shall be theirs, and we and our souls innocent before God. Impendatur per nos: Perdat per illos.

But, perish it shall not (which is the third point) though for them it may. For howsoever of them it may be truly said, The more we love, the less, they: Of Christ it never can, nor ever shall be said, For, S. Paul, for the little love at their hands, found the greater at His. Though the more he loved, the less they loved him; yet the less they loved, the more Christ loved him. Of whom to be loved, even in the least degree, is worth all the love of Corinth and Achaia too. So that, here we find (that we missed all this while) a tamen for our Esti: Though not they, yet Christ. Which tamen maketh amends for all, Ei vigilantibus verbis usus est Apostolus; that S. Paul spoke not at adventure, but was well advised when he used the word Impendam. For, it is Impendam indeed, not Perdam: Not lost, but layed out: Not cast away, but implored, on Him, for whose love, none hath or ever shall bestow ought, but he shall receive a superimpendar of an hundred-fold. And indeed, all other loves, of the flesh, or world, or whatsoever else, shall perish and come to nothing: and of this, and this only, we may say Impendam, truly.

So that (to make an end) though true it be, that S. Bernard saith, Perfectus amor vires non sumit de spe, Perfect love receiveth no manner strength from hope; yet, for that our love is not without his imperfections, all under one view, we may with one eye behold Christis magis diligam, when we were scarce in our minds, may scarce loved him at all: and with the other, look upon Impendam, that, what we do herein, though at mens hands we find no return, at *Christ*s we shall, and it shall be the best bestowed service, that ever we bestowed, that we bestow in this kind.

Now, would God the same Spirit, which here wrote this verse, would write it in our hearts; that those things are thus; That such a Rependam there shall be, and we well assured of it, ut & nos converteremur in amorem, that we might be transformed into this Love. Which blessing, Almighty God bestow on that which hath been said, for *Christ*s, &c.

On the Five and Twentieth of March, being Good Friday.

Zach. Chap. XII. Ver. X.

Respicient in Me, quem transfixerunt.

And they shall look upon Me, whom they have pierced.

That great and honorable Person the Eunuch sitting in his Chariot, and reading a like place of the Prophet Esay, asketh. St. Philip. I pray thee, of whom speaketh the Prophet this? of himself, or some other? A question very material, and to great good purpose; and to be asked by us, in all Prophecies. For, knowing who the Party is, we shall not wander in the Prophets meaning. Acts 8. 34.

Now, if the Eunuch had been reading this of Zachary (as then he was, that of Esay) and had asked the same question of Saint Philip, he would have made the same answer. And as he, out of those words took occasion; so may we, out of these, take the like, to preach Jesus, unto them. For neither of himself, nor of any other, but of Jesus, speaketh the Prophet this: and the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of this Prophecy.

That so it is, the Holy Ghost is our warrant; who, in S. John's Gospel reporting the passion, and the last act of the passion (the opening of the side, and piercing the heart of our Saviour Christ) faith plainly, that in piercing, the very words of the prophesie were fulfilled, Respicient in Me quem transfixerunt. Apoc. 19. 16.

Which term of piercing we shall the more clearly conceive, if with the ancient Writers, we sort it with the beginning of Psalms 22. the Psalm of the Passion. For, in the very Front or Inscription of this Psalm, our Saviour Christ is compared Cervo matutino, to the morning Hart: that is, a Hart roused early in the morning, (as from his very birth he was by Herod) hunted and chased all his life long, and this day brought to his end, and (as the poor Deer) stricken and pierced thorow side, and heart and all: which is it, we are here willed to behold.

There is no part of the whole course of our Saviour Christ's life or death, but it is well worthy our looking on; and from each part in it, there goeth vertue to do us good: But, of all other parts, and above them all, this last part of his piercing, is here commended unto our view. Indeed how could the Prophet commend it more, than in avowing it to be an act of grace, as in the fore-part of this verse, he doth: Effundam super eos spiritum Gratia, & Respicient, &c. as if he should say: If there be any grace in us, we will think it worth the looking on. John 19. 37.

Heb. 12. 2.

Neither doth the Prophet only, but the Apostle also, call us unto it, and willeth us ἀποβῆναι to look unto, and regard Jesus the Anchor and Emisher of our faith. Then specially, and in that act, when for the joy of our Salvation set before Him, He endured the Crise, and despised the shame; that is, in this spectacle, when he was pierced.

John 3. 14.

Which (sure) is continually, all our life long, to be done by us; and at all times, some time to be spared unto it: But, if at other times, most requisite at this time; this very day, which we hold holy to the memory of His Passion, and the piercing of his precious side. That, though on other dayes, we employ our eyes otherwise, this day at least, we fix them on this Object, Respicere in Eum. This day (I say) which is dedicated to none other end, but even to lift up the Son of Man, as Moyses did the serpent in the wilderness, that we may look upon Him and live: When every Scripture that is so founded on nothing but this unto us: when by the office of preaching Jesus Christ is lively described in our sight, and (as the Apostle speaketh) is visibly crucified among us? when in the memorial of the Sacrament, His death is shewed forth till He come, and the mystery of this His piercing, so many wayes, so affectually represented before us. This Prophecy therefore, if at any time, at this time to take place. Respicere in Me &c.

Gal. 3. 1.

1 Cor. 11. 26.

The Division

The principal words are but two, and set down unto us, in two points: 1. The sight it self, that is, the thing to be seen: 2. and the sight of it; that is, the act of seeing or looking. Quem transfixerunt is the Object, or spectacle propounded. Respicere in Eum, is the Act, or duty enjoined.

Of which, the Object though in place latter, in nature is the former, and first to be handled: for that there must be a thing first set up, before we can set our eyes to look upon it.

I.
The sights or Object generally.
1 Christ.
Dan. 9. 26.

OF the Object, generally first. Certain it is, that Christ is here meant: Saint John hath put us out of doubt for that point. And Zachary (here) could have set down His name, and said, Respicere in Christum: for, Daniel (before) had named his name, Occiditur Messias; and Zachary being after him in time, might have easily repeated it. But, it seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to him, rather to use a circumlocution; and suppressing his name of Christ, to express Him by the stile or term, quem transfixerunt. Which being done by choice, must needs have a reason of the doing, and so it hath.

Esay 53. 10.
Dan. 9. 26.

First, the better to specific and particularize the Person of Christ, by the kind, and most peculiar circumstance of His death. Esay had said, Moriatur, Die He shall, and lay down His soul an offering for sin, 2. Dye, but what Death? natural, or a violent? Daniel tells us. Occiditur: He shall dye not a natural, but a violent death. 3. But many are slain after many sorts; and divers kinds there be of violent deaths; the Psalmist the more particularly to set it down, describeth it thus: They pierced my hands and my feet: which is only proper to the death of the Cross. 4. Dye, and be slain, and be crucified: But, sundry else were crucified; and therefore, the Prophet (here) to make up all, addeth, that He should not only be crucifixus, but transfixus; not only have his hands and His feet, but even his heart pierced, too. Which very note severs him from all the rest, with as great particularity as may be. For that, though many besides at other times, and some at the same time (with him) were crucified; yet, the side and the heart of none was opened, but His, and His only.

2 Christ.
pierced.

1 Cor. 2. 2.

2 Secondly, as to specific Christ Himself in Person, and to sever Him from the rest, so in Christ Himself and in His Person to sever from the rest of His doings and sufferings, what that is, that chiefly concerneth us, and we specially are to look to: and that, this dayes work, Christ Pierced. Saint Paul doth best express this: I esteemed (saith he) to know nothing among you, save Jesus Christ, and Himself crucified: That is, the perfection of our knowledge is Christ. The perfection of our knowledge in, or touching Christ, is the knowledge of Christ's piercing. This, the chief Sight; Nay (as it shall after appear) in this sight, are all sights: So that, know this and know all. This generally.

2.
The Object
specially.
1. The Passion is self Quid.

Now, specially: In the Object, two things offer themselves: 1. The Passion, or suffering it self; which was, to be pierced, 2. And the Persons, by whom. For, if the Prophet had not intended, the Persons should have had their respect too: he might have said Respicere in Eum qui transfixus est, (which passive would have carried the Passion it self full enough:) but, so, he would not; but rather choose to say, quem transfixerunt; which doth necessarily imply the Piercers themselves too. So, that we must needs have an eye in the handling, both to the fact, and to the Persons, 1. quid, and 2. quibus, both what, and of whom.

3 The Degree thereof:
Transfixerunt.

In the Passion, we must consider the degree: for, transfixerunt, is a Word of gradation: more than fixerunt, or suffixerunt, or confixerunt: either. Expressing unto us the piercing, not with whip and scourges; nor of the nailes and thornes, but, of the spear-point. Not, the whips and scourges, wherewith his skin and flesh were pierced; nor the nailes and thornes, wherewith His feet, hands and head were pierced: but, the Spear-point, which pierced and went through his very heart it self: for, of that wound, of the wound in his heart, is this spoken (Jo. 19. 34) Therefore trans, is here a transcendum; through and through: through skin and flesh; through hands and feet, through side and heart and all: the deadliest and deepest wound, and of highest gradation.

Secondly,

Secondly, as the Preposition (Trans) hath his gradation of diverse degrees; so, the Pronoun (Me) hath his generality of divers parts, best expressed in the Original. Upon Me: not, upon my body and soul: Me.² The Extent Upon Me, whose Person, not whose parts, either body without, or soul within; but Upon Me, whom wholly, body, and soul, quick and dead, they have pierced.

Of the bodies piercing, there can be no question; since, no part of it was left unpierced. Our senses certify us of that, what need we further witness? ^{1 His Body;}

Of the Souls too, it is as certain; and there can be no doubt of it neither: that we truly may affirm, Christ, not in part, but wholly was pierced. For, we should do injury to the sufferings of our Saviour, if we should conceive by this piercing, none other but that of the Spear. ^{2 His Soul.}

And may a soul then be pierced? Can any Spear point go through it? Truly Siméon saith to the Blessed Virgin, by way of prophesie, that the sword should go through her soul, at the time of His Passion. And as the sword through her's, so, I make no question, but the spear through His. And, if through her's, which was but anima compatiens; through His, much more, which was anima patiens; since Compassion, is but Passion at rebound. Howbeit, it is not a sword of steel, or a spear-head of iron, that entrench the soul, but the metal of another temper: the dint whereof no less goreth and woundeth the soul in proportion, than those do the body. So that, we extend this piercing of Christ further, than to the visible gash in his side; even to a piercing of another nature, whereby, not his heart only was stabbed, but his very spirit wounded too. ^{Luke 2. 35.}

The Scripture recounteth two: and of them both, expressly saith, that they both pierce the soul. The Apostle saith it, by Sorrow: And pierced themselves through with many sorrows: The Prophet, of Reproach: There are, whose words are like the pricking of a sword: and that, to the Soul, both: for, the body feels neither. With these, even with both these, was the Soul of Christ Jesus wounded. ^{1 Tim. 6. 10; Psal. 64. 34.}

For sorrow: it is plain through all four Evangelists: undig; tristis est anima mea usq; ad mortem; My soul is invironed on every side with sorrow, even to the death: Capit Jesus cadere & parere, Jesus began to be distressed and in great anguish. Factus in agonia, being cast into an agony, Iam carbata est anima mea; Now is my soul troubled: Avowed by them all; Confest by Himself. Yea, that His strange and never else heard of sweat; drops of blood plentifully issuing from Him all over His body, what time, no manner of violence was offered to body; no man then touching him, none being near him; that blood came certainly from some great sorrow, wherewith his soul was pierced. And, that his most dreadful cry, which at once moved all the powers of heaven and earth, My God, My God, &c. was the voice of some mighty Anguish, wherewith his soul was smitten; and that in other sort, than with any material spear. For, Derelinqui à Deo, the body cannot feel it, or tell what it meaneth. It is the Soul's complaint; and therefore without all doubt, his soul within him was pierced, and suffered, though not that, which (except charity be allowed to expound it) cannot be spoken without blasphemy; Not so much (God forbid;) yet much, and very much; and much more than others seem to allow; or how much, it is dangerous to define.

To this edge of sorrow, if the other of piercing despatch, be added as a point (as, added it was) it will strike deep into any heart; especially, being wounded with so many sorrows before. But, the more noble the heart, the deeper; who beareth any grief more easily than this grief, the grief of a contumelious reproach. To persecute a poor distressed soul, and to seek to vex Him that is already wounded at the heart, why, it is the very pitch of all wickedness; the very extremity that malice can do; or affliction can suffer. And to this pitch were they come, when after all their wretched villainies and spitting, and all their savage indignities in reviling Him most opprobriously, He being in the depth of all his distress, and for very anguish of soul crying, Eli, Eli, &c. they staid those that would have relieved him; and (void of all humanity) then scorned; saying: Scay, let alone, let us see, if Elias will now come and take Him down. This barbarous and brutish inhumanity of theirs, must needs pierce deeper into His Soul, than ever did the iron into his side. ^{With sorrow. Mar. 16. 38. Mark 14. 34. Mark 14. 33. Luke 24. 44. John 12. 27. Mar. 27. 46.}

To all which if we it adde, not only that horrible ingratitude of theirs, there by Him seen; but ours also no less than theirs by Him foreseen at the same time; (Who make so slender reckoning of these His piercings, and (as they were a matter not worth the looking on) vouchsafe not so much as to spend an hour in the due regard and meditation of them: Nay, not, that only, but further, by uncessant sinning, and that without remorse, do most unkindly requite those His bitter Pains, and as much as in us lies, even crucifix affresh the Son of God, making a mock of Him and His piercings.) These, I say (for, these all and every of them in that instant were before His eyes) must of force enter into, and go thorow and thorow His Soul and Spirit; that, what with those former sorrows, and what with these after indignities, the Prophet might truly say of Him, and He of himself, In Me, Upon Me; not whose body, or whose soul, but, whom entirely and wholly, but in body and soul, alive and dead: they have pierced and passioned this day on the Cross. ^{With reproach. Psal. 69. 26. Mar. 27. 49. Heb. 6. 6.}

Of the Persons: which as it is necessarily implied in the word, is very properly incident to the matter it self. For, it is usual, when one is found slain (as here) to make inquiry, by whom he came by his death. Which so much the rather is to be done by us, because there is commonly an error in the Word, touching the Parties that were the causes of Christ's Death. Our manner is, either to lay it on the Souldiers, that were the Instruments; Or if not upon them, upon Pilate the Judge that gave sentence; Or if not upon him, upon the people that importuned the Judge; Or lastly, if not upon them, upon the Elders of the Jews that animated the people: And this is all to be found by our Quest of Inquiry. ^{2 The Persons & quibus.}

But the Prophet here inditeth others. For, by saying, They shall look, &c. Whom They have pierced, he intendeth by very construction, that the first and second (They), are not two, but one and the same parties: And that they that are here willed to look upon Him, are they, and none other; that were the authors of this fact, even of the murder of Jesus Christ. And (to say truth) the Prophet's intent is no other but to bring the malefactors themselves that pierced Him, to view the body and the wounded heart of Him whom they have so pierced.

In the course of Justice, we say and say truly; when a party is put to death, that the Executioner cannot be said to be the cause of his death; nor the Sheriff, by whose commandment he doth it; neither yet the Judge by whose sentence; nor the Twelve men, by whose verdict, nor the Law it self, by whose authority it is proceeded in. (For God forbid we should indite these, or any of these, of murder:) Solum peccatum homicida: Sin, and Sin only is the murderer. Sin (I say) either of the party that suffereth; or of some other, by whose means, or for whose cause, he is put to death.

Now, Christ's own sin it was not, that he died for. That is most evident. Not so much by His own challenge, Quis ex vobis arguit me de peccato? as by the report of his Judge, who openly professed, That he had examined Him, and found no fault in Him: No nor yet Herod; for, being sent to Him, and examined by Him also, nothing worthy death was found in Him: And therefore, calling for water, and washing his hands, he protesteth his own innocency of the blood of this Just Man: thereby pronouncing him Just, and void of any cause, in himself, of his own death.

It must then necessarily be the sin of some others, for whose sake Christ Jesus was thus pierced. And if we ask, Who those others be? or whose sins they were? the Prophet Esay tells us, Posuit super Eum iniquitates omnium nostrarum. He laid upon Him the transgressions of us all: who should (even for those our many, great, and grievous transgressions) have eternally been pierced, in body, and soul: with torment and sorrows of a never-dying death, had not he stepped between us and the blow, and receiv'd it in his own body: even the dint of the wrath of God to come upon us. So that it was the sin of our polluted hands, that pierced his hands: the swiftness of our feet to do evil, that nailed His feet: the wicked devices of our heads, that goaded His head: and the wretched desires of our hearts, that pierced his heart. We that look upon, it is we that pierced Him; and it is we that pierced Him, that are willed to look upon Him. Which bringeth it home to us; to me myself that speak, and to you your selves that hear; and applicth it most effectually to every one of us, who evidently seeing that we were the cause of this his piercing, if our hearts be not too too hard, ought to have remorse, to be pierced with it.

When for delivering to David a few loaves, Abimelech and the Priests were by Saul put to the sword, if David did then acknowledg with grief of heart, and say, I, even I am the cause of the death of thy Father and all his house, (when he was but onely the occasion of it, and not that direct neither:) may not we (nay, ought not we) much more justly and deservedly say of this piercing of Christ our Saviour, that we, verily, even we, are the cause thereof: as verily we are, even the principals in this murder; and the Jews and others, on whom we seek to derive it, but only accessaries and instrumental causes thereof. Which point, we ought, as continually, so, seriously to think of; and that no less than the former. The former, to stir up compassion in our selves, over him that thus was pierced: the latter to work deep remorse in our hearts, for being authors of it. That he was pierced; will make our bowels melt with compassion, over Christ. That he was pierced by us, that look on Him, if our hearts be not flint (as Job saith) or as the nether Mill-stone, will breed remorse over our selves, wretched sinners as we are.

II.
The Aff.
To look upon Him.

The Aff followeth in these words: Respicere in Eum. A request most reasonable, to look upon Him; but to look upon Him; to bestow but a look and nothing else; which even of common humanity we cannot deny; Quia non aspicere, despicere est. It argueth great Contempt, not to vouchsafe it the cast of our eye; as if it were an Object utterly unworthy the looking toward. Truly, if we mark it well, nature it self, of it self enclineth to this act. When Amasa treacherously was slain by Joab, and lay weltering in his blood by the wayes side, the story saith, That not one of the whole Army, then marching by, but when he came at him, stood still and looked on him.

2 Sam. 22. 12.

Luk. 3. 12.

In the Gospel, the party that going from Jerusalem to Jerico was spoiled, and wounded, and lay drawing on, though the Priest and Levite that passed near the place relieved him not, as the Samaritan after did; yet it is said of them, they went near and looked on, and then passed on their way. Which desire is even natural in us: so that even Nature it self enclineth us to satisfy the Prophet.

Psal. 28. 5.

Esa. 43. 18.

Nature doth, and so doth Grace too. For, generally we are bound to regard the work of the Lord, and to consider the operation of his hands: and specially this work; in comparison whereof God himself saith, the former works of His, shall not be remembered, nor the things done of old once regarded.

Lam. 1. 12.

Num. 21. 8, 9

Yea Christ himself, pierced as he is, inviteth us to it. For in the Prophet here, it is not In eum; but In me: not, on Him; but, on Me, whom they have pierced. But more fully in Jeremy: for to Christ himself do all the ancient Writers apply (and that most properly) those words of the Lamentation: Have ye no regard all ye that pass by this way? Behold and see if there be any sorrow like my sorrow, which is done unto me, wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me, in the day of his fierce wrath.

Our own profit (which is wont to persuade well) inviteth us: for that, as from the Brazen Serpent no virtue issued to heal, but unto them that stedily beheld it; so neither doth there, from Christ, but upon those, that with the eye of faith have their contemplation on this object who thereby draw life from him; and without it may and do perish, for all Christ and his Passion.

And, if nothing else move us, this last may: even our danger. For, the time will come, when we our selves shall desire, that God looking with an angry countenance upon our sins, would turn his face from them them and us, and look upon the face of his Christ, that is, respiciere in Eum: which shall justly be then denied us, if we our selves could never be gotten to do this duty, respiciere in eum, when it was called for of us. God shall not look upon him, at ours, whom we would not look upon, at his request.

In the Act it self are enjoined three things. 1. That we do it with attention: for, it is not Me, but in Me: Not only Upon Him, but Into Him. 2. That we do it oft, again and again; with iteration: for, Respicient, is re-aspicient. Not a single act, but an act iterated. 3. That we cause our nature to do it, as it were, by virtue of an Injunction, per actum elicitem, as the Schoolmen call it. For in the Original, it is in the Commanding Conjunction, that signifieth, facient se respicere, rather than Respicient.

First then, not slightly, superficially or perfunctorily, but stedfastly, and with due attention, to look upon him. And, not to look upon the out-side alone, but to look into the very entrails; and with our eye to pierce him that was thus pierced. In Eum beareth both,

1. Upon him, if we look, we shall see so much, as Pilate shewed of him, Ecco Homo, that He is a Respicient Man. And, if he were not a man, but some other unreasonable creature, it were great ruth to see him so handled. T. With Attention

2. Among men we less pitie Malefactors, and have most compassion on them that be Innocent. And, he was innocent, and deserved it not (as you have heard) his enemies themselves being his Judges.

3. Among those that be innocent, the more noble the person, the greater the grief, and the more heavy ever is the spectacle. Now, if we consider the Verse of this Text well, we shall see, it is God himself, and no man that here speaketh (for, to God only it belongeth, to pour out the Spirit of Grace; it passeth mans reach, to do it:) so that, if we look better upon him, we shall see as much as the Communion saw, that this party thus pierced is the Son of God. The Son of God slain! Surely, he that hath done this deed is the Child of death, would every one of us say: Es tu es homo, Thou art the man, would the Prophet answer us: You are they, for whose sins the Son of God hath his very heart-blood shed forth. Which must needs strike into us remorse of a deeper degree than before: That, not only, it is we that have pierced the Partie thus found slain; but, that this Party, whom we have thus pierced, is not a principal person among the children of men, but even the Only begotten Son of the most high God: Which will make us cry out (with S. Augustine) O amaritudo peccati mei, ad quam tollenda necessarii sunt amaritudo tanta! Now sure, deadly was the bitterness of our sins, that might not be cured, but by the bitter death and blood-shedding passion of the Son of God. And this may we see looking upon Him. Mat. 27. 54. 2 Sam. 12. 33.

But now then, if we look In Eum, into Him, we shall yet see a greater thing, which may raise us in comfort, as far as the other cast us down. Even the bowels of compassion and tender love, whereby he would and was content to suffer all this for our sakes. For that, whereas (a) no man had power to take His life from Him, (for he had power to have commanded (b) twelve Legions of Angels, in his just defence: and, without any Angel at all, power enough of himself, with his (c) Ego sum, to strike them all to the ground.) He was content, notwithstanding all this, to lay down his life for us sinners. The greatness of which love passeth the greatest love that man hath: for (d) greater love than this hath no man, but to bestow his life for his friends; whereas, He condescended to lay it down for His enemies, even for them that sought His death, to lay down His life, and to have His blood shed for them that did shed it; to be pierced for His piercers. Look how the former In Eum worketh grief, considering the great injuries offered to so great a Personage; So, to temper the grief of it, this latter In Eum giveth some comfort, that so great a Person, should so greatly love us, as, for our sakes, to endure all those so many injuries, even to the piercing of His very heart. Ioh. 10. 18. Mat. 26. 53. Ioh. 18. 6. Ioh. 15. 13.

Secondly, Respicient (that is) Re-aspicient: Not, once or twice, but ostentimius to look upon it: that is (as the Prophet saith here) iteratis vicibus, to look again and again: or (as the Apostle saith) Resagitare, to think upon it, over and over again, as it were to dwell in it for a time. In a sort, with the frequentness of this our beholding it, to supply the weakness and want of our former attention. Surely, the more steadily and more often we shall fix our eye upon it, the more we shall be enured: and being enured, the more desire to do it. For, at every looking, some new sight will offer it self, which will offer unto us occasion, either of godly sorrow, true repentance, sound comfort, or some other reflection, issuing from the beams of this heavenly mirror. Which point, because it is the chief point, the Prophet here calleth us to; even, how to look upon Christ often, and to be the better for our looking. It shall be very agreeable to the Text, and to the Holy Ghosts chief intent, if we prove how, and in how diverse sorts, we may with profit behold and look upon Him, whom thus we have pierced.

First, then, looking upon Him; we may bring forth for the first effect, that which immediately followeth this Text it self, in this Text, Et plangent Eum: Respice & plange. First, look and lament, or mourn: which is indeed the most kindly and natural effect of such a spectacle. Look upon Him that is pierced; and with looking upon Him, be pierced thy self: Respice & transfigere. A good effect of our first look, if we could bring it forth. At least wise, if we cannot Respice & transfigere look and be pierced; yet that it might be Respice & compungere, that with looking on Him, we might be pricked in our hearts; and have it enter past the skin, though it go not clean through: Which difference in this Verse the Prophet seemeth to infinuate, when, first he willeth us to mourn, as for ones only son, with whom all is lost. Or, if that cannot be had, to mourn, as for a first begotten son; which is, though not so great, yet a great mourning: even for the first begotten, though other sons be left. Act. 2. 37.

And, in the next Verse, if we cannot reach to natural grief; yet he willeth us to mourn with a Cruel, even with such a lamentation, as was made for Josias. And Behold a greater than Josias is here, Com- Verse. 11.

ming not (as he) to an honoured death in battel; but to a most vile death, the death of a Malefactor: And not (as Josias) dying without any fault of theirs; but mangled and massacred in this shameful sort, for us; even for us and our transgressions. Verily, the dumb and senseless creatures had this effect wrought in them (of mourning) at the sight of His death; in their kind sorrowing for the murder of the Son of God. And we truly shall be much more senseless than they, if it have in us no work to the like effect. Especially, considering it was not for them, He suffered all this; nor they no profit by it: but, for us it was; and we by it saved: And yet, they had compassion, and we none. Be this then the first.

Now, as the first is Respice & transfigere, Look upon Him, and be pierced: so, the second may be (and that fitly) Respice & transfige; Look upon Him, and pierce, and pierce that in thee, that was the cause of Christs piercing: (that is) sin and the lusts thereof. For, as men that are pierced indeed with grief of an indignity offered, withal are pricked to take revenge on him that offers it: such a like affection ought our second looking to kindle in us; even to take a wreak or revenge upon sin, quia fecit hoc, because he hath been the cause of all this. I mean (as the Holy Ghost termeth it) a mortifying or crucifying; a thrusting through of our wicked passions and concupiscences, in some kind of repaying those manifold villanies, which the Son of God suffered by means of them. At leastwise (as before) if it kindle not our zeal so far against sin; yet, that it may slake our zeal and affection to sin: that is, Respice, ne respicias: Respice Christum, ne respicias peccatum. That we have less mind, less liking, less acquaintance with sin, for the Passion-sake. For that, by this means we do in some sort, spare Christ; and (at least) make His wounds no wider: Whereas by affecting sin anew, we do, what in us lieth, to crucify Him afresh, and both increase the number, and enlarge the wideness of His wounds.

It is no unreasonable request, That, if we list not wound sin: yet, seeing Christ hath wounds enough, and they wide and deep enough, we should forbear to pierce Him further, and have (at least) this second fruit of our looking upon Him: either to look and to pierce sin; or to look, and spare to pierce Him any more.

dilige.

Now, as it was sin that gave Him these wounds: so, it was love to us that made Him receive them, being otherwise able enough to have avoided them all. So that, He was pierced with love, no less then with grief: and it was that wound of love, made Him so constantly to endure all the other. Which love we may read in the *palm*s of His hands (as the Fathers express it, out of Esay 49.16.) For, in the *Palm*s of His hands, He hath graven us, that he might not forget us. And the print of the nails in them, are as Capital letters to record his love towards us. For, Christ pierced on the Cross is liber charitatis, the very book of love laid open before us. And again, this love of His we may read in the clef of His heart, quia clavus penetrans factus est nobis Clavis reserans (saith Bernard) ut pateant nobis viscera per vulnera. The point of the Spear serves us in stead of a Key, letting us through his wounds, see his very bowels, the bowels of tender love and most kind compassion, that would for us endure to be so entreated. That, if the Jews (that stood by) said truly of him, at Lazarus grave, Ecce quomodo dilexit Eun! when He shed a few tears out of his eyes; much more truly may we say of him, Ecce quomodo dilexit nos! seeing him shed, both Water and Blood, and that in great plenty; and that, out of his heart.

Joh. 11. 36.

Which sight ought to pierce us with love too, no less than before it did with sorrow. With one, or with both: for, both have power to pierce; but specially Love: Which except it had entred first and pierced him, no naile or spear could ever have entred. Then let this be the third, Respice & dilige: Look, and be pierced with love of him, that so loved thee, that he gave himself in this sort to be pierced for thee.

4.
spera.

And forasmuch as it is Christ his own self, that, resembling his passion on the Cross to the Brasen Serpent lift up in the wilderness, maketh a correspondence between their beholding and our believing (for so it is Joh. 3. 14.) we cannot avoid, but must needs make that an effect too: Even Respice & crede: And, well may we believe and trust him, whom looking a little before, we have seen so constantly loving us. For, the sight of that love maketh credible unto us, whatsoever in the whole Scripture, is affirmed unto us of Christ, or promised in his name: So that, believe it, and believe all. Neither is there any time, wherein with such cheerfulness or fullness of faith we cry unto him, My Lord, and My God, as when our eye is fixed upon the print of the nails, and on the hole in the side of him that was pierced for us. So that, this fourth duty Christ Himself layeth upon us, and willeth from his own mouth, Respice & Crede.

Joh. 10. 18.

Rom. 8. 32.

And, believing this of him, what is there, the eye of our hope shall not look for from him? What would not he do for us, that for us would suffer all this? It is Saint Pauls argument, If God gave his Son for us, how shall he deny us any thing with Him? That is, Respice & Spera. Look upon him, and his heart opened, and from the gate of hope promise thy self, and look for all manner of things that good are. Which our expectation is reduced to these two: 1. The deliverance from the evil of our present misery: 2. and the restoring to the good of our primitive felicity. By the death of this undefiled Lamb, as by the yearly Passeeover, look for, and hope for a passage out of Egypt: which spiritually is our redemption from the servitude of the power of darkness. And, as by the death of the Sacrifice, we look to be freed from whatsoever evil: So, by the death of the High Priest, look we for, and hope for restitution to all that is good; even to our forfeited estate in the land of Promise, which is Heaven it self, where is all joy and happiness for evermore. Respice & Spera, Look, and look for: by the Lamb that is pierced, to be freed from all misery; by the High Priest that is pierced, fruition of all felicity.

Now,

Now, inasmuch as His heart is pierced, and His side opened; the opening of the one, and the piercing of the other, is, to the end, somewhat may flow forth. To which end (saith Saint Augustine) Vigilam Respite & Recipe. is verbo usus est Apostolus, the Apostle was well advised when he used the word opening; for, there issued out water and blood which make the sixt effect, Respite, & Recipe. Marke it running out, and suffer it not to run waste, but receive it. Of the former (the water) the Prophet speaketh in the first words of the next Chapter, that out of his pierced side (a) God opened a fountain of water to the house of Israel for sin and for uncleanness: Of the fulness whereof we all have received, in the Sacrament of our Baptism. Of the latter (the blood) which the Prophet (in (b) IX Chapter before) called the blood of the New Testament, we may receive this day: for, it will run in the high and holy Mysteries of the Body and Blood of Christ. There may we be partakers of the flesh of the c Morning-Heart, as upon this day killed. There may we be partakers of the (d) Cup of Salvation, the precious blood (e) which was shed for the remission of our sins. Our part it shall be, not to account the (f) blood of the Testament an unholy thing, and to suffer it to run in vain for all us; but with all due regard to receive it so running: for, even therefore was it shed. And so to the former, to add this sixt, Respite & Recipe.

And shall we alwayes receive grace, even streams of grace issuing from Him that is pierced, and shall there not from us issue something back again, that he may look for and receive from us, that from him have and do daily receive so many good things? No doubt there shall; if love which pierced him, have pierced us aright. And that is (no longer to hold you with these effects) Respite & Retribue. For, it will behove us no less then the Psalmist, to enter into the consideration of Quid retribuam: Especially, since we, by this day, both see and receive that, which he and many others desired to see, and receive, and could not. Or, if we have nothing to render, yet (our selves) to return with the Samaritan, and falling down at his feet, with a loud voice, to glorifie his goodness, who finding us in the estate, that other Samaritan found the forlorn and wounded man, healed us, by being wounded himself, and by his own death restored us to life. For all which his kindness, if nothing will come from us, not so much as a kind and thankful acknowledgment, we are certainly worthy, He should restrain the fountain of his benefits (which hitherto hath flowen most plenteously) and neither let us see nor feel him any more.

But, I hope for better things: that love, such and so great love will pierce us, and cause both other fruits, and especially thoughts of thankfulness to issue from us. Thus many; and more, if the time would serve: But, thus many several uses may we have of thus many several respects, or reflexed lookings upon Him whom we have pierced.

Thirdly, Facient se respicere. For, the Holy Ghost did easily foresee, we would not readily be brought to the sight, or to use our eyes to so good an end. Indeed to flesh and blood it is but a dull and heavy spectacle; And, neither willingly they begin to look upon it; and having begun, are never well, till they have done, and look off of it again. Therefore is the Verb (by the Prophet) put into this Conjugation of purpose: which to turn in strict propriety, is Respicere se facient, rather than Respicient: They shall procure or cause, or even enjoyn or enforce themselves to look upon it; or (as one would say) look that they look upon it.

For some new and strange spectacle (though vain and idle, and which shall not profit us how strange soever) we cause our selves sometimes to take a journey, and besides our pains, are at expenses too, to behold them: we will not only look upon, but even cause our selves to look upon vanities; and in them, we have the right use of facient se respicere. And why should we not take some pains, and even enjoyn our selves to look upon this? Being neither far off, nor chargeable to come to: and since the looking on it may so many wayes, so manly profit us; Verily it falleth out oft, that of Christ: Violenti rapiunt illud. Nature is not inclined; and where it is not inclined, force must be offered; which we call in Schools, Actum elicitem. Which very act by us undertaken, for God, and (as here) at His word, is unto Him a Sacrifice right acceptable. Therefore, facias, or fac facias; do it willingly, or do it by force: Do it, I say; for, done it must be. Set it before you and look on it: or, if you list not remove it, and set it full before you, though it be not with your ease, Respice, Look back upon it with some pain: for, one way or other, look upon it we must. The necessity whereof (that we may the better apprehend it) it will not be amiss, we know, that these words are in two sundry places, two sundry wayes applied: 1. once by St. John in the Gospel, 2. and the second time again, by Christ himself in the Revelation. By St. John to Christ, at his first coming, suffering (as, our Saviour) upon the Cross. By Christ to himself, at his second coming, sitting (as our Judge) upon His throne, in the end of the world. Behold, He cometh in the clouds, and every eye shall see Him, yea even they that pierced him: Et plangent se super Eum omnes Gentes terra. The meaning whereof is. Look upon Him, here, if you will: Enjoyn your selves if you think good: Either here, or somewhere else; either now or then, look upon Him you shall. And they which put this spectacle far from them here, and cannot endure to look upon Him whom they have pierced, & plangere Eum, and be grieved for Him, while it is time: a place and time shall be, when they shall be enforced to look upon Him, whether they will or no, Et plangent se super Eum, and be grieved for themselves, that they had not grace to do it sooner. Better, compose themselves to a little mourning here, with some benefit to be made by their beholding, than to be drawn to it there, when it is too late, and when all their looking and grieving will not avail a whit. For, there Respicientes respicient, & despicientes despicient: His look shall be amiable to them that have respected His piercing here; and dreadful on the other side, to them that have neglected it. And, as they that have entred themselves to this looking on (here) shall in that day, Look up, and lift up their heads with joy, the day of their Redemption being at hand. So, they that cannot bring themselves, to look upon Him here, after they once have looked upon Him

Him there, shall not dare to do it the second time; but cry to the mountains, Fall upon us, and to the Hills, Hide us from the face of Him that sits upon the Throne. Therefore, Respicere is no evil counsel. No, though it be facient se respicere.

In a word; if thus causing our selves to fix our eyes on him, we ask, how long we shall continue so doing, and when we may give over? Let this be the answer, Donec totus fixus in Corde, qui totus fixus in Cruce. Or if that be too much or too hard, yet saltem at the least, Respice in Illum, donec ille respexerit. Look upon him, till he look upon you again. For, so he will. He did, upon Peter; and with his look, melted him into tears. He that once and twice before denyed Him, and never wept, because Christ looked not on him; then denyed, and Christ looked on him, and he went out and wept bitterly. And, if to Peter thus he did, and vouchsafed him so gracious a regard, when Peter not once looked toward Him, how much more shall he not deny us like favour, if, by looking on Him, first we provoke him in a sort to a second looking on us again, with the Prophet, saying; Proposui Dominum coram me, I have set thee, O Lord, before me; and again, Respice in me, &c. O look thou upon me; and be merciful unto me, as thou usest to do to those that love thy Name. That love thy Name, which is, JESUS a SAVIOUR; and which love that light, wherein (most properly) thy Name appeareth, and wherein thou chiefly shewest thy self to be JESUS a SAVIOUR.

Psal. 6.8

Psal. 119. 132.

Act. 2. 37.

Luc. 24. 32.

And (to conclude) if we ask, how we shall know when Christ doth thus respect us? Then truly, when fixing both the eyes of our meditation upon Him that was pierced (as it were) one eye, upon the grief; the other, upon the love wherewith He was pierced, we find by both, or one of these, some motion of Grace arise in our hearts: the consideration of His grief, piercing our hearts with sorrow; the consideration of his love, piercing our hearts with mutual love again. The one is the motion of compunction, which they felt, who when they heard such things were pricked in their hearts. The other, the motion of comfort, which they felt, who when Christ spake to them of the necessity of His piercing, said; Did we not feel our hearts warm within us? That, from the shame and pain He suffered for us: This from the comforts and benefits, He thereby procured for us.

These have been felt at this Looking on; and these will be felt. It may be, "at the first, imperfectly; but after, with deeper impression: and that, of some, with such a Nemo scit, No man knoweth, but He that hath felt them: Which that we may endeavour to feel, and endeavouring may feel, and so grow into delight of this looking, God, &c.

L A M E N T. Chap. I. Ver. XII.

Have yee no regard, O all yee that pass by the way? Consider, and behold, if ever there were sorrow, like my sorrow, which was done unto me, wherewith the Lord did afflict me in the day of the fierceness of His wrath.

T the very reading or hearing of which Verse, there is none but will presently conceive, it is the voice of a party in great extremity. In great extremity two ways: A Complaint
1. First, in such distress, as never was any, If ever there were sorrow like my sorrow: 2. And then in that distress, having none to regard him: Have yee no regard all yee?

To be afflicted, and so afflicted, as none ever was, is very much: In that affliction, to find none to respect him or care for him, what can be more? In all our sufferings, it is a comfort to us that we have a sicut: that nothing hath befallen us, but such as others have felt the like: But here, Si fueris sicut; If ever the like were, (that is) never the like was. 1 Cor. 10. 13.

Again, in our greatest pains, it is a kind of ease; even to find some regard. Naturally we desire it, if we cannot be delivered, if we cannot be relieved, yet to be pitied: It sheweth, there be yet some, that are touched with the sense of our misery; that wish us well, and would give us ease if they could: But this afflicted, here, findeth not so much, neither the one nor the other: but is even as he were an outcast both of Heaven and Earth. Now verily an heavy case, and worthy to be put in this book of Lamentations. Job. 19. 21.

I demand then, Of whom speaketh the Prophet this? of himself, or of some other? This I find; there is not any of the ancient Writers, but do apply, yea, in a manner appropriate this speech to our Saviour Christ: And that this very day, the day of his Passion, (truly termed here the day of Gods wrath;) And wheresoever they treat of the Passion, ever this verse cometh in, (and to say the truth) to take the words strictly as they lie, they cannot agree, or be verified of any but of him, and him only. For, though some other, not unfitly, may be allowed to say the same words: it must be in a qualified sense: for, in full and perfect propriety of speech, he, and none but he: None can say, (neither Jeremy, nor any other) Si fuerit dolor sicut dolor meus, as Christ can: No day of wrath, like to his day: no sorrow to be compared to his (all are short of it;) nor his to any, it exceedeth them all. Christ's Complaint.

And yet, according to the letter, it cannot be denied, but they be set down by Jeremy, in the person of his own people, being then come to great misery; and of the holy City, then laid waste, and desolate by the Chaldees. What then? Ex Aegypto vocavi Filium meum, Out of Aegypt have I Holm. 11. 1.

called my Son, was literally spoken of this people too : yet is by the Evangelist applied to our Saviour Christ. My God, My God why hast thou forsaken me? at the first uttered by David ; yet the same words our Saviour taketh himself, and that more truly and properly, than ever David could : and of those of Dauids, and of these of Jeremie's, there is one and the same reason.

Of all which the ground is, that correspondence which is between Christ and the Patriarchs, Prophets, and People before Christ, of whom the Apostles rule is, Omnia in figura contingebant illis : That they were themselves Types, and their sufferings forerunning figures of the great suffering of the Son of God. which maketh Isaacs offering, and Josephs selling, and Israels calling from Egypt, and that complaint of Dauids, and this of Jeremies, applicable to him ; That he may take them to himself, and the Church, ascribe them to him, and that in more fitness of terms, and more fullness of truth, than they were at the first spoken by David, or Jeremy, or any of them all.

And this rule, and the steps of the Fathers proceeding by this rule, are to me a warrant to expound and apply this Verse (as they have done before) to the present occasion of this time ; which requireth some such Scripture to be considered by us, as doth belong to his Passion, who, this Day, poured out his most precious Blood, as the only sufficient Price, of the dear purchase of our Redemptions.

Be it then to us, (as to them it was, and as most properly it is) The speech of the Son of God, as this day hanging on the Cross, to a sort of careless people, that go up and down without any manner of regard of these his sorrows and sufferings, so worthy of all regard. Have ye no regard? O all ye that pass by the way, Consider and behold, if ever there were sorrow like to my sorrow, which was done unto me, wherewith the Lord afflicted me in the day of the fierceness of his wrath.

The Parts.

Here is a Complaint, and here is a Request. A complaint, that we have not : A Request, that we would have the Pains and Passions of our Saviour Christ in some Regard. For first he complaineth (and not without cause) Have ye no regard? And then (as willing to forget their former neglect, so they will yet do it) he falleth to entreat, O consider and behold.

And what is that we should consider? The Sorrow which he suffereth : and in it two things : The Quality, and the Cause. 1. The Quality, Si fuerit sicut ; If ever the like were : and that either in respect of Dolor, or Dolor meus, The Sorrow suffered, or the Person suffering. 2. The Cause : that is God, that in His wrath, in his fierce wrath, doth all this to him. Which cause will not leave us, till it have led us to another cause in our selves, and to another yet in him : All which serve to ripen us to Regard.

These two then specially we are moved to regard. 1. Regard is the main point. But because therefore we regard but faintly, because either we consider not, or not aright ; we are called to consider seriously of them. As if he should say, Regard you not? If you did consider, you would : if you considered as you should, you would regard as you ought. Certainly the Passion, if it were thoroughly considered, would be duly regarded. Consider then.

IV.

So the Points are two : 1 The Quality, and 2 the Cause of his suffering. And the Duties two : 1. To Consider, and Regard, 2. So to consider, that we regard them, and him for them.

Have you no regard, &c.

The Parties to whom.
O all ye that pass by the way, consider.

TO ease this Complaint, and to grant this Request, we are to regard : and that we may regard, we are to consider the pains of his Passion. Which, that we may reckon no ease common matter of light moment, to do or not to do, as we list : First, a general stay is made of all passengers, this day. For, (as if it were from his Cross) doth our Saviour address this his speech to them that go to and fro, the day of his Passion, without so much as entertaining a thought, or vouchsafing to look that way. O vos qui transitis! O you that pass by the way, stay and Consider. To them frameth he his speech, that pass by : To them, and to them all, O vos omnes, qui transitis, O all ye that pass by the way, stay and Consider.

Which very stay of His, sheweth it to be some important matter, in that it is, of all. For as for some to be staid, and those the greater some, there may be reason ; the most part of those that go to and fro, may well intend it, they have little else to do. But to except none, not some special Person, is hard. What know we their hast? Their occasions may be such, and so urgent, as they cannot stay. Well, what haste, what business so ever, pass not by, stay though. As much to say, as, Be they never so great, your occasions ; they are not, they cannot be so great as this : How urgent soever, this is more, and more to be intended. The regard of this, is worthy the staying of a journey. It is worth the considering of those, that have never so great affairs in hand. So material in His sight in His account. Which serveth to shew the exigence of this duty. But as for this point, it needeth not to be stood upon to us here at this time : we are not going by, we need not be staid ; we have staid all other our affairs, to come hither, and here we are all present before God, to have it set before us, that we may consider it. Thither then let us come.

Sorrow.
Heb. 13. 3.

That which we are called to behold and consider, is His Sorrow : And Sorrow is a thing which of it self Nature inclineth us to behold, as being our selves in the body, which may be one day in the like sorrowfull case. Therefore will every good eye turn it self, and look upon them that lie in distress. Those

Those two in the Gospel, that passed by the wounded man, before they passed by him, (though they helped him not, as the Samaritane did) yet they looked upon him as he lay. But, this party (here) lieth not, he is lift up, as the Serpent in the wilderness, that unless we turn our eyes away purposely, we can neither will nor choose, but behold Him.

But because, to Behold, and not to consider, is but to gaze; and gazing the Angel blameth in the Apostles themselves, we must do both: both Behold and consider, look upon with the eye of the body, that is, behold, and look into, with the eye of the mind, that is, Consider. So saith the Prophet here. And the very same doth the Apostle advise us to do. First, ἀποσῶν to look upon him (that is, to Behold) and then ἀναλογιζέσθαι, to think upon Him, that is to Consider His Sorrow: Sorrow (sure) would be considered.

Now then, because, as the quality of the Sorrow is, accordingly it would be considered, (for if it be but a common sorrow, the less will serve, but if it be some special, some very heavy case, the more would be allowed it: for, proportionably with the suffering, the consideration is to arise:) To raise our consideration to the full, and to elevate it to the highest point, there is upon His Sorrow set a Si fuerit sicut, a note of highest eminency: for, Si fuerit sicut, are words that have life in them, and are able to quicken our consideration, if it be not quite dead. For by them we are provoked (as it were) to Consider, and considering, to see whether ever any Sicut may be found, to set by it, whether ever any like it.

For if never any, Our nature is, to regard things exceeding rare and strange; and such as the like whereof is not else to be seen. Upon this point then, there is a Case made, as if He should say, If ever the like, Regard not this; but if never any, be like your selves in other things, and vouchsafe this (if not your chiefest, yet) some Regard.

To enter this Comparison, and to shew it for such. That, are we to do, three sundry wayes: For, In the three three sundry wayes, in three sundry words, are these Sufferings of his here expressed: all three within the compass of the Verse.

The first is, מַכָּה Mac-ob (which we read Sorrow,) taken from a wound or stripe, as all do agree.

The second is, גֹּחַל Ghoel; we read Done to me, taken from a word that signifieth Melting in a furnace; as S. Hierome noteth out of the Chaldee (who so translateth it.)

The third is, חֲגֹרֶת Hoga; where we read afflicted, from a word which importeth Renting off, or Bereaving. The old Latine turneth it Vindemiavit me; as a Vine whose fruit is all plucked off. The Greek (with Theodoret) ἀπερῡλλισεν με, as a Vine or Tree, whose leaves are all beaten off, and is left naked and bare.

In these three, are comprized his Sufferings, Wounded, Melted, and Bereft, leaf and fruit, (that is) al manner of comfort.

Of all that is penal, or can be suffered, the common division is, Sensus & damni, Grief for that we feel, or for that we forgo. For that we feel, in the two former, Wounded in body, Melted in soul: for that we forgo, in the last; Bereft all, left neither fruit, nor so much as a leaf to hang on him.

According to these three, To consider his Sufferings, and to begin first with the first. The pains of his Body, his wounds and his stripes.

Our very eye will soon tell us, no place was left in his Body, where he might be smitten, and was not. His skin and flesh rent with the whips and scourges, his hands and feet wounded with the nails, his head with the thornes, his very heart with the spear-point; all his senses, all his parts loden with whatsoever wit or malice could invent. His blessed Body given as an Anvile to be beaten upon, with the violent hands of those barbarous miscreants, till they brought him into this case, of Si fuerit sicut. For, Pilates (Ecce Homo!) his shewing him with an Ecce, as if he should say, Behold, look if ever you saw the like ruefull spectacle: This very shewing of his sheweth plainly, he was then come into wofull plight: So wofull, as Pilate verily believed, his very sight so pitifull, as, it would have moved the hardest heart of them all to have relented, and said, This is enough, we desire no more. And this for the wounds of his body, (for on this we stand not.)

In this one peradventure some Sicut may be found, in the pains of the body: but, in the second, the Sorrow of the Soul, I am sure, none. And indeed the pain of the Body is but the Body of pain: the very Soul of sorrow and pain in the souls sorrow and pain. Give me any grief, save the grief of the mind, saith the Wise-man: For (saith Salomon) The spirit of man will sustain all his other infirmities, but a wounded spirit, who can bear? And of this, this of His Soul, I dare make a Case, Si fuerit sicut.

He began to be troubled in Soul, (saith S. John:) To be in an agony, (saith S. Luke:) To be in anguish of mind and deep distress, (saith S. Mark) To have His Soul round about on every side invironed with sorrow, and that sorrow to the death. Here is trouble, anguish, agony, sorrow and deadly sorrow: But, it must be such, as never the like: So it was too.

The estimate whereof we may take: from the second word of Melting, that is, from His sweat in the Garden; strange, and the like whereof was never heard or seen.

No manner violence offered Him in body; no man touching him, or being neer him, in a cold night (for they were fain to have a fire within doors) lying abroad in the air, and upon the cold earth, to be all of a sweat, and that sweat to be Blond; and not as they call it, Diaphoreticus, a thin faint sweat, but Grumofus, of great Drops; and those, so many, so plenteous, as they went through His apparel and all; and through all, streamed to the ground, and that in great abundance: Read, enquire, and Consider, Si fuerit sudor, sicut sudor iste; If ever there were sweat like this sweat of His? Never the the like sweat certainly, and therefore never the like Sorrow. Our translation is, Dome unto me: but we said, the word properly signifieth (and so S. Hierome and the Chaldee Paraphrast read it,) Melted Me. And truly it should seem by this fearfull sweat of his, he was neer some furnace, the feeling whereof, was able to cast him into that sweat, and to turn his sweat into drops of blood. And sure it was so: For see, even in the very next words of all to this verse, he complaineth of it, Ignem misit in ossibus meis, That a fire was sent into His bones which melted him, and made that bloody sweat to distil from him. That hour, what his feelings were, it is dangerous to define: we know them not, we may be too bold to determine of them. To very good purpose it was, that the ancient Fathers of the Greek Church in their Liturgy, after they have recounted all the particular Pains, as they are set down in his Passion, and by all, and by every one of them, called for mercy, do, after all, shut up all with this, ὁ ἀγνώστου κοπῶν καὶ βασάνων ἐλπίστον καὶ σῶσον ἡμᾶς, By thine unknown Sorrows, and Sufferings, felt by Thee, but not distinctly known by us, Have mercy upon us, and save us.

Now, though this suffice not, nothing neer; yet let it suffice (the time being short) for his pains of body and Soul. For those of the Body, it may be, some may have endured the like: but the sorrows of his Soul are unknown sorrows: and for them, none ever have; ever have, or ever shall suffer the like; the like, or neer the like in any degree.

And now to the third. It was said before, To be in distress, such distress as this was, and to find none to comfort, may not so much as to regard Him, is all that can be said, to make his sorrow a Non sicut. Comfort is it, by which, in the midst of all our sorrows, we are Confortati, that is, strengthened and made the better able to bear them all out. And who is there, even the poorest creature among us, but in some degree findeth some comfort, or some regard at some bodies hands? For, if that be not left, the state of that party is (here) in the third word said to be like the tree, whose leaves and whose fruit are all beaten off quite, and it self left bare and naked both of the one and of the other.

Leaves1.
Withered leaves.

John 18. 40.

and 19. 15.

Mat. 27. 25.

Mar. 15. 19, 36.

And such was our Saviours case in these his Sorrows this day, and that so, as what is left the meanest of the sons of men, was not left him: Not a leaf. Not a leaf! Leaves I may well call all humane comforts and regards, whereof he was then left clean desolate. 1. His own, they among whom he had gone about all his life long, healing them, teaching them, feeding them, doing them all good he could, it is they that cry, Not Him, no, but Barabbas rather; away with Him, His blood be upon us and our children. It is they, that in his midst of his sorrows, shake their head at him, and cry, Ah thou wretch: they, that in his most disconsolate estate, cry, Eli, Eli; in most barbarous manner; deride him, and say, Stay, And thou shalt see Elias come presently and take Him down. And this was their regard.

Green leaves.

But these were but withered leaves. They then that on earth were nearest him of all, the greenest leaves and likest to hang on, and to give him some shade: even of them, some bought and sold him; others denied and forswore him, but all fell away, and forsook him ἀπερύλαστον με (saith Theodore) not a leaf left.

Fruit.

But leaves are but leaves, and so are all earthly states. The fruit then, the true fruit of the Vine indeed, the true comfort in all heaviness, is Desuper, from above, is divine consolation. But Vindemiavit me, (saith the Latine Text) even that was, in this his sorrow; this day bereft him too. And that was his most sorrowfull complaint of all others: not that His friends upon earth, but that His Father from Heaven had forsaken Him; that neither heaven nor earth yeilded Him any regard; but that between the passion powers of His soul, and whatsoever might any ways refresh him, there was a Traverse drawn; and he left in the state of a weather-beaten tree, all desolate and forlorn. Evident, too evident, by that his most dreadfull cry, which at once moved all the powers in heaven and earth, My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken me? Weigh well that cry; consider it well, and tell me, Si fueris clamor sicut clamor iste, if ever there were cry, like that of his: Never the like cry, and therefore never the like sorrow.

Mat. 27. 46.

It is strange, very strange, that, of none of the Martyrs, the like can be read; who yet endured most exquisite pains in their Martyrdoms: yet we see, with what courage, with what cheerfulness, how even singing they are reported to have passed through their torments. Will ye know the reason? St. Augustin setteth it down, Martyres non eripuit; sed nunquid deseruit? He delivered not His Martyrs; but, did He forsake them? He delivered not their bodies, but He forsook not their souls, but distilled into them the dew of His heavenly comfort; an abundant supply for all they could endure. Not so here: Vindemiavit me (saith the Prophet) Dereliquisti me (saith He himself:) No comfort, no supply at all.

Leo it is, that first said it, (and all Antiquity allow of it,) Non solvit unionem, sed subtraxit visionem. The union was not dissolved; True, but the beams, the influence was restrained; and, for any comfort from thence, His soul was, even as a scorched heath-ground, without so much as any drop of dew of divine comfort: as a naked tree, no fruit to refresh him within, no leaf to give him shadow without: The power of darkness let loose to afflict Him: The influence of comfort, restrained to relieve Him. It is a Non sicut, this: it cannot be expressed as it should, and as other things may: in silence we may admire it, but all our words will not reach it. And though to draw it so far, as some do, is little better than blasphemy; yet on the other side, to shrink it so short, as other some do, cannot be but with derogation to his love, Who, to kindle our love and loving Regard, would come to a Non sicut, in his suffering: For, so it was, and so we must allow it to be. This, in respect of his passion, Dolor.

Now;

Now, in respect of his person, Dolor meus. Whereof, if it please you to take a view, even of the person thus wounded, thus afflicted and forsaken, you shall then have a perfect Non sicut. And indeed, the Person is here a weighty circumstance: It is thrice repeated, Meus, Mihi, Me, and we may not leave it out. For, as is the Person, so is the Passion; and any one, even the very least degree of wrong or disgrace, offered to a Person of excellency, is more than a hundred times more, to one of mean condition: So weighty is the circumstance of the Person. Consider then, how great the Person was; And I rest fully assured, here we boldly challenge, and say, Si fuerit sicut.

Ecce homo, saith Pilate first, A man he is, as we are: And were he but a man; nay, were he not a man, but some poor dumb creature, it were great ruth to see him so handled as he was.

A man, saith Pilate; and a Just man, saith Pilate's wife. Have thou nothing to do with that Just man. And that is one degree further. For, though we pity the punishment even of Malefactors themselves: yet ever, most compassion we have of them that suffer and be innocent. And he was innocent: Pilate and Herod, and the Prince of this world (his very enemies) being his Judges.

Now among the innocent, the more Noble the Person, the more heavy the spectacle. And never do our bowels yern so much as over such, Alas, Alas for that noble Prince, saith this Prophet (the stile of mourning for the death of a great Personage.) And, He that suffered here, is such; even, a principal Person among the sons of men, of the race royal descended from Kings: Pilate stiled Him so, in his Title, and he would not alter it.

Three degrees. But, yet we are not at our true Quantus. For He is yet more: More than the highest of the sons of men: for He is The Son of the most High God. Pilate saw no further, but Ecce homo: The Centurion did, Verè, Filius Dei erat hic, Now truly, this was the Son of God. And here, all words forsake us, and every tongue becometh speechless.

We have no way to express it, but a minore ad majus; (Thus.) Of this book, the book of Lamentations, one speciall occasion was, the death of King Josias: But behold a greater than Josias is here.

Of King Josias (as a special reason of mourning) the Prophet saith, Spiritus oris nostri, Christus Domini, the very breath of our nostrils, The Lords anointed (for so are all good Kings, in their Subjects accounts) he is gone. But behold, here is not Christus Domini, but Christus Dominus, the Lord's Christ, but the Lord Christ Himself: And that not coming to an honourable death in battel, as Josias did; but to a most vile reproachfull death, the death of Malefactors in the highest degree. And not slain outright as Josias was: but mangled and massacred in most pitifull strange manner; wounded in body, wounded in Spirit, left utterly desolate. O consider this well, and confess, the Case is truly put, Si fuerit dolor sicut Dolor meus. Never, never the like Person: And if, as the Person is, the Passion be; never the like Passion to His.

It is truly affirmed, that any one, even the least drop of blood, even the least pain, yea, of the body only, of this so great a Person, any Dolor with this Meus, had been enough to make a Non sicut of it. That is enough; but that is not all: for adde now the three other degrees; adde to this Person, those wounds; that Sweat, and that Cry, and put all together: And, I make no manner question, the like was not, shall not, cannot ever be. It is far above all that ever was, or can be. Abyssus est: men may drowsily hear it, and coldly affect it: But Principalities and Powers stand abashed at it. And for the Quality, both of the Passion and of the Person, That Never the like; thus much.

Now to proceed to the Cause, and to Consider it: for, without it, we shall have but half a regard, and scarce that. Indeed, set the Cause aside, and the Passion (as rare as it is,) is yet but a dull and heavy sight: we list not much look upon spectacles of that kind, though never so strange; they fill us full of pensive thoughts, and make us Melancholike. And so doth this, till upon examination of the cause, we find it toucheth us neer; and so neer, so many wayes, as we cannot choose, but have some regard of it.

What was done to Him, we see. Let there now be a quest of Inquiry to find, who was doer of it. Who? who, but the Power of darkness, wicked Pilate, bloody Caiaphas, the envious Priests, the barbarous Souldiers? None of these are returned here. We are too low, by a great deal, if we think to find it among men. Qua fecit mihi Deus, It was God that did it. An hour of that day was the hour of the power of darkness: but, the whole day it self, is said here plainly, was the day of the wrath of God. God was a doer in it; wherewith God hath afflicted me.

God afflicteth some in Mercy: and others in wrath. This was in His wrath. In His wrath God is not alike to all; some He afflicteth in His more gentle and milde; others, in His fierce wrath. This was in the very fierceness of His wrath. His Sufferings, His Sweat and Cry, shew as much: They could not come, but from a wrath, Si fuerit sicut: (for, we are not past Non sicut, no not here in this part it followeth us still, and will not leave us in any point, not to the end.)

The Cause then in God, was wrath. What caused this wrath? God is not wroth, but with sin; Nor grievously wroth, but with grievous sin. And in Christ there was no grievous sin: Nay, no sin at all. God did it, (the Text is plain.) And in His fierce wrath, he did it. For what cause: For, God forbid, God should do, as did Annas the high Priest, cause Him to be smitten without cause. God forbid (saith Abraham) the Judge of the World should do wrong to any. To any, but specially, to his own Son: That his Son, of whom, with thundring voice from Heaven, he testifieth, all his joy and delight were in Him, in Him only, He was well pleased. And how then could his wrath wax hot, to do all this unto him?

There is no way to preserve Gods Justice, and Christs Innocency both, but to say as the Angel said of him to the Prophet Daniel, The Messias shall be slain, וְנִלְוִי ve-en-lo, shall be slain, but not for Himself. Not for himself? for whom then? For some others. He took upon him the person of others; and so doing, Justice may have her course and proceed.

Pity it is, to see a man pay that, he never took: but if he will become a Surety, if he will take on him the person of the Debtor, so he must. Pity to see a silly poor Lamb lie bleeding to death; but, if it must be a sacrifice (such is the nature of a sacrifice) so it must. And so Christ, though without sin in himself; yet as a Surety, as a Sacrifice, may justly suffer for others, if he will take upon him their persons; and so, God may justly give way to his wrath against him.

Ours.

Elay. 53. 4, 5, 6.

And who be those others? The Prophet Esay telleth us, and telleth it us seven times over for failing, He took upon Him our infirmities, and bare our maladies: He was wounded for our iniquities, and broken for our transgressions. The chastisement of our peace was upon Him, and with His stripes we were healed. All we as sheep were gone astray, and turned every man to his own way: and the Lord hath laid upon Him, the iniquity of us all. All, all: even those that pass to and fro, and for all this, regard neither Him nor His Passion.

The short is: It was we, that for our sins, our many great and grievous sins, (Si fueris sicut, the like whereof never were) should have sweet this Sweat, and have cried this Cry; should have been smitten with these sorrows by the fierce wrath of God, had he not slept between the blow and us, and latched it in His own body and soul, even the dint of the fierceness of the wrath of God. O the Non sicut of our sins, that could not otherwise be answered!

To return then a true verdict. It is we, (we, wretched sinners that we are) that are to be found the principals in this act; and those, on whom we seek to shift it, to drive it from our selves, Pilate and Caiaphas and the rest, but instrumental causes only. And it is not the executioner that killeth the man properly, (that is, They:) No, nor the Judge, (which is God, in this case:). Only sin, Solum peccatum homicida est, Sin only is the murderer, to say the truth; and our sins, the murderers of the Son of God: and the Non sicut of them, the true cause of the Non sicut both of Gods wrath, and of His sorrowfull sufferings.

2 Sam. 12. 7.

Which bringeth home this our Text to us, even into our own bosoms; and applieth it most effectually, to me that speak, and to you that hear, to every one of us: and that with the Prophet Nathan's application; Tu es homo, Thou art the Man, even thou, for whom God in His fierce wrath thus afflicted Him. Sin (then) was the cause on our part, Why we, or some other for us.

3.

Love of us.

Esay. 53. 7.

But yet, what was the cause, why he, on his part: what was that, that moved him thus to become our Surety, and to take upon Him our debt and danger? that moved Him thus to lay upon his Soul, a sacrifice for our sin? Sure, Oblatus est quia voluit (saith Esay again;) Offered He was for no other cause, but because He would. For, unless he would, he needed not. Needed not, for any necessity of Justice. For, no Lamb was ever more innocent: Nor for any necessity of Constraint; For, twelve Legions of Angels were ready at his command: But, because He would.

Rom. 5. 8.

Ephes. 2. 3.

Rom. 2. 5.

And why would he? No reason can be given, but because he regarded us? (Mark that reason.) And what were we? Verily, utterly unworthy even his least regard; not worth the taking up, not worth the looking after. Cum inimici essemus (saith the Apostle) we were His enemies, when he did it; without all desert before, and without all regard, after he had done and suffered all this for us: and yet he would regard us, that so little regard him. For when he saw us (a sort of forlorn sinners) Non prius nati, quam damnatos, Damned as fast as born; as being by nature children of wrath, and yet still heaping up wrath against the day of wrath, by the errors of our life, till the time of our passing hence; and then the fierce wrath of God, ready to overwhelm us; and to make us endure the terror and torments of an ever-dying death, (another Non sicut yet:) When (I say) He was in this case, He was moved with compassion over us, and undertook all this for us. Even then, in His love, He regarded us, and so regarded us, that He regarded not Himself, to regard us.

Bernard saith most truly, Dilexisti me, Domine, magis quam te, quando mori voluisti pro me: In suffering all this for us, thou shewest (Lord) that we were more dear to thee, that thou regardest us more, than thine own self: and shall this Regard find no regard at our hands?

It was sin then, and the hainousness of sin in us, that provoked wrath, and the fierceness of His wrath in God: It was love, and the greatness of His love, in Christ, that caused Him to suffer the Sorrows, and the grievousness of these sorrows, and all for our sakes.

And indeed, but only to testify the Non sicut of this His Love, all this needed not, that was done to Him. One, any one, even the very least of all the pains He endured, had been enough; enough, in respect of the Mens; enough, in respect of the Non sicut of His Person. For, that which setteth the high price on this sacrifice, is this; That He, which offereth it unto God, is God. But, if little had been suffered, little would the love have been thought, that suffered so little; and as little Regard would have been had of it. To awake our regard then, or to leave us excuseless, if we continue regardless, all this He bare for us: that He might as truly make a Case of Si fuerit amor, sicut amor meus, as He did before of, Si fuerit dolor, sicut dolor meus. We say, we will regard Love; if we will, here it is to regard.

So have we the Causes of all three: 1. Wrath in God: 2. Sinne in our selves: 3. Love in Him.

Yet have we not all we should. For, what of all this? What good? Cui bono? That, that is it (indeed) that we will regard, if any thing: as being matter of Benefit, the onely thing (in a manner) the world regardeth: which bringeth us about to the very first words again. For, the very first words which we read, Have ye no regard? are in the Original, לֹא אֵלֵיכֶם lo alechem, which the Seventy turn (word for word) et vobis vultis; and the Latine likewise, Nonne ad vos pertinet? Pertains it not to you, that you regard it no better? For these two; (Pertaining and Regarding) are folded one in another, and go together so commonly, as one is taken often for the other. Then to be sure to bring us to Regard, he urgeth this: Pertains not all this to you? Is it not for your good? Is not the benefit yours? Matters of benefit they pertain to you, and without them, Love, and all the rest may pertain to whom they will.

Consider then, the inestimable benefit that groweth unto you from this incomparable Love. It is not impertinent this; Even this; That to us hereby, all is turned about clean contrary: That by His stripes we are healed: by his sweat, we refreshed: By his forsaking, we received to Grace. That, this day (to Him, the day of the fierceness of Gods wrath) is to us the day of the fulness of Gods favour, (as the Apostle called it) A day of salvation. In respect of that he suffered, (I deny not) an evil day; a day of heavyness: But, in respect of that, which he, by it hath obtained for us, it is, (as we truly call it,) A good day, a day of joy and jubilee. For it doth not only rid us of that wrath, which pertaineth to us for our sins; but further, it maketh that pertain to us, whereto we had no manner of wright at all.

For, not only by his death, as by the death of our sacrifice, by the blood of his Cross, as by the blood of the Paschal Lamb, the Destroyer passeth over us, and we shall not perish: But also by his death, as by the death of our High Priest (for he is Priest and Sacrifice both) we are restored from our exile, even to our former forfeited estate in the Land of Promise; Or rather (as the Apostle saith) Non sicut delictum sic donum: Not to the same estate, but to one nothing like it: (that, is) one far better, than the estate, our sins bereft us. For they deprived us of Paradise, a place on earth: but by the purchase of his blood, we are intituled to a far higher, even the Kingdom of Heaven: And his blood, not only the blood of Redemption, to acquit us of our sins; but the blood of the Testament too, to bequeath us and give us estate, in that heavenly inheritance.

Now whatsoever else, this (I am sure) is a Non sicut: as that, which the eye, by all it can see, the ear, by all it can hear, the heart by all it can conceive, cannot pattern it; or set the like by it. Pertains not this unto us neither? Is not this worth the Regard? Sure, if any thing be worth the Regard, this is most worthy of our very worthiest and best Regard.

Thus have we considered and seen, not so much as in this sight we might or should, but as much as the time will give us leave. And now, lay all these before you, (every one of them a Non sicut of it self) the pains of his body, esteemed by Pilates Ecce; the sorrows of his soul, by his sweat in the Garden; the comfortless estate of his Sorrows, by his cry on the Cross: And with these, his Person, as being the Son of the great and Eternal God. Then joynt to these, the cause: In God: his fierce wrath: In us, our heinous sins deserving it; In Him, his exceeding great Love, both suffering that for us, which we had deserved; and procuring for us, that we could never deserve: Making that to appertain to himself, which of right pertained to us; and making that pertain to us, which pertained to him only, and not to us at all, but by his means alone. And after their view in severall, lay them all together, so many Non sicut's into one, and tell me, if his Complaint be not just, and his request most reasonable.

Yes sure, his Complaint is just, Have ye no regard? None? and yet never the like? None, and it pertains unto you? No regard? As if it were some common ordinary matter, and the like never was? No regard? As if it concern'd you not a whit, and it toucheth you so near? As if he should say: Rare just things you regard, yea, though they no wayes pertain to you: this is exceeding rare, and will you not regard it? Again, things that neerly touch you, you regard, though they be not rare at all; this toucheth you exceeding neer, even as neer as your soul toucheth you, and will you not regard it? Will neither of these by it self move you? Will not both these together move you? What will move you? Will Pity? Here is Distress, never the like: Will Duty? Here is a Person, never the like: Will Fear? Here is Wrath, never the like: Will Remorse? Here are sins, never the like: Will Kindness? Here is Love, never the like: Will Bounty? Here are Benefits, never the like: Will all these? Here they be all, all above any Sicut, all in the highest degree.

Truly the complaint is just, it may move us: it wanteth no reason, it may move: and it wanteth no affection in the delivery of it to us, on his part to move us. Sure it moved him exceeding much: For among all the deadly sorrows of his most bitter Passion; this, even this seemeth to be his greatest of all, and that which did most affect him, even the grief of the slender reckoning most men have it in, as little respecting him, as if he had done, or suffered nothing at all for them. For lo, of all the sharp pains he endureth, he complaineth not, but of this he complaineth, of No regard: That which grieveth him most, that which most he moaneth is this. It is strange he should be in pains, such pains, as never any was, and not complain himself of them; But of want of regard only. Strange, he should not make request, O deliver me, or relieve me: But only, O consider and regard me. In effect, as if he had said; None, no deliverance, no relief do I seek: Regard I seek. And all that I suffer, I am content with it: I regard it not: I suffer most willingly, if this I may find at your hands, Regard.

Truly, This so passionate a Complaint may move us; it moved all but us: For most strange of all it is, that all the Creatures in Heaven and Earth, seemed to hear this his mournful Complaint, and in their their kind, to shew their regard of it: The Sun in heaven shrinking in his light; the earth trembling under it; the very stones cleaving in sunder, as if they had sense and Sympathy of it: and sinful men onely, not moved with it. And yet it was not for the Creatures, this was done to him; to them it pertaineth not: But for us, it was, and to us it doth; and shall we not yet regard it? Shall the Creature, and not we? Shall we not?

The benefit if. If we do not, it may appertain to us, but we pertain not to it: It pertains to all, but all pertain not to it. None pertain to it, but they that take benefit by it; and none take benefit by it, no more than by the Brazen Serpent, but they that fix their eye on it. Behold, Consider, and Regard it: the profit, the benefit is lost without Regard.

The perill if not. If we do not, as this was a day of Gods fierce wrath against Him, only for regarding us; so there is another day coming, and it will quickly be here, a day of like fierce wrath against us, for not regarding him. And who regardeth the power of his wrath? He that doth, will surely Regard this.

Psal. 90. 11. In that day, there is not the most careless of us all, but shall cry as they did in the Gospel; Domine, non ad Te pertinet, si perimus? Pertains it not to Thee? Carest thou not that we perish? Then would we be glad to pertain to him, and his Passion. Pertains it to us then, and pertaineth it not now? Sure, now it must, if then it shall.

Mar. 4. 38. Then, to give end to this Complaint, let us grant him his request, and Regard his Passion. Let the Rareness of it: the Nearness to us: let Pity or Duty: Fear, or Remorse: Love, or Bounty: Any of them, or all of them: Let the justness of his Complaint: Let his affectionate manner of Complaining of this, and only this: Let the shame of the Creatures regard: Let our Profit or our Peril: Let something prevail with us, to have it in some regard.

The Request, Have some regard. 1. Some regard! Verily, as his sufferings, his Love, our good by them are; so should our regard be, a Non sicut too: That is, a regard of these, and of nothing in comparison of these. It should be so: For, with the benefit, ever the regard should arise.

Our best Regard. But God help us poor sinners, and be merciful unto us. Our regard is a Non sicut, indeed: but it is backward, and in a contrary sense: That is, no where so shallow, so short, or so soon done. It should be otherwise, it should have our deepest consideration, this; and our highest regard.

2. But if that cannot be had (our nature is so heavy, and flesh and blood so dull of apprehension in spiritual things) yet at leastwise some regard. Some, I say: The more the better: But in any wise, some. And not as here, No regard, none at all. Some ways to shew we make account of it, to withdraw our selves, to void our mindes of other matters, to set this before us, to think upon it, to thank him for it, to regard him, and stay and see, whether he will regard us or no. Sure he will, and we shall feel our hearts pricked with sorrow, by consideration of the cause in us, our Sin: And again, warm within us, by consideration of the cause in him, his Love; till by some motion of Grace He answer us, and shew that our regard is accepted of Him.

Alf. 2. 37.
Luc. 24. 32.

3. And this, as at all other times (for, no day is amiss, but at all times, some time to be taken for this duty) so specially on this Day; this Day, which we hold holy to the memory of His Passion, this day to do it: to make this Day, the Day of Gods wrath and Christs suffering, a day to us of serious consideration and regard of them both.

It is kindly to consider Opus diei in die sua, The work of the Day, in the Day it was wrought: and this Day it was wrought. This Day therefore, whatsoever business be, to lay them aside a little; whatsoever our haste, yet to stay a little, and to spend a few thoughts in calling to mind and taking to regard, what this Day the Son of God did and suffered for us: and all for this end, That what He was, then, we might not be; and what He is now, we might be for ever. Which Almighty God grant we may do, more or less, even every one of us, according to the several measures of His Grace in us.

HEBR. Chap. XII. Ver. II.

Aspicientes in Authorem fidei, & Consummatorem Jesum; qui proposito Sibi gaudio, sustinuit Crucem, confusione contempta: atque in dextera Sedis Dei sedet.

Looking unto Jesus the Author and finisher of our Faith; who for the joy that was set before Him, endured the Cross, and despised the shame; and is set at the right band of the Throne of God.

SAINTE Luke, though he recount at large our Saviour Christ's whole story, yet in plain and expresse terms he calleth the Passion Scopiar, a Theory or Sight, which Sight is it, the Apostle here calleth us to look unto. Luke 23. 48.

Of our blessed Saviour's whole life or death, there is no part but is a Theory of it self, well worthy our looking on; for from each part thereof, there goeth vertue to do us good. From each part: but of all, from the last part, or act of His Passion. Therefore hath the Holy Ghost honoured this last part only, with this name; and none but this. This, is the Theory ever most commended to our view. To be looked on He is, at all times, and in all acts; But, then, and in that act, specially, when for the joy set before Him, He endured the Cross, and despised the shame. Then, saith the Apostle, look unto Him. Saint Paul being elsewhere carefull to shew the Corinthians (and with them, us) Christ; and as to shew them Christ, So to shew them, in Christ, what that is, that specially concerneth them to know, or look unto, thus he saith: That, though he knew many, very many things besides; yet he esteemed not to know any thing, but Jesus Christ, & Munc crucifixum, Him, and Him crucified. Meaning respectively (as they term it) that the perfection of our knowledge is Christ: and the perfection of our knowledge, in, or touching Christ, is the knowledge of His Cross, and Passion. That, the chief Theory: Nay in this, all; so that, see this, and see all. 1 Cor. 13. 12

John 12. 32.

The view whereof, though it be not restrained to any one time; but, all the year long, yea, all our life long, ought to be frequent with us; (and blessed are the houres, that are so spent:) yet, if at any time more than other, certainly, this time, this day may most justly challenge it. For, this day was this Scripture fulfilled, and this day, are our ears filled full with Scriptures about it. So that, though, on other dayes, we imploy our eyes otherwise; yet, that this day at least, we would (as exceeding fitly the Apostle willeth us) ἀποστρέψαι cast our eyes from other sights, and fix them on this object, it being the day dedicat to the lifting up of the Son of man on high, that He may draw every eye unto Him.

The Occasion of the speaking, is (ever) the best key to every speech. The Occasion then, of this speech was this. The Apostle was to encourage the Hebrews (and, in them, us all) to hold on the well begun profession of Christ and His faith. This our profession he expresseth, in the former verse, in the terms of a Race, or Game; borrowing his similitude from the Games of Olympus. for, from those Games (famous then, over all the world) and by terms from them taken, it was common to all Writers of that Age, both Holy and Humane, to set forth, as, in the running, the laborious course; so, in the price of it, the glorious reward of a virtuous life.

Which race, truly Olympique (because they and we (the most of us) either stand still, or if we move, do it but slowly, and are ready to faint upon every occasion) that we may run the sooner, and attain the better, two sights he sets before us, to comfort us and keep us from fainting. One, a Cloud of Witnesses, in the first Verse, that is, the Saints in Heaven: Witnesses, as able to depose, this race may be run, and this prize may be won, for they have run the one, and won the other long ago. These look on us now, how well we carry our selves; and we to look to them, that we may carry our selves well in the course we have undertaken.

On which Cloud when we have staid our selves a while, and made them fit for a clearer Object, he scattereth the cloud quite, and sets us up a second, even our blessed Saviour His own self. And here he willeth us ἀποστρέψαι to turn our eyes from them, and to turn them hither and to fasten them here, on Jesus Christ, the Author and finisher of our faith. As if He should say; If you will indeed see a sight once for all, look to Him. The Saints, though they be Guides to us, yet are they but followers to Him, He, the Arch-guide; leader of them, and us all: Look on Him. They but will-willers to our faith, but neither Authors nor Finishers of it: He, both. Both Author to call us to it, and set us in it; and Finisher to help us through it, and reward us for it: Look to Him. Hunc aspiciat, is the Apostles voice, the voice that cometh out of this cloud; for, it is the wish of them all, even all the Saints, Hunc aspiciat. At His appearing therefore, the cloud vanished. There is a time when Saint James may say, Take (my brethren) the Prophets for an example: But when He cometh forth that said, Exemplum dedi vobis, I have given you an example; Exemplum sine exemplo, an example above all examples: when He cometh in place, Sileat omnis caro, Let all flesh keep silence. Let all the Saints, yea, the Seraphims themselves cover their faces with their wings, that we may look on Him, and let all other sights go.

James 5. 10.
John 13. 15.Zec. 2. 13.
Ezay. 6. 2.

The Division Let us then turn aside to see this great Sight. The principal parts thereof are two: 1. The Sight it self (that is) the Thing to be seen: 2. and the Sight of it (that is) the Act of seeing it, or looking on it.

The whole Verse (save the two first words) is of the Object or Spectacle propounded. Jesus the Author, &c. The two first words ἀποστρέψαι εἰς is the other, the Act, or Duty enjoined.

But as in many other cases, so here, Et erunt primi novissimi, the first must be last. For, though the Act (in the verse) stand foremost, yet (in nature) it is last, and so to be handled. We must have a thing first set up before our eyes, before we can set our eyes upon it.

Of the Object then first, This Object is Jesus: Not barely, but with His double addition of 1. the Author, 2. the Finisher of our faith, Jesus: And in him more particularly, two Theories or Sights: 1. Of His Passion: 2. Of His Session. 1. His Passion, in these words: Who for the joy, &c. 2. His Session, in these: And is set, &c.

In the Passion, two things He pointeth at: 1. What He suffered, 2. and what moved Him to it. 1. What He suffered: the Cross and Shame: the Cross He endured; the Shame He despised. 2. And what moved Him; For a certain joy set before Him.

II.

Then is to follow the Act or Duty of looking on this sight, ἀποστρέψαι εἰς: 1. Wherein first, the two Propositions, 1. And and 2. Eis, From and To: To look from, and to look to. 2. Then the two Verbs. 1. One in the Verse expressed: that is) Ὡρᾶν in ἀποστρέψαι: 2. The other of necessity implied: for, we have never a Verb in all the Verse. Ἀποστρέψαι is a Participle, and but suspendeth the sentence, till we either look back to the Verse before; and so it is 1. Ut curramus: or to the verse next after; and so it is 2. Ne fatigemur. In the one, is the Theory or Sight we shall see thus looking. In the other, the praxis of this theory; What this sight is to work in us: and that is a motion, a swift motion Running: So to look on it, that we run; and so to run, that we faint not.

And, if the time will give leave, if our allowance will hold out, then we will take a short view of the Session: That He is set down: Wherein is 1. rest and ease opposed to His Cross, where He hung in pain. 2. And in a throne: wherein is glory opposed to shame. 3. And at the right hand of God, wherein is the fulness of both the joy wherein He sitteth, and the joy which was set before Him, and which is set before us.

TO give the better aspect to the Party whom He presenteth to our view, that with better will we may behold Him, before He name His name, He giveth Him this double addition, as it were displaying an Ensign, proclaiming his Title before Him: whereof these two are the two colours, 1. The Author, 2. The finisher of our faith, Jesus.

Author and finisher are two titles, wherein the Holy Ghost oft setteth Him forth, and wherein He seemeth to take special delight. In the very letters, He taketh to him the name of (a) Alpha the Author, and again of Omega the Finisher of the Alphabet. From letters go to words: there is He (b) Verbum in principio, the Word at the beginning: And He is Amen too, the word at the end. From words to books: (d) In capite scriptum est de me, In the very front of the Book He is: and He is (e) ἀναρχαίωσις the recapitulation, or conclusion of it too. And so, go to Persons: there He is (f) Primus and Novissimus, the first and the last, And from Persons to Things: and there He is, the (g) Beginning and the end; whereof ἀρχὴ the Beginning is in ἀρχῆς the Author; and τέλος the end is in (h) τελειωτικὴ the Finisher. The first beginning, a quo, He; by whom all things are made: and the last end He; Per or proper quem, by, for, or through whom all things are made perfect.

Both these He is, in all things. And, as in all things else, so in faith, whereto they are here applied most fully and fitly of all other. Therefore look not aside at any in heaven or earth, for matter of Faith; look full upon Him: he is worth the looking on, with both your eyes: he hath matter for them both.

The honour that Zorobabel had in the material, is no less truly his in the Spiritual Temple of our faith: Manus Ejus, his hands have laid the corner stone of our belief, and his hands shall bring forth the headstone also, giving us the end of our faith, which is the Salvation of our Souls.

Of our faith, and of the whole race of it he is the Author, casting up his glove at the first setting forth: he is the Finisher, holding out the prize at the goal end. By his authority it is, our course is begun: we run not without warrant. By His bounty, it shall be finished and crowned in the end: we run not in vain; or without hope of a reward.

But, what is this title to the point in hand? So, as nothing can be more. Author and Finisher, they are the two points that move us to look to Him. And the very same are the two points, wherein we are moved to be like to Him.

To fix our Eye, to keep it from straying, to make us look on Him full, He telleth us, He is both these. In effect, as if He said, scatter not your sight, look not two ways, as if He (I shew you) were to begin, and some other make an end. He (I shew you) doth both.

His main end being to exhort them, as they had begun well, so, well to persevere; to very good purpose, he willeth them to have an eye to Him, and His example, who first and last, ἀρχὴ καὶ τέλος, from the crutch to the Cross, from S. Luk's time (a) quo cepit Jesus facere & docere, that He began to do and teach, to (b) S. John's time, that He cried consummatus est, gave them not over (c) sed in finem usque dilexit eos, but to the end loved them. And so must they Him, if they do Him right. Both, set out with Him, as Author by a good beginning; and hold out with Him, as Finisher, to a far better end; and follow him, in both, who is both. Were He Author only, it would serve to step forth well at the first. But He is Finisher too: therefore, we must hold out to the last. And not read one of them for the other, seeing He requireth both: no either, but both: and is (indeed) Jesus a Saviour of none but those, that follow Him as Finisher too, and are therefore marked in the (d) forehead with Tau the last letter of the Hebrew, as He Himself is Omega, the last of the Greek Alphabet. This is the Party, He commendeth to our view; Jesus, the Author and the Finisher of our faith. For these two, to look upon Him: and, in these two, to be like unto Him.

Our Sight then is Jesus: and in Jesus what? You have called us hither (say they in the Canticles) to see your Shulamite, what shall we see in Him? What? (saith the Esponse) but as the company of an army (that is) many legions of good fights, an Ocean or bottomless depth of manifold high perfections. We shall lose our selves, we shall be confounded to see in Him, all that may be shewed us: the Object is too great. Two pieces therefore He maketh choice of, and but two; and presenteth Him to our eye in two forms only; 1. As hanging on the Cross; 2. As sitting on the throne. 1. His Passion, and 2. His Session; these two. And these two, with very good and perfect correspondence to the two former. By the Cross, He is Author: By the Throne, He is Finisher of our faith. As Man on the Cross, Author: As God on the Throne, Finisher. Author, on the Cross: there he paid the price of our admitting. Finisher, on the throne: there he is the prize to us of our course well performed, of the well finishing our race, the race of our faith.

And sure, with right high wisdom hath the Holy Ghost, being to exhort us to a race, combined these twain. For, in these twain, are comprised the two main motives, that set all the world on running, 1. Love, and 2. Hope. The Love He hath to us, in His Passion on the Cross. The Hope we have of Him, in His Session on the Throne. Either of these alone, able to move; but, put them together, and they will move us, or nothing will.

1. Love first. What moveth the Mother to all the travel and toil she taketh with her Child? She hopes for nothing, she is in years (suppose;) she shall not live to receive any benefit by it: It is Love and Love only. Love, first.

1. The Motives thereto.

1. Love.

2. Hope. 2. And then Hope. What moveth the Merchant, and so the Husbandman, and so the Military-man, and so all the rest? All the sharp showers and stormes they indure, they love them not: It is hope, and hope only of a rich return.

If either of these will serve us, will prevail to move us, here it is. Here is Love; Love in the Cross: Who loved us, and gave Himself for us, a Sacrifice on the Cross. Here is Hope, hope in the Throne: To him that overcometh will I give, to sit with me in my Throne. If our eye be a Mother's eye, here is Love worth the looking on. If our eye be a Merchant's eye, here is hope worth the looking after. I know, it is true, that verus amor vires non sumit de spe. (It is Bernard) Love, if it be true indeed, as in the Mother, receiveth no manner strength from hope. Ours is not such; but faint and feeble and full of imperfection: Here is hope therefore, to strengthen our weak knees, that we may run the more readily, to the high price of our calling.

To begin then with his Love, the Love of his Passion. (the peculiar of this Day.) In it, we first look to what he suffered; and that is of two sorts: 1. The Cross, He endured: 2. The shame, He despised. 3. And then with what mind: for the mind is worth all; and love in it, sheweth it self (if not more) as much as in the suffering it self: but certainly, more. And this is His mind, proposito sibi gaudeo, as cheerfully as if it had been some matter of joy. Of both first joyntly under one. Then severally each by it self.

Two things are to us most precious, 1. our Life, and 2. our Reputation: Pari passu ambulans (saith the Lawyer) they go arm in arm, and are of equal regard, both. Life is sweet; the Cross cost Him His Life. Honour is dear; Shame bereft Him His honour. In the race, which before us and for us our Blessed Saviour ran, these two great blocks, 1. Death, and 2. Disgrace were in His way. Neither stayed Him: to testify His Love, over both He passed. Put His shoulders under the Cross and endured it, to the loss of His life. Set His foot upon shame and despised it, to the loss of His honour. Neither one nor other, life or honour, held He dear, to do us good. O, if we should hazard but one of these two, for any creature living, how much adoe would we make of it, and reckon the party eternally obliged to us! Or if any should venture them for us, we should be the better, every time we saw him. O that it might be so here! O that we would meet this Love with the like measure! Certainly, in his Passion, the Love of us triumphed, over the love of his life, and honour both.

One view more of both these under one, and we shall by these two discover two other things in our selves, for which, very agreeable it was he should suffer these two, that by these two of His, for those two of ours, he might make full satisfaction. It will shew a good congruity between our sickness and his salve, between our debt and his discharge.

The Mother-sin then; the sin of Adam and Eve, and their motives to it, are the lively image of all the after-births of sin, and the baits of sin for ever. Now that which moved them to disobey, was partly pleasure, and partly pride. Pleasure; O the fruit was delightful to see and to take. Pride: Eratis sicut Dei, it promised an estate equal to the Highest. Behold then (in His Passion) for our pleasure, His pain; and for our pride, His shame and reproach. Behold Him in His patience, enduring pain, for our wicked lust; in His humanity, having shame poured on Him, for our wretched pride. (a) The Lord of life suffering death; (b) The Lord of glory, vile and ignominious disgrace. (c) Tanquam Agnus (saith the Prophet of Him) as a lamb, pitifully slaughtered: (d) Tanquam vermis (saith He of Himself) as a worme, spitefully trod upon. So, by his enduring pains and painful death, expiating our unlawful pleasure: and, by His sustaining shame, satisfying for our shameful pride. Thus may we, under one, behold our selves, and our wretched demerits, in the mirror of His Passion. Gregory saith well: Dicendum erat, quantum nos dilexit, ne diffidere; Dicendum erat & quales, ne superbire & ingrati esse: How greatly He loved us, must be told us, to keep us from distrust: And what we were when He so loved us, must be told us, to hold us in humility, to make us everlastingly thankful. Thus far both under one view.

Now are we to part them, to see them apart. We shall have much adoe to do it, they are so folded and twisted together. In the Cross, there is shame, and in shame there is a Cross, and that a heavy one.

The Cross, the Heathen termed, Cruciabile lignum, a tree of torture: but they called it also, Arborem infelicem, & stipitem infamem, A wretched infamous tree withal. So it was in His Crown, the thorns pricked him; there was pain: the Crown it self was a meer mockery, and matter of scorn. So, in his Robe; his purple body underneath in great pain certainly: His purple Robe over it, a garment of shame and disgrace. All along the Passion, thus they meet still together. In a word: the prints of his Passion, the Apostle well calleth Stigmata Christi: Both, are in that word: not onely wounds and scorigious; but base and servile marks, and so shameful; for, so are stigmata. Thus, shame and Cross, and Cross and shame run interchangeably.

Yet, since the Holy Ghost doth shew us them severally, so to see them, as he shews them. Enduring is the act of patience; and patience hath pain for her object. Despising shame is the property of humility, even of the highest humility; Not only spernere se, but spernere se sperni. First then we must see the pain, his patience endured; that is meant by the Cross: and then see the despising, his humility despised; that is meant by the shame. First then of his Cross.

It is well known, that Christ and his Cross were never parted; but that all his life long was a continual cross. At the very Cratch; his Cross first began. All his life after (saith the Apostle in the next Verse) was nothing but a perpetual gain-saying of sinners: which we call crossing; and profess, we cannot abide, in any of our speeches or purposes to be crossed, he was. In the Psalms of the Passion (the XXII.) in the very front or inscription of it, he is set forth unto us under the term of a Hart,
Cer-

Cervus matutinus, a morning Hart (that is) a Hart roused early in the morning: As, from His birth He was by Herod, and hunted and chased all His life long; and this day brought to His end, and as a poor Deer, stricken and wounded to the heart. This was His last; last and worst. And, this we properly call his Cross, even this dayes suffering. To keep us then to our day, and the Cross of the day. He endured the Cross.

He endured. Very induring it self, is durum: Durum pati. Especiall, for persons of high power or place, as the Son of God was. For great Persons to do great things, is no great wonder: Their very Gemius naturally inclineth to it. But, to suffer any small thing, for them, is more than to do many great. Therefore, the Prophet placeth his moral fortitude, and the Divine, his Christian obedience, rather in suffering, than in doing. Suffering is (sure) the more hard of the twain. He endured.

If it be hard to endure, it must be more hard to endure hard things: And of all things hard to be endured, the hardest is death. Of the Philosophers πύρρὸς ποστὲρ five fearfull things, it is the most fearfull: And what will not a man? Nay, what will not a woman weak and tender, in Physick, in Chirurgery endure, not to endure Death? He endured death.

And, that if He endured, and no more but that, it might suffice; it is worth all we have; for, all we have, we will give for our life. But not death only, but the kind of death is it. Mortem, mortem autem Crucis (saith the Apostle, doubling the point:) Death He endured, even the death of Phil. 2. 8.

The Cross is but a little word; but of great contents: but few letters; but in those few letters, are contained, multa dictu gravia, perpesu aspera, heavy to be named, more heavy to be endured. I take but the four things ascribed by the Holy Ghost to the Cross, answerable to the four ends or quarters of it.

1. Sanguis Crucis (Colos. 1. 20.)
2. Doloris Crucis (Acts 1. 2.)
3. Scandalum Crucis (Gal. 5. 11.)
4. Maledictum Crucis (Gal. 3. 13.)

that is, The death of the Cross is all these four, a 1. bloody, 2. dolefull, 3. scandalous, 4. accursed death.

1. Though it be but a cold comfort, yet a kind of comfort it is (if dye we must) that our death is mors sicca, a dry; not sanguis Crucis, not a bloody death. 2. We would dye, when we dye, an ease, (not adversus saevitiam) not a tormenting death. 3. We desire to dye, with credit, if it might be; if not, without scandal, (scandalum Crucis.) 4. At least wise to go to our graves, and to dye by an honest, ordinary, and by no means, by an accursed death, (maledictum Crucis) In the Cross, are all these; all four. The two first are in the Cross: The two latter, in the shame. For, the Cross and the shame are (in very deed) two Crosses: the shame, a second Cross of it self.

To see then, as in a short time, shortly. That of the Poet (nec sicca morte Tyranni) sheweth plainly, it is no poor privileged, to dye without effusion of blood. And so it is. 1. For, a blessing it is, and our wish it is, we may live out our time, and not dye an unimely death. Where there is effusion of blood, there is ever an unimely death.

2. Yet every unimely death is not violent: but a bloody death is violent and against nature; and we desire to pay Nature her debt by the way of Nature.

3. A violent death one may come to, as in war (sanguis belli, best sheweth it) yet by valour, not by way of punishment. This death is penal: not (as all death) spendium peccati; but (as evil mens death) vindicta sceleris, an execution for some Capital offence.

4. And not every crime neither. Funderur sanguis is the punishment of Treason and other more heinous crimes, to dye embued in their own blood. And even they that dye so, dye not yet so evil a death, as do they that dye on the Cross. It is another case, where it is sanguis mortis, the blood and life go away together at once; another, when it is sanguis Crucis, when the blood is shed, and the party still in full life and sence, as on the Cross it was: the blood first and the life a good while after. This is Sanguis Crucis, an 1. unimely, 2. violent, 3. penal, 4. penal in the highest degree: there bleeding out His blood before He dye, and then dye.

When blood is shed, it would be no more than need: shed it would be, not poured out. Or if so, at one part (the neck or throat) not at all parts at once. But, here was funderur; havock made at all parts, His Passion (as He termeth it) a second Baptism, a River of blood; and He even able to have been baptized in it, as He was in Jordan. And where it would be Summa parsimonia etiam vilissimi sanguinis, no waste, no not of the basest blood that is; waste was made here. And of what blood? Sanguis Jesu, the blood of Jesus: and who was He? Sure, by virtue of the union Personat, God; and so, this blood, blood of Gods own bleeding; every drop whereof was precious, more precious than (that, whereof it was the price) the world it self: Nay, more worth than many worlds; yea, if they were ten thousand. Yet was this blood wastfully spilt, as water upon the ground. The funderur and the qui here, will come into consideration, both. This is sanguis Crucis: and yet, this is not all neither; there is more yet.

For, the blood of the Cross, was not only the blood of Golgotha, but the blood of Gabbatha too. For, of all deaths, this was peculiar to this death, the Death of the Crosse; that they that were to be crucified, were not to be crucified alone (which is the blood of Golgotha:) but they must be whipped too, before they were crucified, which is the blood of Gabbatha; a second death, yea worse than death it self. And in both these places He bled, and in either place twice. They rent His body with the 1. whips, they goard His head with the 2. thornes, but these in Gabbatha. And again, twice in Golgotha; when they 1. nailed His hands and His feet; when He was 2. thrust to the heart with the spear. This is sanguis Crucis. It was to be stood on a little: we might not pass it: It is that, whereon our faith depends, Per fidem in sanguinem Ipsi: by it, he is Author of our faith. Faith in God, and Peace with God, both: Rom. 3. 25. Col. 1. 20.

Now

Now this bloody whipping and nailing of His, is it which bringeth in the second point of pain: that it was not blood alone without pain, as in the opening of a vein; but it was blood and pain both. The tearing and mangling of his flesh, with the whips, thorns and nails, could not choofe but be exceeding painfull to Him. Pains (we know) are encreased much by cruel, and made more easie by gentle handling, and even the worst that suffer, we wish their execution as gentle, and with as little rigor as may be. All rigor, all cruelty was shewed to Him; to make his pains the more painfull. In Gabbatha, they did not whip Him (saith the Psalmist) they ploughed His back, and made (not stripes, but) long furrows upon it. They did not put on His wreath of thorns, and press it down with their hands, but beat it on with batts, to make it enter through skin, flesh, skull and all. They did not (in Golgotha) pierce his hands and feet, but made wide holes (like that of a spade) as if they had been digging in some ditch.

These were pains, and cruel pains: But yet these, are not adversus (the Holy Ghosts word in the Text) Those are properly straining pains, pains of torture. The Rack is devised as a most exquisite pain, even for terror. And the Cross is a rack, whereon he was stretched, till (saith the Psalm) all his bones were out of joynt. But even to stand (as He hung) three long hours together, holding up both the arms at length, I have heard it avowed of some that have felt it to be a pain scarce credible. But, the hands and the feet being so cruelly nallied (parts, of all other, most sensible, by reason of the texture of sinews, there, in them most) it could not but make His pain out of measure painful. It was not for nothing, that dolores acerrimi dicuntur cruciatus (saith the Heathen man) that the most sharp and bitter pains of all other, have their name from hence, and are called Cruciatus, pains like those of the Cross. It had a meaning, that they gave Him, that he had (for his welcome to the Cross) a cup mixt with gall or myrrhe; and (for his farewell) a sponge of vinegar: to shew by the one, the bitterness; by the other, the sharpness of the pains of this painful death.

Now, in pain (we know) the only comfort of gravis, is brevis; if we be in it, to be quickly out of it. This, the Cross hath not; but is mors prolixa, a death of dimensions, a death long in dying. And it was therefore purposely chosen by them. Blasphemy they condemned Him of; then was he to be stoned: That death would have dispatched him too soon. They indited him anew of Sedition; not, as of worse fault, but only because crucifying belonged to it: For, then he must be whipped first, and that liked them well: and then, he must dye by inch-meal; not swallow his death at once, but taste it (as Chap. 2. 9.) and take it down by little and little. And then he must have his legs and arms broken; and so was their meaning, he should have been: Else (I would gladly know) to what purpose provided they to have a Vessel of Vinegar ready in the place (John 19. 29.) but only, that he might not faint with loss of blood, but be kept alive till they might hear his bones crash under the breaking, and so feed their eyes with that spectacle also. The providence of God (indeed) prevented this last act of cruelty: Their will was good though. All these pains are in the Cross: but, to this last specially, the word in the Text hath reference ὑπερβαλον, which is, he must μὴ μὲν ὑποδύω, carry, stay, abide under it: So dye, that he might feel himself dye, and endure the pains of an enduring death.

And yet, all this is but half, and the lesser half by far, of Cruciatus crucis. All this, his body endured, was his soul free the while? No; but suffered as much: As much? nay more, infinitely much more, on the spiritual; than his body did, on the material Cross. For, a spiritual Cross there was too: all grant a Cross, besides that which Simon of Cyren did help him to bear. Great were those pains, and this time too little to shew, how great; but, so great, that in all the former, he never shrunk, nor once complained; but was, as if he scarce felt them. But when these came they made him complain and cry aloud, καὶ ἔκραζεν, a strong crying. In all those, no blood came, but where passages were made for it to come out by: but in this, it strained out all over, even at all places at once. This was the pain of the Press (so the Prophet calleth it, Torcular;) wherewith, as if he had been in the wine-press, all his garments were stained and goared with blood. Certainly, the blood of Gethsemane was another manner of blood than that of Gabbatha; or that of Golgotha either; and that was the blood of his internal Cross. Of the three Passions, that was the hardest to endure: yet that did he endure too. It is that, which belief it self doth wonder, how it doth believe; save that it knoweth; as well the Love as the Power of God to be without bounds; and his wisdom as able to find, how through Love it might be humbled, as exalted through power, beyond the uttermost that mans wit can comprehend.

And this is the Cross He endured. And if all this might have been endured, salvo honore, without shame or disgrace, it had been so much the less. But now, there is a further matter yet to be added, and that is shame. It is hard to say, of these two, which is the harder to bear; which is the greater Cross, the cross or shame. Or rather, it is not hard. There is no mean party in misery, but, if he be insulted on, his being insulted on more grieves him, then doth the misery it self: But, to the noble generous nature, to whom Interesse honoris est majus omni alio interesse, the value of his honor is above all value; to him, the Cross is not the Cross: shame, is the Cross. And any high and heroical Spirit beareth any grief more easily, then the grief of contemptuous and contumelious usage. King Saul shewed it plainly, who chose rather, to run upon his own sword, then to fall into the hands of the Philistines, who (he knew) would use him with scorn, as they had done Sampson before him. And even he (Sampson too) rather then sit down between the Pillars and endure this, pulled down house and all, as well upon his own head, as theirs that so abused him. Shame then, is certainly the worse of the twain. Now in his death, it is not easie to define, whether pain or shame had the upper hand: whether greater, Cruciatus or scandalum Crucis.

Was it not a foul disgrace and scandal to offer him the shame of that servile base punishment of the whip; not to be offered to any but to slaves and bond-men? Loris? liber sum (saith he in the Comedie, in great disdain: as if being free-born, he held it great skorn to have that once named to him.) Yet, shame of being put out of the number of free-born men, he despised, even the shame of Phil. 2. 7. being in formâ servi.

That, that is servile, may yet be honest: Then, was it not yet a more foul disgrace and scandal indeed, to appoint him, for his death, that dishonest, that foul death, the death of Malefactors, and of the worst sort of them? Morte turpissimâ (as themselves termed it): the most shamefull opprobrious death of all other, that the persons are scandalous that suffer it? To take Him as a thief, to hang Him between two thieves: nay, to count him worse then the worst thief in the Goal; to say and to cry, Prod Barabbas, percat Christus, Save Barabbas and hang Christ? Yet this shame He despised too, of being in formâ malefici.

If base, if dishonest, let these two serve: use him not disgracefully, make him not a ridiculum caput, pour not contempt upon him. That did they too: and a shame it is to see the shamefull cariage of themselves all along the whole Tragedy of His Passion. Was it a Tragedy, or a Passion trou? A Passion it was: yet by their behaviour it might seem a may-game. Their shouting and outries; their harrying of him about, from Annas to Caiaphas; from him to Pilate; from Pilate to Herod; and from him to Pilate again: One while in purple, Pilate's suit; another while in white; Herod's livery: Nipping him by the cheeks, and pulling off his hair; blindfolding Him and buffeting Him; bowing to Him in derision, and then spitting in his face, was, as if they had not the Lord of glory, but some idiot or dizard in hand. Died Abner, as a fool dieth? (saith David of Abner in great regret) O no. Sure, our blessed Saviour so died; and, that he so died, doth equal, nay surpass even the worst of his torments. Yet this shame also He despised, of being in formâ ludibris. 1 Sam. 3. 33.

Is there any worse yet? There is. For, though contempt be bad, yet despight is beyond it, as far as earnest is beyond sport: that, was sport; this, was malice. Despight, I call it, when in the midst of his miser, in the very depth of all his distress, they vouchsafed him not the least compassion: but, as if he had been the most odious wretched Caitiff and abject of men, the very out-cast of Heaven and Earth; stood flaring and gaping upon him, wagging their heads, writhing their mouths, yea blearing out their tongues; railing on him, and reviling him, scoffing at him and scorning him: yea, in the very time of his Prayers deriding Him, even in his most mournfull Complaint and cry, for the very Anguish of His Spirit. These vile indignities, these shamefull villanies, so void of all humanity, so full of all despight: (I make no question) entred into his soul deeper, than either nail or spear did into His Body. Yet all this He despised: to be in formâ reprobî. Men hid their faces at this; nay, to see this fight, the Sun was darkened, drew back his light: the earth trembled, ran one part from the other; the powers of Heaven were moved.

Is this all? No, all this is but Scandalum: there is a greater yet remaining, then scandalum; and that is maledictum Crucis: That the death he died, was not only servile, scandalous, opprobrious, odious, but even execrable and accursed. For men held so. For, as he had been a very reprobate, in his extream drought, they denied him a drop of water (never denied to any but to the damned in hell) and instead of it, offered him vinegar in a sponge: and that in the very pangs of death, as one for whom nothing was evil enough.

All this is but man, and man is but man; his glory is shame oftentimes, and his shame glory: But, what God curseth, that is curset indeed. And this death was curset by God Himself, His own mouth, as the Apostle deduceth, Gallath. 3. 13. When all is said we can say, this, this, is the hardest point of his shame, and the highest point of his love in bearing it. Christus factus est maledictum. The shame of a curset death, curset by God, is a shame beyond all shames; and he that can despise it, may well say; consummation est: there is no greater left for him to despise. O what contempt was powred upon him, O how was he in all these despised! Yet he despised them all, and despised to be despised in them all. The highest humility, Spernere Se sperni: these so many wayes, spernere Se sperni.

So have we now the Cross ἑὸν ἰδύον, the two main barres of it, 1. Pain and 2. Shame: and either of these again, a Cross of it self; and that double, 1. outward, and 2. inward. Pain; bloudy, cruel, dolorous and enduring: Pain He endured: shame, servile, scandalous, opprobrious, odious: Shame He despised. And beside these, an internal Cross: the Passion of Getsemane, and an internal shame; the Curse it self of the Cross: Maledictum Crucis. Of these, He endured the one; the other He despised.

These, all these, and yet there remaineth a greater than all these, even quo animo, with what mind, what having in His mind, or setting before His eyes, He did and suffered all this. That he did it not, ut cumq; but proposito sibi, with an eye to somewhat He aimed at. 3. Quo animo.

We handle this point last; it standeth first in the Verse. And sure, if this, as a figure, stand not first, the other two are but Ciphers: with it, of value; nothing without it.

To endure all this is very much, howsoever it were. So, to endure it, as to make no reckoning of it, to despise it, is more strange than all the rest. Sure, the shame was great, how could He make so small account of it? and the Cross heavy; how could He set it so light: They could not choose but pinch Him, and that extreamly: and how then could He endure, and so endure, that He despised them? It is the third point; and in it, is adeus arietis, the fat of Rammes, the marrow of the Sacrifice; even the good heart, the free forward mind, the cheerfull affection, wherewith he did all this: There

There be but two senses, to take this ἀντι in : Neither amiss ; both very good, take whether you will, Love is in both, and Love is a high measure. Ἀντι even either Pro or Pra : Pro, in stead ; or Pra, in comparison.

Exh. 3. 4.
Phil. 2. 6.

Ἀντι Pro, in stead of the joy set before Him. What joy was was that? Ἐξὺν δὲ αὐτὸς ἐν ἑαυτοῖς (saith St. Chrysostome) for He was in the joyes of Heaven : there He was, and there He might have held Him. Nothing did or could force Him to come thence, and to come hither thus to be intreated, Nothing but Sic dilexit, or Propter nimiam charitatem quā dilexit nos, but for it. Yet was He content, being in the form of God, ἀντι in stead of it, thus to transform, yea, to deform Himself into the shape of a servant, a felon, a fool ; nay, of a Caiiff accursed : Content to lay down His crown of glory, ἀντι in stead of it, to wear a crown of thorns : Content, what we shun by all means, that to endure (loss of life ;) and what we make so great a matter of, that to despise (loss of honor.) All this, with the loss of that joy and that honor, He enjoyed in Heaven (another manner joy, and Honor, than any we have here) ἀντι for this, or in stead of this.

But, the other sence is more praised, ἀντι Pra, in comparison. For indeed, the joy He left in Heaven, was rather ἡλικιωμένη than ἡλικιωμένη, joy wherein He did already sit, than joy set before Him. Upon which ground, ἀντι, they turn Pra ; and that better, as they suppose. For, that is, in Comparison of a certain Joy : which he comparing with the Cross and shame and all, chose rather to go through them all, than to go without it. And can there be any Joy compared, with those He did forgo ? or, can any joy countervail those barbarous usages, He willingly went through ? It seemeth, there can. What joy might that be ? Sure none other, but the Joy He had to save us, the joy of our salvation. For, what was His glory, or joy, or crown of rejoicing, was it not we ? Yes truly, we were His crown and His Joy. In comparison of this joy he exchanged those joyes, and endured these pains : this was the honey that sweetned His gall : And, no joy at all in it, but this, to be Jesus, the Saviour of a sort of poor sinners. None but this : and therefore pity He should lose it.

And it is to be marked, that though to be Jesus, a Saviour ; in propriety of speech, be rather a title, an outward honor, than an inward joy, and so should have been pra honore, rather than pra gaudio ; yet He expresseth it in the term of joy, rather than that of honor, to shew, it joyed Him at the heart to save us ; and so, as a special joy, he accounted it.

a P. al. 40. 7.

b Luke 2. 15.

c Lukē 12. 15.

Sure, some such thing there was, that made him so cheerfully say to His Father in the Psalm, Eccce venio, Loe I come : And to his Disciples in earth, This, this is the Pasover, that (b) desiderio desideravi, I have so longed for (as it were embracing and even welcoming His death :) And which is more, (c) quomodo coartor ! how am I pinched, or streightened, till I be at it ! as if he were in pain, till he were in pain to deliver us. Which joy if ever He shewed, in this he did, that He went to His Passion with Palms and with such triumph and solemnity, as He never admitted all his life before. And that this His lowest estate (one would think it) he calleth his Exaltation, Cum exaltatus fuero. And, when any would think, he was most imperfect, he esteemeth (and so termeth) it his highest perfection, Tertio die perficior. In hoc est charitas, here is love : if not here, where ? But here it is and that in the highest elevation. That the joyes of Heaven set on the one side ; and this poor joy of saving us on the other ; He quit them, to choose this. That those pains and shames set before him, and with them this joy, He chose them rather than forgoe this.

John 12. 32.

Luke 13. 32.

1 John 4. 10.

Those joyes He forsook, and this He took up ; and to take it, took upon Him so many, so strange indignities of both sorts ; took them and bare them with such a mind, as He not only endured, but despised ; Nor that neither, but even joyed in the bearing of them, and all to do us good. So to alter the nature of things, as to find joy in death, whereat all do mourn ; and joy in shame, which all do abhor, is a wonder like that of the bush.

Exod. 3 :

This is the very life and soul of the Passion ; and all besides, but the σκελετοῖς only, the anatomy, the carcases without it.

II.
The A&, or Duty.

So have we now the whole Object ; both what ; and with what mind. And, what is now to be done ? Shall we not pause a while, and stay, and look upon this Theory yet we go any further ? Yes, let us. Proper to this day is this fight of the Cross. The other (of the throne) may stay yet His time a day or two hence.

We are enjoined to look upon Him. How can we, seeing He is now higher than the Heavens, far out of our sight, or from the kenning of any mortal eye ? Yes, we may for all that. As (in the 27. of the Chapter next before) Moses is said to have seen Him that is invisible : Not with the eyes of flesh ; so, neither he did, or we can : But (as there it is) by faith. So, he did, and we may. And, what is more kindly to behold the Author of faith, than faith ? or more kindly for faith to behold, than her Author here at first ; and her Finisher there at last ? Him to behold first and last ; and never to be satisfied with looking on Him, who was content to buy us and our eye at so dear a rate.

Our eye then is the eye of our mind, which is faith : And our aspicientes in this, and the recognoscentes (in the next Verse) all one ; our looking to Him here, is our thinking on Him there : On Him and His Passion over and over again, Donec totus fixus in corde, qui totus fixus in Cruce, till He be as fast fixed in our hearts, as ever He was to His Cross ; and some impression made in us of Him, as there was in Him for us.

In this our looking then, two acts be rising from the two prepositions : One before, ἀπὸ, in ἀποστροφή, looking from : the other after, εἰς looking upon, or into.

I.
Looking from Ἀπὸ.

There is ἀπὸ, from, abstracting our eye from other Objects, to look hither some time. The Preposition is not idle, nor the note, but very needfull : For, naturally we put this spectacle far from us, and endure not either oft or long to behold it. Other things there be, please our eyes better, and which we

we look on with great delight. And we must ἀποστρέφω look off them, or we shall never ἀεὶ, look upon this aright. We must (in a fort) work force to our nature, and per actum felicitum (as they terme it in Schools) inhibere out eyes, and ever μενεῖν them from other more pleasing spectacles that better like them, or we shall do no good here; never make a true Theory of it. I mean, though our prospect into the world be good; and we have both occasion and inclination to look thither oft; yet ever and anon to have an eye this way; to look from them to Him, who, when all these shall come to an end, must be He that shall finish and consummate our faith and us, and make perfect both. Yea, though the Saints be fair marks (as at first I said) yet even to look off from them hither, and turn our eye to Him, from all; even from Saints and all. But chiefly, from the basis of sin; the concupiscence of our eyes, the shadows and shews of vanity round about, by which death entreth at our windows: which unless we can be got to look from, this sight will do us no good; we cannot look on both together.

Now our Theory, as it beginneth with unto, so it endeth with us. Therefore look from it: that look to Him: or (as the word giveth it rather) into Him, than to Him; us is into rather than to. Which proveth plainly, that the Passion is a piece of Perspective; and, that we must set our selves to see it, if we will see it well; and not look superficially on it: Not on the outside alone, but dear us, pierce into it, and enter even into the inward workmanship of it; even of his internal Cross: which he suffered, and of His intire affection wherewith He suffered it.

And we may well look into him; Cancellis plenum est corpus, His body is full of stripes, and they are as lattices: Patent viscera, per vulnera, His wounds they are as windows, through which we may well see all that is within Him. Clavus penetrans factus est mihi clavis referans (Faith S. Bernard:) The nails and spear-head serve as keys to let us in. We may look into the palms of His hands, wherein (saith the Prophet) He hath graven us, that He might never forget us. We may look into His side (S. John useth the word) opened. Vigilanti verbo (saith Augustine) a word well chosen, upon good advice; We may through the opening, look into His very bowels, the bowels of kindness and compassion, that would endure to be so intreated. Yea, that very heart of his, wherein we may behold the love of our salvation to be the very hearts joy of our Saviour.

Thus looking from, from all else, to look into Him, what then? then followeth the participle, We shall 2.
see. What shall we see? Nay, what shall we not see? What Theory is there worth the seeing, but is there To see 2.
to be seen? To recount all, were too long: Two there are in especial.

There is a theory medicinal, like that of the brazen Serpent; and it serveth for comfort to the conscience, filing and wounded with the remembrance of sin. For, what sin is there or can there be so execrable or accursed, but the curse of the Crofs; what so disgraceful or full of confusion; but the shame of it; what so corrosive to the conscience, but the pains of it; what so deep or of so crimson a dye, but the blood of it, the blood of the Crofs will do it away? What sting so deadly, but the fight of this Serpent will cure it? This a principal theorie; and elsewhere to be stood on, but not here. For this serveth to quiet the mind, and the Apostle (here) seeketh to move it, and make it stir.

There is then another theory besides, and that is exemplary for imitation. There He dyed (faith Saint Paul) to lay down for us ἀντίδοτος, our ransom: that is the former. There He dyed (faith S. Peter) to leave unto us ὑποχρέωσις, relinquens nobis exemplum, a pattern an example to follow, and this is it; to this he calleth us; to have a directory use of it, to make it our pattern; to view it as our idea. And sure, as the Church under the Law needed not, so neither doth the Church under the Gospel need any other precept than this one, Inspecite & fac, See and do according to the theory He viewed thee in the Mount: To them in Mount Sinai: to us in Mount Calvary.

Exod. 25.

Were all philosophy lost, the theory of it might be found there. Were all chairs burnt (Moses chair and all) the chair of the Cross is absolutely able to teach all veritas new again. All verities are there visible. All, if time would serve: Now I name only those five, which are directly in the Text.

1. Faith is named there: It is, it was most conspicuous there to be seen: when, being forsaken of God, yet He clasped (as it were) His arms, fast about Him, with Eli, Eli, My God, My God, for all that. 2. Patience, in enduring the Cross. 3. Humility, in despising the shame. 4. Perseverance, in that it was nothing for Him to be Amor, unless He were Finis too. These four. But above these and all, that which is the 5. ratio idealis of all, the band and perfection of all, Love, in the figure of love, in the joy, which he found in all this; Maiores quam nemo, to lay down His life: Parem cui nemo, in such sort to lay it down. Maiores quam nemo, to do this for his friends: Parem cui nemo, to do it for his enemies. Notwithstanding their unworthiness antecedent, to do it; and notwithstanding their unkindness consequent, yet to do it. This is the chief theory of all, but of Love (chiefly) the most perfect of all. For, sure, if ever ought were truly said of our Saviour, this was; that being spread and laid wide open on the Cross, He is: Liber charitatis: Wherein, he that runneth by may read Sic dilexit, and Propter nimiam charitatem, and Ecce quantum charitatem! Love all over, from one end to the other. Every stripe as a letter, every nail as a Capital letter. His livories, as black letters. His bleeding wounds, as so many rubrics, to shew upon record His love towards us.

Of which Love the Apostle when he speaketh, he setteth it out with height and depth, length and breadth (the four dimensions of the Cross) to put us in mind (say the Ancient Writers) that, upon the extent of the tree was the most exact Love, with all the dimensions in this kind, represented that ever was.

That we may turne.

Having seen all these, what is the end and use of this Sight? Having had the Theory, what is the Praxis of this Theory? what the conclusion of our contemplation? Looking into, is a participle; it maketh no sentence, but suspendeth it only, till we come to a verb, to which it relateth. That verb must be either the verb in the verse before, Ut curramus; or the verb in the verse following, Ut ne fatigemur; that, thus looking, we run; or that thus looking, we tire not. This is the practice of our Theory.

We said, the use was (and so, we see, it is) to move us, or to make us move: to work in our feet, to work in them a motion: not any slow but a swift motion, the motion of running; to run the race that is set before us. The operation it hath (this sight) is in our facultie motive; if we stand still, to cause us stir; if we move but slowly, to make us run apace: if we run already, never to tire, or give over, till we do attain. And by this we may know, whether our Theory be a true one: if this praxis follow of it, it is: if not, a gaze it may be; a true Christian Theory, it is not.

And here first our desiderium (that is) our looking from, is to work a turning from sin. Sure this spectacle, if it be well looked into, will make sin shall not look so well favoured in our eyes, as it did, it will make us, while we live, have a less liking to look toward it, as being the only procureur and cause of this Cross and this shame; Nay, not only, amoveamus to turn our eye from it, but amoveamus to turn our feet from it too; and to run from, yea, to flee from it, quasi à facie Colubri, as from the face of a Serpent.

1 Pet. 4. 1.

At least-wise, if not to run from it, not to run to it, as we have: to naile down our feet from running to sin, and our hands from committing sin, and (in a word) have Saint Peters practice of the Passion, to cease from sin. This abstractive force we shall find and feel: it will draw us from the delights of sin. And not only draw us from that, but draw from us too, something; make some tears to run from us, or (if we be dry-eyed, that not them, yet) make some sighs of devotion, some thoughts of grace, some kind of thankful acknowledgments to issue from our souls. Either by way of compassion, as feeling that, he then felt; or by way of compunction, as finding our selves in the number of the parties, for whom he felt them. It is a proper effect of our view of the Passion, this (as S. Luke sets it down, at the very place where he terms it doleat) that they returned from it smiting their breasts, as having seen a doleful Spectacle whom selves the cause of it.

Luk. 23. 48.

Now, as the looking from, worketh a moving from; so doth the looking to, a moving to.

Ioh. 11. 36.

For, first, Who is there that can look unto those hands and feet, that head and that heart of his, that endured all this, but must prima facie at the first sight see and say, Ecce quomodo dilexit nos? If the Jews (that stood by) said truly of him at Lazarus grave, Ecce quomodo dilexit eum! when he shed but a few tears out of his eyes; how much more truly may it be said of us, Ecce quomodo dilexit eos! for whom he hath shed both water and blood; yea, even from his heart, and that in such plenty? And he loving us so, if our hearts be not iron; yea, if they be iron, they cannot chuse but feel the magnetical force of this load-stone. For, to a load-stone doth he resemble himself, when he saith of himself, Woe I once lift up, omnia traham ad me. This virtue attractive is in this sight, to draw our love to it.

Ioh. 12. 32.

With which (as it were the needle) our faith being but touched will stir straight. We cannot but turn to him, and trust in him, that so many ways hath shewed himself so true to us. Quando amor confirmatur, fides inchoatur (saith S. Ambrose): Prove to us, of any, that he loves us indeed, and we shall trust him straight, without any more ado: we shall believe any good affirm'd of him. And what is there (tell me) any where affirm'd of Christ to us-ward, but this love of his, being believed, will make it credible.

Iam. 2. 22.

Phil. 2. 5.

1 Pet. 5. 10.

Now, our faith is made perfect by works, or well-doing (saith S. James): it will therefore set us in a course of them. Of which, every virtue is a stadium, and every act, a step toward the end of our race, Beginning at humility, the virtue of the first setting out. Let the same mind be in you, that was in Christ Jesus, who humbled himself: and so proceeding from virtue to virtue, till we come to patience and perseverance, that keep the goal end. So saith S. Peter, Modicum passos, per fiet, suffering somewhat more, or less; some crossing, if not the Cross; some evil report, though not shame; So, and no otherwise we shall come to our race end; our final perfection.

Ver. 3.

Gal. 5. 7.

2. Tim. 4. 7.

And, as the rest move us, if we stand still, to run: So, if we run already, these two (Patience and Perseverance) Patience will make us, for all our encounters non desinamus (saith the Apostle in the next verse) not to be weary; Not in our minds, though in our bodies we be: And Perseverance will make us non desinamus, not to faint or tire, though the time seem long and never so tedious: (Both these, in the Verse following.) But, hold on our course till we finish it, even till we come to Him, who was not only Author but Finisher, who held out, till he came to Consummation of it. And so must we finish, not stadium, but dolichum: not like those, of whom it was said, Currebatis bene, ye did well for a start; but like our Apostle, that said (and said truly) of himself, Cursum consummavi, I have finished my course, I have held out to the very end.

That we saint not.

a Ioh. 1. 14.

b Ioh. 16. 5.

c Ioh. 10. 28.

And in this, in the Praxis of our first Theory or sight of our love. But our love without hope is but faint: That then with better heart we may thus do, and bestir our selves, it will not be amiss, once more to lift up our eyes, and the second time to look on Him. We have not seen the end: the Cross is not the end: There is a better end then so, And is set down in the Throne. As the Prophet saw him, we have seen him: in such case, as we were ready to hide our faces, at him, and his sight. Here is a new sight: as the Evangelist saw him, so we now may: even his glory, as the glory of the only begotten Son of God. Ecce homo, Pilatus's sight we have seen: Ecce Dominus & Deus meus, S. Thomas's sight, we now shall. The former in his hanging on the Cross, the beginning of our faith. This latter, sitting on the Throne, the consummation of it.

Wherein

Wherein, there is an ample manner of hope, as before of love; all being turned in and out. He sits now at ease, that before hung in pain. Now, on a throne, that before on the Cross, now, at God's right hand, that before at Satan's left. (So Zachary saw him: Satan on his right hand, and then must he be on Satan's left.) All changed: His Cross, into ease; his shame, into glory. Z c. 3. 1.

Glory and rest, rest and glory, are two things that meet not here in our world. The glorious life hath not the most quiet; and the quiet life is (for the most part) inglorious. He that will have glory must make account to be despised of, and broken of his rest: and he that loveth his ease better, must be content with a mean condition far short of Glory. Here then, these meet not; there (our hope is) they shall: even both meet together, and glory and rest kiss each the other: So the Prophet calleth it a glorious rest. Esay. 11. 10.

And the right hand addeth yet a degree further. For, dextera est pars potior. So that, if there be any rest more easy, or any glory more glorious, then other, there it is, on that hand, on that side; and He placed in it, in the best, in the chiefest, the fulness of them both. At God's right hand is not only power; power, while we be here to protect us with His might outward, and to support us with His grace inward: but at His right hand also is the fulness of joy, for ever (saith the Psalms;) Joy, and the fulness of joy, and the fulness of it for ever more.

This is meant by his Seat at the right hand on the Throne. And the same is our blessed hope also, that it is not His place only and none but His; but, even ours in expectation also. The love of His Cross, is to us a pledge of the hope of His Throne, or whatsoever else, He hath or is worth. For if God have given us Christ, and Christ thus given Himself, what hath God, or Christ, they will deny us? It is the Apostles own deduction. Psal. 16. 11.
Rom. 8. 32.

To put it out of all doubt: hear we his own promise, that never brake his word: To him that overcometh, will I give to sit with me in my Throne. Where, to sit, is the fulness of our desire, the end of our race, omnia in omnibus: and further we cannot go. Of a joy set before Him, we spoke yea-while: here is now a joy set before us; another manner joy then was before Him: The worse was set before Him; the better before us: and this we are to run to. Apoc. 3. 21.

Thus do these two Theories (or sights) the one work to love, the other to hope; both to the well performing of our course, that in this Theater, between the Saints joyfully beholding us in our race, and Christ at our end ready to receive us, we may fulfil our course with joy, and be partakers of the blessed rest of His most glorious Throne.

Let us now turn to Him, and beseech Him by the sight of this day, by himself (first) and by his Cross and Throne both (both which He hath set before us, the one to awake our love, the other to quicken our hope) that we may this day and ever, lift up our eyes and heads; that we may, this day and ever, carry them in our eyes and hearts, look up to them both: To look, that we may love the one, and wait and hope for the other: so love and so hope, that by them both we may move, and that swiftly, even run to Him; and running not faint, but so constantly run, that we fail not finally to attain the happy fruition of Himself, and of the joy and glory of His blessed Throne: that so we may find and feel Him as this day here, the Author; so, in that day, there, the Finisher of our Faith, by the same our Lord, Jesus Christ. Amen.

AT
WHITE-HALL,

On the Sixth of Aprill, being Easter-Day.

An. Dom. 1606.

R o m. Chap. VI. Ver. IX, X, XI.

Scientes, quod Christus, &c.

Knowing that Christ, being raised from the dead, dyeth no more; death hath no more dominion over him.

For, in that He dyed, He dyed once to sin: but in that He liveth, He liveth to God.

Likewise think (or account) ye also, that ye are dead to sin, but are alive to God, in Jesus Christ our Lord.

HE Scripture is as the Feast is; both of them of the Resurrection: And this we may safely say of it, it is thought by the Church, so pertinent to the feast; as it hath ever been and is appointed to be the very entry of this dayes Service; to be sounded forth and sung, first of all, and before all, upon this day, as if there were some special correspondence between the day and it.

Two principal points are set down to us, out of the two principal words in it: One Scientes (in the first verse) Knowing: the other, Reputate (in the last verse) Compt your selves: Knowing, and Compting; Knowledge, and calling our selves to account for our Knowledge.

Two points very needfull to be ever joyntly called upon: and more than needfull for our times, being, that much we know, and little we compt, oft we hear and when we have heard, small reckoning we make of it. What Christ did on Easter-Day we know well; what we are then to do, we give no great regard: our Scientes is without a Reputantes.

Now this Scripture, ex totâ Substantia, out of the whole frame of it teacheth us otherwise, that Christian knowledge is not a knowledge without all manner of account; but that we are accountants for it: that we are to keep an Audire of what we hear, and take account of our selves of what we have learned. As Audire is an Auditors term: thence the Holy Ghost hath taken it; and would have us to be Auditors in both Senses.

And this to be general, in whatsoever we know: But specially, in our knowledge touching this Feast of Christ's Resurrection; where there are special words for it in the Text, where in express terms an account is called for at our hands as an essential duty of the Day. The benefit, we remember, is so great; the Feast, we hold so high; as, though at other times we might be forgotten, yet on this day, we may not.

Verse 12.

Now the Sum of our account is set down in these words [Similiter & vos:] that we fashion our selves like to Christ, dying and rising: cast our selves in the same moulds; express Him, in both as near as we can.

To account of these, first: that is to account our selves bound, so to do.

To account for these, second: that is, to account with our selves, whether we do so.

First, to account our selves bound, thus to do: resolving thus within our selves; that to hear a Sermon of the Resurrection, is nothing; to keep a feast of the Resurrection is as much, except it end in Similiter & vos. Nisi (saith S. Gregory) quod de more celebratur, etiam quoad mores exprimat, Unless we express the matter of the Feast in the form of our lives; Unless, as He from the grave, So we from sin: and live to godliness, as He unto God.

Then to account with our selves, whether we do thus: that is, to sit down and reflect upon the Sermons we hear, and the feasts we keep; how, by knowing Christ's death we dye to sin; how, by knowing His Resurrection, we live to God; how our estate in our soul is bettered: how the fruit of the words we hear, and the feasts we keep, do abound daily toward our account against the great Auditor. And this to be our account, every Easter-day.

The Division

Of these two points, the former is in the two first verses, what we must know: the latter, is in the last, what we must account for. And they be joyned with Similiter: to shew us, they be and must be, of equal and like regard: and we, as know; So account.

But because, our knowing is the ground of our account, the Apostle beginneth with knowledge. And so must we.

- I. Knowledge, in all learning, is of two sorts: 1. Retinere, or 2. Causare, ὑπὲρ, or διότι, That, or, in that. The former is in the first Verse: Knowing that Christ, &c. The latter in the Second: For in that, &c. And because we cannot cast up a Sum, except we have a particular; the Apostle giveth us a Particular of either: A particular of our Knowledge, Quoad res; which consisteth of these three: 1. That Christ is risen from the dead. 2. That now, He dyeth not. 3. That from henceforth death hath no dominion over Him. All, in the first Verse. Then a particular of our Knowledge, Quoad causas. The cause 1. Of His death, sin, He dyed to sin: 2. Of His life, God, He liveth to God. 3. And both these, but once for all. All in the second Verse.

- II. Then followeth our Account (in the third Verse.) Wherein we consider first; 1. The Charge; 2. And then the Discharge. 1. The charge first, Similiter & vos: That we be like to Christ. And then, wherein: 1. Like, in dying to sin; 2. Like in living to God. Which are the two moulds, wherein we are to be cast, that we may come forth like Him. This is the Charge: 2. And last of all, the means we have to help us to discharge it, in the last words: in Christ Jesu our Lord.

I.
Our Knowing:
The Means of it

Before we take view of the two Particulars, it will not be amiss to make a little stay at Sciences, the first word: because it is the ground of all the rest. Knowing that Christ is risen. This, the Apostle saith, the Romans did: knowing. Did know himself (indeed) that Christ was risen, for he saw Him. But how knew the Romans, or how know we? No other way than by relation, either they or we: but yet we, much better, than they: I say, by relation, in the nature of a verdict, of them that had seen Him, even Cephas and the twelve; which is a full Jury, able to find any matter of fact, and to give up a verdict in it. And that Christ is risen is matter of fact. But, if twelve will not serve in this matter of fact (which in all other matters with us, will) if a greater Enquest far, if five hundred will serve, you may have so many; for, of more than five hundred at once, was He seen; many of them then living ready to give up the same verdict, and to say the same upon their oaths.

1 Cor. 15. 6.

But to settle a knowledge, the number moveth not so much, as the quality of the Parties. If they were persons credulous, light of belief, they may well be challenged; if they took not the way to ground their knowledge aright. That is (ever) best known, that is most doubted of. And never was matter carried with more scruple, and slowness of belief, with more doubts and difficulties, than was this of Christ's rising. Mary Magdalen saw it first, and reported it: They believed her not. The two that went to Emmaus, they also reported it: They believed them not. Divers women together saw him, and came and told them: their words seemed to them as idle, fained, fond tale. They all saw Him; and even seeing Him, yet they doubted. When they were put out of doubt, and told it but to one that hapned to be absent (it was S. Thomas;) you know, how peremptory he was: Not he, unless he might not only see with his eyes, but feel with his fingers, and put in his hand into His side. And all this he did. S. Augustine saith vvell, Profecto valde dubitatum est ab illis, ne dubitaretur a nobis: All this doubting was by them made, that we might be out of doubt, and know, that Christ is risen.

Sure they took the right course to know it certainly: and certainly they did know it, as appeareth. For never was any thing known in this world, so confidently, constantly, certainly testified, as was this, that Christ is risen. By testifying it, they got nothing in the earth. Got nothing? Nay, they lost by it: their living living, their life, all they had to lose. They might have saved all, and but said nothing. So certain they were; so certainly they did account of their knowing; they could not be got from it: but to their very last breath, to the very last drop of their blood, bare witness to the truth of this Article: and chose rather to lay down their lives, and to take their death, than to deny; nay, than not to affirm His rising from death. And thus did they know, and knowing, testify; and by their testimony came the Romans to their knowing: and so do we. But (as I said before) we, to a much surer knowing than they. For, when this was written, the whole world stopt their ears, at this report; would not endure, to hear them; stood out mainly against them. The Resurrection! why, it was with the Grecians at Athens, χλυσμα a very skorn. The Resurrection! why, it was with Festus the great Roman, μανια, a sickness of the brain, a plain phrensie. Acts 17. 32. 26. 24. That world that then was, and long after, in such opposition, is since come in: and (upon better examination of the matter, so strangely testified, with so many thousand lives of men (to say the least of them) sad, and sober) hath taken notice of it, and both known and acknowledged the truth of it. It was well fore-told by S. John, hec est victoria, qua vincit mundum fides vestra. It is proved true since: That this faith of Christs rising hath made a conquest of the whole world. So that after all the world hath taken knowledge of it, we come to know it. And so more full to us, than to them, is this Scientes knowing. Now to our particulars: 1 John 5. 4. what we know.

Our first particular is: That Christ is risen from the dead. Properly, we are said to rise from a fall: and from death, rather to revive. Yet the Apostle rather useth the term of rising than reviving, as serving better to set forth his purpose. That death is a fall we doubt not: that it came with a fall, the fall of Adam. But, what manner of fall? for it hath been holden a fall, from whence is no rising. But, by Christs rising it falls out to be a fall, that we may fall, and yet get up again. For, if Christ be risen from it, then is there a rising; if a rising of one, then may there be of another: If He be risen in our nature, then is our nature risen; and if our nature be, our persons may be. Especially seeing (as the Apostle, in the fourth Verse before hath told us) He, and we, are σύνεσθαι, that is, so grafted, one into the other, that He is part of us, and we of Him: So that (as S. Bernard well observeth,) Christus celsi solus resurrexit, tamen non totus. That Christ, though he be risen only, yet he is not risen wholly, or all, till we be risen too. He is but risen in part: and that He may rise all, we must rise from death also.

This then we know first; That death is not a fall like that of Pharaoh, into the Sea, that sunk down like a lump of lead into the bottom, and never came up more: but a fall like that of Jonas, into the Sea, who was received by a Fish, and after cast up again. It is our Saviour Christs own Simile. A fall, not like that of the Angels into the bottomless pit, there to stay for ever? but like to that of men into their beds, when they make account to stand up again. A fall, not as of a log or stone, to the ground, which where it falleth, there it lyeth still; but, as of a wheat corn, into the ground, which is quickened and springeth up again. Exod. 15. 10. Jonah 1. 17. 2. 10. Mat. 13. 40. 25. 41. Ezech. 26. 19. 1 Cor. 15. 36.

The very word which the Apostle useth (ἵσταί) implyeth the two latter; 1. Either of a fall into a bed in our chamber; where though we lye (to see to) little better than dead for a time; yet in the morning we awake and stand up notwithstanding. 2. Or of a fall into a bed in our garden: where though the seed putrifie and come to nothing, yet we look to see it shoot forth anew in the Spring. Which Spring is (as Tertullian well calleth it) the very resurrection of the year: and Christs resurrection falleth well with it: And it is, faith he, no way consonant to reason, that man, for whom all things spring and rise again, should not have his spring and rising too. But, he shall have them, we doubt not, by this dayes work. He that this day did rise, and rising was seen of Mary Magdalen in the likeness of a Gardiner: this Gardiner will look to it, that man shall have his spring. He will (faith the Prophet) drop upon us a dew like the dew of herbs, and the earth shall yield forth her dead: And so, as Christ is risen from the dead, even so shall we. John 16. 19. Ezech. 26. 19.

Our second Particular is: that as He is risen; so, now He dyeeth not. Which is no idle addition, but hath his force and Emphasis. For, one thing it is, to rise from the dead; and another, not to dye any more. The Widows son of Naim; the Rulers daughter of the Synagogue; Lazarus; all these rose again from death, yet they dyed afterward; But, Christ rising from the dead, dyeeth no more. These two are sensibly different, Lazarus resurrection, and Christs: and this second is (sure) a higher degree than the former. If we rise, as they did, that we return to this same mortal life of ours, again; this very mortality of ours, will be to us as the prisoners chain he escapes away withall, by it we shall be pulled back again, though we should rise a thousand times. We must therefore rise, as Christ, that our resurrection be not reditus, but transitus; not a returning back to the same life, but a passing over to a new, Transivit de morte ad vitam (faith he) The very Feast it self puts us in mind of as much: It is Pascha (that is) the Passover, not a coming back to the same Land of Egypt: but a passing over to a better, the land of Promise; whither Christ our Passover is passed before us, and shall in His good time, give us passage after him. The Apostle expresseth it best, where he faith, that Christ by His rising hath abolished death, and brought to light life and immortality: not life alone, but life and immortality: which is this our second particular. Risen, and risen to dye no more, because risen to life, to life immortal. John 5. 24. Deut. 17. 16. 1 Cor. 5. 7. 2 Tim. 1. 10.

But, the third is yet beyond both these: more worth the knowing, more worthy our account; death hath no more dominion over Him. Where, as we before said, one thing it was to rise again, another to dye no more: so say we now; it is one thing not to dye: another not to be under the dominion of death: For death, and deaths dominion are two different things. Death it self is nothing else, but the very separation of the life from the body: deaths dominion, a thing of a far larger extent. By which word (of dominion) the Apostle would have us to conceive of death, as of some great Lord, having some large Signiory: Even as three several times (in the Chapter before he faith) Regnavit mors, death reigned, as if death were some mighty Monarch, having some great dominions under him. And so it is: For look how many 3. That from henceforth death hath no more dominion over him. Verse 14. 17. 21.

many dangers, how many diseases, sorrows, calamities, miseries there be of this mortal life : how many pains, perils, snares of death ; so many several provinces are there of this dominion. In all which, or some of them, while we live we still are under the jurisdiction and arrest of death, all the dayes of our life. And say that we scape them all, and none of them happen to us, yet live we still under fear of them, and that is death's dominion too. For he is (as Job calleth him) Rex pavoris, King of fear. And, when we are out of this life too ; unless we pertain to Christ and His Resurrection, we are not out of his dominion neither. For Hell it self is secunda mors (so termed by S. John) the second death, or second part of death's dominion.

Now, who is there that would desire to rise again to this life, yea, though it were immortal, to be still under this dominion of death here ; still subject, still liable to the aches and pains, to the griefs and gripings, to the manifold miseries of this vale of the shadow of death ? But then, the other, the second region of death, the second part of his dominion who can endure once to be there ? There they seek and wish for death, and death flyeth from them.

Verily, rising is not enough ; rising, not to dye again is not enough, except we may be quit of this dominion, and rid of that, which we either feel or fear, all our life long. Therefore doth the Apostle adde (and so it was needfull, he should) death hath no dominion over Him. No dominion over Him ? No ; for He, dominion over it. For, least any might surmise, He might break through some Wall, or get out at some window, and so steal a resurrection, or casually come to it ; He tels them, no : it is not so. Ecce claves mortis & inferni : see here the keys both of the first and second death. Which is a plain proof, He hath mastered, and got the dominion over both death, and him that hath the power of death, that is the devil. Both are swallowed up in victory, and neither death any more sting, nor hell any more dominion. Sed ad Dominum Deum nostrum spectant exitus mortis : But now unto God our Lord belong the issues of death : the keys are at His girdle ; He can let out as many as He list.

This estate is it, which he calleth Coronam vite ; not life alone, but the Crown of life, or a life crowned with immunity of fear of any evil, ever to befall us. This is it which (in the next verse) he calleth living unto God, the estate of the children of the resurrection, to be the sons of God, equal to the Angels, subject to no part of death's dominion, but living in security, joy and blis for ever.

And now is our particular full. 1. Rising to life first ; 2. and life freed from death, and so immortal ; 3. and then exempt from the dominion of death, and every part of it ; and so happy and blessed. Rise again ; so may Lazarus, or any mortal man do ; that is not it. Rise again to life immortal : so shall all do in the end, as well the unjust, as the just ; that is not it. But, rise again to life immortal, with freedom from all misery, to live to, and with God in all joy and glory evermore, that is it ; that is Christ's Resurrection. Estu (saith St. Augustine) spera talem resurrectionem, & propter hoc esto Christianus, Live in hope of such a resurrection, and for this hopes sake, carry thy self as a Christian. Thus have we our particular, of that we are to know touching Christ risen.

And now we know all these, yet do we not accompt our selves to know them perfectly, until we also know the reason of them. And the Romanes were a people, that loved to see the ground of that they received, and not the bare Articles alone. Indeed, it might trouble them, why Christ should need thus to rise again, because they saw no reason, why He should need dye : the truth is, we cannot speak of rising well, without mention of the terminus à quo, from whence He rose. By means whereof, these two, 1. Christ's dying, and 2. His rising are so linked together, and their Audites so intangled one with another, as it is very hard to sever them. And this you shall observe, the Apostle never goeth about to do it, but still (as it were of purpose) suffers one to draw in the other continually. It is not here alone, but all over his Epistles ; ever they run together, as if he were loth to mention one without the other.

And it cannot be denied, but that their joyning serveth to many great good purposes. These two, 1. His Death, and 2. His rising, they shew His two natures, Humane and Divine : 1. His Humane nature and weakness, in dying, 2. His Divine nature and power, in rising again. 2. These shew his two Offices ; His Priesthood and His Kingdom. 1. His Priesthood, in the sacrifice of His Death : 2. His Kingdom, in the glory of His resurrection. 3. They set before us, His two main Benefits, 1. Interitum mortis, and 2. Principium vite. 1. His death, the death of death ; 2. His rising, the reviving of life again : the one, what He had ransomed us from, the other, what He had purchased for us. 4. They serve as two Moulds, wherein our lives are to be cast, that the dayes of our vanity may be fashioned to the likeness of the Son of God : which are our two duties, that we are to render, for those two benefits proceeding from the two offices of His two natures conjoined. In a word : they are not well to be sundred ; for when they are thus joyned, they are the abridgment of the whole Gospel.

Of them both then briefly. Of His dying first : in that He dyed, He dyed once to sin : Why dyed he once, and why but once ? Once he died to sin, that is, sin was the cause, He was to dye once. As in saying, He liveth to God, we say, God is the cause of His life : so in saying, He dyed to sin, we say, sin was the cause of His death. God, of His rising : sin, of His fall. And look how the Resurrection leadeth us to death ; even as naturally doth death, unto sin, the sting of death.

To sin then He dyed : Not simply to sin ; but with reference to us. For, a death leadeth us to sin ; so doth sin to sinners, that is, to our selves : And so will the opposition be more cleer and full : He liveth unto God ; He dyed unto man. With reference (I say) to us. For first He dyed unto us : and if it be true, that Puer natus est nobis, it is as true, that Vir mortuus est nobis : If being a child, He was born to us ; becomming a man, he dyed to us. Both are true.

To us then first, He dyed because He would save us. To sin, secondly ; because else He could not save us. Yes, He could have saved us, and never dyed for us, ex plenitudine potestatis, by his absolute power, if He would have taken that way. That way, He would not ; but proceed by way of Justice ; do all, by way way of Justice. And, by Justice, Sin must have death; death, our death; for the sin was ours. It was we that were to die to sin. But, if we had dyed to sin, we had perished in sin; perished here, and perished everlastingly. That, His love to us could not endure: that we should so perish. Therefore, as in Justice He justly might, He took upon Him our debt of sin, and said (as the Fathers apply that speech of His) Sinite abire hos, let these go their wayes. And so, that we might not dye to sin, He did. We see, why He dyed once.

Why but once? because once was enough, ad auferenda (saith S. John;) ad abolenda (saith S. Peter;) ad exhaustiunda (saith S. Paul) To take away: To abolish: To draw dry, and utterly to exhaust all the sins, of all the sinners, of all the world. The excellency of His Person that performed it, was such; The excellency of the obedience, that He performed, such; the excellency both of His humility and charity wherewith He performed it, such; and of such value every of them; (and all of them much more;) as made, that His once dying, was satis superque, enough, and enough again: which made the Prophet call it, copiosam Redemptionem, a plentiful Redemption. But the Apostle he goeth beyond all, in expressing this: in one place terming it ἐξυδάτων, in another ἐξυπεραιουμένων; in another πλεονάζων: mercy, rich, exceeding, grace overabounding, nay grace superfluous (for so is πλεονάζων;) and superfluous is enough and to spare; superfluous is (clearly) enough and more than enough. Once dying then, being more than enough, no reason, He should die more than once. That, of His death;

Now of His Life: He lived unto God. The Rigour of the law being fully satisfied by His death: then was He no longer justly, but wrongfully detained by death. As therefore, by the power He had, He laid down his life, so he took it again, and rose again from the dead. And not only rose himself; But, in one concurrent action; God, who had by his death, received full satisfaction, reached him (as it were) his hand, and raised him to life. The Apostles word ἐγέρθη, in the native force doth more properly signifie, raised by another, than risen by himself. And is so used, to shew, it was done, not only by the power of the Son, but by the will, consent, and co-operation of the Father; and he the cause of it, who for the over-abundant merit of his death, and his humbling himself, and becoming obedient to death, even the death of the Cross, not only raised Him, but propter hoc, even for that cause, exalted Him also, to live with Him, in joy and glory for ever. For, as when He lived to man, He lived to much misery; so, now He liveth to God, He liveth in all felicity. This part being oppositely set down to the former: living, to exclude dying again; living to God, to exclude death's dominion, and all things pertaining to it. For, as with God is life, and the fountain of life against death; (even the fountain of life never failing, but ever renewing to all eternity:) so with him also, is torrens deliciarum, a main river of pleasures, even pleasures for evermore; never ebbing, but ever flowing, to all contentment; against the miseries belonging to death's dominion. And there he liveth thus: not how, as the Son of God, as he lived before all worlds; but as the Son of man, in the right of our nature: to estate us, in this life, in the hope of a reversion; and in the life to come, in perfect and full possession of his own, and his Fathers blis and happiness: when we shall also live to God, and God be all in all; which is the highest pitch of all our hope. We see then, his dying and rising; and the grounds of both: And thus have we the total of our Sciences.

His living.

Phil. 2. 8, 9.

Phil. 3. 6, 10.

Now followeth our account. An account is either of what is coming to us, and that we like well: or what is going from us, and that is not so pleasing. Coming to us, I call matter of benefit: Going from us, matter of duty: where (I doubt) many an expectation will be deceived, making account to hear from the resurrection matter of benefit, only to come in, where the Apostle calleth us to account for matter of duty which is to goe from us.

II.

Our Account.
1 Of our commings in, the benefit.

An account there is growing to us by Christs rising, of matter of benefit and comfort: such an one there is, and we have touched it before. The hope of gaining a better life, which groweth from Christs rising, is our comfort against the fear of loosing this. Thus do we comfort our selves against our deaths: Now blessed be God that hath regenerated us to a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ: Thus do we comfort our selves against our friends death; Comfort your selves one another (saith the Apostle) with these words: what words be they? Even those of our Saviour in the Gospel, Resurget frater tuus, Thy brother (or thy father, or thy friend) shall rise again. And not only against death, but even against all the miseries of this life: It was Jobs comfort on the dung-hill: well yet, Videbo Deum, in carne mea: I shall see God in my flesh. And not in our miseries alone, but when we do well, and no man respecteth us for it: It is the Apostles conclusion of the Chapter of the Resurrection: Be of good cheer yet, Labor vestester non erit inanis in Domino: your labour is not in vain in the Lord: you shall have your reward at the resurrection of the just. All these wayes, comfort cometh unto us, by it.

1 Thel. 4. 18.
Job. 11. 23.

Job 19. 23.

1 Cor. 15. 58.

But this of ours is another manner of account, of duty to go from us, and to be answered by us. And such an one there is too, and we must reckon of it. I add, that this here is our first account; you see it here called for, in the Epistle to the Romans; the other cometh after, in the Epistle to the Corinthians.

2 Of our going out.
1 The duty of charge.

In very deed, this of ours is the key to the other, and we shall never find sound comfort of that, unless we do first well pass this account here. It is (I say) first, because it is present, and concerneth our souls, even here in this life. The other is future, and toucheth but our bodies, and that in the life to come. It is an error certainly, which runneth in mens heads, when they hear of the resurrection to conceive of it, as of a matter merely future, and not to take place till the latter day. Not only Christ is risen, but if all be, as it should be, we are already risen with him, (saith the Apostle; in the Epistle this day, the very first words of it:) and even here now (saith S. John,) is there a first resurrection, and happy is he that hath his part in it. A like error it is to conceit the Resurrection as a thing merely corporal, and no way to be incident into the Spirit or Soul, at all. The Apostle hath already given us an Item to the contrary, in the end of the fourth Chapter before: Where he saith; He rose again for our justification: and, justification is a matter spiritual: Justificatus est spiritu (saith the Apostle) of Christ himself. Verily, here must the Spirit rise to grace, or else neither the body nor it shall there rise to glory. This then is our first account; that account of ours, which is presently to be passed, and out of hand; this is it, which first we must take order for

I.
To be like
CHRIST.

The sum or charge of which account, is set down in these words, Similiter & vos: That we be like Christ, carry his Image who is heavenly, as we have carried the Image of the earthly: Be conformed to his likeness; That what Christ hath wrought for us, the like be wrought in us: What, wrought for us, by his flesh; the like wrought in us, by his Spirit. It is a Maxime or main ground, in all the Father's, that such an account must be: The former, what Christ hath wrought for us, Deus reputat nobis, God accounteth to us: for the latter, what Christ hath wrought in us; Reputate vos, we must account to God. And, that is, Similiter & vos, that we fashion our selves like him.

1. In dying to sin.

Eph. 5. 1.

1 Pet. 2. 11.

1 Pet. 1. 3.

Like him, in as many points, as we may: but namely, and expressly, in these two here set down, 1. In dying to sin, 2. In living unto God, in these two first: then secondly, in doing both these, ἐκτάξ, but once, for all.

Like Him in these two: 1. In His dying. For He dyed not only to offer a sacrifice for us (saith Saint Paul) but also to leave an example to us (saith S. Peter.) That example are we to be like. 2. In his rising: For he arose, not only that we might be regenerated to a lively hope, saith Saint Peter: but also that we might be grafted into the similitude of his Resurrection, saith S. Paul, a little before, in the fifth verse of this very Chapter: That Similitude are we to resemble. So have we the exemplary part of both these, whereunto we are to frame our Similiter & vos.

Verse. 2.

He dyed to sin, there is our pattern: Our first account, must be, Count your selves dead to sin. And that we do, when, there is neither action, nor affection, nor any sign of life, in us, toward sin; no more then in a dead body: when, as men crucified (which is not only His death, but the kind of His death too) we neither move hand, nor stir foot toward it: both, are nailed down, fast. In a word, to dye to sin (with S. Paul here) is to cease from sin (with S. Peter, 1 Pet. 4. 1.)

To cease from sin (I say) understanding by sin, not from sin altogether (that is a higher perfection, than this life will bear) but as the Apostle expoundeth himself, in the very next words, Ne regnet peccatum, that is, from the dominion of sin, to cease. For till we be free from death of self (which in this life we are not) we shall not be free from sin altogether: only we may come thus far, ne regnet, that sin reign not; wear not a Crown, sit not in a Throne, hold no Parliaments within us, give us no laws; in a word (as in the fourth verse before) that we serve it not. To dye, to the dominion of sin; that, by the grace of God we may: and that we must account for.

2. In living to
God.

He liveth to God. There is our similitude of His resurrection: our second account must be, Count your selves living unto God. Now, how that is, he hath already told us (in the fourth verse) even, to walk in newness of life. To walk, is to move; moving is a vital action, and argueth life. But, it must not be any life; our old will not serve; it must be a new life; we must not return back to our former course, but pass over to another new conversation. And in a word (as before) to live to God (with S. Paul here) is to live, secundum Deum, according to God, in the Spirit (with Saint Peter, 1 Pet. 4. 6.) And, then live we according to Him, when His Will is our law, His Word our rule, His Sons life our example, His Spirit, rather than our own soul, the guide of our actions. Thus shall we be grafted into the similitude of his resurrection.

Now, this similitude of the resurrection, calleth to my mind, another similitude of the resurrection, in this life too, which I find in Scripture mentioned; it fitteth us well: it will not be amiss, to remember you of it, by the way, it will make us the better willing to enter into this account.

Gen. 22. 7.

At the time that Isaac should have been offered by his Father, Isaac was not slain: very neer it he was; there was fire, and there was a knife, and he was appointed ready to be a Sacrifice. Of which case of his, the Apostle in the mention of his Father Abraham's faith (Heb. 11.) Abraham (saith he) by Faith λογισάμενος, made full account, if Isaac had been slain, God was able to raise him from the dead: And even from the dead God raised him, and his father received him, ἐκ νεκρῶν, in a certain similitude, or after a sort. Mark that well: raising Isaac, from eminent danger of present death is (with the Apostle) a kind of resurrection. And if it be so, and if the Holy Ghost warrant us to call that, a kind of resurrection; how can we, but on this Day, the Day of the Resurrection, call to mind, and withal render unto God our unfained thanks and praise, for our late Resurrection ἐκ νεκρῶν, for our kind of resurrection, He not long since vouchsafed us. Our case, was Isaac's case, without doubt: there was fire; and instead of a knife, there was powder enough, and we were designed all of us, and even ready to be sacrificed, even Abraham, Isaac and all. Certainly if Isaac's were, ours was a kind of resurrection: and we so to acknowledge it. We were as neer as he; we were not only within the Dominion, but within the Verge, nay even within the very gates of death. From thence hath God raised us, and given us, this year, this similitude of the resurrection, that we might, this day of the resurrection of His Son, present Him with this (in the Text) of rising to a new course of life.

Heb. 11. 19.

And now (to return to our fashioning our selves, like to Him, in these) as there is a death natural, and a death civil; so is there a death moral, both in Philosophie, and in Divinity: and, if a death, then consequently a resurrection too. Every great and notable change, of our course of life, whereby we are not now any longer the same men, that before we were, be it from the worse to better, or from better to worse, is a moral death: A moral death, to that, we change from; and a moral resurrection, to that that we change to. If we change to the better, that is sin's death: if we alter to the worse, that is sin's Resurrection: when we commit sin, we die, we are dead in sin; when we repent, we revive again: when we repent our selves of our repenting, and relapse back, then sin riseth again, from the dead: and so toties quoties. And even upon these two, as two hinges, turneth our whole life. All our life is spent in one of them.

Now then, that we be not, all our life life long; thus off and on, fast or loose, in dock out nettle, and in nettle out dock: it will behove us once more yet, to look back upon our similiter & vos; even upon the word ἐν πάει, semel, once. That is, that we not only dye to sin, and live to God; but die and live as He did, (that is) once for all: which is an other abandoning, once, of sin's dominion: and a continual constant persisting in a good course once begun. Sin's dominion, it languisheth sometimes in us, and falleth haply into a swoun: but it dieth not quite, once for all. Grace, lifteth up the eye, and looketh up a little, and giveth some signe of life; but never perfectly receiveth. O, that once, we might come to this; no more deaths, no more resurrections but one! that, we might once, make an end of our daily continual recidivations, to which we are so subject: and, once get past these pangs and qualms of godliness, this righteousness, like the morning cloud, which is all we perform: that we might grow habituate, in grace; radicati & fundati, rooted and founded in it: ἱπποκρίνοι steddie, and ἀσκαρι never to be removed! that so we might enter into, and pass a good account, of this our Similiter & vos. Eph. 3. 17. 1 Cor. 15. ult.

And thus are we come to the foot of our account, which is our Omnis or Charge; Now we must think of our discharge, to go about it: which maketh the last words no less necessary for us to consider, than all the rest. For what? is it in us, or can we, by our power and vertue make up this account? We cannot (saith the Apostle;) nay, we cannot (saith he) λογισάσαι, make account of any thing, no not so much as of a good thought towards it, as of our selves. If any think otherwise, let him but prove his own strength a little, what he can do, he shall be so confounded in it, as he shall change his mind (saith Saint Augustine) and see plainly, the Apostle had reason to shut up all, vvith In Christo Jesu Domino nostro: otherwise our account vvill stick in our hands. Verily, to raise a soul from the death of sin, is harder, far harder, than to raise a dead body, out of the dust of death. S. Augustine hath long since defined it: that Mary Magdalens resurrection in soul, from her long lying dead in sin, vv as a greater miracle, than her brother Lazarus resurrection, that had lyen four dayes in his grave. If Lazarus lay dead before us, we would never assay to raise him our selves; vve know vve cannot do it. If vve cannot raise Lazarus (that is the easier of the twain) vve shall never Mary Magdalen (vvhich is the harder by far) out of Him, or without Him, that raised them both.

But, as out of Christ, or without Christ, vve can do nothing toward this account: Not, accomplish or bring to perfection; but not do: not any great or notable sum of it; but nothing at all; (as saith S. Augustine, upon Sino me nihil potestis facere;) So, in Him, and vvith Him enabling us to it, vve can think good thoughts, speak good vvords, and do good vvorks, and dye to sin, and live to God, and all: Omnia possum (saith the Apostle.) And inable us He vvill, and can, as not only having passed the resurrection, but being the resurrection it self; not only had the effect of it in himself; but, being the cause of it, to us. So He saith Himself: I am the resurrection, and the life: the resurrection, to them that are dead in sin, to raise them from it; and the life, to them that live unto God, to preserve them, in it. Phil. 4. 13; Job. 11. 25.

Where beside the two former (1. the Article of the resurrection, vvhich vve are to know: 2. and the Example of the resurrection, vvich vve are to be like;) vve come to the notice of a third thing; even a vertue or power flowing from Christ's resurrection, vvhereby vve are made able to expresse our similiter & vos, and to pass this our account, of dying to sin, and living to God. It is, in plain vvords, called (by the Apostle himself) virtus resurrectionis; the vertue of Christ's resurrection, issuing from it, to us: and he prayeth that as he had a faith of the former, so he may have a feeling of this: and as, of them he had a contemplative, so he may of this have an experimental knowledg. This enabling vertue proceedeth from Christ's resurrection. For, never let us think, if in the dayes of His flesh, there went virtue out, from even the very edge of his garment, to do great cures (as in the case of the woman vvith the bloodie issue, we read,) but that from his own self, and from those two most principal and powerful actions of His own self (his 1. death, and 2. resurrection) there issueth a divine power: from his death, a power vvorking on the old man (or flesh) to mortifie it; from His resurrection, a power vvorking on the new man (the Spirit) to quicken it. A power able to roll back any stone of an evil custome, lye it never so heavy on us: a power able to dry up any issue, though it have run upon us twelve years long. Ph. 3. 10; Luk. 8. 46.

And this power is nothing else, but that divine quality of grace, vvhich vve receive from Him. Receive it from him vve do certainly; (only let us pray and endeavour our selves, that vve receive it not in vain:) the Holy Ghost, by waies to flesh and blood unknown, inspiring it, as a breath, distilling it, as a dew; deriving it, as a secret influence, into the soul. For, if Philosophie grant an invifible operation in us, to the celestiall bodies; much better may we yeeld it, to His eternall Spirit: whereby such a vertue, or breath may proceed from it, and be received of us. Re. 2 Cor. 8. 1.

Which breath or Spirit, is drawn in by Prayer, and such other exercises of devotion on our parts: and on gods part, breathed in, by and vvith the vvord: (well therefore termed by the Apostle, the vvord of grace.) And (I may safely say it, vvith good warrant) from those vvords especially and chiefly; which (as He Himself saith of them) are Spirit and Life, even those vvords, which joynd to the element, make the blessed Sacrament. Act. 16. 31. Joh. 6. 63.

There was good proof made of it, this day. All the way, did He preach to them, even till they came to Emaus; and their hearts were hot vvithin them (vvhich was a good signe) but their eyes were not opened, but at the breaking of bread; and then they were: That, is the best and surest sense (we know) and therefore most Luk. 24. 31.

most to be accounted of. There we tast, and there we see, Tast and see, how gracious the Lord is. There we are made to drink of the Spirit: There our hearts are strengthened and established with grace. There is the blood which shall purge our consciences from dead workes, whereby we may die to sin. There the bread of God, which shall endue our soules with much strength; yea, multiply strength in them, to live unto God, yea, to live to him continually; for he that easeth His flesh, and drinketh His blood, dwelleth in Christ, and Christ in Him: not inneth, or sojourneth for a time; but dwelleth continually. And, never can we more truly, or properly say, In Christo Jesu Domino nostro, as when we come new from that holy Action, for then He is in us, and we in Him, indeed. And so we to make full account, of this service as a speciall meanes, to further us to make up our Easter-dayes account, and to set off a good part of our Charge. In Christ, dropping upon us the anointing of His grace. In Jesus, who will be ready, as our Saviour, to succour and support us, with his Auxilium speciale, His speciall help. Without which assisting us even grace it selfe, is many times, faint and feeble in us: And both these, because He is our Lord, who having come, to save that which was lost, will not suffer that to be lost, which he hath saved. Thus, using His owne ordinance of Payer, of the Word, and Sacrament, for our better enabling to discharge this dayes duty, we shall (I trust) yeild up a good account, and celebrate a good feast of his Resurrection. Which Almighty God grant, &c.

1 Coꝝ. Chap. XV. Ver. XX.

Nunc autem Christus resurrexit à mortuis primitiæ dormientium.

But, now is Christ risen from the dead, and was made the first fruits of them that sleep.

THE same Apostle that out of Christs Resurrection taught the Romans matter of duty; the same here, out of the same resurrection, teacheth the Corinthians matter of hope. There, similiter & vos, by way of pattern to conform our selves to Him in newness of life: And here similiter & vos, in another sense, by way of promise; that so doing He shall hereafter conform us to Himself; change our vile bodies, and make them like His glorious body. That former is our first resurrection, from sin: This latter, our second resurrection, from the grave: This, the reward of that. In that, the work, what to do: In this, our reward, what to hope for. These two, Labour and Hope, the Church joyneth in one

Rom. 6. 4.
Phil. 3. 21.

Anthems to day, her first Anthems. They sort well; and being sung together, make a good harmony. But, that without this; labour without hope, is no good musick.

To rise and to reclaim our selves, from a sinfull course of life, we have long lived in, is labour (sure) and great labour. Now, labour, of it self, is a harsh unpleasant thing; unless it be seasoned with hope. Debet, qui erat, in spe arare (saith the Apostle) above, at the IX. Chapter in the matter of the Clergies maintenance) He that plowes must plow in hope: his plough will not go deep else; his furrowes will

will be but shallow. Men may frame to themselves what speculations they please ; but the Apostles saying will prove true : sever hope from labor, and you must look for labour and labourers accordingly ; slight and shallow (God knoweth) Labour then, leads us to hope.

2.

The Apostle saw this ; and therefore is carefull, whom he thus presseth to newness of life, and the labour therefore, to raise for them, and to set before them matter of hope. Hope, here in this life, he could set them none. They were, as he was himself, at quotidiè morior (Verse 31.) every hour in danger to be drawn to the block. It must therefore be from another ; or at least, as the Text is, by a hope of being restored to life again. It was their case at Corinth, here in this Chapter, plainly ; If we must dye to morrow ; if there be all, that shall become of us, then let us eat and drink while we may. If we be not sure of another life, let us make sure of this. But when in the sequelle of the Chapter, he had shewed there was restoring ; and that, to sure he was of it, that he fails to insult over them in these terms, they gird up their loins again, and fall to their labours afresh, as knowing, their labour should not be in vain in the Lord. This hope leads us to our restoring.

Verse 31.

Verse 32.

3.
Ecclef. 9. 4.

Our restoring is but a promise, shall be restored : that, necessarily refers to a Party that is to make it good. Who is that ? Christ : Christ is our hope. Why, hope is joyed to the living (saith the Wise-man :) Christ is dead ; buried, last Friday. If He be our hope, and He be dead ; our hope is dead too. And, if our hope be dead, our labor will not live long : nay, both are buried with Christ in His grave. It was their case this day that went to Emaus : say they (supposing Christ to be dead) nos autem sperabamus, we were once in good hope, by Him, that is, while He lived : as much to say, as now He is in His grave, our hope is gone ; we are even going to Emaus. But then after, as soon as they saw, He was alive again, their hope revived ; and with their hope, their labor : and presently back again to Jerusalem, to the Lords work, and bid Emaus farewell. So He leads us to labor ; labor, to hope ; hope, to our restoring ; our restoring, to Christ, who, as He hath restored Himself, will restore us also to life. And this keeps us from going to Emaus. It is used proverbially ; Emaus signifieth a people forsaken : all that are at sperabamus, have lost their hopes ; are said to go thither : and thither we should all go, even to Emaus, but for the hope that breaths from this verse : without which, it were a cold occupation to be a Christian.

Luke 24. 21.

This then is the hope of this Text, spes viva, spes beata ; worth all hopes else whatsoever. All hopes else, are but spes spirantium, hopes while we breath : This is spes aspirantium, the hope, when we can fetch our breath no longer. The carnal man, all he can say, is, dum spiro, spero : his hope is as long as his breath. The Christian aspireth higher ; goeth further (by virtue of this verse) and faith, dum exspiro, spero : his hope fails him not, when his breath fails him. Even then (saith Job) reposita est mihi spes in sinu meo ; this hope, and only this is laid up in our bosom : that though our life be taken from us ; yet (in Christ) we, to do it ; and it, to us, shall be restored again.

Job 29. 17.

Our case is not, as theirs then was : No persecution ; nor we at quotidiè morior ; and therefore, not so sensible of this doctrine. But yet to them that are falling toward death, rising to life is a good Text ; Peradventure, not when we are well and in good health ; but the hour is coming, when we shall leave catching at all other hopes, and must hold only by this : in hora mortis, when all hope save the hope of this verse, shall forsake us. Sure it is, under these very words, are we laid into our graves, and these the last words that are said over us, as the very last hold, we have : and we therefore to regard them with Job, and lay them up in our bosom.

II.

There is in this Text. 1. a Text, and an 2. Exposition. 1. The Text, we may well call the Angels Text : for from them it came first. 2. The Exposition is Saint Pauls. These words Christ is risen, were first uttered by an angel, this day, in the Sepulcher ; All the Evangelists so testify.

This Text is a good Text, but reacheth not to us, unless it be helped with the Apostles exposition : and then it will. The Exposition is it, that giveth us our hope, and the ground of our hope. Christ is risen, saith the Angel : Christ, the first fruits, saith the Apostle. And, mark well that word first fruits : For, in that word, is our hope. For, if He be as the first fruits in His rising, His rising must reach to all, that are of the heap, whereof He is the first fruits. This is our hope.

III.

* 1 Pet. 3. 15.

* 11. 1.

* Rom. 5. 5.

But our hope must have a reason, (saith S. (a) Peter) and we be ready with it. (b) The hope that hath a ground (saith S. Paul) that is (c) spes que non confundit. Having then shewed us this hope, he sheweth us the ground of it. This : That, in very equity, we are to be allowed to be restored to life, the same way we lost it. But, we lost it, by man : or, to speak in particular, By Adam, we came by our attainder. Meet therefore, that by man (and to speak in particular) that, by Christ, we come to our restoring. This is the ground or substance of our hope.

IV.

And thus he hath set before us this day, life and death, in themselves and their causes ; two things, that, of all other do most concern us. Our last point shall be to apply it to the means, this day, offered unto us toward the restoring us to life.

THe Doctrine of the Resurrection, is one of the Foundations, so called by the Apostle, Heb. 6. 1. It behoved him therefore (as a skilful workman) to see it surely laid. That is surely laid, that is laid on the rock: and the rock is Christ. Therefore he laid it on Christ, by saying first, Christ is risen. I. The Text, Christ is risen. Chap. 10. 4.

Of all that be Christians; Christ is the hope: but, not Christ every way considered; but as risen. Even in Christ unrisen, there is no hope. Well doth the Apostle begin here: and, when he would open to us a gate of hope, carry us to Christ's Sepulchre empty; to shew us, and to hear the Angel say, He is risen. Thence after to deduce; If He were able to do thus much for Himself, He hath promised us as much, and will do as much for us, we shall be restored to life. Hof. 2. 15.

Thus had he proceeded, in the four verses before, destructive. 1. Miserable is that man, that either laboureth, or suffereth in vain. 2. Christian men may seem to do so, and do so, if there be no other life but this. 3. There is no other life but this, if there be no Resurrection. 4. There is no Resurrection, if Christ be not risen; for, ours dependeth on His. And now he turneth all about again. But now (saith he) 1. Christ is risen. 2. If He be, we shall. 3. If we shall, we have (as Saint Paul calleth it) a blessed hope, and so a life yet behind. 4. If such hope we have, we of all men, labour not in vain. So, there are four things: 1. Christ's rising, 2. our restoring, 3. our hope, and 4. our labour. All the doubt is of the two first: The two other will follow of themselves. If a restoring, we have good hope: if good hope, our labour is not lost. The two first are in the first: the other, in the last words. The first are; Christ is risen; the last, we shall be restored to life. Our endeavour is to bring these two together: But first, to lay the corner-stone. Ver. 19. 18. 17.

Christ is risen, is the Angels Text: A part of the great mystery of godliness; which as the Apostle saith, was seen of Angels, by them delivered, and believed on by the world. Quod credibile primum fecit illis videntium certitudo, post morientium fortitudo, jam credibile mihi facit credentium multitudo. It became credible at first by the certainty of them that saw it; then, by the constancy of them that died for confession of it; and to us now, the huge multitude of them, that have and do believe it, maketh it credible. For if it be not credible, how is it credible, that the world could believe it? the world (I say) being neither enjoyed by authority, nor forced by fear, nor inveigled by allurements; but brought about by persons, by means less credible, than the thing it self. Gamaliel said, If it be of God, it will prevail. And, though we cannot argue, all that hath prevailed is of God: yet, thus we can: That which hath been mightily impugned, and weakly pursued, and yet prevailed, that was of God certainly. That which all the Powers of the earth fought, but could not prevail against, was from heaven certainly. Certainly, Christ is risen: for, many have risen and lift up themselves against it, but all are fallen. But the Apostle saith, it is a foundation; that he will not lay it again; No more will we, but go forward, and raise upon: And so let us do. Tit. 2. 13.

Christ is risen: Suppose, He be: what then? Though Christ's rising did no way concern us, or we that; yet 1. first, in that a Man, one of our own flesh and blood hath gotten such a victory, even for humanities sake: 2. Then, in that, one that is innocent, hath quit Himself so well, for innocencies sake: 3. Thirdly, in that He hath foiled a common enemy, for amicities sake: 4. Lastly, in that He hath wiped away the ignominy of His fall, with the glory of His rising again, for virtue and valours sake: for all these, we have cause to rejoyce with Him. All are matter of gratulation. 1 Tim. 3. 16.

But, the Apostle is about a farther matter: that Text (the Angels Text) he saw, would not serve our turn, farther than I have said. Well may we congratulate Him if that be all: but, otherwise it pertains to us, Christ is risen. The Apostle therefore enters farther, telling us, That Christ did thus rise, not as Christ only, but, as Christ the first fruits. Christ is risen, and in rising become the first fruits: risen, and so risen, that is (to speak after the manner of men) that there is in Christ a double capacity. 1. One, as a body natural, considered by Himself, without any relative respect unto us, or to any: (in which regard, well may we be glad, as one stranger is for another, but otherwise His rising concerns us not at all.) 2. Then, that He hath a second, as a body Politick, or chief part of a Company, or Corporation, that have to Him, and He to them, a mutual and reciprocal reference: In which respect, His resurrection may concern us, no less than Himself: It is that, He giveth us the first Item of, in the word Primitia; that Christ in His rising, cometh not to be considered as a Totum integrale, or body natural alone; as Christ, only: but (that which maketh for us) He hath besides another capacity, that He is a part of a corporation, or body, of which body we are the members. This being won; look what he hath suffered or done, it pertaineth to us, and we have our part in it. II. The Apostles Exposition, CHRIST as the first fruits.

You shall find (and, ever when you find such words, make much of them) Christ called a Head; a Head is a part: Christ called a Root, a Root is a part: and here Christ called first fruits, which (we all know) is but a part of the fruits, but a handful of a heap, or a sheaf; and referreth to the rest of the fruits, as a part to the whole. So that, there is (in the Apostles conceit) one mass or heap of all mankind: of which Christ is the first fruits; we, the remainder. So as, by the law of the body, all His concern us no less, than they do Him: whatsoever he did, he did to our behoof. Die he, or rise; we have our part, in his Death, and in his Resurrection, and all: why? because he is but the first fruits. As a part of the whole. Eph. 1. 12. Apoc. 12. 16.

And, if he were but Primus, and not Primitia dormientium, there were hope. For, primus is an ordinal number, and draweth after, a second, a third, and God knoweth how many. But, if in that word, there be any scruple (as sometimes it is, Ante quem non est, rather, than post quem est alius) if no more come but one: all the world knows, the first fruits is but a part of the fruits: there are fruits beside them, no man knoweth how many.

III.
The ground of our hope.

But, that which is more ; The first fruits is not every part ; but such a part, as representeth the whole, and hath an operative force over the whole. For the better understanding whereof, we are to have recourse to the Law, to the very institution or first beginning of them, Levit. 23. 10. (Ever, the Legal ceremony is a good key to the Evangelical mystery.) Thereby we shall see, why S. Paul made choice of the word first fruits, to express himself by: that he useth verbum vigilans, a word that is awake (as S. Augustine saith) or (as Salomon) a word upon his own wheel. The Head, or the root would have served: for, if the head be above the water, there is hope for the whole body: and if the Root have life, the branches shall not long be without: yet, he refuseth these, and others that offered themselves, and chooseth rather the term of first fruits. And why so?

This very day (Easter day) the day of Christs rising, according to the Law, is the day or feast of the first fruits: the very Feast carrieth him to the word, nothing could be more fit or seasonable for the time. The day of the Passion, is the day of the Passover; and Christ is our Paschever: the day of the Resurrection, is the day of the first fruits; and Christ is our first fruits.

And this term thus chosen, you shall see, there is a very apt and proper resemblance between the resurrection and it. The rite and manner of the first fruits, thus it was. Under the Law, they might not eat of the fruits of the earth, so long as they were prophane. Prophane they were, until they were sacred: And, on this wise were they sacred. All the sheaves in the field (for examples sake) were unholy. One sheaf is taken out of all the rest, which sheaf we call the first fruits. That, in the name of the rest, is lift up aloft, and shaken to and fro, before the Lord, and so consecrated. That done, not only the sheaf so lifted up, was holy (though, that alone was lift up) but all the sheaves in the field were holy, no less than it: The rule is, Rom. 11. 16. If the first fruits be holy, all the lump is so too.

And thus (for all the world) fareth it in the Resurrection. We were all dead (saith the Apostle;) dead sheaves, all. One, (and that is Christ) this day, the day of first fruits, was (in manner of a sheaf, taken out of the number of the dead, and in the name of the rest, lift up from the grave (and in His rising, He shook; for there was a great Earth-quake;) By vertue whereof, the first fruits being restored to life, all the rest of the dead, are in Him entitled to the same hope; in that, He was not so lift up for Himself alone, but, for us, and in our names: And so the substance of this Feast fulfilled in Christs Resurrection.

Now, upon this lifting up, there ensueth a very great alteration, if you please to mark it. It was even now, Christ is risen from the dead, the first fruits (it should be) of the dead, too; for, from thence He rose; it is not so, but, the first fruits of them that sleep: that, you may see, the consecration hath wrought a change. A change, and a great change (certainly) to change ταφια into ταφια, a burial place, into a cemetery, that is, a great Dorior: Graves, into beds; Death, into sleep; Dead men, into men laid down to take their rest; a rest, of hope; of hope, to rise again. If they sleep, they shall do well.

And, (that, which lieth open in the word) Dormientium, the very same is infolded, in the word first fruits: Either word affordeth comfort. For first fruits imply fruits: And so we, as the fruits of the earth, falling, as do the grains or kernels into the ground, and there lying, to all mens seeming, putrified, and past hope, yet on a sudden, against the great Feast of first fruits, shooting forth of the ground again. The other of Dormientium, the Apostle letteth go, and fastens on this of fruits, and followeth it hard, thorow the rest of the Chapter: shewing, that the rising again of the fruits sown, would be no less incredible, than the Resurrection, but that, we see it so, every year.

These two words of 1. sleeping, and 2. sowing, would be laid up well. That, which is sown, riseth up, in the spring: that, which sleepeth, in the morning. So conceive, of the change wrought in our nature; that feast of first fruits, by Christ our first fruits. Neither perish; neither that, which is sown, though it rot: nor they, that sleep, though they lye as dead, for the time. Both, that shall spring, and these wake, well again. Therefore, as men sow not grudgingly: nor lye down at the night unwillingly; no more must we: seeing, by vertue of this Feast, we are now Dormientes, not mortui: now, not as stones, but as fruits of the earth: whereof, one hath an annual, the other, a diurnal resurrection. This, for the first fruits, and the change by them wrought.

There is a good analogy or correspondence, between these, it cannot be denied. To this question, Can one mans resurrection work upon all the rest? it is a good answer, Why not as well as one sheaf, upon the whole harvest? This Simile serves well to shew it: To shew, but not prove. Symbolical Divinity is good: but might we see it in the rational, too? We may see it in the cause, no less: in the substance, and let the ceremony go. This, I call the ground of our hope.

Why (saith the Apostle) should this of the first fruits seem strange to you? that by one mans resurrection, we should rise all, seeing by one mans death, we dye all? By one man (saith he, Rom. 5. 12.) sin entered into the world, and, by sin, death: to which sin we were no parties, and yet we all dye, because we are of the same nature, whereof he, the first person: Death came so certainly; and it is good reason, life should do so likewise. To this question, Can the resurrection of one, a thousand six hundred years ago, be the cause of our rising? it is a good answer, Why not, as well as the death of one, five thousand six hundred years ago, be the cause of our dying? The ground and reason is, that there is like ground and reason of both. The wisest way it is (if Wisdom can contrive it) that a person be cured by Mithridate made of the very flesh of the Viper bruised, whence the poyson came, that so, that which brought the mischief, might minister also the remedy: The most powerfull way it is (if Power can effect it) to make strength appear in weakness; and that He that overcame, should by the nature which He overcame, be swallowed up in victory. The best way it is (if Goodness will admit of it) that as next to Satan, man to man oweth his his destruction; so, next to God, man to man might be debtor of his recovery. So agreeable it is to the Power, Wisdom, and Goodness, of God, this; the three Attributes of the Blessed and Glorious Trinity.

And, let Justice weigh it in her balance, no just exception can be taken to it; no not by Justice it self; that, as death came, so should life too: the same way at least. More favor for life, if it may be; but, in very rigour, the same at the least. According then to the very exact rule of Justice, both are to be alike: If by man one: by man the other.

We dwell too long in generalities: let us draw near to the persons themselves, in whom we shall see this better. In them, all answer exactly; word, for word. Adam is fallen, and become the first fruits of them that dye: Christ is risen, and became the first-fruits of them that live (for, they that sleep, live.) Or you may (if you please) keep the same term, in both, thus: Adam is risen (as we use to call rebellions, risings:) He did rise against God, by Eritis sicut Di: He had never fallen, if he had not thus risen: His rising, was his fall. Gen. 3. 1.

We are now come to the two great Persons, that are the two great Authors, of the two great matters in this world, life and death. Not, either to themselves, and none else: but, as two Heads, two Roots, two first fruits: either of them in reference to his company, whom they stand for. And of these two, hold the two great Corporations: 1. Of them that dye; they are Adams: 2. of them, that sleep and shall rise; that is Christs.

To come then to the particular: no reason in the world, that Adams transgression should draw us all down to death, only for that we were of the same lump; and, that Christs righteousness should not be available to raise us up again to life, being of the same sheaves, whereof He the first fruits, no less than before of Adam. Look to the things, Death and life: Weakness is the cause of death: Raising to life cometh of Power. Shall there be in Weakness more strength to hurt, than in Power to do us good? Look to the Persons, Adam and Christ: shall Adam, being but a living soul, infect us more strongly, than Christ (a quickening spirit) can heal us again? Nay then, Adam was but from the earth earthly; Christ the Lord from heaven: Shall earth do that, which heaven cannot undo? Never: it cannot be, Sicut, Sic: As, and so: so run the terms. 2 Cor. 13. 4. Verse 45. 47.

But the Apostle (in Rom. 5. where he handleth this very point) tells us plainly, Non sicut Delictum, ita & donum; Nor, as the fault, so the Grace: Nor, as the fall, so the Rising: but, the Grace and the Rising, much more abundant. It seemeth to be, A pari; it is not, indeed: It is under value. Great odds between the Persons, the Things, the powers, and the means of them. Thus then, meet it should be: Let us see, how it was. Rom. 5. 15.

Here again the very terms give us a great light. We are (saith he) restored: Restoring doth alwayes presuppose an attainder going before; and so, the term, significant: For the nature of an attainder is, One person maketh the fault, but it taints his blood, and all his posterity. (a) The Apostle saith, that a Seamster there is, All men should dye: But, when we go to search for it, we can find none, but (b) Pulvis es, wherein only Adam is mentioned, and so none dye, but he. But, even by that Seamster, death goeth over all men; even those (saith Saint Paul) that have not sinned after the like manner of transgression of Adam. By what Law? by the law of Attainders. a Heb. 9. 27. b Gen. 3. 19.

The Restoring then likewise was to come, and did come after the same manner, as did the attainders: That, by the first; this, by the second Adam (so he is called Verf. 45.) There was a Seamster concerning Gods commandments, qui fecerit ea, vivet in eis: He that observed the commandments, should live by that his obedience, Death should not seize on him. Christ did observe them exactly; therefore should not have been seized on by death: should not, but was: and that seizure of his, was death's forfeiture. The laying of the former Seamster on Christ, was the utter making it void. So, Judgment was entred, and an Act made, Christ should be restored to life. And because, He came not for Himself, but for us, and in our name and stead; did represent us, and so, we, virtually in Him, by His restoring we also were restored: By the rule, si Primitia, & tota conspersio fit: as the First fruits go, so goeth the whole lump: as the Root, the branches. And thus we have gotten life again of mankind, by passing this Act of Restoration, whereby we have hope to be restored to life. Lev. 18. 5. Rom. 11. 16.

But, life is a term of latitude, and admitteth a broad difference, which it behooveth us much that we know. Two lives there be: In the holy Tongue, the word which signifieth life, is of the dual number; to shew us, there is a duality of lives: that, two there be, and, that we have an eye to both. It will help us to understand our Text. For, all restored to life: All, to one: not, all to both. The Apostle doth after (at the 44 Verse) expressly name them both. 1. One, a Natural life, or life by the living soul: The other, 2. a Spiritual life, or life by the quickening Spirit. Of these two, Adam (at the time of his fall) had the first, of a living soul; was seized of it: and, of him, all mankind, Christ and we all receive that life. But, the other, the Spiritual (which is the life chiefly to be accomplished of) that, he then had not, not actually; Only, a possibility he had (if he had held him in obedience, and walked with God) to have been translated to that other life. For, clear it is, the life which Angels now live with God, and which we have hope and promise to live with Him, after our restoring (when we shall be equal to the Angels:) that life, Adam at the time of his fall, was not possessed of. Luke 10. 36.

Now Adam, by his fall, fell from both, forfeited both estates. Not only, that, he had in reversion, by not fulfilling the conditions: but, even that, he had in esse too. For, even on that also did Death seize after, Et mortuus est.

Christ in his restitution, to all the sons of Adam, to all our whole nature, restored the former: therefore, all have interest, all shall partake that life. What Adam actually had, we shall actually have, we shall all be restored. To repair our nature, He came: and repair it He did: all is given again again really, that in Adam really we lost, touching nature. So that, by his fall, no detriment at all, that way.

The other, the second, that, he restored too; but, not promiscue (as the former) to all, Why? for, Adam was never seized of it; performed not that, whereunto the possibilitie was annexed; and so had in it but a defeicible estate. But then, by His speciall grace, by a second particular act, He hath enabled us to attaine the second estate also, which Adam had only a reversion of, and lost, by breaking of the condition whereto it was limited. And so, to this second, restored so many, as (to use the Apostles words in the next verse) are in Him: that is, so many, as are not only of that masse or lump, whereof Adam was the first fruits (for, they are intressed in the former only) but, that are besides, of the nova conspersio, whereof Christ is the Primitia.

a Joh. 1. 12.
b Joh. 20. 17.
c Rom. 8. 29.
d Esay. 8. 81.

^a They that believe in Him (saith Saint John) them He hath enabled, ^b to them He hath given power to become the Sons of God: to whom therefore, He saith, this day rising, Vado ad Patrem vestrum: In which respect, the Apostle calleth him Primogenitum inter multos fratres. Or (to make the comparison even) to those that are (to speake but as ^d Esay speaketh of them) His Children; Behold, I and the children God hath given me. The terme, He useth (Himself) to them, after His resurrection, and calleth them Children: And they, as His family, take denomination of Him, Christians, of Christ.

Of these two lives, the first we need take no thought for. It shall be, of all; the unjust as well as the just. The life of the living soule, shall be to all restored. All our thought is to be for the latter; how to have our part in the supernaturall life: for that is indeed to be restored to life. For the former though it carry the name of life, yet it may well be disputed, and is, Whether it be rather a death than a life; or a life, than a death? A life it is, and not a life: for it hath no living thing in it. A death it is; and not a death: it is an immortal death. But most certain it is (call it life if you will) they that shall live that life, shall wish for death, rather than it, and (this is the miserie) not have their wish: for, death shall fly from them.

Heb. 11. 35.

Out of this double life, and double restoring, there grow two Resurrections, in the world to come, set down by our Saviour in expresse terms (John 19.) Though both be to life, yet, 1. that is called condemnation to judgment: and 2. This only, to life. Of these; the Apostle calleth one, the better Resurrection: the better, beyond all comparison. To attain this then, we bend all our endeavours; that, seeing the other will come of it self, without taking any thought for it at all, we may make sure of this.

1. To compass that then, we must be in Christ, so it is in the next verse: To all, but to every one in order; Christ first, the first fruits, and then, they that be in Him.

2. Now, He is in us, by our flesh; and we in Him, by His Spirit: and it standeth with good reason, they that be restored to life, should be restored to the Spirit: For, the Spirit is the cause of all life; but specially, of the Spiritual life, which we seek for.

3. His Spirit then we must possess our selves of: and we must do that here: for, it is but one and the same Spirit, that raiseth our souls here, from the death of sin, and the same that shall raise our bodies there, from the dust of death.

4. Of which Spirit there is first fruits (to retain the words of the Text) and a fulnes: but, the fulnes, in this life, we shall never attain: Our highest degree (here) is but to be of the number, whereof he was, that said, Et nos habemus primitias Spiritus.

5. These first fruits we first receive in our Baptism, which is to us, our Laver of regeneration, and of our renewing by the holy Spirit; where we are made and consecrate Primitia.

6. But, as we need be restored to life, so (I doubt) had we need to be restored to the Spirit, too. We are at many losses of it, by this sin that cleaveth so fast to us. I doubt, it is with us, as with the fields, that we need a feast of first fruits, a day of consecration, every year. By something or other, we grow un-hallowed, and need to be consecrated anew, to re-seize us of the first fruits of the Spirit again. At least to awake it in us, as Primitia dormientium, at least. That which was given us, and by the fraud of our enemy, or our own negligence, or both taken from us, and lost, we need to have restored; that which we have quenched, to be light anew: that which we have cast into a dead sleep, awaked up from it.

1 Thes. 5. 19.
Ephes. 5. 14.

If such a new consecrating we need, vvhhat better time than the feast of first fruits? the sacrificing time under the Law; and in the Gospel, the day of Christ's rising, our first fruits, by whom we are thus consecrate. The day wherein He vvas Himself restored to the perfection of His Spiritual life (the life of glory) is the best for us, to be restored in, to the first fruits of that spiritual life, the life of grace.

IV. And if we ask, vvhhat shall be our means of this consecrating? The Apostle telleth us (Heb. 10. 10.) we are sanctified, by the Oblation of the body of Jesus: That is the best means to restore us to that life. He hath said it, and shewed it Himself; He that eateth Me, shall live by Me. The words spoken concerning that, are both Spirit and life; whether we seek for the Spirit, or seek for Life. Such was the means of our death, by eating the forbidden fruit; the first fruits of death: and such is the means of our life, by eating the flesh of Christ, the first fruits of life.

The Application of the Sacrament.
Joh. 6. 57. 63.

And herein, we shall very fully fit, not the time only and the meanes, but also the manner. For, as by partaking the flesh and blood, the substance of the first Adam, we came to our death; so to life we cannot come, unless we doe participate with the flesh and blood of the second Adam. that is Christ. We drew death from the first, by partaking the substance: and so must we draw life from the second by the same. This is the way; become branches of the Vine, and partakers of His nature, and so of His life and verdure both.

So, the time, the meanes, the manner agree. What letteth then, but that we, at this time, by this meanes, and in this manner, make our selves of that conspersion, whereof Christ is our first fruits: by these means, obtaining the first fruits of His Spirit, of that quickning Spirit, which being obtained, and still kept, or in default thereof, still recovered, shall here begin to imitate in us, the first fruits of our resurrection in this life, whereof the fulnesse we shall also be restored unto, in the life to come: As Saint Peter calleth that time, the time of the restoring of all things. Then shall the fulnesse be restored us too, when God shall be all in all; not some in one, and some in another, but all in all. Atq; hic est vita finis, pervenire ad vitam cujus non est finis: This is the end of the Text, and of our life, to come to a life, whereof there is no end. To which, &c.

A SER:

S E R M O N
Preached before the
KINGS MAJESTY
AT
WHITE-HALL,

On the seven and Twentieth of March, being Easter-Day.

An. Dom. 1608.

MARK. Chap. XVI.

Et cum transisset Sabbatum, &c.

VER. 1. And, when the Sabbath day was past, Mary Magdalen, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome bought sweet ointments, that they might come, and embalm Him.

1. Therefore, early in the morning, the first day of the week, they came unto the Sepulcher, when the Sun was yet rising.
3. And they said one to another, Who shall roll us away this stone from the door of the Sepulcher?
4. And when they looked, they saw, that the stone was rolled away (for, it was a very great one.)
5. So they went into the Sepulcher, and saw a young man sitting at the right side; clothed in a long white robe: And they were afraid.
6. But, he said unto them, Be not afraid: Yee seek Jesus of Nazareth, which hath been crucified, He is risen, He is not here: Behold the place, where they put Him.
7. But, go your way and tell His Disciples, and Peter, that He will go before you into Galilee: there shall yee see Him, as He said unto you.

THE Sum of this Gospel is, a Gospel: that is, a message of good tidings. In a message, these three points fall in naturally: 1. The Parties, to whom it is brought: 2. The Party by whom: 3. And the Message it self. These three: 1. The Parties to whom; Three women; the three Maries. 2. The Party, by whom, an Angel. 3. The Message it self, the first news of Christ's rising again. These three make the three parts in the Text. 1. The Women. 2. The Angel. 3. The Message.

Seven verses I have read ye. The first four concern the Women. The fifth, the Angel. The two last, the Angels message. In the Women, we have to consider:

1. Themselves, in the first: 2. Their journey, in the second and third: and 3. Their success, in the fourth.

In the Message, The news it self: 1. That Christ is risen: 2. That He is gone before them to Galilee: 3. That there they shall see Him: 4. Peter and all: 5. Then the Act & dicite, the Commission ad Evangelizandum; not to conceal these good news, but publish it: these, to His Disciples: they, to others, and so to us: we to day, and so to the worlds end.

Joh. 20. 19.

Joh. 21. 15. 20.

AS the Text lyeth, the part that first offereth it self, is the parties, to whom this message came. Which were three Women. Where, finding that Women were the first, that had notice of Christ's resurrection, we stay. For it may seem strange, that passing by all men, yea, the Apostles themselves, Christ would have His Resurrection first of all made known, to that sex. Reasons are rendered, of divers diversly. We may be bold to allege that, the Angel doth, in the Text (Vers. 5.) Vos enim queratis, for they sought Christ. And Christ is not unrighteous to forget the work and labour of their love, that seek Him. Verily there will appear more Love, and Labour in these Women, than in Men; even the Apostles themselves. At this time (I know not how) Men were then become Women, and did animos gerere muliebres; and Women were Men: Sure the more manly, of the twain. The Apostles, they sat mured up, all the doors fast about them; sought not, went not to the Sepulcher. Neither Peter that loved Him, nor John whom He loved; till these Women brought them word. But these Women (we see) were last at His Passion, and first at His Resurrection: staid longest at that, came soonest to this: Even in this respect to be respected. Sure as it is said of the Law, Vigilantibus & non dormientibus succurret lex; so may it no less truly be said of the Gospel. We see it here, it cometh not to sleepers; but to them that are awake, and up and about their business, as these Women were. So that, there was a capacity in them to receive this prerogative.

Mary Magdalen
first.

Luke 7. 37.

Col. 1. 11.

Luke 15. 22.

2 Sam. 23. 19.

Before I leave this part; of the parties, I may not omit to observe Mary Magdalens place and precedence among the three. All the Fathers are careful to note it. That she standeth first of them: For it seemeth no good order. She had had seven Devils in her, (as we find Vers. 9.) She had had the blemish to be called Peccatrix, as one famous and notorious in that kind: The other were of honest report, and never so stained: Yet, is she named with them. With them, were much: but, not only with them; but before them. With them: And that is to shew, Christ's Resurrection (as well as His death) reacheth to sinners of both sexes: And that to sinners of note, no less than those that seem not to have greatly gone astray. But before them, too; And that is (indeed) to be noted; that, shee is the first, in the list of Women: and Saint Peter, in that of Men. These two: the two chief Sinners, either of their sex. Yet they, the two, whose lots came first forth in sorte Sanctorum, in partaking this news. And this, to shew, that chief Sinners (as these were) if they carry themselves, as they did, shall be at no loss by their fall: shall not only be pardoned, but honored (even as he was) like these, with stola prima, the first robe in all the ward-robe; and stand foremost of all. And it is not without a touch of the former reason; In that, the sinner, after his recovery, for the most part seeketh God more fervently: Whereas they, that have not greatly gone astray, are but even so; if warm, it is all. And with God, it is a Rule, Plus valet hora fervens quam mensis tepens. An hour of fervor, more worth then a month of tepor. Now, such was Mary Magdalen; here, and else-where, vouchsafed therefore this degree of exaltation, to be of the first three: nay, to be the first of the three, that heard first of His rising: Yea (as in the ninth Verse) that first saw Him risen from the dead. This of the Persons.

Their journey:
and therein,
their love.

Cant. 2. 4.

And now, because their endeavours were so well liked, as they were (for them) counted worthy this so great honor, it falleth next to consider, what those were: that we being like prepared may partake the like good hap. So, seeking as they, we may find as they did. They were four in number: The first and third in the II. the second, in the I. and the last, in the III. Verse. All reduced (as Christ reduced them, in Mary Magdalen) to Dilexit multum, their great Love; Of which these four be four Demonstrations: Or (if love be an Ensign, as it is termed, Cant. 2.) the four Colours of it. 1. That they went to the Sepulcher: Love, to one dead. 2. That they bought precious odours; Love, that is at charges. 3. That out they went early, before break of day: Love, that will take pains. 4. That for all the storm, till they went on: Love, that will wrestle with impediments. The first is constant, as to the dead. The second bounteous, as at expence. The third diligent, as up betimes. The last resolute, be the stove never so great. According to which four, are the four denominations of Love: 1. Amor, a morte, when it surviveth death: 2. When it buyeth dearly, it is Charitas: 3. When it sheweth all Diligence, it is Dilectio: 4. When it goeth per Saxa, when stones cannot stay it, it is Zelus, which is specially seen, in encountering difficulties. It shall not be amiss to touch them severally: it will serve to touch our Love, whether ours be of the same assay.

1 Love to the dead: Amor.

Cant. 8. 6.

The first riseth out of these words [They went to the Sepulcher] And (indeed) ex tota substantia, out of the whole Text. For, for whom is all this ado; is it not for Christ? But, Christ is dead, and buried three dayes since, and this is now the third day. What then, though He be dead; to their love, He liveth still: Death may take His body from their eyes, but shall never take His remembrance, from their hearts. Herein is Love, this is the first Colour (saith a great Master in that faculty) Fortis sicut Mors, Love, that death cannot foil: but continueth to the dead, as if they still were alive. And, when I say the dead dead, I mean not such, as the dead have left behind them (though that be a virtue, and Boox worthily blessed for it, that shewed mercy to the living for the deads sake;) But I mean performing offices of love to the dead himself; To see, he have a Sepulcher to go to: Not, so to bury his friend, as he would bury his Ass being dead. To see, he have one: and not thither to bring him, and there to leave him, and bury him and his memory both in a grave. Such is the worlds love. Salomon sheweth it, by the Lion and the Dog. All, after Christ living: But, go to His Sepulcher who will, not we. The love that goeth thither, that burieth not the memory of Him that is buried, is Love indeed.

Ruth 2. 28.

Ecclef. 9. 4.

The journey to the Sepulcher is Iter amoris: had it been but to lament, as Mary Magdalen to Lazarus (John 11.) But then, here is a further matter: They went to anoint Him. That, is set for another sign: that they spared for no cost, But bought precious odours wherewith to embalm Him.

2 Love that was at charge: Charitas.

John 11. 31.

1. To go to anoint Christ, is kindly; It is to make Him Christ, that is, Anointed. That term referreth principally, to His Fathers anointing (I grant;) but, what if we also anoint Him, will He take it, in evil part? Clearly, not: Neither quick, nor dead. Not quick, Luke 7. Mark 14. Not dead; this place is pregnant; it is the end of their journey, to do this. He is well content to be their, and our Anointed; Not His Fathers only: yea, it is a way to make Him Christum nostrum, Our Christ, if we break our boxes, and bestow our odors upon Him.

Luke 7. 46. Mark 14. 3.

2. To anoint Him; And, not with some odde cast ointment, lying by them, kept a little too long; to throw away upon Him: But to buy, to be at cost; to do it, Empis odoribus, with bought odors.

3. This to do, to Him alive; that would they with all their hearts: But, if that cannot be, to do it to Him dead, rather, than not at all. To do it, to whatsoever is left us, of Christ, to that to do it.

4. To embalm Christ, Christ dead, yea, though others had done it before: for, so is the case. Joseph and Nichodemus had bestowed Myrrh and Aloes to that end already: What then? though they had done it, it is not enough: nay, it is nothing: Nay if all the world should have done it, unless they might come with their odors and do it too, all were nothing. In hoc est charitas, herein is love, and this a sign of it. A sign of it every where else; and, to Christ, a sign it was. Indeed, such a sign there was; but it is beaten down, now. We can love Christ, absque hoc, and shew it some other way well enough. It sheweth, our love is not Charitas, no dear love; but Vilitas, love, that loves to be at as little charges with Christ, as may be: faint love. You shall know it thus: Ad hoc signum se contrahit, At this sign it shrinks; at every word of it. 1. They bought; that is charge: we like it not; we had rather hear potius vendi. 2. Odors: what need odors? An unnecessary charge: We like no odor, but Odor Lucri. 3. To Christ: Nay, seeing it is unnecessary, we trust, Christ will not require it. 4. Not, alive; but especially, not dead: there was much ado, while He lived, to get allowance for it; there was one of His own Apostles (a good charitable man, Paer pauperum) held it to be plain perditio. Yet, to anoint the living; that, many do: they can anoint us again: But, to the dead, it is quite cast away. But then, if it had been told us, He is embalmed already; why then, take away their odors; that, at no hand would have been endured. This sheweth, our love is not Charitas. But, so long as this is a Gospel, it shall sound every Easter-day in our ear, that the buying of odors, the embalming of whatsoever is left us of Christ, is (and will be still) a sign of our loving and seeking Him, as we should: though, not heretofore, yet now: Now especially, when that objection ceaseth; He is embalmed enough already. He was (indeed) then; but most of the Myrrh and Aloes is now gone. That, there is good occasion left, if any be disposed in hoc signo signari, with this sign to seal his love to Christ, anew again.

John 19. 39.

Mark 14. 5.

Mark 14. 2.

From this of their expence [Charitas] we pass to the third, of their Diligence [Dilectio:] set down (in verse 2.) in these words Very early, &c. And but mark, how diligent the Holy Ghost is in describing their diligence, The very first day of the week: the very first part of that first day, In the morning: the very first hour of that first part, Very early, before the Sun was up, they were up. Why good Lord, what need all this haste? Christ is fast enough under His stone. He will not run away (ye may be sure;) ye need never break your sleep, and yet come to the Sepulcher time enough. No; if they do it not, as soon as it may be done, it is nothing worth. Herein is love, Dilectio: whose proper sign is Diligentia, in not slipping the first opportunity of shewing it. They did it not at their leisure: they could not rest, they were not well till they were about it. Which very speed of theirs doubleth all the former. For Cito (we know) is esteemed as much, as Bis. To do it at once, is to do it more than once, is to do it twice over.

3 Love, that takes pains: Dilectio.

Yet, this we must take with us [ἡμετέρας σαββάτου] Where falleth a very strange thing: that, as we have commended them for their quickness, so must we now also for their slowness (out of the very first words of all:) When the Sabbath was past, then, and not till then, they did it. This diligence of theirs, as great hast as it made, stayed yet, till the Sabbath were past: and, by this means, hath two contrary commendations: 1. One, for the speed; 2. another for the stay of it. Though they fain would have been embalming Him, as soon as might be, yet not with breach of the Sabbath: their diligence leapt over none of God's Commandments for haste. No, not this Commandment, which (of all other, the world is boldest with; and, if they have hast, somewhat else may; but sure, the Sabbath shall never stay them. The Sabbath, they stayed: for then, God stayed them. But that was no sooner over, but their diligence appeared straight. No other thing could stay them. Nor their own Sabbath (Sleep,) but, before day-light, they were well onward on their way.

4 Love that wrestles with impediments:
Zeal.

1 John 4. 18.

Prov. 26. 13.

The last is in the third verse, in these words, As they went, they said, &c. There was a stone (a very great one) to be rolled away yet they could come at Him. They were so rapt with love, in a kind of extasie, they never thought of the stone; they were well on their way, before they remembered it. And then, when it came to their minds, they went not back though; but on still, the stone non obstante. And herein is love; the very fervour of it, Zeal: that word hath fire in it. Not only diligence (as lightness) to carry it upward, but zeal (as fire) to burn a hole, and eat it self away, thorow whatsoever shall oppose to it. No stone so heavy as to stay them, or turn them back. And this is S. Johns sign: Paras pelles timorem, Love (if it be perfect) casts out fear; Et erubescit nomen difficultatis, shames to confess any thing too hard for it. Ours is not so: we must have (not great stones (God wot) but) every scruple removed out of our way, or we will not stir. But as; if you see one Qui laborem fingit in precepto, that makes a great deal more labour in a precept, than needs; that is afraid where no fear is; Of Leo in via, a Lion, or (I wot not what) perillous beast in the way, and no such matter: It is a certain sign, his love is small; his affection cold to the business in hand. So, on the other side, when we see (as in these here) such zeal to that, they went about, as (first) they forgot there was any stone at all; and, when they bethought them of it, they brake not off, but went on though: ye may be bold to say of them, dilexerunt multum, their love was great, that per saxa, thorow stones and all, yet goeth forward: that neither cost, nor pains, nor peril can divert, Tell them the Party is dead, they go to: it skills not, their love is not dead; that will go on. Tell them, He is embalmed already, they may save their cost: It is not enough, for them, except they do it too; they will do it nevertheless, for all that. Tell them, they may take time then, and do it: Nay, unless it be done, the first day, hour, and minute, it contents them not. Tell them, there is a stone, more than they remember, and more than they can remove: No matter, they will try their strength, and lift at it, though they take the foil. Of these thus qualified, we may truly say: they that are at all this cost, labor, pains, to annoint Him dead, shew plainly, if it lye in them, to raise Him again, they would not fail, but do it: Consequently, would be glad to hear, He were risen: And so, are fit hearers of this Gospel; Hearers well disposed, and every way meet to receive this Messenger, and this Message. Now to the success.

Their Success.

We see what they sought; we long to see what they found. Such Love, and such labor would not be lost. This we may be sure of, there is none shall annoint Him alive, or dead, without some recompence or consideration; which is set down, of two sorts. 1. They found the stone rolled away, as great as it was: That which troubled them most, how it might be removed; that found they removed, yet they came. They need never take pains with it; the Angel had done it to their hands. 2. They found not (indeed) whom they sought, Christ: but, His Angel they found, and heard such a Gospel of Him, so good news, as pleased them better, than if they had found His body to embalm it. That news, which of all other they most longed to hear; that He (they came to annoint) needed no such office to be done to Him, as being alive again. This was the Success.

And, from this success of theirs our lesson is. 1. That, as there is no virtue, no good work, but hath some impediment, as it were some great stone, to be lifted at, Quis revolvat? So, that it is (oft-times) the lot of them, that seek to do good, to find many imaginary stones removed to their hands: God so providing, Ut quod admovet Satanas, admoveat Angelus, what Satan layes in the way, a good Angel takes out of the way: That it may, in the like case be a good answer to Quis revolvat? to say, Angelus Domini, the Angel of the Lord, he shall do it; done it shall be: so did these here: and, as they did, others shall find it.

2. Again, it is the hope, that all may have, that set themselves to do Christ any service; to find His Angel at least, though not Himself: to hear some good news, of Him, though not see Him at the first. Certain it is, with Ungentes, ungentur; None shall seek ever to annoint Him, but they shall be annointed by Him again, one way or other: and find, though not alwayes what they seek, yet some supply, that shall be worth the while. And this we may reckon of; it shall never fail us.

II.
The Party by whom: the Angel.
Luke 2. 10.

Mt. 22. 30.

To follow this further. Leave we these good women, and come first to the Angel the Messenger, and after to his Message. An Angel was the messenger: for, none other messenger was meet for this Message. For, if His Birth were tidings of so great joy, as none but an Angel was meet to report it; His Resurrection is as much: As much? nay, much more. As much: for, His Resurrection is (it self) a birth too. To it doth the Apostle apply the verse in the Psalm, This day have I begotten thee (Acts 13. 33.) Even this day, when He was born anew Tanquam ex novo Sepulchri, from the womb of the grave. As much, then; yea, much more. For the news of His Birth might well have been brought by a mortal; it was but his entry into a mortal life: But this, here, not properly, but by an Angel: for that, in the Resurrection, we shall be like the Angels, and shall dye no more: and therefore an immortal Messenger was meetest for it.

I.
The Vision.

* John 20. 12.

We first begin with what they saw, the Vision. They Saw an Angel in the Sepulcher. An Angel, in a Sepulcher, is a very strange sight. A Sepulcher is but an homely place; neither savory, nor sightly, for an Angel to come in. The place of dead-mens bones, of stench, of worms, and of rottenness: What doth an Angel there? Indeed, no Angel ever came there, till this morning. Not till Christ had been there: but, since His body was there, a great change hath ensued. He hath left there Odorem vite, and changed the grave into a place of rest. That, not only this Angel here now: but, after this, * two more, yea, divers Angels, divers occasions, this day did visit, and frequent this place. Which very finding of the Angels, thus, in the place of dead bodies, may be, and is to us a pledg, that there is a possibility and hope, that the dead bodies may come also into the place of Angels. Why not the the bodies in the grave to be in heaven, one day ; as well as the Angels of heaven to be in the grave this day.

This for the Vision, The next for the manner of his appearing ; in what form he shewed himself. A The manner of matter worth our stay a little, as a good introduction to us, in him, as in a mirror, to see, what shall be the state of us and our bodies in the Resurrection : In as much as it is expressly promised, we shall then be like and equal to the Angels themselves. Math. 22. 30.

1. They saw a young man, one in the vigor and strength of his years : And such shall be our estate then : 1 As a young man. All age, sickness, infirmity removed clean away. Therefore it was also, that the Resurrection fell in the Spring, the freshest time of the year ; and, in the Morning, the freshest time of the day, when (saith Esay) the dew is on the herbs. Esay. 26. 19. Therefore, that it was in a Garden (so it was) in Joseph of Arimathea's Garden : that, look as that garden was, at that time of the year, the Spring ; so shall our estate then be, in the very flower and prime of it.

They saw him sitting : Which is (we know) the site of rest, and quietness ; of them that are at ease. 2. Sitting. To shew us a second quality of our estate then ; that, in it, all labour shall cease, all motions rest, all troubles come utterly to an end for ever ; and the state of it a quiet and restful state.

They saw him sit on the right side. And, that side is the side of pre-eminence and honour. To shew, 3. On the right side. that those also shall accompany us rising again. That, we may fall on the left side, but, we shall rise side. on the right ; be sown in dishonour, but shall rise again in honour ; that honour which His Saints and Angels have, and shall have for ever. 1 Cor. 15. 43.

Lastly, They saw Him washed all in white. And white is the colour of gladness, as we find (Eccles. 9. 8.) All to shew still, that it shall be a state, as of Strength, Rest, and Honour ; so, of Joy likewise. 4. Clothed in white. And that, Robe-wise : not short or scant, but (as his stole) all over, down to the ground.

Neither serves it alone to shew us, what then we shall be ; but withal, what now we ought to be, this day, the day of His Rising. In that we see, that, as the heavens at the time of His Passion, were in black, by the great Eclipse ; shewing us it was then a time of mourning : so, this day, the Angels were all in white, to teach us thereby, with what affection, with how great joy and gladness, we are to celebrate and solemnize this Feast of our Saviour's rising. Math 27. 45.

Their affection (here) was otherwise : And that is somewhat strange. In the Apparition, there was nothing fearful, as ye see ; yet it is said, They were afraid. Even now, they feared nothing : and now, they fall to be afraid, at this so comfortable a sight. Had they been guilty to themselves of any evil, they came to do, well might they then have feared. 3. Their affrighting God first, as the Malefactor doth the Judge, and then His Angel, as the Executioner of His Wrath. But their coming was for good. But (I find) it is not the sinners case only, but even the best's, of our nature. Look the Scripture : (a) Abraham, and (b) Jacob Gen. 15. 12. in the Old : (c) Zachary, and the (d) Blessed Virgin in the New, all strucken with fear still, at the sight of good Angels ; yea, even then, when they came for their good. 28. 19. Luke 1. 12. 29

It fareth with the Angels of light, as it doth with the lights it self. Sore eyes and weak, cannot endure it : No more can sinners, them : No more can the strangest sight neither bare the light, if the object be too excellent ; if it be not tempered, to a certain proportion : Otherwise, even to the best that is, is the light offensive. And that is their case ; afraid they are, not for any evil, they were about, but for that, our very nature is now so decayed, Ut lucem, ad quam nata est, sustinere nequeat, as the Angels brightness, for whose society we were created, yet (as now we are) bear it we cannot, but need to be comforted at the sight of a comfortable Angel. It is not the Messenger Angelical, but the Message Evangelical that must do it.

Which leadeth us along, from the Vision that feared them, to the Message it self that relieved them : which is the third part. The stone lay not more heavy on the grave, than did that fear on their hearts, pressing them down hard. And no less needful was it, the Angel should roll it away (this spiritual great stone) from their hearts, than he did that other material from the Sepulchre it self. With that he begins : III. The Message.

1. Fear not : A meet Text for him, that maketh a Sermon at a Sepulchre. For, the fear of that place maketh us out of quiet all our life long (Heb. 2.) It lyeth at our heart like a stone : and no way there is, to make us willing to go thither, but by putting us out of fear ; by putting us in hope, that the great stone shall be rolled away again, from our Sepulchres, and we, from thence, rise to a better life. It is a right beginning, for an Easter-dayes Sermon, Nolite timere. 1. Fear not. Heb. 2. 19.

2. And a good reason he yields, why not. For, it is not every bodies case (this) Nolite timere vos, fear not You : Why not ? For You seek Jesus of Nazareth, which hath been crucified. Nazareth, might keep you back (the meanness of His Birth;) and Crucified, more (the reproach of His Death;) In as much as these cannot let you, but ye seek Him ; are ashamed neither of His poor birth, nor of His shameful death, but seek Him : And seek Him, not (as some did) when He was alive, when good was to be done by Him, but even now, dead, when nothing is to be gotten : And, not to rob or rise Him, but to embalm Him, an office of love and kindness (this touched before) fear not You, nor let any fear that so seek Him.

Now, that they may not fear, he imparts them his Message full of comfort. And, it containeth four comforts of Hope, answerable to the four former proofs of their Love : 1. He is risen ; 2. But, gone before you ; 3. Ye shall see Him ; 4. All his Disciples, Peter and all : Go sell themselves. 11

1. He is risen.

In that you thus testify your love in seeking Him, I dare say, ye had rather, He, ye thus come to embalm, that He were alive again : and, no more joyful tidings could come to you, than that he were so : Ye could (I dare say) with all your hearts be content, to lose all your charge you have been at, in buying your odours, on condition it were so. Therefore I certify you, that He is alive, He is risen. No more than Gaza gates could hold Sampson ; or the Whale, Jonas ; no more could this stone keep him in the Sepulchre, but Risen He is.

Judg. 16. 3.
Jon. 2. 10.

First, Of this ye were sure, here He was ; ye were at his laying in ; ye saw the stone sealed, and the Watch set : so that here he was. But, here He is not, now : Come see the place, trust your own eyes, Non est hic.

But what of that, this is but a lame consequence, for all that : He is not here, therefore He is risen. For, may it not be, he hath been taken away ? Not, with any likelihood ; though such a thing will be given out, That the Disciples stole him away, while the watch was asleep : But your reason will give you ; 1. Small probability there is, they could be asleep, all the ground shaking and tottering under them by means of the * Earth-quake. 2. And secondly, if they did sleep for all that, yet then could they not tell (sleeping) how, or by whom, he was taken away. 3. And thirdly, that his Disciples should do it ; they (you know) of all other were utterly unlike to do any such thing : So fearful, as miserably they forsook him yet alive, and have ever since shut themselves up since he was dead. 4. And fourthly, if they durst have done such a thing, they would have taken him away, linen-cloaths and all (as fearful men will make all the haste they can possibly) and not stood stripping him and wrapping up the cloaths, and laying them every parcel, one by one in order, as men use to do that have time enough, and take deliberation, as being in no haste, or fear at all. To you therefore (as we say, ad hominem) this consequence is good. Not taken away, and not here, therefore risen he is.

Mat. 28. 13.

* Mat. 28. 2.

He is gone before.

But, to put all out of doubt : you shall trust your own eyes ; Videbitis, you shall see it is so ; you shall see Him. Indeed, Non hic would not serve their turns : He knew their question would be, Where is he ? Gone he is ; Not, quite gone, but only gone before, which is the second comfort : For, if he be but gone before, we have hope, to follow after : I pra, sequar ; so is the nature of Relatives. But, that we may follow then ; Whither is he gone ? Whither, he told ye himself, a little before his Passion (Chap. 14. 28.) into Galilee.

* Mat. 2. 23.

b John 2. 11.

1. No meetier place, for Jesus of Nazareth to go, than to Galilee : there he is best known : there, in Nazareth he was brought up ; there, ^b in Cana he did His first miracle, sheweth his first Glory ; meet therefore to see his last : there in Capernaum, and the coasts about, preached most, bestowed most of his labour.

Matth. 4. 15.

2. Galilee ; it was called Galilee of the Gentiles ; for, it was in the confines of them : To shew, his Resurrection (tanquam in Meditullio, as in a middle indifferent place) reacheth to both ; concerneth and benefiteth both alike. As Jonas, after his resurrection, went to Nineve ; so, Christ, after his, to Galilee of the Gentiles.

Jonas 3. 4.

3. Galilee ; that, from Galilee (the place, from whence, they said, No good thing could ever come) He might bring one of the best things, and of most comfort, that ever was ; the sight and comfort of his Resurrection.

4. Galilee last, for Galilee signifieth a Revolution or turning about to the first point ; Whither they must go, that shall see him, or have any part or fellowship in this feast of his Resurrection. Thither is he gone before : and, thither if ye follow, there ye shall see him.

3. Ye shall see Him.

Act. 1. 15

1 Cor. 15. 6.

This is the third comfort : and, it is one, indeed. For, Sight is the sense of certainty ; and all that they can desire : And there they did see him. Not these here only, or the Twelve only, or the hundred and twenty names (in Act. 1.) only ; but even five hundred of them at once (saith the Apostle, 1 Cor. 15.) a whole Cloud of witnesses, to put it clean out of question. And, of purpose doth the Angel point to that apparition, which was the most famous and publick of all the ten.

4. And his Disciples, Peter and all.

This was good news for those here ; and they were worthy of it, seeking him, as they did. But, what shall become of the rest ; namely, of his Disciples that lost him alive, and seek him not dead ? They shall never see him more. Yes : (which is Evangelium, good tidings indeed, the chief comfort of all) they too, that left him so shamefully : but three dayes ago ; them he casts not off, but will be glad to see them in Galilee. Well, whatsoever become of other, Peter (that so foully forsook and forsook Him both) he shall never see him more. Yes : Peter too, and Peter, by name. And indeed, it is more than needful, he should name him : He had greatest cause of doubt ; the greatest stone upon him to be rolled away of any ; that had so often, with oaths, and execrations, so utterly renounced Him. This, is a good message, for him : and Mary Magdalen as fit a messenger, as can be, to carry it ; one great Sinner to another. That not only Christ is risen : but content, that his forakers, deniers, for swearers, Peter and all should repair to him, the day of his Resurrection : That, all the deadly wounds of his Passion have not killed his compassion over sinners : That, though they have made wrack of their duty, yet he hath not lost his mercy, nor left it in the Grave ; but is as ready to receive them as ever. His Resurrection hath made no change in him ; dying, and rising, he is to sinners still one and the same ; still like himself, a kind, loving, and merciful Saviour. This is the last : Peter and all may see Him.

Mar. 14. 71.

And with this he dismisseth them, with Ita & dicite, with a Commission and precept, by vertue whereof, He maketh these Women Apostolos Apostolorum; Apostles to the Apostles themselves; (for, this Their Commis. Article of the Resurrection, did they first learn of these Women; and they were the first of all, that son. preached this Gospel :) giving them in charge, that, seeing this day is a day of glad tidings, they would not conceal it, but impart it to others; even to so many as then were or would ever after be Christ's Disciples.

They came to embalm Christ's body natural; that needs it not; it is past embalming, now. But another body he hath; a mystical body, a company of those, that had believed in Him, though weakly: that they would go and anoint them, for they need it. They sit drying away, what with fear, what with remorse of their unkind dealing with Him: they need to have some oyle, some balm, to supple them. That, they doe, with this Gospel: with these foure: Of which foure ingredients is made the balm of this day.

Thus we see, these that were at cost to anoint Christ, were fully recompenced, for the costs they have been at; themselves anointed with oyle and odours of a high nature, and farre more pretious, than those they brought with them, Oleum lactis (saith the a Psalme) Odor rosa (saith the b Apostle.) And that, so plentifully, as there is enough for themselves; enough too, for others, for His Disciples, for Peter and all. a Plal. 45. 7.
b 1 Cor. 2. 16.

But what is this to us? Sure, as we learned by way of duty, how to seek Christ, after their example; The Application so, seeking Him in that manner, by way of reward, we hope to have our part, in this good news, no less than they.

1 Christ is risen; that concerneth us alike. c The Head is got above the water; a The Root hath received life and sap: b The first fruits are lift up and consecrate: We, no lesse than they, as His mem. bers, His branches, His field, recover to this hope. c Eph. 4. 15.
a Rom. 11. 16.
b 1 Cor. 15. 23

2 And for His going before; that which the Angel said here once, is ever true. He is not gone quite away, He is but gone before us: He is but the antecedent; we, as the consequent, to be inferred after. Yea, though He be gone to Galilee superior, the Galilee that is above (Heaven) the place of the Celestiall Spheres and Revolutions; even thither is He gone, not as a party absolute, of or for Himself; but a Harbinger (saith the Apostle) with relation to others, that are coming after, for whom He goeth before to take up a place. So, the Apostle there; So, the Angel here: So He himself, Vado; not Vado alone, Heb. 6. 16;
Joh. 14. 21 but Vado parare locum vobis, I go to prepare a place, wherein to receive you, when the number of you and your brethren shall be full.

3. To us likewise pertaineth the third videbitis: that is, the Gospel indeed. He is risen: Rising, of it self, is no Gospel. But, he is risen, and we shall see Him: that, is it. That the time will come also, that we shall see Him, in the Galilee Celestiall, that is above; yea, that all shall see him, even they that pierced Him. But, they that came to embalm him, with joy and lifting up their heads, they shall see him: with that sight shall they see him, that shall evermore make them blessed. Joh. 19. 37.

4. Lastly (which is worth all the rest:) That we shall not need to be dismayed with our unworthiness; in that, willing he is, Peter should have word of this, and Mary Magdalen should carry it. That (such as they were) sinners, and chief sinners should have these tidings told them, this Gospel preached them: that he is as ready to receive them to grace, as any of the rest; and will be as glad to see them, as any others in Galilee.

But then are we to remember the condition; that (here) we get us into Galilee, or else, it will not be. And Galilee is a revolution, or turning ad principia, to the first point, as doth the Zodiack, at this time of the year. The time of his Resurrection is Pascha, a passing over: The place Galilee, a turning about: It remaineth then, that we pass over, as the time; and turn, as the place putteth us in mind. Re-uniting our selves to his body and blood, in this time of his rising; of the dissolving and renting whereof our sins were the cause: The time of his suffering, keeping the Feast, of Christ our new Passover offered for us; leaving whatsoever formerly hath been amiss, in Christ's grave, as the weeds of our dead estate, and rising to newness of life, that so we may have our parts in the first resurrection: Which they are happy and blessed that shall have; for, by it they are sure of the second. Of which blessing and happiness, he vouchsafed to make us all partakers, that this day rose for us, Jesum Christ the Righteous, &c. Apoc. 16. 6.

And now, my dear friends, I have the honor to inform you that the

Preached before the

KINGS MAJESTY

A T

WHITE-HALL,

On the Sixteenth of Aprill, being Easter-Day.An. Dom. 1609.

JOHN Chap. XX. Ver. XIX.

Cum ergo sero esset die illo, Una Sabbatorum, & fores essent clausæ, ubi erant Discipuli congregati propter metum Judæorum: venit Jesus, & stetit in medio, & dixit eis, Pax Vobis.

The same day then, at night, which was the first day of the week, and when the doors were shut, where the Disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus, and stood in the midst, and said unto them, Peace be unto you.

His is the enter-view of Christ and His Disciples: and this, His first speech, at His first enter-view: Both, this day; the very first day of His rising. 1 Mark 16. 9.
2 Mat. 28. 9.
3 Luke 24. 30.
4 Luke 24. 44.
5 In Text.

Five sundry times, appeared He, this day. 1. to Mary Magdalen; 2. To the Women coming from the Sepulcher; 3. To the two that went to Emaus; 4. To Saint Peter; 5. And here now, to the Eleven, and those that were with them. The two first, to Women; the three last to men: So, both Sexes: To Peter, and to Mary Magdalen: So, to Sinners of both Sexes. To the Eleven, as the Clergy; to those with them, as the Laiety: so, to both Estates. Abroad, at Emaus: at home, here. Betimes; and now, late. When they were scattered, severally; and now, joyntly, when they were gathered together. That no Sex, Sort, Estate, Luke 1. 78.

Place or Time excepted: but, as Visitavit oriens ab alto: so Visitavit, occidens ab imo: Rising, from above, at His Birth; Rising, from beneath, at His resurrection, He visited all.

N n

But

But, of all the five, this is the chief. Those were, to one; as Peter: Or two; as those of Emmaus. Or three, as the Women: This, to all: The more, the more Witnesses; the better for faith. Those when they were scattered: this (here) when they were all together: The more together, the more meet for this salvation here, Peace be to you.

The division.

Which Salutation is the very substance of the Text: the rest but appendent, all.

I. In it, two things give forth themselves: 1. The Persons, to whom, Vobis. 2. The Matter of the Wish it self, Peace. The Persons are thus set down: Discipuli, congregati, conclusi: 1. His Disciples they were; 2. Gathered; 3. And the doors shut on them, for fear of the Jews.

There will fall out besides, four other points. 1. Christ his site; that, He stood, when he wished it: 2. His Place; that, in the midst, he stood. 3. The time, All this, the same day, the first day of the week, Sunday, Easter-day: 4. And, the very time of the day; that, it was late.

II. The speech, of it self, is a Salutation: any will so conceive it, at the first hearing. And, if it were but so, and no more; that were enough. Christ's Salutations are not (as ours be) formal; but good matter in them.

But, it is more than a Salutation, say the Fathers, for this reason. At meeting, men use to salute but once: within a verse, he repeateth it again. So, it keeps not the law of a salutation: but, it is (certainly) somewhat, besides. Votum Christi, they call it. Votum pacis, votum Christi: Christ's vow, or wish: His Vow; and his first Vow.

Now, every Vow, implyeth an advice, at the least. What Christ wisheth to us, he wisheth us to. Every wish, so: But, if it be the wish of a Superior, in his Operative, there is an Imperative; his Wish, is a command, if he have wit that hears it. So that these words (rightly understood) are both an Advice, and an Injunction to it; of the nature of an Edict. Pax vobis, is as much, as Pacem habete in vobis, Be at peace among your selves.

Mar. 9 50.

We are then, to joyn with Christ; to follow him, in his Wish. To whom he wisheth it: To all Christ's Disciples, together, even to his whole Christian Church; and, even to them, that (it may be) as little deserve it, as these here did. 1. To make it Caput voti, our first Vow: yea, first and second; as Christ here did. 2. Oportet stantem optare, to wish it, standing. 3. And, standing where Christ stood (that is material) in the Midst. 4. This day to do it; and think it pertinent to the time: It is Votum Paschale. As for Serò we shall never need to take thought for it: It is never too soon; late enough alwayes, if it be not too late; that, is all the fear.

I.
The Personal part of Christ's Salutation.
Pax and vobis
reconciled.

Mat. 26. 56. 72.
Mar. 14. 53.

Mar. 14. 50.
Joh. 9. 22.

Psal. 106. 1.

Illo die, that is,
Primo Die
Phil. 2. 9.

The chief point, first: Pax vobis. The words are but two; yet, even between them there seemeth to be no peace: but one (in a manner) opposite to the other. Looking to Vobis (the Persons) this should not be a salutation for them, Pax. Looking to the Salutation (Peace) it should not be, to those Persons; Vobis, to you. So that, our first work will be, to make peace between the two words.

Vobis, to you. Will you know, who they be? To you, Peter, and John, and the rest. To you, of whom none stood by me: To you, of whom some ran away, some denied, ye forswore me. To you, of whom, all, every one shrunk away and forsook me. How evil doth this greeting agree with this Vobis? Yet, even to these, Venit & stetit, & dixit; He came, stood, and said, Peace be to you.

Used by them, as he had been, no cause. He should come, or stand, or speak at all: Or, if speak, not thus. Not come to them, that went from Him: nor stand amongst them, that had not stood to Him: nor speak to them, that had renounced Him. It is said, they feared the Jews: All things considered, they had more cause to fear Him; and to look for some real revenge, at his hands: If not that, some verbal reproof, a Salutation, of another stile or tenour: And well, if they might scape so. Confitemini Domino, quia bonus; It is not so: No evil deed, for all this: No, not so much as an unkind word. Above that, they could look for, far above that, they deserved, it is, Pax vobis. You and I are at peace, you and I are friends; Peace be unto you. This is his first goodness: His making a peace between Pax and Vobis.

This Speech to these Persons, is much mended, by adding the Time in the Text; that, it was illo die; the day of his rising. Pax vobis, is a good speech, for Good-friday, then, men grow charitable when ready to dye. But, on their Easter-day, at their rising, the day when Exaltavit Eum Deus, the day of their exaltation, they use to take other manner spirits, and remember former disgraces, with a far other congy. Hac est lex hominis; Men do thus: but, not Christ. Neither their indignity, Vobis; Nor his own dignity changeth him. Rising, exalted, the very day of His exaltation, illo die, He saith, Peace be unto you.

Another yet: That it was Primâ Sabbati, the very first day of the week: took no long day for it: Primâ Sabbati. Nay, no day at all, but the very first day: Joseph (exalted) dealt well with his brethren; but, not the first day: it was some time first. He kept them in fear, a while; but shewed himself; at the last. Lukc. 24. 1. Christ doth not so; hold them in suspense: illo die, primo die, the same day, the first day, He came, and shewed himself, and said, Peace be unto you.

Yea, not so much as dixit (here) but (as it falls out) will bear a note. Even, that it is dixit, and not Respondit; a Speech, not an Answer. That he spake it, unspoken to: He, to them, first; yet they, to Him. He might well have stayed till then: and reason would, they should first have sued for it. Yet they ask it, he giveth it: and prevents them with the blessing of peace. They first, in falling out; he first, at making friends. Dixit, not; respondit. Psal. 123. 3.

A great comfort for poor sinners, when the many indignities, we have offered Christ, shall present themselves before us, to think of this Vobis. That, when the Disciples had done the like, yet he forgot all; and spake thus kindly to them, this day: That he will vouchsafe us the like (specially, if we seek it, he will), and say to us, Pax vobis.

Will ye remember now, to extend your wish of Peace, 1. To them, that (it may be) deserve it as evil, as these, here: Even, his qui longe. 2. To do it, at our rising at our high-day, when it is Easter with us. 3. Not, to make their hearts to pant, and eyes to fail first; but, even primâ Sabbati, to do it. 4. And not to take state upon us, and be content, to answer, Peace; and not speak: be moved for it; but, not move it: yes, even move it, first. If we do, we joyn with Christ, in his first part, the personal part of the wish.

Illis, and illo die, and primo die, what they were, we see; and in what sort. Yet, (not to grate on this point altogether) some smoke yet was there in the flax; some small remainders, illicet misericordia (as Tertullian) to move his mercy: In these words, 1. Discipuli, 2. Congregati, 3. Conclusi, 4. Propter timorem Judæorum: That, His Disciples (yet) they were; and, together they were; and, in fear of the Jews, they were shut up. The persons to whom.

Whatsoever, or howsoever they were else, yet; they were his Disciples: Unprofitable servants, yet His Disciples. Lost sons, yet Sons: forgetful Disciples, yet Disciples. His Disciples they were: and, howsoever they had made a fault (as it seemeth) so meant to hold themselves, still; and hereafter to learn their lesson better. Lukc. 17. 10. 15. 24.

And, I like well their fear: that, they were afraid of the Jews. It shews, there were no good terms betwixt them; and that they shut their doors upon them, therefore they meant not to go out to them, or seek Pax vobis of the Jews. They had no meaning (it seemeth) to give over Christ. If they had, what need they fear the Jews? The Jews would have done them no harm, they might have set open their doors well enough. For in fears of Jews.

And Congregati (I take it well) is no evil sign. It would have been Ex alia causa; for love, rather than fear: And again, for fear of God, rather than of the Jews. Yet, even thus, I mislike it not: And, much better this fear, than that at the Passion: That, scattered them one from another; every man shift for one. This makes them draw together, and keep together, as if they meant to stand out afresh. Which very [Congregati] makes them fit for this Salutation. It cannot well be said, Disgregati, to them that are in funder. Unita, is a disposition to unity; and gathering, to the binding up in the band of peace. Christ (that said, Quoties volui congregare?) liked it well, to find them thus together: And, his coming was, as to take away their fear; so, to continue their gathering, still. 3 Assembled. Math. 23. 37.

And, shall we learn this of the Disciples? 1. If a fault fall out, not to give over school, but to continue our Discipleship still. 2. And, not to go over, to seek our Pax vobis, at the hands of his enemies: To shut out both them, and their peace, too. 3. And lastly, not to forsake the fellowship; to keep together, still. For, being so together, we are nearer our Peace. This shall make Christ come and say it to us the sooner, and the more willingly.

The real part, voti summa, that which he wisheth, is peace. First, Why peace? Then, what peace? II. The real part.

Why, Peace? Is there nothing more worth the wishing? Nothing more, of itself; nothing more fit for these persons, this place, and this time. I. Why peace.

Of itself: Volumus pacem, Summa votorum. It is, all wishes, in one; nothing more to be wished; For, in brevi voce Breviarium, this little word is a Breviary of all, that good is.

To shew how, a little: quàm bonum, how good, how worth the wishing it is. It is tam bonum, so good, as, without it, nothing is good. With it (saith Solomon) an handful of herbs; without it, an house full of sacrifices, is not good. With trouble and vexation, nothing is good; nothing is to be wished. And as, without it, nothing is to be wished: so, all that is to be wished (all good) is within it. Evangelizantium pacem, Evangelizantium bona; quia, in pace, omnia bona: To bring news of peace, is to bring news of all good things; for, all good things are, in peace. Bona, is the true gloss or exposition of peace. 1 As good. Psal. 133. 1. Prov. 15. 16. 17. Prov. 17. 1. Rom. 10. 15.

* Quàm bonum, you know: And, quàm jucundum, too: But good and pleasant; and pleasant, not only, as Aaron's ointment (which was only pleasant) but, as Hermon dew, which brings profit with it. 2 Pleasant.  Psal. 133. 1.*

Abundantia pacis (saith the Psalm) peace, and plenty go together. 3 Profitable. Psal. 73. 7.

And yet, how much it is to be wished, this sheweth, Pacemite poscimus omnes: All wish it: Angels 4 Wished by wisheth

Luke 2. 14.
2 Cor. 13. 11.
Phil. 4. 7.
Luk. 4. 31.

wishesth it: most kindly for him; Dam pacis, pacem Dei; the God of peace, the peace of God. Yea, the enemy of all peace wishesth it: for, he complains, Venisti nos inquietare, are ye come to trouble us? So he would not be troubled, that troubles all; but, set altogether by the eares, and sit quiet himself.

But it is much for the honour of Peace, that cum bellum geritur, pax queritur: Even military persons, with sword in one hand, and fire in the other, give this for their Embleme, Sic querimus pacem. Thus with sword and fire, seek we peace. As, seek it, at last, they must; we must, all. Best, Primâ Sabbati: but, Serò, sooner or later, come to it we must: If it be not the first, it must be our last.

2 And by CHRIST,
often.
Joh. 14. 27.
Joh. 16. 23.
Luk. 2. 14.
Chap. 14. 28.
Chap. 17. 21.
Luk. 19. 42.

But, if there were nothing else, this only were enough; and, though there be many, this chiefly doth shew it: That our Saviour Christ, so often, so divers wayes, so earnestly wishesth it. Going, He did it, Pacem meam do vobis: And now coming, He doth it. Sitting, He did it (Chap. 16.) and now standing. Living, when He was born, Pax in terris, Xenium Christi, it was Christ's New-years-Gift: Dying, when He was to suffer, Pacem meam, relinquo vobis, it was Legatum Christi, Christ's Legacy. And now (here) rising again, it is His wish, still. To shew, not only the good of this life, but of the next, to be in peace. Prayed for it (Chap. 17.) Payed for it (Chap. 18.) wept for it, O if thou hadst known the things that pertain to thy peace! Wept for it, and bled for it: therefore, immediately (the very next words) he shewed them his hands and his side: As much to say; See, what I have suffered, to procure your peace: Your peace cost me this: Pax vobis, cost Crux mihi; See, you hold it dear. Now (sure) if there were any one thing better then other, those hands would not have with-held it, and that heart would wish it. And, Peace it doth wish: therefore nothing more to be wished. Complete it is, Votum pacis, Summa votorum.

Job. 1. 22.

There need no other sign be given, but that, of the Prophet Jonas; that Christ wished his wish: So the tempest may cease, and peace (as a calm) ensue, spare me not, takeme, cast me into the Sea; make me a Peace-offering and kill me. This, is enough to shew, it is to be wished; to make it precious in our eyes. For, we undervalue it, at too low a rate, when (that, which cost so dear) for every trifling ceremonie, we are ready to loose it. Our faint perswasion in this point, is the cause, we are faint in all the rest.

Well, though this be thus good; yet good it self is not good, unless it be in season, come fildy. Doth this so? Every way fildy. 1. For the Persons: 2. For the Place: 3. And for the Time.

1. The Persons: both 1. Christ by whom; and 2. they, to whom it is wished. 1. Christ, by whom: Decet largitorem pacis hac saluatio (saith Cyril) It is meet, for Him, to give peace, that made peace: Nay, Ipse est Pax nostra (saith the Apostle;) and, for peace, what fitter salutation, than peace?

1 By whom;
CHRIST.
Eph. 2. 14.
2 To whom.
The Disciples.

2. They, to whom: for, they needed it: with God, they had no peace, whom they had provoked: Not peace with men; not with the Jews about them: Nor peace with themselves, for they were in fear, and night-fear, which is the worst of all others. Fit for them; and they, for it: for, together they were, and so, not unfit to entertain it.

2. And, with the place, it suiteth well. For, they were shut up, as men environed and beleagured with their enemies: Conclusi & derelicti, shut up and forsaken: And to such, peace is ever welcome.

3. And for the time, seasonable. For after a falling out, peace is so: And, after a victory, peace is so. Fit therefore, for this day, the day of the Resurrection: for, till then, it was not in kind: The great battel was not fought: The last enemy (death) was not overcome. Never, till now: but, now the last enemy is conquered, now it is in season.

4. And, for the thing it self, peace, is a kind of Resurrection. When Christ was risen, his Disciples were dead. Those dead affectionis, of sorrow and fear, when they seize thoroughly upon men, what are they, but Mors ante mortem? Upon good news of Joseph, Jacob is said to revive: as if, before, he had been given for dead. It was their case, here. The house was to them, as their grave; and the door as the grave-stone; and they buried in fear: when they saw him, in the next verse, and were thus saluted by him, they gate hope, were glad (that is) revived again. For, if those were the pangs of death, peace (after a sort) is a resurrection: and so, a fit wish for the time.

Never kindly till then.

And, to say truth, peace is never kindly, till then. They define felicity shortly; to be nothing else but Pax desiderii. For, give the desire perfect peace, and no more needs, to make us happy. Desire hath no rest; and will let us have none, till it have what it would; and, till the Resurrection, that will not be.

Chap. 16. 33.

Psal. 119. 165.

1. Pax & pressura, our Saviour opposeth (Chap. 16.) If we be pinched with any want, desire hath no peace: 2. Let us want nothing (if it were possible) No peace, yet: Pax & scandalum (the Psalmist opposeth:) When we have what we would, somewhat cometh to us, we would not; somewhat sheweth us: Till non est eis scandalum, till that be had away, desire hath no peace. 3. Let that be had away, yet a new war there cometh. Peace and fear, are (here) opposed. We are well: neither pressura, nor scandalum: but we fear tolleretur à vobis, that it will not hold, or we shall not hold. The last enemy will not let us be quiet. Till he be overcome, our desire hath no perfect peace. That will not be till the Resurrection. But, then, it is Pax plena, pura, perpetua: full, without want; pure, without mixture of offensive matter; and perpetual, without all fear of forgoing, of tolleretur à vobis. And that is pax desiderii; and that, is perfect felicity. The state of the Resurrection; and the wish of the Resurrection-day.

Thus

Thus (we see) good it is: and, fit it is. It remains, we see, What it is; What, peace. When we speak of peace, the nature of the word leadeth us, to ask, With whom? And they be diverse. But, as diverse as they be, it must be understood of all; though, of some one, more especially than the rest.

There is a peace above us in heaven, with God: that first. They were wrong, here their fear ran all upon the Jews: It should have looked higher. The Jews they kept out, with shutting their doors: Against God, no door can be shut. First, peace with Him: and, with Him, they have peace, to whom Christ saith Pax vobis.

There is another peace, within us, in sin, with our heart. For between our spirit and our flesh, there is in manner of a War: The lusts of the flesh, even Militant, wage War (saith St. Peter) against the soul: And, where there is a war, there is a peace, too. This is peace with fear, here. Which war is sometime so fearfull, as men, torrid themselves of it, rid themselves of life and all; Conclude a peace there. This, followeth of the first: If all be well above, all is well within.

There is a Peace without us, in earth, with men, with all men: The Apostle warrants it; peace with all men. with the Jews here and all. I will never fear, to make civil peace, a part of Christ's wish; nor, of his Beati Pacifici, neither. He will be no worse at Easter, than at Christ-mass, He was: at Trial, Apolog. this, His second; than, at that, His first birth. Then, Jannus was shut, and peace over all the world. Orbem peccatum was ever a clause in the prayers of the Primitive Church; that the World might be quiet.

Yet is not this the peace of Christ's principal intendment; but, their peace, to whom Christ spake: Among them Pax Discipulorum; Pax vobis, inter vos: peace among them, or between themselves. It was the sym-selv's. ment on Aarons head: Aaron, that had the care of the Church. It was the dem that fell upon Sion: Sion, the place, where the Temple stood. The peace of Jerusalem; that it may be once, as a City at unity within it self. The primitive peace, that the multitude of Believers may be of one heart and one mind. All the rest depend upon our peace with God; and, our peace with Him, upon this: (a) Pacem habere inter vos, and Deus pacis erit vobiscum. The peace of Jerusalem; (b) they shall prosper that love it (saith David) (c) Joy shall be to them that counsel it (saith Salomon) (d) Blessed shall they be that make it (saith Christ.) How great a reward should he find in Heaven; how glorious a name should he leave on earth, that could bring this to pass!

This, is Christ's wish: And what is become of it? If we look upon the Christian world, we see it not; it is gone, as if Christ had never wished it. Between Jehu and Jeroboam, Salomons seed went to wrack. Jehu, his proceedings (like his Chariot wheels) headlong and violent. But Jehu, is but a brunt; too violent, to last long. Jeroboam is more dangerous: who makes it his wisdom, to keep up a Schisme, in religion; they shall sway both parts more easily. God forbid, we should ever think Jeroboam wiser than Salomon. If peace were not a wise thing, the wisest man name should not have been Salomon. A greater than Salomon would never have said, Habete solum & pacem; If you have any salt, you will have peace. Sure, when the Disciples lost their peace, they lost their wisdom: their wisdom, and their strength both. They were stronger by congregatio, than by clausis foribus; more safe, by their being together, than any door could make them.

It is, as Christ told us (Luke 10, where, He prescribes this form of salutation) it speeds, or it misse; thereafter, as it meets with the Son of peace: Speeds, if it find Him; if not, comes back again, and takes no place.

Well, though it do not, we must still hold us to Christ's wish: and, when all fails, still there must be Vnam pacis in corde; though enmity in the act, yet peace in the heart still. Still it must hold, Amicus, ut non alter; Inimicus, ut non idem: friends, as if never otherwise; enemies, as if not ever so. Quasi torrens, bellum: war, like a land-flood, that will be dry again; Quasi fluvius, pax; peace, as a river, never dry, but to run still and ever.

But yet, many times we ask, and have not, because we ask not aright (saith Saint James;) We know not the things that belong to our peace; we erre in the order, manner, size, place, or time.

The Order: which helpeth much: first it is; first Primum & ante omnia; Caput fidei; the prime of His wishes. No sooner born, but Pax in terris: No sooner risen, but Pax vobis: Apertio labiorum. The order of the very opening of his lips was, with these words: The first words: at the first meeting: On the very first day. It is a sign, it is so in His heart. That which most grieveth us, we first complain of: and that which most affecteth us, ever soonest speak of. This, is the first error. That which was first with Christ, is last with Christians: and, I would it were so (last:) for, then, it were some: Now, scarce any at all, as it seemeth.

In the Manner: for, first is but first, that is but once. This, is first and second. Here, He saith it: and within a verse, He is at it again. Nay, first, second, and third: 1. in this, 2. the XXI, and 3. XXVI. verses: As if (like Aethio, in Rhetorice) all in all.

All Christ's vows are to be esteemed; especially, His solemn vows: And His speeches; chiefly, those He goeth over and over again. That which, by Him, is double and treble said, would not by us, be singly regarded. He would have it better marked: therefore he speaketh it the second time. He would have it yet sink deeper; therefore, the third also. We faulty, in the manner. Once, we do it (it may be:) but upon any repulse, we give over: if it come not at first, we go not to it Secundo & tertio, repetitis visibus. We must not leave at once, that Christ did so oft.

2. His Site in withing it.
Scriis.
Exod. 12. 11.

The second error is ; we ask it sitting (I fear ;) and Christ stood : His standing imports something. Standing is the site of them, that are ready to go about a matter, as they, to take their journey, in the XII. of Exodus, That Site, is the Site of them, that wish for peace : Oportet statim optare. A Sedentary desire (it may be) we have ; but, loth to leave our cushion : We would, it were well ; but not willing, to disengage ourselves. Utinam hoc esset laborare, said he, that lay along and stretched himself. So say we : peace we would ; but standing is painfull. Our wish hath lips, but no leggs.

Isa. 52. 7.
R m. 10. 15.
* Psal. 34. 14.

But, it could not be said : Beautiful are the feet of them that bring peace, if the feet had nothing to do, in this business. With sitting and wishing, it will not be had. Peace will hide it self ; it must be sought out : It will fly away, it must be pursued. This then, is a point, wherein, we are to conform our selves to Christ : as well to use our legs, as to open our lips for it. To stand, is Sinus videntis : to hold up the hands, Habitus orantis. The meaning of which ceremony, of lifting up the hands with prayer, is, Ut, pro quo quis orat, pro eo laboret, what we pray for, we should labour for : what we wish for, stand for. We see, Christ sheweth His hands and His feet ; to shew, what must be done with both, for it. If we should be put to do the like, I doubt, our wish hath never a good leg to stand on.

3. His place :
In medio.
Luk. 1. 79.

By nature.

Luk. 2. 7. 46.
Job. 1. 16.

Luk. 22. 27.

Apoc. 7. 17.
1. 13.

Mat. 25. 33.

By Office : as Mediator.

1 Tim. 2. 5.

The reason of it.

To stand then : But, to stand, in a certain place. Every where to stand ; will not serve the turn. Scriis in medio, that standing place is assigned for it, thus guiding our feet into the way of peace. And, the Place, is material, for peace. All bodies natural never leave moving, are never quiet, till they recover their proper places ; and, there they find peace. The midst is Christ's place, by nature : He is the second Person in divinis ; and so the middle-most of the other two. And on earth, follow Him (if you will) you shall not (lightly) find Him out of it. Not, according to the letter, speaking of the material place. At His birth, In medio animalium in the Stable. After (a Child) In medio Doctorem, in the Temple. After (a man) Medius vestrum stetit (saith John Baptist) in the midst of the people ; saith He of Himself, Ecce ego in medio vestri, in the midst of his Apostles. At His death, it fell to His turn likewise, that place ; even then He was in the midst. And now (rising) there He is (we see.) They, in the midst of the Jews : and He, in the midst of them. After this in Palmos, S. John saw Him in Heaven, in the midst of the Throne : in earth ; walking in the midst of the Candlesticks. And at the last day, He shall be in the midst, too, of the sheep on His right hand, and the Goats on His left. All which shew, the place and He, sort very well.

But were it not natural for Him, as the case standeth, there, He is to stand, being to give peace. No place so fit, for that purpose : None, so kindly, as it. His Office being, to be a Mediator, Medius between God and man, where should a Mediator stand, but in Medio ?

Besides, the two qualities of good being to be Diffusivum and Univium ; that, is the fittest place, for both. To distribute, best done, from the center. To unite, likewise soonest meet, there. The place it self hath a vertue specially to unite : which is never done but by some middle thing. If we will conclude, we must have a medius terminus : Else, we shall never get Majus and Minus extremum to come together. Nor in things natural ; either combine two elements disagreeing in both qualities, without a middle symbolizing with both : Nor flesh and bone, without a cartilage between both. As for things moral ; there, the middle is all in all. No vertue without it. In Justice ; encline the ballance ; one way or other, the even poize is lost : Et, opus Justitia, pax : Peace is the very work of Justice. And the way, to peace, is the mid way : neither to the right hand, too much ; nor, to the left hand, too little. In a word ; all analogy, symmetry, harmony, in the world, goeth by it.

It commeth all to this : the manner of the Place doth teach us, what manner of Affection is to be in them, that wish for, or stand for peace. The place is indifferent, equally distant, alike neer, to all. There, pitch the Arke ; that, is the place for it. Indifferency in carriage, preserveth peace : By foregoing that, and leaning to extremities, it is lost. Thither we must get again, and there stand, if ever we shall recover it. Descendit a medio lost it : Stetit in medio must restore it.

Therefore when you hear men talk of peace, mark whether they stand where they should. If with the Pharisee, to the corners, either by partiality one way, or prejudice, another ; (no good will be done) When God will have it brought to pass, such minds He will give unto them ; and make them meet, to wish it, seek it, and find it.

4. The time :
In illo die.

A little (now) of the time. This was Christ's wish, at this time : And Christ never speaks out of season. Therefore, a special interest hath this Feast, in it. It is Votum Paschale, and this is Festum Pacis.

1 Cor. 11. 16.

And sure, Habemus talem consuetudinem, & Ecclesia Dei : Such a custome we have, and so, the Church of God hath used it ; to take these words of Christ, in the nature of an Edit for pacification, ever at this time. That, whatsoever become of it, all the year beside, this time should be kept a time of peace ; we should seek it, and offer it : seek it, of God ; and offer it, each to other,

There hath not, these sixteen hundred years, this day passed, without a Peace-offering. And, the Law of a Peace-offering is ; he, that offers it, must take his part of it ; eat of it, or it doth him no good. This day therefore, the Church never fails, but sets forth her Peace-offering : the Body, whose hands were here shewed : and, the Side, whence issued Sanguis crucis, the blood that pacifieth all things in earth and heaven : that we, in and by it, may this day, renew the Covenant of our peace. Then can it not be, but a great grief, to a Christian heart, to see many, this day, give Christ's peace the hearing, and, there is all ; hear it, and then turn their backs on it ; every man go his way, and forsake his peace : in stead of seeking it, shun it ; and, of pursuing, turn away from it.

Col. 1. 20.

We have not so learned Christ: S. Paul hath not so taught us. His Rule it is: Is Christ our Pasche offered for us (as, now, He was?) Epulemur itaque (That, is his Conclusion) Let us then keep a Feast, a Feast of sweet bread, without any sower leaven, that is, of Peace without any malice. Ephes. 4. 30. 1 Cor. 5. 7, 8.

So to do: and even then (this day) when we have the Peace-offering in our hands, then, then to remember, alwayes (but then, specially) to joyn with Christ, in his wish; to put into our hearts, and the hearts of all, that profess His name (theirs specially, that are of all others most likely to effect it) that Christ may have His wish, and there may be peace through the Christian world: That we may once all partake together, of one Peace-offering; and with one mouth, and one mind, glorifie God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

S E R M O N
Preached before the
KINGS MAJESTY
AT
WHITE-HALL,

On the Eighth of April, being Easter-Day.

An. Dom. 1610.

J O B Chap. XIX.

Quis mihi tribuat, ut scribantur, &c.

Ver. 23. Oh that my words were now written! Oh that they were written even in a book.

24. And graven with an iron pen, in lead, or in stone for ever!

25. For I am sure, that my Redeemer liveth, and he shall stand the last on the earth (or, and I shall rise again in the last day from the earth.)

26. And though, * after my skin worms destroy this body: I shall see GOD in my flesh. Or, And I shall be compassed again

27. Whom I my self shall see, and mine eyes shall behold, and none other for me, though my reins are consumed within me. (Or, and this hope is laid up in my bosome.) wth my skin.

His day calleth us, to say somewhat of Christ's Resurrection. To find Christ's Resurrection, in the New Testament, is no matter: but of many places, you have thence heard of it heretofore, many times; and many times may, hereafter, out of many places more. If it be but for variety, it will do well, not to dwell still on the New; but, otherwhiles to see, if we can find it, in the Old. It will give us good satisfaction to see Jesus Christ to day, and yesterday, the same: yesterday, to them, to day, to us. To read Resurget in Job. He shall rise; as we read Resurrexit, in Job. He is risen. To see their Creed, and ours differ but in tense, shall rise, and is risen: Shall and is; but the Redeemer all one, in both.

Much ado is made by your Antiquaries, if an old stone be digged up with any dim letter on it. In this Text, I find mention of a stone to be graven; so that, I shall present you this day with an Antiquity; an old stone digged up in the land of Hus, as old as Job's time, and that as old as Moses; with a fair inscription, the Characters of it yet legible, to prove the faith of this Faith, so ancient, that it began not with the Christians, the Patriarchs had it as many hundred years before Christ, (as we are after. This Text is a monument of it. And, it will be never the worse welcome to us that are Gentiles, that it cometh from one that is a Gentile (as Job was) and not of Jacob's line: It is the stronger, for that Moses and Job, the Jew and Gentile believed it: Moses put it, in his ordinary prayer, (the ninetieth Psalm) as it were, his Psalm. Psalm 90. 3. after; and Job here, in his Creed.

S. Hierome saith of Job : Nullum tam aperte post Christum, quam iste hic ante Christum, de Resurrectione loquitur Christi et sua : No man, ever since Christ, did so clearly speak of Christ's Resurrection, and his own, as Job did here, before Christ : Thou his Redeemer livest, and shall rise again. Which is as much to say as, He is the resurrection and the life : (S. John could say no more.) It is his hope : He is by it regenerate to a lively hope : (S. Peter could say no more.) Enters into such particulars, this flesh, and these eyes : (S. Paul could do no more.) There is not in all the Old ; nay there is not in all the New, a more pregnant direct place.

1 Pet. 1. 3.

1 Cor. 15. 53.

There is then, in this monument of antiquity, a direct pro: hecie ; or (if you will) a plain Cread, of the substance of this Feast, of his Redeemers rising, and of his hope to rise by him ; the one positive, the other illative. There is a pathetic Poeme set before it ; and there is a close or farewell, by way of Epiphonema, after it, no less pathetic.

The summe and Division.

I.

The two first verses, we may well call the Parasceue, of preparation to the Feast of Passover : which serve to stir up our regard, as to a Mystery or matter of great moment ; worthy not onely to be written or inrolled in a book, but to be cut in stone ; a monument to be made of it, ad perpetuam rei memoriam, Oh that, &c.

II.

Then followeth (in the third) his Redeemer and his rising ; his passing over from death to life : I know, &c. and out of it (in the last) by way of inference, his own : Et quod ego, &c. set down with words so clear, and so full of caution, as, in the Epistle to the Corinthians, it is not fuller expressed.

III.

Upon these two, there be two Acts here set down, 1. Scio, and 2. Spero. He begins with Scio, for the truth : and ends with Hac mihi spes, for the comfort, or use of this knowledge. Graven, that it may be known : known, that it may be our hope. His it was, and ours it must be : reposita, with him ; reponenda, with us, to be lodged and laid up in our bosoms, against we be laid into the bosome of the earth. Indeeds [sculptis in lapide] is nothing without [reponi in sinu ;] Graving in stone will do no good, without laying it up in the bosome.

I.
The Parasceue
or preparation.
Jobs with.

1 Tim. 1. 15.

4. 9.

JOB, fearing (it should seem) if he had but barely propounded the point following, it would have been but slenderly regarded ; doth enforce himself, to set it down with some solemnity, to make the deeper impression, (which I call the Parasceue :) that we might not reckon of it, as a light holy-day ; but as a high Feast. He would have the Scio of it stamped in stone, as worthy everlasting remembrance ; and the Spero of it carefully laid up, as worthy precious accompt. It is as much as S. Paul had said : It is a faithfull saying, and by all means worthy to be received : For the scio, faithfull ; for the spero, worthy all receiving : For the truth, to be graven in marble ; for the comfort, to be lodged in the bosome.

For the first, thus he proceedeth. He was dying now ; and seeing he must die, one thing he had, he would not have die with him : It was that, when he had lost all, he kept in his bosome still ; when all comforters, and comforts forsook him, and (as he saith) his Physicians grew, of no value, he found comfort in. This, he thought, it was pity should perish : but, though he die, it live. It was certain words ; and, because they had been cordial to him (had been, to him ; and might be to others) he desires they might remain to memory ; and because writing serves to that end, they might be written.

2. That it might written.
Chap. 6. 26.

Which his wish of writing consists of three degrees : is as it were three wishes in one.

2. Written in a book.

1. They be words ; and because words be but wind (his own Proverb) that they might not blow away with the wind, he wisheth they were written : Quis mihi tribuat, Who will help him to a Clerk, to set them down in writing ?

3. Written in stone, with a pen or iron for ever.

2. But then he bethinks himself better : they were no common ordinary matter, therefore not to be committed to common ordinary writing. So, they might be rent or lost : they be more worth than so. Therefore now secondly, he mends his wish : he would not have them to be barely written, but registered in a book ; enrolled upon record, as public instruments, mens deeds, judicial proceeding ; or (as the very word gives it) Acts of Parliament, or whatsoever is most authentic.

And yet, upon further advice, he calls back, that too, by a third wish. If they were upon record, Records will last long, yet, even then, time will injure. No ink, no parchment, but will decay with time. Now, these he would have last for ever : therefore he gives over his Scribs, and in stead of him, wisheth for a Graver : No paper, or parchment will serve ; it must be stone ; and the hardest stone, the rock. For this paper, he must have a pen of iron : that he wisheth too. But here is mention of lead : what is to be done with that ? If we believe the Hebrews (that best knew the fashion of their Countrey Monuments,) when it is graven, the graving may be choaked with soil ; and the edges of the letters, being tough and uneven, may be worn in, or broken, and so defaced ; to provide for that, the graving he would have filled with lead, that so it might keep smooth and even, from defacing ; and fully from choaking up. That it be th (the last word,) that is, last for ever, to the last Ages and Generations to come, never to be worn, but to hold for ever. If it were the best in the world, more cannot be done, or wished, then this : and this he wished, and not coldly, but earnestly. Oh that it were, would God it were ! Quis mihi tribuat. Who will do to much ? Who ? as if he were earnest begging of God and man to have it done.

Now

Now in the name of God, what may this be, that all this work is kept about? It is the work of this day. And why would not a book serve for this? Why no remedy but it must be in stone? There want not reasons; Let me touch some few. Moses and Job are holden to have lived at one time. Moses Law was graven in stone, we know. This of Job (here) is Gospel, the substance, the chief Article of it. No reason, the Law, in tables of stone; and the Gospel in sheets of paper. Good reason, Job, as zealous for the Gospel, as Moses, for the Law. If that wrought in stone, this no less; as firm and durable, as it, every way. And the same reason is for the iron pen. As the stone for the Law, so the pen for the Prophecy. If, in the Prophecy, mens sins be written with a pen of iron; meet, the discharge should be written no less deep, with as hard a pen, as it; that so the Characters of one, may match the other at each point.

This for Moses: now for our Redeemer. There it was meet, in petra: Petra autem Christus. Our Redeemer is a Rock: O Lord my Rock and my Redeemer, (saith David) or my Redeemer of the Rock, alluding to this of Job: Kindly it is, it should be wrought in the Rock, that is, of the Redeemer, who is the Rock. And so the resurrection, being a putting on incorruption, would not be written in corruptible stuff, but in that cometh nearest to incorruption, and is least of all subject to corrupt and decay. The words would be immortal, that treat of immortality.

A third, in respect of those Works, that are usually wrought of stone, as Grave-stones, as Arches Triumphal. The Resurrection is mors mortis (saith Osee) O death I will be thy death: for the death of him that is the death of us all, here, is a grave-stone allowed, and an Epitaph graven on it. Here it is, and so doth Nazianzen call this Scripture, Deaths Epitaph. Either (if as Esay saith, Death by Christ rising be swallowed up in victory): a trophy of this victory would remain; and that, as all victories, in a Pyramid of stone: and that Arch-wise on two pillars, 1 One for Christ; 2 One for our resurrection.

One more: That Job needeth this wish, in regard of those, that were to receive this doctrine. It will not well be written, there is such unbelief and hardness of heart, yea, even in the Disciples, and so generally in our nature; as, enough to do, to grave it in us: yet so necessary with all, as where it will not be written, he wishes it graven. Written, where it may; but graven, where it must. But written, or graven, one of them in us all.

This for Jobs wish. Shall we now pass to the third verse, and see what these words be, that no paper will serve, but stone; nor pen, but iron; nor ink, but lead? Great expectation is raised with this so stately an entry. The words be Jobs: his Scio, and his Spero, touching the two articles of this day, 1 His Redeemer, and His rising; 2 and the train of it, His own rising, and his seeing God. They begin with Scio, the pillar of this faith; and end with Hac mihi spes, the arch of his hope; ever, hope giving the assumption to faiths proposition.

Let's begin with the object of his knowledge. The first is news of a Redeemer. We owe this word to Job: he, the first, in the Bible, that ever named him so. Of the Creation, we read, in Moses: and God provided well for us, that we should no sooner hear of a Creator by Moses, but we should, of a Redeemer, by Job. For, though God by right of creation were (as saith Melchisedeck) owner of heaven and earth; yet the creature being subiect to vanity, shewed they were gone, aliened from God. But this is good news, that seeing we were Gods, and not our own, he would not see that carried away that was his own, but would be content one should redeem it back.

But, it is news to hear, that Job is at his Redeemer; Job with all his innocency, with his so just, and holy life, as God himself bare witness unto it, as Satan himself could not except against it; yet he is not at Scio quod Jdex; but Scio quod Redemptor: doth deprecari judicem; and, for all his virtues, a Redeemer will do well though; and he in the number of those that are glad to say Scio, to take notice of him.

From which his Scio, his notice taking, we take a true estimate of Jobs estate. For, if he look after a Redeemer, then is he, either sold for a Servant, or carried away for a Captive: one of these. For, these two onely we read of; redeemed from Egypt the house of bondage: or redeemed from Babylon the land of their captivity. Saint Paul confesseth both by himself: Sold under sin, and led away captive under the law of sin. Job confesseth as much: Probaui quid faciam? sinned he had; and by committing of sin was become Servus peccati. Sold by himself, and made subject by sin; and sold by God, and made subject to corruption: from both which he needed a Redeemer. Whether servant, or captive, one or both, it fillet out well, that both states are redeemable; neither past redemption. Sinned: that he needs a Redeemer: Not so sinned, but a Redeemer will serve. God is willing (saith Elihu) to receive a reconciliation, to admit of a Redeemer: if we can get us one to lay down the price, there is hope, we may be restored, to see God again. A Redeemer will do it.

Why then, Scio quod, he knows of one. Good tidings, to all that need to know, there is one, presently in being. For then, Nunc dimittis, may Job say; he may depart in peace, die when he will, his Redeemer lives, who will never see that perish, he hath paid the price for; but, since he came to redeem that which was lost, will not suffer that to be lost which he hath redeemed.

This of his Redeemer, Now, what he believes of him. First, live he must: be a living, quick thing; not dead, or without life. Silver, Gold will not do it; our redemption is personal: not real, to give some what and save himself. But such a Redeemer, as must answer body for body, and life for life; give himself, for Job, and those he redeems: so is the nature of the word, so the condition of our redeeming. There is his Person.

Of what nature, out of the word Redeemer. Sure if a Redeemer, God. The Psalm deduceth at large: His Name is Man cannot redeem his brother, nor give an atonement unto God for him. It cost more to redeem souls: so that, God, he he must let that alone for ever. Then he tells us plainly; it is God shall redeem our souls from the hand of hell. Job saith the same in effect; In His Saints He found folly, and in His Angels pravitatem, somewhat awry: They (both) need a Redeemer, themselves. That, they want themselves, they cannot perform to others: And if neither Saint, nor Angel, then no Redeemer, but God.

On the other side, if a Redeemer, man He is to be, of necessity. So is the flat Law of Redemption of persons. He must be frater, or propinquus, a brother, or next of blood; else, not admitted to redeem a person. That He may be admitted then, He must be flesh of our flesh; and then He may. The very word sheweth it, which doth as properly signifie, to be next of kin, as to redeem. Upon the point then, both He must be. Man cannot; God may not: But, God and Man both, may and can.

But what stand we straining the word Redeemer, or the conditions of it, when we have both twain, his natures in formal terms, immediately in the verse following, videbo Deum in carne. There is God in plain terms; and his flesh is humane flesh; and that is man. I know in carne (there) may be construed two ways: But (I know) both ways well; and both ways it is taken, by the Fathers: 1. I in my flesh, shall see God: or, 2. I shall see Deum in carne, that is Deum incarnatum, God having taken flesh upon him. This latter way, I find; Saint Augustine taketh it: Videbo Deum in carne; quod, ad id tempus pertinet, cum Christi Deus habuit carnis induta est. I shall see God in my flesh: this pertains to the time, when the Godhead of Christ was clothed with the habit of flesh. And well both: For, one depends on the other; our seeing God in the flesh; upon Gods being seen in our flesh. But, Deus, in carne, are the two natures.

Now His office is Redeeming: how discharges He that? how brings He the work of our Redemption to pass? Many were his works concurring to it. Job singles out, and makes choise of one among them all, which is the chief of all, the accomplishment of all, and where he shewed Himself a compleat Redeemer. For then a Redeemer right, when he had brought his work to perfection: and that he did, when He rose again.

So I read, rise again; and not stand. It is well known, it is the proper word for rising, and not standing. The LXX. so turn it; not sthesai, shall stand; but anasthesai, shall rise again. The Fathers so read it: Nec dum natus erat Dominus (saint Hierom) & Athleta Ecclesia Redemptorem suum videt a mortuis resurgentem, He was not yet born, and the Churches champion, Job, saw his Redeemer rising from the dead. Victurum me coram fide credo, Liberum voce profiteor, quia Redemptor meus resurgit, qui inter impiorum manus occubuit: with assured faith I believe, and with free courage confesse, that rise I shall, in as much as my Redeemer shall rise, who is to die by the hands of wicked men: (saith Gregory, upon these very words.)

Rise again then shall our Redeemer from the dead. There he was then, or he could not rise thence. How came he there? So that, here is his death implied evidently, that brought him thither. Rise he cannot, except first he fall: Fall therefore He must, and be laid up in the earth, before he can rise from thence again. Specially seeing we find him first alive (in the fore-part of the verse;) and then rise again (in the latter.) For how can that be, unless death come between?

Yea, the Fathers go further; and from the words [carne mea] set down the very state of his death. In my flesh, that is (say they) such flesh as mine, rent and torn. As (to say true) between Christ's flesh when Pilate shewed him, with Ecce homo, and Job's, no great odds: Unum in toto corpore vulnus: One resembled somewhat the other; scarce any skin left on him, no more then Job: postquam pellem meam contriverunt, might Christ as truly say.

In this case, he saw him; brought to the dust; and thence he seeth him rising again: and so now, it is Easter-day with Job. For, this Text, this day, was fulfilled. Then, He rose again; and rising, shewed Himself a perfect Redeemer. Then: for, till then, though the price were paid, nothing was seen to come back. Now, His soul was not left in Hell; and so that came back: Nor His flesh to see corruption; and so that came back. And, having thus with a mighty hand redeemed and raised Himself, is able to do as much for us. Quam in se offendit, & in me facturus est (saith Gregory) Exemplo huius monstravit, quod promissit in premio: What he shewed in himself, he will perform in us; and what we see now in this example, then we shall feel in our own reward.

But, thus have we, in this verse comprised, his Person, his two Natures, God-head and Man-hood; his Office, his Death, and his Resurrection, and his Second coming: (for, at his first, Job saw him not, as Simoon; but, at his second, shall.) What would we more? With a little help one might make up a full Creed.

Very well then, on he goeth, and out of this [Scio quod Redemptor] he inferreth [Scio quod ego]; arguing, from his Redeemer to himself. Eadem catena revincta est Christi resurrectionis, & nostra: One chain they are linked with, his and ours: you cannot stir one end, but the other moveth with it. The finews of which reason are in this; that the Redeemer doth but represent the person of the redeemed. For, a Redeemer is res propter alium; all he doth, is for another: Lives not, dies not, rises not to, or for himself; but to, or for others: him or them, he undertakes for. His life, death, resurrection, theirs; and the consequence (so) good: Scio quod ille, & quod ego. So there is no error in reading as we do, our Office of the dead, I shall rise again at the last. Though it be the third person in the Text, the first is as infallibly deduced by consequence, as if it were there expressly set down; as sure as he shall rise, so sure he shall raise: for, to that, is he a Redeemer.

We see the coherence; let us see the Benefit: which standeth of these four points. First, He shall see God: Secondly, See him in his flesh, and with his eyes: Thirdly, in the same flesh, and with the same eyes and no other : Fourthly, and he shall see Him, sibi, for his own good and benefit : and all this, non obstante the case, he was in, which gave but small likelihood of it.

The first and main benefit, his Redeemer will raise him to, is to see God. That, he lost, when he became aliened : that, he recovers, being redeemed. Here begins all misery, to be cast out of His presence : here, all happiness, to be restored to the light of His countenance. Visio Dei, all along the Scripture, is made our chief good ; and our felicity still set forth, under that term. In thy presence is the fulness of joy (saith the Psalm :) Ostende nobis Patrem & sufficit, and we will never desire more. A conjecture we may have, of the glory of this sight, from Moses : he saw Him ; and not his face neither ; and that but a glimpse, and as he passed by ; yet got he so glorious a brightness in his countenance, he was fain to be veiled ; no eye could endure to behold him. And, a like conjecture of the joy, by the transfiguration : they did but look up at it, they desired never to be any where but there ; never to see any sight but that : so were they ravished with the beholding of it.

See God : and so he may in spirit, as do the souls of the righteous departed : it skills not for the flesh. Yes ; see him, in the flesh. That, as proper to this Text, and this day, which offers more grace. This day, Christ rose in the flesh, and this Text is, we shall see Him in the flesh. It is meet, the flesh partake the redemption wrought in the flesh ; and He be seen of flesh, that was seen in the flesh. He will do it for the flesh ; it is (now) his nature, no less then the Godhead : He will not forget it, we may be sure. It were hard the Redeemer should be in the flesh, and the flesh never the better for it.

For, the soul is but half ; though the better half, yet but half ; and the redeeming it, is but a half redemption ; and if but half, then imperfect. And our Redeemer is God, and Gods works are all perfect : if he redeem, he doth it not by halves. His redemption is a compleat redemption, certainly. But, so it is not, except he redeem the whole man, Soul, flesh and all : his soul from hell, his flesh from the grave, both, to see God. His redemption is imperfect, till it extend so far. Therefore, at his coming again, they are willed to lift up their heads, their redemption is at hand, their full redemption ; then full, when both soul and body shall enjoy the presence of God.

And, what we say of Gods work, the same we say of the souls desire : It is not full neither, without this. Every man, yea, the Saints, Saint Paul, by name, professeth all our desire, Nolimus expoliari, sed supervestiri, we would not be stripped of this flesh, but be clothed with glory immortal, upon soul and flesh both : which desire, being both natural, and having with it the concurrence of Gods Spirit, cannot finally be disappointed.

I add further, that it is agreeable, not onely to the perfection of his work ; but even to his justice, that Jobs flesh should be admitted, upon the Septuagims reason, in the forefront of the verse, τὸ ἀνταρτῆσαι ταῦτα, that it hath gone through, joyned in the good, endured all the evil, as well as the soul. For God is not unrighteous, to deprive the labourer of his hire ; but, with him, it is a righteous thing, to reward them joyntly, that have joyntly done service ; and not sever them in the reward, that in the labour were not severed. But, the flesh hath done her part, either in good or evil ; her members have been members, either ways. In the good, the flesh hath knelt, prayed, watched, fasted, wasted and wearied it self, to and for God : In evil, it hath done, I need not tell you what ; and that, to and for sin. Therefore, even justice would, they should share in the reward of the good ; and in the evil, take like part of the punishment. This may serve for the flesh.

And sure, the very same may be said, and is no less strong for the third degree : as, for the flesh, and the eyes ; so that the same flesh should participate, and the same eyes, and no other for them. No justice, if one flesh should labour, and another reap that, it never laboured for. What comfort can it be for the poor body, to abridge it self of much pleasure, and to devour much tediousness, and many afflictions ; and another strange body shall step up, come between, and carry away the reward ? Nay, if these eyes of Jobs, have dropt many a tear, it is reason the tears be wiped from them, not from another pair of new-made eyes. If they have restrained themselves, even, by covenant, from straying after objects of lust ; it is meet, they be rewarded with the view of a better object.

But, to say true : so should there be no resurrection indeed ; a rising up, rather, of a new, than a rising again of the old. Job should not rise again, this Job ; but, another new Job, in his place, and stead. Therefore is this point ever most steepest, of the rest. S. Paul : not a corruptible, or a mortal, at large ; but Hoc, this corruptible, this mortal. Yea, our Saviour himself, solve Temple hoc, this very Temple : and to shew, it was that very one indeed, it pleased him, to retain the print, both of the nails and spear. And Job most plain of all, using not onely the word His, as it were pointing to it with his finger : postero ; but by adding, this, and no other, excluded too, to express it the more fully above exception.

But now, these all, 1 seeing God, and 2 in the flesh, and 3 in the same flesh, are all as good as nothing, without the fourth. Videbo mihi, a little word, but not to be little regarded. In the translation, it is left out sometimes, never in the treaty. To see him for our good ; else, all the rest is little worth. For, all shall see him ; and in the flesh, and in the same flesh ; but all, not sibi ; but many, contra se : not to their good ; all ; but many to their utter destruction.

This very word is it, which draweth the Diameter, between the resurrection of life, and the resurrection of condemnation ; the right hand, and the left ; the sheep, and the goats : They that see him sibi ; to them, Esay : Arise and sing. They that, contra se ; of them, Saint John : Vidabunt & plangent : see they shall and mourn. Those shall flie, as Eagles, with all speed to the body : These other draw back, and shrink into their graves ; creep into the cliffs and holes, to avoid the sight ; cry to the hills, to fall upon them, and hide them from that sight. One shall ravi in our sum, be caught up to meet : the other shall converti retrorsum, be tumbled back ward into hell, with all the people that forget God. So that this word is all in all : which God after expounds, Videbis faciem meam in jubilo, with joy and jubilee, shall he behold my face ; as a Redeemer, not as a revenger : and, as it followeth, with hope (and not with fear) in his bosome.

And the very next point was it, that revived him ; and in very deed, the tenor of his speech, so often iterating the same thing, and dwelling so upon it, sheweth as much. Once had been enough ; I shall see God : He comes over it again, and again ; as if he felt some special comfort even by speaking it. Three several times he repeats, the seeing ; and, three other, his person I, and I my self, and I and none other but I : And as if he were not enough, he reckons up three parts, his skin, flesh, and eyes ; as if being once in, he could not tell how to get out. Blame him not : it seems he felt some ease of his pains ; at least forgot them, all the while, he was but talking. It did so ravish him, having begun, he knew not how to make an end.

III. Thus much for the object. Now to his Scio, his knowledge first ; and then his Spero, his hope after. For his knowledge : there be four things, I would note out of four words. 1 His certainty, out of Scio : 2 His propriety, out of meus : 3 His patient waiting, out of tandem : 4 and his valour or constancy, in non obstante.

1. Scio, his certainty : That he did not imagine or conceive, it might be ; but knew it for certain, even for a principle. Quis scit, Who knows (saith one, Eccles. 3. 21.) Who knoweth, whether men die as beasts ? Quis scit ? Scio : Who knows ? I know (saith Job) Putasne, (saith he, Chap. 14.) Think you, one that is dead may rise again ? Think ? I know it (saith Job.) It was res facta, even this day, to his Disciples. It was res certa, to him, many hundred years before : It is much to the praise of his faith : so much was not found, no not in Israel. And we shall not need to trouble our selves to know how he knew it : Not by any Scripture ; he had it not from Moses, but the same way that Moses had it ; he looked in the same mirror, Abraham did, when he saw the same Person, and the same day, and rejoiced to see it.

2. Out of Scio, his certainty ; and, out of Meus, his peculiar, as it were. The Redeemer of the world would not serve him, nor S. Paul's maximè fidelium, of the faithful chiefly : This (of the Ephesians) would not content him, That loved us, and gave himself for us : None but (2 Gal.) That loved me, and gave himself for me. My Redeemer : which they call Faith's Possessive.

3. In Tandem, the third word, his patient enduring. For, patience is not only shewed in suffering the Cross, but in waiting also for the promise. It will not be done by and by, this : but Tandem, at the last it will. He shall rise again at the last : he shall ; and we shall. Qui crediderit, ne fastinet ; He that believeth, let him not be in all haste. No : Simorans feceris ; expecta eum ; If he stay, stay his leisure. Tarry his Tandem.

And last, all these, Non obstante, or Tametsi ; the resolute courage, or valour of his faith ; that this he faith, being in case he vvas, small likelihood of it in appearance, seeing and feeling, that he saw and felt. There sate he falling away by piece-meal, vivum cadaver. For him then to talk of Scio, and meus thus, having no better signs and arguments then he had ; in the sense of his anger, to believe his favour ; brought to the day of death, to promise himself so glorious an estate : This is Abrahams faith, Contra spem in spe credere ; faith without, nay, faith against feeling. His state, in sense of misery, want of comfort ; his friends dismayng him ; for all that, he keeps to his Scio, and to his Meus still. All else, even all he hath (his righteousness too) they may take from him : Salutem non auferem, his Redeemer they should never get : non obstante, he would hold him fast.

This for his Scio, and now to his Spero, which word leadeth us to the use, he did, and we are to make, of this knowledge. Not, know, to know ; or to be known to know ; but, know, to lodge in our bosoms true hope : It is the general use of all our knowledge, of the Scriptures, whatsoever is written for our learning, that we by patience and comfort in the Scriptures may have hope. Generally of all ; but above all, of these, of Christ our Redeemer : He is our hope ; and his rising, that is Caput bona spei, our case of good hope, the most hopefull of all other.

The use of hope is, to expel fear. No fear, to the fear of death : what shall become of us, after our short time here, which makes us never quiet, but in the valley of Achor, all our life long : The resurrection opens us a gate of hope. Therefore, this day, Noli timere, say the Angels : Nolite timere (saith Christ.) That our proper salutation of the day. This, a day of hope. And this use made David of it : My flesh shall rest in hope, though he were not in Job's case, but in all his royalty. For, even Kings, in all their royalty, sometimes have before them the hand-writing on the wall : Numeravit, he hath numbered thy days ; and even then they rest on this hope, and read this inscription not unwillingly. The same use do the Apostles : Who hath regenerated us, in spe, to a lively hope, by the resurrection of Christ ; (it is Saint Peter.) Rest in hope (saith David ;) a lively hope, (Peter ;) Rest in hope of rising and living again.

And the term, that Job here gives hope, is worth a note : he calls it the kidneys of the soul. It made the Translator mis, that knew not this idiom. For, as in that part of the body is bred, and from thence doth issue that same generative humor, whereby we propagate our kinde, and live here (in a sort) after we be dead : In like manner, by this hope (saith Job, and so saith Saint Peter.) we are begotten anew ; we are sown (saith Saint Paul.) and of that seed, rise again in power, honour, and immortality.

And this is hæc spes, this hope. For, hope at large heareth evil, hath no good name ; Many our hopes prove Vigilantis somnia, waking dreams : we cannot lay them up, and if we would ; they are not worth the laying up, no more then our dreams be. That the Heathen man made it his happiness, to say : Vale spes, farewell all hoping. This is true, where the rest of our hope is vanishing, as man, whose breath is in his nostrils ; and when that goeth, all his thoughts perish. But this hope is of another nature : Non confundet, it will not make you ashamed. There's a reality in it, and anchor-hold ; it is built on the rock, it will endure, endure, as the rock, on vvhich it is built, and on vvhich it is graven here: There vwill come an end, and his hope vwill not be cut off, of all other: You may make a Depositorium of it, lay it up: Repone illam, & 1 Pet. 1. 3. reponere in illa; you may rest on it, it is spes viva, a living hope, in Him that liveth, and it shall restore us all to life.

Now, the place is much, where we lay it: Every thing is best kept in his proper place. Job saith, he bettowed it in his bosome, and vwould have us to do the like. Of that place, he made choice: of none vwithout us, behind us. That vve might ever carry it about us; ever have it before us, and in our sight; ever at hand: not to seek, but ready and easie to be had, vvhenever vve call for it: and these, for the continual use vve are to have of it, in all the dismays and discomforts of our life. Beside, there it vwill be safely; that, being the surest place, as being vwithin the fold of our arm, vvhether our strength lieth, and vvhence, hardest to take it from us. And there it vwill be best cherished, in the vvarmth, and vital heat of the bosome. There, the nurse carrieth her child: and the wife is called the wife of the bosome: And what is dearer to us than these two? But, above all, there it vwill be next the heart, (for the bosome is but the coffer of the heart) and there Job vwould have it. As vwell, for that, that place is the best place, and so best for the best hope: as that, there is in it this hope, a special cordial vertue against the fainting of the heart: as (indeed) it is cor cordis, the very heart of the heart, and whereby the heart it self is more heartened. Job found it so: So did S. Paul, vvhenever he grew out of heart. Put his hand in his bosome, 2 Cor. 4. 16. took out this Hope, looks upon it, presently saith: Propter quod non deficimus. And vvhenever Timothie was in the like deliquium, he applies to him: (What man! Memento, Remember, Christ is risen, and we shall rise and see God; an amends for all, vve can suffer:) as a special receipt against all cardiaque passions. 2 Tim. 2. 8.

But, in chusing this place; Job's mind was specially, to except to the brain, vvhether (commonly) men lodge it, and are mistaken: it is not the right place. Scio, there (if you vwill;) in the brain; it is the place of memory: But Spero, in the heart, the place of affection (namely fear;) and till the heart be the less fearfull, and the more cheerfull for it; it is not vvhether it should be; not laid in the right place. Nay, not Scientia cerebri; knowledge is not the best neither, not in the brain: Scientia sinus, and corde creditur; but, vvhenever it hath his rest there. When knowledge in the heart, and hope in the reins; and He that searches heart and reins, may there find them. Erre not then in laying it up in the head, or any vvhether, but vvhither Job carried it, and where he laid it, in the bosome.

To end; because vve be speaking of a hope to be laid up in our bosome, it falleth out very fitly, that, even at this time (festum spei) the Church offereth us a notable pledge, and earnest of this hope there to bestow. Even the holy Eucharist, the flesh vvherein our Redeemer was seen, and suffered, and paid the price Job. 6. 24. of our redemption; and together vwith it the holy Spirit, vvhetherby vve are sealed to the great day of our redemption. Ephes. 4. 30. To the laying up of vvhich earnest of our hope, and interest in all these, vve are invited at this time, even literally, to lodge, and lay it up in our bosome. We shall be the nearer our Scio, if vve taste and see by it, how gracious the Lord is; the nearer our Spero, if an earnest or pledge of it be laid up within us: the nearer our redemption, if vve have vwithin us the price of it: and the nearer our resurrection; they be his own vwords, He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh, &c. hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day. So dwell we in Him, and He in us; vve, in Him, by our flesh in Him; and He, in us, by His John 6. 54. flesh in us. Thereby drawing life from him, the second; as vve do death, from the first Adam.

But this hope hath this property (saith S. John) it will mundifie the place vvhether it lieth (Every one that hath this hope cleanseth himself;) vvhich place by vertue of it, vve shall so cleanse, Ut videatur in carne nostra Deus, that the life of Jesus may be manifest in our flesh; and all men see the vertue of his resurrection, to have his vwork in us, by our rising out of the old dutty conversation, to newness of life: His resurrection and the power of it being exemplarily seen in our flesh, our end shall be, to see Him in our flesh; and that, nobis (not, contra nos) for our eternal joy and comfort. And then have vve the Feast in kind, and as much fruit of it, as either Patriarch, or Apostle can vwish us. Which that vve may, pray vve to Him, &c.

KINGS MAJESTY

A T

WHITE-HALL,

On the four and Twentieth of March, being Easter-Day.An. Dom. 1611.

And being also the day of the beginning of His Majesties most Gracious Reign.

PSAL. CXVIII. Ver. XXII.

The Stone which the Builders refused, the same Stone is become (or made) the Head of the Corner.

He Stone ; which the Builders refused : saith the Prophet David. This is the Stone which ye Builders refused : saith the Apostle Peter. And saith it of Christ our Saviour, Hic est lapis, He is the stone. And saith it to Caiaphas and the rest, that went for Builders. We know then, who this stone is, and who these Builders be, to begin with.

Acts 4. 11.

And in the very same place, the same Apostle telleth us further, what is meant by refused, and what, by made head of the Corner. Quem vos, whom ye denied and crucified : that was, His refusing. And then, Quem Deus, whom God hath raised again from the dead ; that was His making Caput Anguli. Refused, when ?

Acts 4. 10.

three dayes ago. Made Head, when ? This very day : for Hic est dies, followeth straight within a verse, this is the day. Which Day : there is not one of the Fathers, that I have read, but interpret it of Easter-day.

Verse 24.

And so we have brought the Text and the time together. We know, who is the stone : Christ. Who the Builders : Caiaphas and those with him. When refused : In His Passion. When made head ? at His Resurrection, that is this day, which day is therefore (at the 27. verse) said to be, Constitutus dies sollemnis, made a solemn Feast-day : In condensis, on which the Church to stand thick and full : Usque ad cornua Altaris, even up to the very Corners of the Altar.

P p

This

This (I take it) is a good warrant, for our Church, to make this Psalm, a select choice Psalm; for this day; as peculiar and pertinent to the Feast it self. And a good warrant; for us, so to apply it. It is the Holy Ghost's own application, by the mouth of S. Peter: we may boldly make it ours.

Apoc. 19. But though this be the chief sense: yet, it is not, the only. The chief it is: for the Spirit of Prophecy is in it, which is the testimony of Jesus. Yet not the only: for according to the letter we cannot deny, but that originally it was meant of David. He was a Stone too, and in his time refused: yet after, raised by God to the highest place, even to be King over his people. The Chaldee Paraphrast (the oldest we have) is enough for this, thus he turneth the verse. Ecce, &c. The Child, whom the chiefest men oppugned, He of all the sons of Ishai, was made Ruler of Israel. A second sense then it hath, of David.

3. And, by analogy it will bear a third; and it will sort with ours, or with any Prince, in like manner banded against, and sought to be put by, as He: and yet after, brought by God, to the same place, that David was. To any such it will well agree, and be truly verified of him, and rightly applied to him. And, I confess, I chose it the rather for this third. Because, (as this year falleth out) upon one day (and Hic est dies, this is the day) We have in one, a memorial of two benefits: 1. of our Saviours exalting, by his Resurrection: 2. and of our Sovereigns exalting, and making Head of this Kingdome. Both, lighting together, we were (as we thought) so to remember the one, that we left not the other out. And this Text, will serve for both. Both, may in one beset before us: and so we rejoyce and render thanks to God for both: For the Lord Christ; and the Lords Christ, under one.

Three senses then, there are in the Text, and (to do it right) we to touch them all three. 1. Christ in prophecy. 2. David in history. 3. Our own in analogy. But we will give Christ the precedence, Both for his Person, he is Dauids Lord, and the Head of all Head-stones: It is meet, he have Primum in omnibus, he in all things, have the pre-eminence: And, for that the truth of the text, never was so verified in any, as in Him. We may truly say, None ever, so low cast down: None ever, so high lift up again, as He. Others refused, but none like Him: and their heads exalted, but nothing in comparison of his. 1. First then of *Christ*s. 2. after, of Dauids briefly. 3. and last, of our own.

I. To apply it to Christ. The stone, is the ground of all. Two things befall it: two things as contrary as may be, 1. Refused, cast away: 2. then, called for again, and made Head of the Building. So, two parts there are, to the eye. 1. The refusing. 2. and the raising: which, are his two estates, his humiliation; and his exaltation.

1. In either of these you may observe two degrees. A quibus, and Quousque: By whom, and How far: By whom refused? We weigh the word, Edificantes: Not by men unskilfull, but, by workmen, Builders professed: It is, so much the more.

2. How far? We weigh the word, Reprobaverunt: usque ad reprobari, even to a reprobation. It is not improbaverunt: disliked, as not fit for some eminent place: reprobaverunt, utterly reprobate, for any place at all.

II. Again, exalted, by whom? The next words are, a Domino, by God, as good a Builder, nay better than the best of them; which makes amends for the former.

1. And, how far? Placed by him, not in any part of the Building: but, in the part most in the eye (the corner:) and in the highest place of it (the very head.)

2. So, Rejected, and that by the Builders, and to the lowest estate: And from the lowest estate, Exalted in Caput Anguli, to the chiefest place of all; and that by God himself. This for Christ.

G n. 49. 24.
3.
Psal. 62. 4. And David is a stone, and so is ours, and so is every good Prince Lapis Israel (as Jacob, in his Testament, calleth them.) And Builders there be, such as by office should, but many times do not their office, no more than Caiaphas here. Reprobaverunt is when they devise to put Him by, whom God would exalt: And Factus Caput: when God for all that, doth them right, and brings them to their place, the Thronus Royal. As, this was the day, when God so brought David (as appeareth by the 24. verse:) And Hic est dies, this is the day, when He brought His Majesty to be Head of this Kingdome. Of these in their order.

The stone which the Builders refused, &c.

1 Cor. 3. 9. The estate of mankind, as they are in Society, either to Church or Kingdome, is in divers times set forth to us in Scripture, sometimes of a Flock, sometimes of Husbandry: otherwhile, of a Building. Ye are his Flock, divers times in the Psalms, You are Gods husbandry, you are Gods building, both in one verse. Now the stile of this Text, runs in terms of this last, of Building, or Architecture. For here are Builders, and here is stone, and a Coign or Corner, and a Top or Turret over it.

Of this Spiritual Building, we are all stones: and (which is strange) we all are Builders too: to be built, and to build, both stones; in regard of them whom God hath set over us; who are to frame us, and we so to suffer them. Builders, in regard of our selves first: then, such as are committed to us, by bond, either of duty, or charity; Every one, being (as Saint Chrysostome saith well) de subditis sibi plebi, quasi quasi domum Dei struere, of those under his charge, to make God an house. As stones; it is said to us, by Saint Peter, Super-adificamini, Be ye Built up, or framed. As Builders; it is said to us, first, by S. Jude, Build your selves in your most holy faith. Then, by Saint Paul, Edific ye, or build ye one another. Be built, by obedience and conformity: Build your selves, by encrease in vertue, and good works: Build one another, by good example, and whoisome exhortation. The short is: this is to be our study, all: if we be, but our selves, every one in himself, and of himself, to build God an Oratory. If he have a Household, of them, to build him a Chappel. If a larger circuit, then a Church. If a countrey or Kingdome, then a Basilica, or Metropolitan Church: which is properly, the Princes Building.

This is the text (the Builders here were in hand with) as a Basilica: for it was the frame of the Jewes Government: but, is applied, to all States in general. For, Jewry was the Scene or Stage, whereon the errors or virtues of all governments, were represented to all posterity.

Four words there be in the text: 1. Edificantes, Builders. 2. Lapis, Stone. 3. Angulus, a Corner, and 4. Caput, the Head. From the first word Edificantes, this we have: that States would not be, as tents: set up, and taken down, and removable. They would be buildings, to stand steddy and fixed. Nothing so opposite unto a State as not to stand.

2. From the second, Lapis: that, this Building would be, not of clay and wood, or (as we call them) Paper-walls: but, Stone-work, as strong, as defensible, as little subject to concussion, or combustion: as might be.

3. From the two parts specified, first, Anguli: this Stone-work, is not a wall forthright, to part in sunder, or to keep out: but, it consists of divers sides: those sides meet in one Angle: where if they meet, and knit well, all the better will the building be.

4. Caput. And they will knit the better, if they have a good Head. For, where they meet, no place so much in danger of weather going in, and making the sides fly of, if it want a Covering. A head it would have to cover it: It is a special defence, and besides, it is a Sovereign beauty, to the whole building.

And that Head, would not be of plaster, to crumble away: or of wood; to warp or rot with the weather; or of lead, to bow or bend, or to crack: but of Stone, and the principallest Stone, that could be. The chief part it is, the head: the chief care, and consultation would be, what Stone meet for that place: for indeed it is all in all.

That, is the consultation here. Here is Christ, what say you to him? He is a stone, 2. A building The first sense stone. 3. A Corner stone. 4. A Head stone. A stone. So the Prophet terms Him. Dan. 2. 34. Cor. 1.
Sachar. 3. 9. Esay. 28. 17. And so the Apostles, Peter, Act. 4. 11. Paul, 1 Cor. 10. 4. 1. In his Birth: Daniels stone, cut forth without hands, 2. In his Passion: Zacharies stone, graven and cut full of eyes, all over. 3. In his Resurrection: Esays stone laid in Sion, Qui credideret non confundetur, He that believeth in him then, shall not be confounded, saith S. Peter, 1 Pet. 2. 6. Hic est lapis. He is the stone of our faith, saith S. Peter, Lapis erat Christus. And Petra erat Christus, saith S. Paul. He is the stone A.C. 4. 11. of our Sacraments, the Water of our Baptism, and of our Spiritual drink (both) issue from him. A stone: 1 Cor. 10. 4.
first, for his nature, of the earth as stones are, out of Abrahams quarry (saith Esay) to shew his Humanity. Esay. 51. 1.
And, out of κατωτέρα τῆς γῆς, the very lowest part of the earth (saith the Apostle;) to shew his Humility. Ephes. 4. 9.
Indeed, nothing so subject to contempt, to be trodden on, to be spurned aside, as it. And such was his condition, Vermis, non homo, and Lapis, non homo. A worm, or a stone, and no man. Psal. 22. 6.

A stone will endure much sorrow, nothing more. And, who did ever suffer like Him? or in his suffering, who more patient, or still, or stone-like, than He?

But the chief vertue of a stone is, that it is firm and sure: And so is He. Ye may trust him, ye may build on him. He will not fail you. What you lay on him is sure. (a) David may have sure footing, 4 Psal. 40. 3. 7 ness, with non confundetur, the chief vertue of a stone: of Christ: and of those that are Head-stones by; Max. 16. 18.

But, there are stones, that lye scattered, that will neither head well, nor bed well (as they say) not meet to build withall: meet, for nothing, but to hurl, and to do hurt with. But Christ is a Stone, to do good with, to build with. Lapis ad adificationem. And he loveth not to scatter, or be by himself, his delight is to be with the Sons of men: and to grow with them, into one frame of building. Pro. 8. 31.

A Corner stone. Of all the places in the building, that one special place liketh him: Where the sides meet, there he is. To joyn together, to make two one; he loveth it above all: stretching himself, to both walls, that both may rest on him. Ephes. 2. 14.

And lastly, Lapis primarius, a Headstone. For, there he should be, there is his right place, and it will never be well with the Building, till he be in that place, till Christ be ἀπορριμῶν, Caput, in omni procuratione, the highest and chiefest end of all. This he is, and in the end, this he will be: if not by men, yet by God. 4:

But now we have to do with Men: and we are to put it to voices, their voices, with whom he lived, what they think of Christ for Caput Anguli. It is returned, Quem reprobaverunt: He is refused. Will you hear it, from themselves? Nolumus hunc regnare, We will not have Him King; Not in that place; no Head, Luke 19. 14.

But, a quibus, who are these? These were foolish people, that knew not the vertue or value of a stone: no heed to be taken what they cry. We will get us, with Jeremy to men of skill, that know, what stone is for every place; professed builders, by their trade: But these also, were no better conceited of him, than the other: for, do any of the rulers make any account of him? John 7. 48. As who say, None of them neither, Jer. 9. 4.
the very Builders refuse him too.

2. Well we will make the best of it : It may be, not for the Head : but there be more places than that : If not allow him there, yet he may be in some else. Improbaverunt, it may be, but not reprobaverunt : disallowed, but not cast aside quite. We aske then, how farre ? Will ye put him up the second time, and (to see the Quousque in kind) will ye put up Barabbas with him ? Non hunc, sed Barabbam. So it went : That was their verdict. Now, by this time it is reprobaverunt (as flat as may be) a refuse indeed, and that with a foul indignity.

John 18 40. But these, were but the Vulgar. again, What say the Builders to this ? He : of them, that took himself for a very Vitruvius, such a workman, as he said, all the rest understood nothing at all, the Master-builder Caiaphas, he was flat, Expediit, It was expedient he should dye ; be cast aside into the heap of rubbish, be put out of the building, clean. That, is his doom.

J. h. 11. 49. 50. Now, lay these together. To be refused is not so much ; it may be, it is of such, as are ignorant. But to be refused of builders, and those the chief, is much ; for, they are presumed to be skilfull. Again, to be disliked for the chief place, not so much ; if not for that, he may be for another : But, to be utterly reprobate (that is) not refused, for the Head, nor refused for the Corner, but refused simply for any room at all : not in the top, nay, not in the bottom : not in the Corner, nay, not in any rank of the building : that, is as much as may be. And this, was Christ's lot.

Yet this was all but in words, nothing was done to him. But there is a reprobation, indeed, and that is yet far worse. And to that, they proceed, even to actual matters, to real reprobation. Before they cast Him aside (this poor stone) they hackt and they hewd it, and mangled it pitiously ; they shewed their malice even in that, too. Cælaverunt Sculpturam ejus (saith the Prophet) their tools walked on Him, they graved Him, and cut Him with a witness, and made him full of eyes, on every side. What skilled that ? What disgrace, or what sorrow is done, to a stone ? the Stone feels it not. The cry, of Non hunc, or the edge of the graving tool, affect it nothing. True : but He was Lapis vivus, a living stone (as Peter calleth Him, 1 Pet. 2. 5.) a stone that hath life, life and sense, and felt all : Felt His graving, the edge and point both : felt His disfiguring, the scorne, and malice both : (of the twain, this the more, but) both he felt. When they made furrows on his back, with the scourges, when they platted the Crown of thorns, and made it sit close to His head ; when they digged His hands, and feet, He felt all. He endured it patiently, tangquam Lapis ; but He felt it sensibly, tangquam vivum, Had quick sense, of His pain in graving : had lively apprehension, of His contempt in refusing.

And these very two words (in the text) Lapidem, and Reprobaverunt, set out unto us, both parts of His Passion fully : As if he had been stone, so laid they on Him, As if He had been a Reprobate, so poured they all disgrace upon Him. And even as a stone He was, in His passion. For, as the stones give against the weather : so was there not to be seen upon Him a bloody sweat ? Did He not give (as it were) of Himself, against the tempest came ? And, when it came, was it not so strange (even that, which this living stone suffered) as the dead stones, that had no life, as if they had had life and compassion of His case, rent in sunder with it ? Lapidem then, is true.

And, for reprobaverunt, that, is as true. For how could they have entreated a reprobate, worse than they entreated Him ? In His thirst, In His prayer, In the very pangs of death, what words of scorn and spitefull opprobry ? What deeds of malice and wretched indignity ! of Himself, it is said (and by way of exaggeration) He humbled Himself to death, the death of the the Cross : of them, it may be no less, Reprobaverunt ad mortem, mortem crucis, they rejected Him to death, the death of Reprobates ; the death, whereunto a curse is annexed, the death of the Cross. And never gave Him over, till they brought Him, Lapis ad lapidem, into a grave of stone, and rolled a stone upon Him, and there left Him. And thus much for Lapis quem reprobaverunt.

Mat. 27. 60. It is the Feast of the Pasche : we now pass over to His other estate ; His Exaltation, ad caput Anguli. Were it not strange, the stone should be rolled away, and this stone should be digged up again, and set up in the Ames, the place most conspicuous (that is) made a Corner-stone : and that, in the very top, the highest part of all (that is) made a Head-stone ? Were not this a strange Pasche, from death, to life ; from lowest reprobation, to highest approbation ; from basest reproach, to greatest glory ?

2. But, seing builders (we see) may be deceived, and that in Capite (as we find here) and that, though Caiaphas be one of them : and a stone may have wrong. Would it not be well, we called to scrutiny again ? Is there any builder yet left, before whom we may bring the matter ? Yes, there is. Every house is built of some man (saith the Apostle) but he that is the builder of all, is God. Hee that set up this great vaulted work, of Heaven over our heads : that laid the Corner-stone of the earth, Hee is a Builder. But, He that laid His Chamber beams in the waters, Et appendit terram super nihilum, hangs this great Mass, no man knows upon what : He that beginneth at the top, and builds downwards, Heaven first, and then Earth (as He did :) He passeth all ours, He is a skilful Builder indeed. Is He of the same mind ? Offer Christ to His probation. He will reprobare reprobates : condemn them, that for refused Him : And all will turn, quite contrary. Saint Peter saith it : he was ἀποδοκιμασθέντες, reprobate with men, but ἐκλεκτός, chosen of God, ἁγιάσθησαν, nothing worth with them, but τίμιος, precious, with Him. Meet to be in the building ; Nay, no building, meet to be, without him. And in the building, if any part more object to the sight, than other, there. And in that, if any place higher than another ; there. In edificio, Angulus adificii, Capite Anguli : In the Building, the Corner of the Building, the Head of the Corner : (that is) in the highest place, of the chiefest part of all. This He thought Him, and as he thought Him, so He made Him : and made Him so this day, the day of His resurrection. Whom they cast down, God lift up, from the grave : whom they vilified, He glorified ; glorified, and made him Caput anguli, The Head of the Corner.

How of the corner? The corner, is the place, vvhere two vvalls meet: and there be many two's in this Building: The two vvalls of Nations, Jews and Gentiles: The two, of conditions, Bond, and Free: The two, of Sex, Male, and Female: the great two (vvhich this day vve celebrate) of the Quick and the Dead: above all, the greatest two of all, Heaven and Earth.

The two first meet in Him: There vvvas a partition, but he down vvith it: Et fecit utraqve unus, Eph. 2. 14. So, that, there is neither Jew nor Greek, neither Bond nor Free, neither Male nor Female, but all one in Christ Jesus. Yea, the Quick and the Dead, both live to Him. And all these, so many Combinations, as in the Center, meet in him: and he in the mids of all, draws all, and knits all, in one holy faith, and blessed hope of his coming; one mutual and unfained love towards each other. Ex te Angulus, well said Zachary.

And as Unitie is in the Angle; so Order, is under the Head. As all, one, in Him; so, he is Head of all. Head of the Jews, Jesus in their tongue: Head of the Gentiles, Christ in their tongue: Head of the Church: Head of all principality and power. Therefore this day, Christ that dyed rose again, that he might be Lord both of Quick and Dead, Rom. 14. 9. And of the great Angle of all, consisting of Heaven and Earth; for, all power was given him in heaven and earth, and he made Head of both.

Now then: will ye lay these together? There can come to a stone no greater dignity, than there to be in the (Head.) To any stone: but it is much increased, by that Circumstance, that it is not only, Lapis (barely;) but, Lapis quem reprobaverunt, that now is there in the Head: Not any stone, but a stone so refused (as we heard) for such a stone, there to be, from Terminus a quo, to come to this Terminus ad quem; from so base an estate, there to be: that is a great increase to it.

And thirdly, by such a person, a Builder so matchless, there to be: that is yet a degree higher: And this triplicity exalteth much his Exaltation. That by God, and not Gods suffering, but his doing: and that factum mirabile, his wonderful doing; it came to pass: As indeed, wonderful it is to see, that which all the world now seeth: Christ, that (for the present) was so strangely dejected; since to be so exceedingly glorified: So many knees to bow so Him, so many tongues to confesse Him, His Name to be above all Names, Heaven and earth to be full of the Majesty of his Glory.

Now from these words, Caput Anguli: that which we learn mortally, is: to make much of the two virtues commended to us, in these two vvords: 1. Virius Anguli, 2. And Anguli sub capite.

First, the vertue of two vvalls united in one Angle, that is Unity. For Christ will not be Caput Macedonia, of a Party-wall, but of an Angle joyned. He is not of their spirit, that, so they may be Head, care not, though it be never so broken a wall.

Secondly, not every Unity, but Unitas ordinata, that hath, or is under a Head; For it is not, Cuiusvis Anguli, but Anguli cui Caput: not of every Angle, but of an Angle, the unity vvhereof, is neither in the tail, nor in the sides, but in the Head: That is commended to us, as Unity against Division; so Order against Confusion. They that can be content to corner vvell, but vvould be Acephali, headless, have no Head, please him not: No more do they, that vvould joyn, but vvould be Poli-cephali, have a Confistory of heads, many heads: as many as the beast of Babylon. For sure it is, an Angle can have no more heads but one. To love an Angle well, but an Angle that hath an head, and but one head. To love a head well; but an head, not of a single wall, but of an Angle. Both these, and both to be regarded. They be Zacharies two, Staves, Bands and Beauty, which uphold all government; break one, and the other vvill not long be unbroken. The head, vvithout Unity; Unity, vvithout the head: either vvithout other vvill not long hold.

Both then: but especially Unity, for that cometh in here, not necessarily (as doth the head) but extraordinarily. And therefore, extraordinary regard to be had of it. For I was thinking, why he should here in this second part, say, That he was made head of the Corner? Why should it not suffice to have said, factus est Caput, and no more? Or if more, factus est Caput Aedificii? To have said, He was made the head: at least vvise, made the head of the whole building? Why must Anguli, be added? What needed any mention of the Corner? No occasion vvvas given, no mention vvvas made of it, in his refusing: The vvord [head] vvould have served fully, to have set his Exaltation forth. Some matter there was, that this vvord must come in. And sure, no other, but to shew Christ's special delight and love of that place. At his rising, this day, Stetit in medio: and here he is come to his place again: for, Stetit in medio, and Caput Anguli, come both to one. Therefore, that like love, like special regard be had by us of that place, and of the vertue of that place (unity;) that it be fought and preserved carefully, that the sides slide not off; the well knitting vvhereof, is the very strength of the whole building.

By Bede, it is rendred, as a reason why the Jewish Builders refused our Saviour Christ, for the head place, Quia in uno pariete, stare amabant. They could endure no corner; they must stand alone, upon their own single vvall; be of themselves; not joyn with Gentile, or Samaritan. And Christ they endured not, because they thought, if he had been head, he vvould have enclined that vvay. Alius oves oportet me adducere: Alius, they could not abide. But sure, a purpose there must be alias oves adducendi, of bringing in others, of joyning a corner, or else vve do not facere secundum exemplar, build not according to Christ's pattern; our fashion of Fabrick, is not like His. They that think, to make Christ's head of a Single wall, are deceived, it vvill not be. They that say, so the head, all is vvell; it skills not for the corner; err too. He is γωνιῶν, a Corner stone first, and then κεφαλῶν, a head stone after. And they that had rather be a Front in a wall, than in a member place sub lapide Angulari; And they, that stand upon their own partition, and vvill not endure to hear of any joyning; care not what become of Angulus, if it were stricken out; the same mind is not in them, in neither of them, which was in Christ Jesus. His mind vve see. He looks to the Angle, as to the Heart; and to the head, as to the Angle. And they build best, that build likest him, Wisdom is justified of all her Children.

1. And last; the duty of the whole second part, and so, this dayes duty, is this. When the head-stone is brought forth, and reared (as to day it was) we are to prosecute it, with Hosanna, and Benedictus qui venit (as it straightway followeth in the Psalm) with acclamation of Grace, Grace unto it. For so (saith the Prophet) Lapis primarius would be laid with rejoicing. Rejoicing: as in his regard, that hath obtained his due: so, even in the Buildings, that hath got such a head: Such and so gracious, a head, as could endure thus to be refused by them; and yet admit, yea even those, that so refused him (if the fault be not in themselves) to be Stones in his Building, for all that: and to be members of the Body, whereof he is the Head.

2. Then secondly, as God hath: so we to make him head. Actually, we can not; he is made to our hands: but in account, we may: Giving him, the highest place in all our respects; Magnifying his Name, and his word; above all things: His Word; making it our chief ground: His Name, and the glory of it, making of it our chief end. That other considerations carry us not away, as these builders here it did, of Venient Romani, or I wot not what; but that ever (as the Heathen Lawyer said) it be Potior ratio, qua facit pro Religione, the best reason, that maketh best for Religion, and for the good of the body of this head (that is, the peace of his Church.) And this, for, Lapis erat Christus.

1. But, Lapis erat David, is likewise true. Therefore, that we do King David no wrong, let us shew how it fits him too: but briefly, because, this, is not his day. David was a stone. The Jews say, it was his Nick-name, or name of disgrace; that, in scorn they called him so. For that, all his credit (forsooth) came, by casting a stone, and hitting Goliath, by chance, right in the fore-head: and so, they thwitted him with that name. They gave it him, in scorn: but he bare it, in earnest. For sure, much sorrow he endured: had that property of a Stone. And nothing could remove him, or make him shrink, from his trust in God, or from his Allegiance to Saul his liege Lord: that quality also.

2. And refused he was: not as Christ, we must not look for that, neither in him, nor in any. God forbid, that any, ever should be so refused, as he. As Christ, none, but Christ. No: but yet, in his degree refused he was, though. A hard time he had, and many hard terms, and hard usages he endured for many years together; pursued, and followed, and should have been no head, nay, should have had no head, if he had been gotten.

3. Refused, and by whom? Even by Saul, all his life-time: and when Saul was dead, Abner refused him, and set up another against him. And when he was out of his country, in Gath, refused there too, by the Princes of Achis. And even at home, by his own brethren, and fathers house. Yea, Samuel himself, had given it away (the head-place) from him, to Eliab, and so refused him; but, for God. And these, went then, for the chief Builders in Israel, at that time. So, the Builders refused him.

4. But after all this, all this notwithstanding, this Stone became the head, (that is) David got the Crown, and was King at last. For [head] is the Kings name. So doth Samuel call the King, 1 Sam. 15. 17. So doth Ezay, chap. 7. 4. So doth Hosea, chap. 1. 11. But especially, so Daniel, in express terms, Tu es Caput aureum, speaking to the King, Thou art the head of Gold.

Head, and of the corner: that is (as some interpret it) of Juda and Israel. But, that is thought somewhat hard. For, those two, were not two Kingdoms, nor ever so reckoned, till Roboams time. And, what if David had not happened to have been first King of one Tribe, and after, of all; should he have lost this name then? Should he not have been Ἀκρογωνία? Shall no King be Caput Anguli, if he have but one entire Kingdom? Shall not Salomon, as well as David? No question but he shall.

The better part therefore think good, to give it that sense, which never fails in any State: and which sundry times you shall find pointed at by David himself, as in the a 115. before, and in the b 135. after: Yea, even here in this Psalm at the beginning, Domus Israel, and Domus Aaron, the House of Israel, and the House of Aaron; that is, the two estates, Civil and Ecclesiastical, which make the main Angle, in every Government. God himself hath severed them, and made these two; but to meet in one: Not one to maligne and consume the other. And the happy combining of these two, is the strength of the head, and the strength of the whole building. If it bear but upon one of them, it will certainly decay. It did so in Sauls time: He little regarded the Ark, and less the Priests. David saw Sauls error, and in his Psalm (where he singeth Ne perdas, to a Common-wealth) promiseth to have equal care of both pillars, and to uphold them both.

The first book of Chronicles, is sufficient to prove, and perswade any, he dealt in both, as chief over both. Not by right of Priest-hood, for none he had. And that, of his Prophecy, is as cold. Others also did the like, Asa, Jehosaphat, Ezekias, Josias, that were no Prophets, nor ever so accounted.

In the Law (it is Philo's note) both Tables met in the fifth Commandment (which is the Crown Commandment) as it were in an Angle; which Commandment, is placed (saith he) ἐν τῷ ᾠκλῷ, as it were in the middle, or confines of both tables; that of Religion, and this other of Justice Civil: That, with the right arm, the Prince may support that, and with the left, this: and so uphold both. And in the Gospel, Christ applyeth this very verse to himself, as heir of the Vineyard. Heir he was not, but as King, not as Priest: He could not; for, of that Tribe he was not born, but was called to it, as was Aaron.

Since then, here we find both, and that David was both, it is no error (I trust) to call a King, Caput Anguli; No more is it, to call him Lapidem primarium, or angularem, choose ye whether. The Persian (by the light of nature) called the King Abasheurosh (that is) Sovereign head. The Grecian (by the same light) called the King, Βασίλεως, that is, Βάσις καὶ ἄκρος the Base or Corner-stone of his people. Shall I add this? This word (Stone) which is here affirmed, of David, in this verse: is, in the New Testament, five several times, turned by the Syrian Translator, Cepha: a thrice in the three Gospels: once in the b Acts: and once in c Saint Peter. So that, he did not think it strange, to call King David Cephas.

building of the Temple. The thing, the duty it self, and the bounds of it, let us lay forth and agree of, 2 Zach. 4. 10.
as we can: but sure, the Name is not to be stood on; it cannot be denied him.

And now to our selves: to whom, as This is the day which the Lord hath made, touching Christ and his Resurrection; so is it, likewise, the day that he hath made, the second time, by making on it, his Majesty, head of this Kingdom, the very Name whereof, hath affinity, and carrieth an allusion to the term, 3. The third self.
Anguli, in the sound of it. Hh Majesty.

And, neither were Your Majesty, without your part of refusing, in a kind: but did participate, somewhat of it, with David, though in a less degree. Good, and firm, and sure, though your Right were, as any stone; yet allegations were studied, to subject it to question, yea, to refusing. For, did no body ever see a project drawn wherein some other stone was marked out, to have been caput Anguli? Yes; it is well known, Titles were raised, and set on foot, and Books written, to that end.

And, they took themselves for no mean Work-men, that were the devisers of them: that, both at home and abroad, contrived it another way: and plotted to have put You by, and to have some other Head stone, of their own hewing out, in your room.

Yea, to make your case, yet more like to Christ's case: even the High Priest, he that claimeth Caiapha's place, he and his crue, had their hands in it. We may no lesse truly, say to them, than Saint Peter said to Caiaphas; Quem vos, whom ye would have cast aside, if you might have had your wills. And to that end had your first Breves ready drawn, and sent abroad; and others, in a readiness, to second them.

Yet for all their Breves, and Bulls; this Stone is the Head, for all that. Pastur, made he is; and made by God. For à Domino, Gods doing it was, evidently; that after so much plotting, so many years together, at the very time, God bowed the hearts of so many thousands, as it had been the heart of one man, to agree in one; as that, all that foresaw it, thought it had not been possible; and all that saw it, confessed it admirable; and all men said, This hath God done: for they saw evidently, it was his work. Phil. 6. 9.

The Head, You were then made: And head, not of One Angle, as You were before (for Caput Anguli, I hold a King to be, though he have but one Kingdome) but Caput Trianguli, head now of Three, even of a whole Triangule. So, their titles were dashed, their plots disappointed, and all their devices as the potters clay. Yours it was of right, and God hath brought You to it. So, it is: and our eyes do see it, and our hearts do joy in it, and our tongues bless God for it; and here we are, this day, with all praise and thanks to acknowledg it, that so it is. It is a part of this dayes Duty, that so we should acknowledg it, and give him thanks for it, that brought it to pass. 4. Esay. 29. 16.

And, may I not further put you in mind, of another making yet? And it is not impertinent neither: to this day, especially. For, after the first making or placing, look, how many after-attempts are made, to unmake or displace the head-stone again; so many times, as it is heaved at, to that end, and those attempts defeated: so many new placings, so many new makings, are we to reckon of. David was made head, not only when Saul and Achish thought to put him down, and were put down themselves; which was, before he came to the Crown; but even after he had it, and had worn it long, when Absalom and Sheba refused him (being their head) and cryed, No part in David, and so, sought to put him besides the Throne. 2. 2 Sam. 10. 1.

And Builders there wanted not in that design: Absalom had Achishphel and Amasa, two as principal Master-builders as then were any. When God brought David back to his Seat again, and delivered him from them, that sought to remove him from it. He did as good as place him in it, anew. David himself saith so, before (at the 13 verse) He was shewly lifted up, and ready to turn over; but God stayed him, and set him right in his Seat again. And in very deed, the Verse next before (the XXI) where he saith, God had heard him, and was become his deliverer, makes the Writers to think, this Psalm was endited rather for this second, than for his first placing, 15. 30. 9. 30.

Now, a Second making we may well remember: and we cannot do it better, than upon this Day. This Day (as we shall see) hath an interest in it. That, since your sitting in the Seat of this Kingdome, some there were, Builders one would have taken them to be, if he had seen them with their tools in their hands, as if they had been to have laid some foundation; where their meaning was to undermine, and to cast down foundations and all: Yea, to have made a right Stone of You, and blown You up among the Stones You and Yours without any more ado.

And, Master-builders they had amongst them, (so they will needs be accounted) that encouraged their hearts, and strengthened their hands to the work. And that they might do, there was no Seal to hinder it: But disclose it, that, they might not, for fear of breaking a Seal: there was a Seal for that. And thus they did edificare ad Gehennam: edifie their followers to Hell-ward, to set them forward and send them to their own place. That Day, which God undid that wretched design, and brought their mischief upon their own heads, That Day, did God make You, Caput Trianguli, the second time. That Day, that he brought You back (if not from death it self, yet) from deaths door, from the very gates of destruction, That day was a very Easter day to You, though it were in November. And, οις η παρασχαλη, after a sort a very Resurrection; as very a resurrection, as Isaac's was, which the Apostle there speaketh of: That, the destroying Angel (I am sure) past over You, and so, it was truly the Feast of the Passover. Fit therefore to be remembered this Day, Hic est dies, This is the day of the Passover, This is Easter day, the day of the Resurrection. 2. A. 1. 29. 3. Heb. 11. 19.

But

But, to return to the first making of all. By the true course of the year, this month being the very month, this day being the very day, of that, of the first laying of the head stone: we are (as before in Christo Domino, so again here) in Christo Domini, to prosecute it with Dauids cry of Hosanna and Benedictus: and with Zacharies acclamation of Grace, Grace unto it, even to this head-stone. Grace, in his eyes that so made you: And again, Grace in their eyes and hearts to whom he so made you: But above all, the Grace of all Graces, that you may make him ever Your Anagorion; Your stone of chief trust, and Your mark of highest regard, in all your Counsels and purposes, that so made you: And, seek to reduce the disjuncta latera, the sides and wals flyen off, of this great building (for which the world it self was built) his Church, and reduce them into one Angle: The greatest service that can be done him, on earth.

And so: He that this day made You the head, so make You, and so keep You, long, and many dayes. He that refused them, that refused You (refused them, with reprobation) still may he so do, toties quoties, to their continual confusion: That, the head over the Triangle, and the Triangle under the head, may many years stand fast and flourish, in all peace, plenty, and prosperity, health, honour, and happiness. And, after all: He that hath crowned You here, with two Crowns, already; crown You also with the third, of Glory and Immortality, in his heavenly Kingdom.

I have now done. Only I would move one thing, and it shall well agree with that, hath been said of the Corner-stone: and it shall serve to further our duty of thanks; and be a good closing up of the whole. Many wayes, was Christ our blessed Saviour, a Corner-stone: among others, especially in this, saith S. Hierome: Quando agnum, cum pane conjunxit, finiens unum, inchoans alterum, utrumque perficiens in semetipso. One chief Corner-point of his, was: when he joyned the Lamb of the Passover, and the Bread of the Eucharist: ending the one, and beginning the other, recapitulating both Lamb and Bread into himself: making that Sacrament (by the very institution of it) to be, as it were, the very Corner-stone of both the Testaments.

No act then, more fit for this Feast (the Feast of the Passover) than that Act which is it self the passage over, from the Old Testament to the New. No way better to express our thanks, for this Corner stone, than by the holy Eucharist, which it self is the Corner-stone, of the Law, and the Gospel.

1. And there is in it, a perfect representation of the substance of this verse and the text set before our eyes. Wherein, two poor Elements of no great value in themselves, but that they might well be refused, are exalted by God, to the estate of a Divine mystery, even of the highest mystery in the Church of Christ.

2. And, a kind of resurrection there is in them, and therefore fit for the day of the Resurrection (as ever, in Christ's Church, Easter-day hath pleaded a special propertie in them.) Sown, as it were, in weakness and dishonour: and (after they be consecrated) rising again, in honour and power.

3. And that a great honour and power: not only to represent; but to exhibit that, it representeth: not to set before us, or remember us of; but even to serve us for a Corner-stone. First, uniting us to Christ the head, whereby we grow into one frame of building, into one body mystical, with him. And again, uniting us also as living stones, or lively members, omnes in id ipsum, one to another, and all together in one, by mutual love and charity. Qui comedit de hoc pane, & bibit de hoc Calice, manet in me, & ego in illo. He that eateth of this bread, and drinketh of this cup, abideth in me, and I in him. There is our Corner with Him. And again, Unum corpus omnes sumus, qui de uno pane participamus: All we, that partake of one bread, or cup, grow all, into one body Mystical. There is our Corner, either with other. By the same means, expressing our thanks for it; and by the same possessing our selves of it: Sealing up both wayes our duty to God for making Christ the Lord, our greatest and chiefest: and for making His Anointed this day, under Him, either in their several degrees, our Anagorion or our Chief, or Head Corner-stone. For which, together with all other his benefits, but especially, as the time calleth to us, for these two, [Christ rising] and [our Sovereigns raising to his Royal place] render we, as we are bound, to God the Father, &c.

Preached before the

KINGS MAJESTY

A T

WHITE-HALL,

On the Twelfth of April, being Easter-Day.An. Dom. 1612.

1 COR. Chap. V.

Expurgate vetus fermentum, &c.

Verf. 7. Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened: For, Christ our Paschever is sacrificed for us.

8. Therefore, let us keep the Feast, not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of maliciousness and wickedness; but, with the unleavened bread of Sincerity and Truth.

Here be two things, give themselves forth upon the very first view of this Text.

1. First, here is news, that we Christians, we also have our Paschever: 2. Then, that in memory of it, we are to keep a feast. Pascha Judaeorum, the Jews Paschever we find, in John, Chap. II. and XI. Pascha nostrum, Our Paschever, never till now. And indeed, to find a Paschever, in Saint Pauls Epistles, and his Epistle, not to the Hebrews, but to the Corinthians; their Paschever as well as his: For him to call, not his Countreymen the Jews at Jerusalem, but the Gentiles at Corinth, to keep such a Feast, is news indeed. But Pascha nostrum; the words be plain: One we have. Itaque, and therefore let us hold a feast, for it.

And truly, upon this word [Celebremus] may this Feast of our Easter seem to be founded. There, is not onely a Warrant, but an Order for the making it a feast. And sure, howsoever it will fall out with other feasts, this of Easter, if there were nothing else, but the Controversie that was about the time of keeping it, in the very prime of the Primitive Church, even immediately after the Apostles, it were enough to shew, it was then generally agreed of all, Such a Feast was to be kept. And the alledging on either side (one, S. Johns manner of keeping; the other, S. Peters) prove plainly, it is Apostolical (this feast;) and that the Apostles themselves kept it. Itaque celebremus, therefore let us keep it.

The Division.

The word Itaque, in the later Verse, is ever a note of a Conclusion : And where a Conclusion is, there is an Argument : And so is the Text. It standeth of an 1. Antecedent, and a 2. Consequent. 1. The Antecedent, in these words : Christ our Passeeover, &c. 2. The Consequent, in these : Itaque celebremus, &c. supply but this Maxime of reason and law ; If we have one, we are to hold one ; The Text will make up a compleat Argument : But, one we have ; therefore we are to hold it. Habendum & tenendum, as our Textures run.

I. In the Antecedent there rise these five points : 1. The main word Passeeover, what is meant by it : Pascha. 2. That we have one, in the word nostrum. 3. Who it is expressly : Christ. 4. Christ how, or when? not every way, nor at every time considered ; but, as, and when he was offered up ; Immolatus, offered up as a sacrifice. 5. And lastly, the word of our Interest, Propter nos, For us ; that so, we might pass over our sins, and be passed over by the punishment due to them.

II. In the Consequent, there arise two points : 1. There is an Itaque, to conclude us to keep this feast. 2. And there is a Non, and a Sed, to direct us how to keep it. The former binds us to Celebremus, to celebrate a feast ; or to Epulemur, to make a feast. Both are read ; and both well, for both are due. The latter, by Non in fermentis, sed in azymis (not so, but thus) teacheth us, how to hold it : How to keep a Passeeover ? but as a Passeeover should be kept. How was that ? not with leaven, but with sweet bread. And then he takes off the veil from Moses face, that under the legal types of Leaven, and Sweet bread, these Evangelical duties are expressed unto us : By leaven, is meant malice and lewdness : and so, we may not ; By sweet bread, is meant Sincerity and Truth : and so, we are (with them) to celebrate our feast.

So, in the Antecedent, there is the 1. Benefit, and the 2. Means : that is Christ's part. In the Consequent, 1. the Feast, and the 2. Duty : that is Ours. Indeed, to the word Passeeover, ye may reduce them all. 1. The Benefit : for it is a Passeeover ; even the passing over of the Destroyer. 2. The Means : that is Christ, by the Sacramental figure called the Passeeover, as the means of it. 3. The Feast : whether that we solemnize, or that we are invited to, either is a Passeeover. 4. And last, our Duty : for, that is also a kind of Passeeover, from Vetus fermentum, to Nova conspersio. So, 1. the Benefit, 2. the Means, 3. the Feast itself, and 4. the Duty of it, all are recapitulate, in this one word, Passeeover.

The Sum of all is ; that we perform the duty, that we so may partake of the benefit : all is but to conclude us ad hoc festum, ad hoc epulum, to the Feast and the feast of the feast ; that we pass not them over. This is all, that S. Paul (here) pleads for ; and all that we. Enough, to let you see the Text, in the feast ; and the feast, in the Text : in the Text, the paris and the order of them.

I. The Antecedent.

1. What is meant by Pascha.
* Exod. 12. 26.

Exod. 12. 29.

2. Our Passeeover.

What is it.

Psal. 84. 6.

Psal. 22. 20.

A poc. 16.

Pascha, a Passeeover. * Quanam est hac Religio (faith God) shall be our question ? What is the meaning of this observance, and what good is there in it ? For, every Feast is in remembrance of some benefit (ἡμεῖς, ἵνα ἡμῶν) Passing over is (of it self) a thing indifferent ; good or bad, thereafter as that is, which passeth over us, or we over it. For, if any good over-pas us, we lose by it ; but, if any danger, we are the better. Again, if we pass from better to worse, it is a detriment. But, if from a worse case or place, to a better, it is a benefit. And this is a benefit : for, here is a Feast holden for it. Then did some evil pass over us ; or we our selves pass over into some better estate.

The Law must be our line, to lead us along this Text ; the Character of it is legal. How was it there ? Evil passed them ; a destroying Angel, that slew the first born in every house through Egypt, but passed them over, and touched them not. And yet there was another : They passed out of Egypt, to the Land of promise, over the Red-sea. They passed it well : As for Pharaoh and his host, they perished, in it. Ye shall find both these thus set down together (Heb. XI. in the 28. verse) the Destroyer did pass over them : (In the 29. verse) they did pass over into Canaan. The Egyptians perished in both ; had no Passeeover : Gods people had.

But what is this to us ? Here is Pascha, but where is Nostrum ? We are not in Egypt, no fear of our first-born ; here is no destroying Angel : And we are far enough from the red sea. What then, if our case fall out to be like, if our danger as great : and so it will : Here we live, we call it a vale of misery ; in a world, whereof Egypt is but a corner, and was but a Type ; Nor their Pharaoh but a limb of the great Pharaoh, that tyrannizeth here in this world. 2. We have every one a soul ; it is not our first-born, it is more ; even Unicam meam (as the Psalmist calleth it) the first, and all that we have. 3. It skills not for the Angel ; Gods wrath is still ready to be revealed on our sins : from that cometh all destruction. The Angels do but carry the Vials of it. 4. And death will match the red-sea : all must through it, and some pass well, but the most part perish.

Now then for Nostrum. Our abode here is as dangerous, as theirs in Egypt : as many destroyers, yea, as many Crocodiles too ; and therefore we need a Pascha, to escape Gods wrath, to have it pass over us here.

And yet, there rests another besides, For, how well we shall do with that former, I know not ; but, to the latter we must all come, to death, to the Red-sea brink : and there, either perish, or pass well over, one of the twain. Sure Pascha nostrum is not more then needs ; Pascha nobis opus est, we need one (a Passeeover) no less then they.

Nay, I go further : Ours is such as theirs. Theirs is nihil ad nostrum, nothing to ours. For, what talk we of a delivery of one poor Nation ; and that, but from a bodily danger ; and but one neither ?

Call

Call ye that a Passé-over? How much more then, ours, the great, and general Passé-over, that freeth us? that freeth all mankind, from the total destruction both of body and soul; and that by an eternal delivery, both here and for ever? How to escape that, Gods wrath, ira ventura; that is the true Passé-over. And what mention we Canaan? Is there any comparison, between the two Kingdomes of Canaan, and Heaven, whither Christ shall make us pass? Indeed, Pascha nostrum is it: ours, and none but ours. Theirs, but a shadow; Ours, the substantial, very Passé-over indeed. When all is done; Pascha nostrum is it. March 3. 7.

Will ye give me leave, to present you with a meditation upon this point? it will fit the feast well, and serves us for a preparation to our Passé-over, and I will not fetch it far, but even from the word Passé-over. For, all the labour is, but to make us feel the want of it.

Est sapientis querela, transire generationem, aliam succedere, aliam quoque transire. It is that, the Apoc. Ecclef. 1. 4. file tells us, and we feel it, Mundus transit, that the World passes: Παροῦν (saith S. Paul), παροῦν (saith S. John), in the Active, and Passive both, the world passeth away. Et en Pascha, entransitus, a Chap. 7. 31. kind of Passé-over of the world it self, of this transitory world (as we term it) Ubi non habemus manentem, &c. where we cannot long have any abode. 1 Joh. 2. 17.

But then, if we look home to our selves, we shall find another Passé-over there; even that of the Psalm, 2. Cito transit & avolamus, we pass as a shadow, as a dream; when one awaketh; we bring our years to an end, 1 Sal. 90. 10. as it were a tale that is told. Cito transit, so soon passeth it, and we are gone. Saint James very excellently expresseth it: Τερχῆς, a very wheel of our nature whirling about: That the world passeth; but we, faster James 3. 6. then it.

But the third is the complaint indeed: that transitory though this world be, and we yet more transitory; yet we cannot pass it quietly for all that. But, some wipe we have of the Angels sword; at leastwise, in fear we live still, of those in the Psalm, Sagitta volans; or Terror nocturnus, or Incursus, or Demon meridianus; one of Egypt ten plagues: One of the Angels vials, or of the Horses, red, black, or pale, are still abroad; much adoe we have, without some mis-hap, to pass this life that passeth so fast. 3.

But lastly, say that we have the good hap, to scape well here; yet hence we must yet long; to the red-sea bank: we must come to death all; and death is not Meritus (a final end) but Transitus (a passage over to a new estate.) There, is the main peril, that we miscarry not; (great odds there is, for many do;) but pass well over into the land of promise. 4.

These four Passé-overs it will not be amiss to think of. And, in all these, need we not one, to help us well through, that these perils may well pass us over? Need we not one, that may make the red-sea passable for us, that we may well come to the land of the living?

And now then, tell me, what is the sum of all our desires? Is it not Bonum pascha? While we are here, the Destroyers may pass; and when we go hence, we may well get over? Is it not, Sic transire transitoria, ut transeundo perveniamus ad aeterna? So to pass these transitory things, that we may well come to those, that shall never pass? A good Passé-over is our wish; and against we shall need it, a good one God send us. Upon the point, if we weigh well, Salus ipsa nihil est, nisi Pascha. The benefit of all benefits (salvation it self) is comprised, in this word; is nothing but a Passé-over: As much, in one word, as the other, transire a malo, to be saved from evil; transire ad bonum, to be set safe in good: To these two may all be reduced. This is all we need, and all we seek. And this Parasceue (or preparation) will set us in hand to seek it, and make us say (with our Saviour) desiderio desideravi ut, &c. earnestly to desire, to Luke 22. 15. have our part in this Passé-over.

The next point; if we need one, and if we desire one, where shall we have one? Quis revolvat nobis hunc lapidem? Who will roll us away this stone? (saith the Women this day.) To our line again, the Law. 3. Who it is. How did they there in the Type? (for, so it must be; in the truth.) They had a means, that helped them through both, which (per Metonymiam causa) they called their Passé-over. And it was a Lamb. Mark 16. 3.

Have we so? yes: Ecce Agnus Dei (saith the Baptist, at the first sight.) But every Lamb will not serve; it must be a Paschal Lamb. Is Christ that Lamb? S. John puts it out of question: That which was said of the Paschal Lamb [ye shall not break a bone of him] he applies to Christ; and saith, in him the Scripture was fulfilled. Eodem tempore, illorum, & nostrum: adductus in Festo ipso. CHRIST the Lamb of GOD. John 1. 29. John 19. 36.

Then a Paschal Lamb, he is; and so in case, to be made a passé-over of. But, a Passé-over he is not, till he be offered. For (if ye mark it) offering is a passing over of that is offered, to him, we offer it to: 4. Christ offered in a sacrifice. Offered he must be. Et oblatus est (saith Esay) offered he was. Esay 53. 7.

Oblatus; so he may be, and yet alive: but the word is tridum, Immolatus; offered, and offered in sacrifice. A live Lamb is not it; it is a Lamb slain must be our Passé-over. And Christ is a Lamb slain (saith S. John) from the beginning, and the sprinkling of his blood in Baptism, maketh the Destroyer pass over us. Apoc. 5. 12. 13. 8.

There be many kinds of offerings: This determineth which of them Christ was. Such an one, as we must epulari; that is the Peace-offering. For, of the Peace-offering, the flesh was to be eaten: Part God had, and part the offerer eat; in sign of perfect peace and reconciliation between them. Christ's blood not onely in the Bason, for Baptism; but, in the Cup, for the other Sacrament. A Sacrifice; so, to be slain: A propitiatory Sacrifice; so, to be eaten. As a Peace offering. Levit. 7. 17.

Thus Christ is a Passé-over. But, where is nostrum, without which all this is nothing? Propter nos, for Propter nos, that maketh it ours. That which is for us offered, is ours: and we so reckon it. The Lamb was not slain, for it self: (Quid agnus committere?) but for the first-born: So Christ; not for himself (Nothing worthy death in him, witness Pilate;) but, for us. 5. Our Interest. Exod. 13. 15. Luke 23. 4. 14. 15.

To save us
fr. m. cur sins;

For us, that is, for our salvation, to save us : Save us, from what ? from cur sins. And here now, we are come to the point of the Passé-over indeed : the quitting us, and the manner of quitting us from our sins. All the business whereof was carried in the very manner of a Passé-over.

a. opul.

First, sin itself, what is it but a transgression, or passing over the lines and limits of our Duty, set us in the Law of God ? And why hovers the destroying Angel over us ? Why goeth he not on his way, but seeks to bring destruction upon our heads ? What is the mark, he striketh at ? What, but our sins ? But for them, no Destroyer should have power over us. But for them that hang so heavy on us, and so press us down, we should go thorow well enough.

2.
Joh. 1. 9.

Why then, Hic est omnis fructus, ut auferatur peccatum : All is but this, to have our sins taken away. And who shall take them away ? Ecce qui tollit peccata mundi ; that taketh away ours ; nay the sins of the world.

3.
2 Sam. 12. 13.
דָּוִד

How taketh away ? God hath taken away thy sin (saith Nathan to David :) the word is not abstulit, but transfudit (that is) transferendo abstulit ; or (as the Hebrew word is) transire fecit : to take it from David, make it pass from him upon some others ; (that is) even the Son of David, Him God hath given us, to pass our sins over, from us to him.

4.
Levit. 1. 4.
3.
13.

And when that ? when he was offered, made a sacrifice for us. It is the nature of every Sacrifice, transferendo auferre : He that offers it, lays his hand over the head of it, confesses his sins over it, and his just desert to be smitten by the Destroyer ; but prays, he may put this offering, in his own place, and what is due to him (that is death) may be transferred from him, and light on the offering ; that may serve, and he escape.

5.
Exod. 13. 15.

In all offerings thus it was : but in the Paschal Lamb specially : that it hath carried away the name from all the rest, to be called the Passé-over onely. In it (evidently) the death of the first-born was translated upon the poor Lamb. The Lamb died, the first-born was saved ; his death passed over unto the Lamb : that it was justly called the Passé-over ; for so it was.

But much more justly Christ : who (sure) was even a Passé-over throughout from the first to the last. At the first : his birth, what was it but a Passé-over, from the bosom of his Father, to the womb of his Mother, to take our nature ? And his Circumcision what, but a Passé-over, from the state of one free, to the condition of one bond, to undertake our debt ? And at the last, his Resurrection (this day) what was it, but a passage from death to life ? and his Ascension another, de mundo ad Patrem, from the world to his Father ? First and last, a Passé-over he was.

7.
Ely 53. 6.

But, above all, his death, his offering was it : then, he was Pascha pro nobis, indeed. For then, he passed over into the estate of us wretched sinners, laid off his own (as it were) and took upon him our person ; became tantum unus è nobis, nay tantum omnis nos. For, God took from us, and laid them on him, Posuit super Eum iniquitates omnium nostrorum. Laid upon him (our Passé-over) the transgressions of us all. Fecit peccatum, made him sin for us ; there, our sins passed from us ; fecit maledictum, made him a Curse for us ; there the punishment of our sins passed from us to him. Then, and there, passed the Destroyer over us.

Matt. 26. 39.

Over us, to him. But, when he came at him, he passed him not. Transat à me calix would not be heard ; and it was Pascha, non pascha ; a Passé-over to us, no passé-over to him. We had one : He had none. Him it passed not, but light upon him so heavy, that, it made a sweat of bloudy drops, pass from him ; yea, life and soul and all, yet it left him. At which his passion, he was a right Passé-over ; Christus pascha, Christus pascha. Then, he was pro nobis ; then, he was nostrum : Christ, Christ offered, offered for us. Of which passing our sins to him, and Gods wrath over us, this day, and the action of this day, is a memorial.

Luke 22. 44.

The Consequ.

And so let us pass over from the Antecedent, to the Consequent : which is, Itaque celebremus, Therefore let us keep a Feast. A Feast, and Christ slain, and so handled as he was ? A Feast rather, one would think. True : but that, we heard again of ours ; so did not they, of theirs. For, this, he came again safe ; and opened unto us a new passage, by his second Passé-over. All we spake of right now, was done the third day since : But we hold not our Feast, till this day. For, till this day, we knew not what was become of him. Passed he was hence ; but, whether in his passage he had miscarried or no, we knew not. But now, this day, by his Resurrection (we know) he is well passed over ; and so, omni modo, a true Passé-over. So now, we hold our Feast, as a feast should be holden, with joy. And a double Feast it is : 1. One, that by his suffering, he passed from life to death for our sins. 2. A second, that by his rising again this day, he passed from death to life for our justification. And so, two Passé-overs in one. He died, and by his death made the Destroyer passé over us : He rose again, and by it, made death (as the Red-sea) passable for us. Itaque celebremus, Itaque epulemur.

Rom 4. 25.

ἑορτάζομεν.
Celebremus.
Epulemur.

ἑορτάζομεν, the word is one, but two wayes it is turned. 1. Some read, Celebremus. 2. Some other, Epulemur. But well : for first, it is kindly, when we keep a feast, we make a feast. But this, this feast is not celebrated sine hoc epulo. If Christ be a propitiatory sacrifice, a Peace-offering, I see not how we can avoid, but the flesh of our peace-offering must be eaten in this feast by us, or else we evacuate the offering utterly, and lose the fruit of it : And was there a Passé-over heard of, and the Lamb not eaten ? Time was, when he was thought no good Christian, that thought, he might do one without the other. No Celebremus, without Epulemur in it.

1. Immolatus
mus.

But first, will ye lay the former and this together, immolatus and celebremus ; and see how it falleth out with us. Immolatus is his part, to be slain ; Celebremus is ours, to hold a feast : Good-Friday, his ; Easter-day, ours. His premisses, bitter ; our conclusion, joyfull : a loving partition, on his part ; an happy, on ours.

Again,

Again, will we lay immolatus to epulemur. That the Pass-over doth not conclude in the sacrifice, the taking away of sin only; (that is) in a pardon, and there an end: But, in a feast; which is a sign, not of forgiveness alone, but of perfect amity, full propitiation: Ye may propitius ire, draw near unto him; ye are restored to full grace and favour, to eat and drink at his Table.

Besides, there was an offering in Immolatus; and here is another (a new one) in Epulemur. Offered for us, there; offered to us, here: There, per modum victimæ; here, per modum epulæ. To make an offering of; To make a refreshing of. For us, in the Sacrifice: to us, in the Sacrament. This makes a perfect Pass-over. We read both in the Gospel, ἀγνὰ δύνει, to sacrifice the Pass-over; and ἀγνὰ παρῶν, to eat it. It was eaten (the Paschal Lamb) and it was a sacrifice: It cannot be denied, there is a flat Text for it Exod. 12. 27. both propounded here, in the terms of the Text: 1. The Sacrifice, in Immolatus: 2. The Supper, in Epulemur.

Celebremus, and Epulemur. There be, that refer Celebremus to the Day; Epulemur, to the Action: and so it may, well: Both Day, and Action have interest in this Text. And then, the Text is against them, that have never an Easter day in their Calendar. But the Fathers usually refer both to the Action. Their reason: Because (in truth) the Eucharist now, in the Gospel, is that, the Pass-over was, under the Law: The Antitype answering, to their Type of the Paschal Lamb. It is plain by the immediate passage of it from the one to the other: that, no sooner done, but this began. Look, how soon the Paschal Lamb eaten, presently the holy Eucharist instituted, to succeed in the place of it for ever. And yet more plain, that this very Scripture of my Text was thought so pertinent, and so proper to this Action, as it was alwayes said, or sung at it. And, I know no cause, but it might be so still. Two things Christ there gave us in charge: 1. ἀνάμνησις, Remembering, and 2. λήψις, Receiving: The same two, 3. Paul (but in other terms) 1. καταβολή, shewing forth, 2. κοινωνία, communicating. Of which, Remembering and Shewing forth refer to celebremus: Receiving and Communicating, to epulemur here.

The first, in remembrance of him, Christ: What of him? Mortem Domini, his death (saith Saint Paul :) to shew forth the Lords death. Remember him, that we will, and stay at home; think of him there: Nay, shew him forth ye must. That we will, by a Sermon of him: Nay, it must be Hoc facite. It is not mental thinking, or verbal speaking: there must be actually somewhat done, to celebrate this Memory. That done, to the holy symbols, that was done to him, to his body, and his blood, in the Pass-over: Break the one, pour out the other; to represent κλάσανον how his sacred body was broken; and ἐχυθάνον, how his precious blood was shed. And in Corpus fractum, and Sanguis fusus there is Immolatus. This is it, in the Eucharist, that answereth to the Sacrifice, in the Pass-over: The Memorial, to the Figure. To them it was: Hoc facite in mei præfigurationem, Do this in præfiguration of Me: To us it is, Do this, in commemoration of Me. To them, Præsumere; to us, Annunciare: there is the difference. By the same rule, that theirs was; by the same, may ours be termed a Sacrifice. In rigour of speech, neither of them: for (to speak after the exact manner of Divinity) there is but one onely sacrifice, veri nominis, properly so called: That is Christ's death. And that sacrifice but once actually performed, at his death: but ever before represented, in figure, from the beginning; and ever since repeated, in memory, to the worlds end. That onely absolute; all else relative to it, representative of it, operative by it. The Lamb, but once actually slain, in the fulness of time: but virtually, was from the beginning, is, and shall be, to the end of the world. That, the Center, in which their lines and ours, their types and our antitypes do meet. While yet this offering was not, the hope of it was kept alive, by the præfiguration of it, in theirs: And after it is past, the memory of it is still kept fresh in mind, by the commemoration of it, in ours. So it was the will of God; that so, there might be with them a continual fore-shewing, and with us a continual shewing forth the Lords death till he come again. Hence it is, that what names theirs carried, ours do the like, and the Fathers make no scruple at it; no more need we. The Apostle (in the X. Chapter) compareth this of ours, to the Immolata of the Heathen: And (to the Hebrews) Habemus aram, matcheth it with the Sacrifice of the Jews. And we know the rule of comparisons: They must be eiusdem generis.

Neither do we stay here, but proceed to the other [Epulemur]. For, there is another thing yet to be done, which doth present to us that, which Celebremus doth represent. From the Sacrament, is the applying the Sacrifice. The Sacrifice, in general, pro omnibus. The Sacrament in particular, to each several receiver, pro singulis. Wherein, that is offered to us; that, which is common to all, made proper to each one, while each taketh his part of it; and made proper by a communion, and union, like that of meat and drink, which is most nearly and inwardly made ours, and is inseparable for ever. There, Celebremus passeth with the representation: But here, Epulemur (as a nourishment) abideth with us still. In that we see; and in this we taste, how gracious the Lord is, and hath been to us. And so much for these two, as two means to partake the Benefit, and we to use them: and as Duties required of us, and we to perform them.

Will ye mark one thing more: That Epulemur doth here refer to Immolatus. To Christ, not every way considered, but as when he was offered. Christ's body that now is; True: but not Christ's body as now it is, but as then it was, when it was offered, rent, and slain, and sacrificed for us: Not as now he is glorified; for so, he is not, so he cannot be immolatus; For he is immortal, and impassible. But, as then he was, when he suffered death (that is) passible and mortal. Then, in his passible estate, did he institute this of ours, to be a memorial of his passible, and passio, both. And we are, in this action, not onely carried up to Christ (Sursum corda) but, we are also carried back, to Christ; as he was at the very instant, and in the very act of his offering. So, and no otherwise, doth this Text teach, So, and no otherwise do we represent him. By the incomprehensible power of his eternal Spirit, not he alone, but he, as at the very very act of his offering, is made present to us, and we incorporate into his death, and invested in the benefits, of it. If an Host could be turned into him now glorified as he is, it would not serve: Christ offered is it: Thither we must look. ^a To the Serpent lift up, thither we must repair, ^b even ad cadaver: we must loc facere, do that, is then done. Itaque e:

We bind to keep it.

Exod. 12. 19.

Now, all we have to do, is to shew what we think of this Itaque, whether it shall conclude us or no: and that we shew it by our practice; for, other answer, the Apostle will take none. If we play fast or loose with it on this fashion (as divers do) upon the matter as good to say, The Holy Ghost cannot tell, how to make an argument: Christ is offered, but no Itaque epulemur, for all that. Thus we will not say, for very shame. What then? will we dispensari contra Apostolum (which we blame as a foul abuse in the Pope? and yet, I cannot see, but every mean person takes upon him Papal authority, in this case;) and, as oft as we list, dispense with the Apostle and his Itaque; exempt our selves from his Conclusion: That we will not seem to do. No: it is not at Itaque: The truth is, it is at Non in fermento, we stick: we love our leaven so well (be it malice, or be it some other leaven as bad:) so well we love it, we will not part with it; we loath the Lamb, rather then the leaven shall out. But, in the mean time, there is no trifling with this conclusion; there is no dispensing with the Apostle: there is no wanton wilfull disabling our selves will serve. Itaque will not be so answered: Not, but with Epulemur. It layeth a necessity upon every one, to be a guest at this Feast. The Jews (we know) were held hard to their, upon a great pain, to have (not their names, but) their souls cut off from Gods people. And is it a less trespass for Christians to pass by this Pass-over? or hath the Church less band, to exact like care at our hands? No indeed: we must know, the Holy Ghost can tell how to infer: And that this Itaque of the Apostles is a binding conclusion. To the next point.

Direction how to keep it.

1. Non in fer-mento. Not with the old Leaven.
Exod. 12. 19.

Luke 22. 7.

1 Cor. 10. 11.

Absolutely, we are to keep this Feast: but not to keep it Quovis modo: No matter how; prepared, unprepared: in any garment, in any sort. No: this Non, and this Sed; Not on that manner, but this; shew plainly, every manner will not serve. What then is the Manner? not in old leaven. With the Pass-over he began, and he holds him to it still: that, if it be a Pass-over, reason would, it should be kept like a Pass-over, even in the same manner. Now, the Pass-over was not a loose lawless thing; to hold it in any fashion, it skilled not how. No: it had his laws. Even that, Hac est lex Paschalis, (ye shall read it, Exod. 12. 43.) This is the law of keeping it.

Indeed, divers laws it had in type, that concern us in truth: Among the rest this, for one, in the Text. The Lamb would not be eaten, with every kind of bread: Every paste was not for this Feast; not leavened, in any wise. Such an antipathie there was between leaven, and it, as it might not (I will not say, come to the board; but not) be endured in the house, all the Feast long, though it were neither tasted nor touched. If it were not thrown out; if any never so little of it remained in any corner, the Law was broken, the Feast illegitimate. To make it up then a perfect Pass-over; here is another yet (which I called our Pass-over duty:) the not staying still, in our old leaven; but passing over (as it were) to a new paste, a necessary condition for the right holding this Feast. For sweet bread was so proper to the Pass-over, as (Luke 22.) ye shall find, they be but two divers names, of one and the same thing.

Omnia in figuram illis (saith the Apostle) With them, all was in type: What is the spirit of this letter? What meant by leaven? The Apostle tells us, the old leaven of Aegypt, is our former vicious course of life, sowed with the leaven of the old Adam; and Nova Conspersio is newness of life. The time of offering the Lamb, is the time of calling out this. Meet, if we would have our sins pass from us, we should pass from them also, and throw their leaven out.

And well is Sin resembled to leaven. Leaven will grow noisome, if it be kept long: and sin, if it have lien long in us, or we in it, turns to a certain sourness, that we our selves feel an unpleasant savour or upbraiding of it, in our souls. Our Saviour felt it so (I am sure;) the Vinegar he took, shewed the relish of it. By which upbraiding, we find, we need an Expurgate for it, as it were a corrupt humour in our souls, that needed to be purged out.

Generally, all old leaven whatsoever, namely, two sorts of it, 1. κακία, and 2. πορνεία turned, Naughtiness and Malice. The words, in their own nature (as they properly signifie) 1. One noteth a lascivious lewdness, lightly ending in Lust. 2. The other, an unquiet working wickedness, that will take pains to do a shrewd turn, commonly the effect of Malice. The sins of Lust are well set out, in old corrupt leaven: for, so they end, most what in corruption, and rottenness. The sins of malice likewise. For, as leaven, it makes men swell one against another as if they would burst; and sour are the fruits of it, and unpleasant, as any leaven in the world.

These two to be cast out, as those that have a special antipathy with this Feast and Offering. For, no agreement between a foul life, and the Feast of an undefiled Lamb. Nor, no fellowship, between sin malice, and the feast of Sweet-bread. And these two are specially named, because they were the faults wherewith the Corinthians specially were leavened, to whom he writes. Incest (at the first Verse:) as (we know) Corinth heard evil for looseness: There is Nequitia. And again, swelling one against another (at the second) there is Malice.

Sed. etc.

As, to rid our selves of this leaven; so to furnish our selves (as with new paste) with the two leavenless virtues, Sincerity and Truth. Sincerity (that is) cleanness of life: (a word thought to be taken from Honey, which is then mel sinecra, when it is sine cera, unmingled, without Wax, or any baggage in it.) ἀλκμήναια, the Greek word is (properly) of uncounterfeit wares; such, as we may αἰνῶν or ἀλῶν, bring forth, and shew them in the Sun; as need not the false light of a close stop, to utter them.

But Truth, that, runs thorow all ; flat against all kind of leaven : if it have any manner leaven, true it is not ; and so, out it must.

Of leaven in the Gospel, I find three sorts intrepred to our hands, that we cannot mistake. Christ 1. willed his Disciples, to beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadduces. It is after said, He meant it of The leaven of their doctrin, that was full of corrupt leaven. 1. The Pharisees ; of the leaven of superstition, consisting in D. & inc.
Phylacteries, phrases, and observances, and little else. 2. The Sadduces ; of a leaven that smelt strong of Marko. 16. 6.
profaneness, in their liberty of propheysing, calling in question Angels, and Spirits, and the Resurrection it self, 3. And a third leaven Christ names, the leaven of Herod ; ware that too : Many times, it is the bane 12.
of true Religion, when Gods truth and worship must be moulded up with Jeroboams, and with Herods ends ; squared to them just, as is fittest to do their turns ; that Jeroboam may be safe. No superfluous Caveat : many times, this marreth all. Let all be abandoned ; Pharisees, Sadduces, Herods : and the truth take place. Mark 8. 15.

Now, as in that place, the Pharisees leaven is Doctrine : so, in another, I find, that Christ expounds it 2. hypocrisie : and that is merely opposite to truth, in meaning, speaking, and dealing. The Pharisee was a great dealer with this leaven. He had it on his face, to make him look sour ; men might take notice, when they fasted. He had it on his tongue ; Rabbi, O you teach the truth, you respect no mans person ; when they sought to cut his throat. He had it in his whole course ; all for shew ; to seem that, they were not : Gab- baiba, without ; and Golgotha, within. The leaven of life.
Luke 12. 1.
Matth. 6. 16.
Matth. 23. 7.
27.

But yet, even they, though they used it, they taught it not for a doctrine ; nor avowed not the lawfull use of it ; that one might speak the one half without, and the other half within : (as our Pharisees now do.)
Men, ye shall never have any sincere truth from them. Search them, they have still a piece of leaven in their bosome : speak so, and deal so, as if they would take the sentence by the end, and turn it clean against the Apostle ; to purge out all his sweet bread, all sincerity, and truth ; and hold their Passover in leaven, or not at all. Antichrists goat may be so eaten : The Lamb Christ cannot. To the Lambs nature (that is sincere), nothing so contrary, as this, to mean, speak, or deal unsincerely.

You see a leaven of Doctrine, and Life : (that is, the leaven of the Gospel.) A third there is (the leaven 3. of the Epistle) and that is of Corrupt company : and that is (in very deed) the leaven of this Text. For, The leaven of when the Apostle would have this leaven here purged, what means he ? To have the incestuous Corinthian removed, and cast out of the Fellowship of the Faithfull, by the Censures of the Church. True : but those not in every mans power. But, this is : To avoid, and shun them, and their company : so, we may ; and so, we are bound to cast them out. comp. y. corrupt in Life.

There is very great danger in persons so leavened ; great scandal, even to the well-disposed : but far greater danger, to the most ; that will soon take this leaven : Our nature is apt to take it ; it is easily fer- mented that way. As much good leaven, as will serve three pecks, so much evil will do more then serve three bushels, and never leave till it have ferwed them all. That, except this be looked to, all the rest will be to small purpose.

Now, when Saint Paul speaks of persons thus leavened, he means not onely such, as are lewd of life, In Religion.
tainted that way : but, even such also, as are unsound in matter of Religion, and have a sour savour that way. Here (to the Corinthians) he would have the incestuous person cast out, with his leavened life : But (to the Galatians, after) he prestheth the same point against another kind ; such as leavened the Gospel, with Moses ceremonies, and so corrupted the truth in Religion ; and them he would have cut off : both Gal. 5. 3. 4. & c.
Corinthian and Galatian leaven both must out. And mark, upon the same reason, both ; and in the very same words. That a little leaven doth not a little hurt ; but otherwhile, marreth the whole batch of bread.
Evil doctrine is against Truth : Evil life, against walking in the Truth : Evil company will bring us to Gal. 5. 9.
both. Therefore, away with them : but, away with this especially. If they will not purge out their le- aven, purge them out. And that especially, against this Feast, in the nature whereof, there is a contrariety to all leaven.

Now then, this is our conclusion : Come we must, and Itaque celebremus. This is our Caution : Thus we must come, Non in fermento, sed azymis. If we say ; it skills not, whither we come ; Itaque meets with us : If we say ; it skills not, how we come, Non in fermento meets with us too. It is with us here, as with the Prophet ; when we would heal one, the other breaketh forth. If we press Non in fermento, we lose Itaque Hof. 7. 1.
epulemur, they come not all : No Feast. If we urge Itaque epulemur, they come ; how ? leavened, and unleavened, all ; clap them down together. We need a Quomodo intrasti huc ? to keep some back : And yet, we need a Compelle intrare, to bring others in. But, the manner, but the caution, remember that. The main conclusion is, that we come. The other we must not leave undone : But, this (peremptorily) we Matth. 21. 12.
are bound to do. Luke 14. 23.

The Apostle binds us to do it : The time to do it, now. For, if this follow : Christ is offered, Therefore we are to come to His feast : This will follow as strongly, Christ is now offered, therefore let us now come.
Go by degrees : The Christian Passover (our Passover) a time it must have ; sometime it is to be kept.
We would do it, at that time, when it were best for us to do it. When best for us to do it, but at the time, he did it himself ? And that did he, even at this feast, now. Now then, at this feast, it is most kindly to do it : most like to please him, and to prosper with us.

And indeed, if at any time we will do it, Quando Pascha, nisi in Pascha, what time is the Passover so proper, as at the feast of the Passover ? Quando tempus epulandi, nisi quando tempus immolandi ? When the time of his receiving, as at the time of his offering ? Therefore they both, the feast and the Lamb, have one name ; to shew the near conjunction, that should be between them. When the day cometh, to remember

remember what was done on the day ; and so, what we to do, on that day. Pascha quod celebramus, to put us in mind, of Pascha quodepulamur. For, tell me, will the Sacrifice commemorative, or the Sacrament communicative ever fall more fit, then, when that was offered, which we are to commemorate, and to communicate withal ? Is not the fittest time of doing it, the time when it was done ? of Hoc facite, then, when Hoc factum est ? So that, without any more adoe, the season it self pleadeth for this effectually.

And now is the time of Expurgate, for our bodies : the corrupt humours, that leaven it, now we cast them out. And why not, now likewise, those that lie sowr in our souls ? And even Natures Passover, the general Passover is even at this time, both in heaven and earth. Above, in heaven : where, the Sun having past over all the Signs is come about, and renews his course, at the first Sign in the Zodiack. And beneath in earth, from the sharp time of Winter, and fermenting time of the earth, to the renewing sweet time, the time of the Spring, wherein there is nova conspersio, in Nature it self. And why should not the Passover of grace be now likewise in season, and have due concurrence with Nature ?

Sure, all agree well, if we but agree our selves. And if we agree, for our parts, to do the days duty : Christ will not be behind with his, the dayes benefit. But, during our time, and in the hour of death, be our true Passover ; shielding us from all deadly mishaps, while we here live ; and giving us a sure and safe passage at our end, even a passage to the last and great Passover of all ; the truth of that, whereof theirs was the shadow, and ours the image now. For, we have not yet done with our Lamb ; nor the work of this Passover is not yet fully accomplished.

There is is a further matter yet behind : for as this Feast looketh back, as a memorial of that, is already past and done for us : so doth it forward, and is to us a pledge of another, and a better yet to come, The Feast of the marriage of the Lamb here, that is our Passover : where, whosoever shall be a guest, the Angels pronounce him happy and blessed for ever.

That, is the last and great Feast indeed, when all Destroyers and all destructions shall cease and come to an end for evermore ; and we hear that joyfull voice, Transi in gaudium Domini ; Pass over into the joy of the Lord ; the joys of Heaven : Joys not mingled with any sowr leaven (as this worlds joy is) but pure and entire : nor transient (as that of this world) and ever flitting and forsaking us then soonest, when we think, we have best hold of them ; but permanent, and abiding still. A Passover, that will never be passed over, but last and continue a Feast to all Eternity. Of that, this here is a pledge, if we neglect it not, as if it were not worth the taking. And he, that at this time gave us this pledge, in his good time also bring us to the Passover, whereof this is the pledge, even to the never passing, but everlasting joys, and happiness, of his heavenly kingdom, through the offering of his blessed Son the very Paschal Lamb. To whom with, &c.

Preached before the

KINGS MAJESTY

AT

WHITE-HALL,

On the Eighteenth of April, being Easter-Day,An. Dom. 1613.

COL. Chap. III.

Igitur, si con-surrexistis Cum Christo, quæ sursum sunt quærite, ubi Christus est in dextera Dei sedens. :

Quæ sursum sunt sapite, non quæ super terram.

Ver. 1. If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God.

2. Set your affections (or minds) on things which are above ; and not on things which are on the earth.

He Wisdom of the Church hath so disposed of her Readings in these great Feasts ; as (lightly) the Gospel lets us know, what was done on the day, (done for us) and the Epistle, what is to be done by us. To instance in this present : Surrexit Dominus verè, The Lord is risen indeed (saith the Gospel :) In quo con-surrexistis & vos, and you are risen with Him (saith the Epistle.)

2. That which is in the Gospel, is Christ's Act, what he did : That which in the Epistle, our Agendum, what we to do.

3. Or rather, both ours : 1. what he did ; matter of faith : 2. what we to do, matter of duty, Our Agendum upon his Act.

¶ The common sort look to Easter-day, no further than Easter-day fare, and Easter-day apparel : and other use they have none of it. The true Christian enquireth further, what is the Agendum of the feast, what is the proper Act of Easter-day ? The Church hath hers ; and we have ours. Nothing more proper to a Christian than to keep time with Christ : to rise with him, this day, who this day did rise. That so it may be Easter-day with us, as it was with him : the same, that was the day of his, be also the day of our rising.

The Summe.

Thus then it lieth : Christ is risen ; And, if Christ, then we. If we so be, then we seek : and that we cannot, unless we set our minds. To set our minds then. On what ? One things above. Which above ? Not on earth (so is the Text) but, where Christ is. And why there ? Because, where He is, there are the things, we seek for, and here cannot find. There, He is sitting ; So, at rest : And, at the right hand ; so, in glory : Gods right hand, and so, for ever. These we seek ; rest, in eternal glory. These Christ hath found : and so shall we, if we make this our Agendum ; begin, this day, to set our minds ; to search after them.

Because it is to the Colossians, the Colossus, or capital point of all, is, To rise with Christ : That is the main point. And if you would do a right Easter-dayes work, do that. It is the way to entitle us to the true holding of the Feast, That so we may, these two Opera Paschalia are commended to us. Things above, 1. to make them our seach, 2. to fix our minds on them. These two we read, querite, sapite, in the Imperative : we may, in the Indicative, as well : Ζητῶτε is queritis, as well as querite ; and γευσῶτε sapitis, as well as sapite. If you read them imperative, thus : This ye are to do, to seek, to set your minds ; then be they in precepto, and per modum Officii, by way of precept, and in nature of a duty. If you read them indicative, thus : If you be risen, then you do seek, and set your minds ; then, they be in elencho, and per modum signi, by way of trial ; and in nature of a sign. Both well ; and a good use of both.

Heb. 1.

Acts 1. 11.

The Parts lye thus. Two things are supposed : Two other inferred : And a third Two, we are referred to, or given hope of. The Two supposed, these : 1. Christ is risen. 2. and we with Christ : If ye be risen with Christ. The Two inferred, these : If risen, then 1. to seek ; 2. then, to sit our minds above, on things there, where Christ is. The two he referreth to, or giveth hope of, Rise with him in glory. 1. Rest, to sit : 2. Glory, at the right hand. And God maketh up all (the perfect number of seven :) For, eternal is the rest, and eternal the Glory, that is at his right hand.

These we heard of at his Birth, in the Epistle then. This we hear of again at his Rising, or second Birth, from the grave, in the Epistle, now. This we shall hear of again at his Ascension too. This is remembered in all, as the fruit of all ; at every Feast, set before us, as our hope, and all we seek, To sit with Christ at the right hand of God.

I.
The two suppositions.

I
Christ: ris- g.

IF ye be risen. This seemeth prima facie to be but a single supposition : but being well looked into, resolves into two risings : 1. Christ's and 2. Ours : 1. He, and 2. We with him. Of which, the first (Christ's) doth immutabiliter supponere ; his ; needs no If. It is not, If Christ be : but If we, with Christ. For, Christ is certainly. Three hundred years the World opposed it : Thirteen hundred (ever since) the World hath supposed it. And so let us : and so pass to our own, and begin every year, to lay our grounds anew ; every Easter, to be teaching our rudiments over again.

There is an [If] that supposeth but mobilitis ; may be, or not be, thereafter as we seek, and our minds be set. But yet (if ye mark it) is not his supposed, by it self, and ours inferred upon his ; but ours supposed likewise : His, and ours (both) supposed under one ; under one and the same If. And as they are close linked, that one supposition serveth for them : so are they woven together that one Preposition (ὅτι) holdeth them : under one Si, and one ὅτι both. The Apostle hath framed a new word here, for the purpose [con-surrexistis.] The Resurrection, we have heard of : The con-surrection we are now to hear, and take notice of.

Our Rising.
1 Si vos,
If you.

To set our Suppose right, I ask two questions : 1. the one of these [If you :] 2. the other of these [If you be risen.] Si vos, if you : Why, doth the resurrection pertain but to some certain vos ? Is it not Si omnes ? concerns it not all ? As Christ died, so is he risen for all : and shall not all rise with him ? What do we then do with Si vos ? Yes, all rise with him out of their graves : but, not all rise to the right hand after mentioned. A great part rise, to stand on the left : not to sit on the right hand of God. With that, the Apostle here dealeth. The resurrection reacheth to all : This resurrection, to such only as Seek, and set their minds.

2 Si consurre-xistis, If you be risen.

The other, be risen (the tense) is that right ? For, (ever) when we hear of the Resurrection, we are carried straight, to that of the dead, from their graves, at the latter day. We conceive : Well, if he be risen we shall rise : shall, in the future tense. But here is newes of another, in the preter tense : (For, so it is : He risen, not shall rise ; be already, not shall hereafter.) It cannot be taken of that, which is to come : It should then be, Si consurgetis. But needs, of one present, or past : it is, Si consurrexistis.

2 Tim. 2. 18.

How then ? Fall we in with them, qui dicunt resurrectionem jam esse factam, that say the resurrection is already past ? Nor that neither. We are no Sadduces : Nor we are not of Hymenaeus's sect, neither. But, this we believe : as there is one to come, of the body, at the last and great resurrection, which he treats of, to the Corinthians : so is there also one, which we are to pass here, of the mind's ; which here he commendeth to the Colossians

1 Cor. 15.

And

And these two lead us directly to the two Resurrections, which Saint John (after) doth more expressly deliver, under the terms of first and second (Apoc. 20. 6.) And this vvithal, that all the good or evil, of that of the Corinthians, doth depend much upon the well or evil, passing, of this of the Colossians.

This we are to look after, to rise before; a resurrection now in being. This of ours imports us (we see) no less, than Christ's own (which, I vvish, vvell laid up in mind) since both are under one If, supposed alike, one no less than the other. Christ is risen, is not enough; nay, nothing at all, if that be all; if he be risen without us; he risen, and vve lye still: if with this dayes resurrection on his part, there be not also a con-surrection on ours.

Now then we are to look to our If; that it supposeth aright. And if he be risen, to cry to him, Trabe nos post Te, to draw us with him, and not leave us still in our graves of sin. He said of himself, that if once he were exalted, he would make his magnetical vertue to appear, and draw all to him. All, but not all at once: but (as the Apostle faith) each in his order. And that order is to begin with the soul first, and draw it. For, the soul being (as the very Philosophers have acknowledged (it is Aristotles own vvord) drawn from above) vvill the more easily be drawn to τὰ ἀνω things above. It is kindly, it is con-naturall for it, to draw thither-vvvard. And then after, in the second place, together vvith it self, to elevate and lift up the flesh thither vvith it. For (as well observeth Chrysostome) these two vvere not thus joyned (the Spirit, and the flesh, I mean) that the flesh should pull down the spirit to earth, but that the Spirit should exalt the flesh to heaven. And this subliming or lifting up the Spirit, is the rising vvith Christ, here in the Text. The other, in his time and turn, to follow. But, if this go not before, the other vvill not come after, take that for certain. This then to endeavour; and this day to set in hand with it. For, this is the main point, that vve find our selves risen vvith Christ; find it, or procure it: find it already, or procure it, as soon as may be.

Chap. 1. 3.
Joh. 12. 23.
1 Cor 15. 23.

Now, thus vve shall know, if vve be risen, and thus procure it, if vve be not: If vve seek, if we set our minds on things above: vvhich is the double inference, upon the former double suppose: vvhich I divide into the 1. Act, and the 2. Object. The 1. Act, Querere, and sapere: the 2. Object, que sursum.

II.
The double Inference.
3. If we seek.
4. If we set our minds, &c. on things above.

Of the two acts, one referreth to action: (Seeking, is a matter of endeavour. The other to the affection: (set your affection, or mind; it is both. There be two vvorks arguing the Spirit: 1. Motion, and 2. Sense. Motion, in the one, Seeking: Sense, in the other, so it is turned (Phil. 2. 5.) Idem sentite, let the same mind be in you. There is Motus lascius, in them that seek not: and Sensus lascius, in them that savour not. To these two reduce all: 1. Querenda sapere, 2. and Sapienda querere: To mind, vvhat vve are to seek; and to seek, vvhat vve mind. Of these two 1. joynly first: 2. then severally; and 3. last of their order.

Joynly: for, dis-joyned they may not be. One is little vvorth, vvithout the other. There be, that seek, and be very busie in it, and yet savour not the things that are of God. So sought a great Apostle once: and our Saviour did not let to tell him of it, & weyris (the very vvord here) thou savourest not. Men, that are possessed vvith false principles, and yet fall a seeking; zealous in their vvay, but vvant true knowledg, to fix their minds aright. Novv, vvithout knowledg, (saith Salomon truly) the mind is not good: and vve knowv, Mala mens, malus animus, the mind mis-led, vvill set the affections awry straight.

Y.
The two acts joynly. Seek and set your minds.
Mat. 16. 13.
Prov. 19. 2.

Will ye see them in kind? Look but to the end of the last Chapter before. There, they seek so, as they vvill neither taste, handle nor touch. So seek, as down they go to worship, not only God, but the Angels too. So seek, as spare not their own bodies, and yet vvrong all the vvhile; and yet vvith all their seeking, not risen vvith Christ, for all that. Why? For, querunt, non sapunt.

Cap. 2. 21.
Verse 18.
Verse 23.

On the other side: there be, that sapiunt, non querunt; that sapiunt qua Christi, querunt qua sua, Saviour Christ, but seek themselves. Of vvhom the Apostle (Phil. 2. 21.) they have knowledg competent, but vvithout so much as a spark of true endeavour: Pariter intelligent nobiscum (saith Augustine) pariter non diligunt; Underst and well enough, but coldly affected: So sit still, and seek not.

So that, both vvould be kept together; Querite, and Sapite both. For, as in the body natural, it fareth between the stomach and the head: (a rheumatic head spoiles the stomach with distillations; and a distempered stomach fills the head vvith raw vapours, and soon mars the other:) So it is here: our mind mistaking, mis-leads the affection: and a wrong set affection puts the mind out of frame. That, in sunder they vvould not be, but joyned ever. Sapere, vvithout querere, vvill not rise, but lye still; and querere, vvithout sapere, vvill rise, but lead you astray.

Novv severally. If we be risen, to move, and to seek: that is, to resolve, that wih sitting still vvithout seeking, vvhat we are here vvilled to seek, vvill not be had. We shall not tumble on it, or hit upon it unawares; there needs a seeking. If our Saviour knew the way well, it is hard to hit, and few there be that find it. The short: there goeth search and enquiry to it; pains; and diligence are requisite: we shall not come thither, vvith the turning of a gin. It were great folly (vvhen we see daily, things here beneath, vvithout travel, vvill not be come by) once to think, things above vvill drop into our laps, vvithout any seeking.

To seek then: but, to do it to purpose. For, that vvhich we call seeking, is nothing less. Those, to vvhom the Prophet Esay said (Chap. 21. 12.) Si quaritis, quarite, If ye will seek, why then seek; do it, in earnest;

2. The Acts
severally.
1. See.
Mat. 7. 14.

earnest ; it seems, they sought so slightly, so slenderly, as it deserved not the name of seeking. Pilate asked, Quid est veritas ? and then some other matter took him in the head, and so up he rose and went his way, before he had his answer : He deserved never to find what truth was. And such is our seeking most what ; seldom or never seriously : but some question, that comes cross our brain, for the present. Some Quid est veritas ? so sought, as if, that we sought were as good lost as found. Yet, this, we would fain have go for seeking : but it will not be. O si queritis querite (saith Esay ; look the place) The morning comes, so doth the night ; that is, our dayes, spend apace ; and we say, we will seek : If we will, let us once do it indeed : seek it, as they did, this day ; follow it hard, and make it our race, with the one ; our morning-work, with the other.

I. Set your minds. But, we shall never seek, as we should, unless we put to the other word, Set our minds on them. For, will a man ever kindly seek that he hath no mind to ? Never. The mind is all. Be it what it will, or whence it will, above or beneath, if we affect it not, we shall seek but faintly. That we may seek things above, as it is meet, we must prize them ; prize them, as a silver mine (saith Salomon :) as a treasure hid in a field (saith our Saviour) and go sell all, to compass them. Then shall we seek to some purpose.

Pro. 3. 14.
Mat. 13. 44.

But in the word querere there is more. There is (I told you) idem Sentire, the sense ; (He that seeks, should have as well eyes to discern, as feet to go about it : It is no business for a blind man, no more than for a lame, to seek :) And that is knowledge, which would be had too. To seek, we know not what, is but to err, and never find that we seek for. So querere then ; but, Sapere, to be wise in our seeking, to get us true directions ; else, for all our seeking, we may be so seek still.

Which querere is a word, the Apostle much useth, as being very significant, full, and forcible. Four things are in it : 1. To set the mind ; the mind, not the phantie : not to take up a phantie, and fall to seeking, as we see many now adayes ; no ground in the world, but their own conceits. Yet seek they will needs, and have all the world follow them, and have nothing to follow themselves, but their own folly. So as, being very idiots, they take themselves, for the only men ; And till they come into it, never was wise man in the world, that knew what to seek, or how.

2. It is then an act of the understanding (querere) but not of it alone : for then verum were enough. Yet the greatest part make no matter of it, but even verum. It is, as to set our mind, not our phantie ; so, our mind, not only to know it, but to mind it. It is Sentire, and Sapere ; And it is best seen in Sapere, which is not only to distinguish tastes ; but, in and with the sapere, to feel some delight, to have a sense of the sweetness withal, which will make us seek it again plus magis : and without it, our seeking will be but unfavoury.

3. So to savour it, as we hold querere, to be sapere, that, to seek, is our wisdom ; that we do not sapere, unless we do hoc sapere, Hec eris sapientia vestra (saith Moses) This shall be your wisdom, before God and man, and you to reckon of it : even this, to seek things above ; and to think, when ye are about that business, ye are about a point of high wisdom ; and that to performe it well, is the wisest action of our life.

Deut. 4. 6.

4. To hold it our wisdom : and (last) I ask what wisdom ? Not that, which doth contemplate, that is Copia ; but the active wisdom, for that is querere rerum agendarum. To shew that not only our Grounds, for Judgment ; but our Rules, for Action, are to be set thence. Thither to get us, thence to derive our reasons, why we do things, or leave them undone. Thus to cast with our selves : this, that now I am about, He that siteth on high, at Gods right hand, what will He say or think of it ? May I offer it to Him ? Will He allow of it ? Will He help me forward with it ? Will He, in the end reward me for it ? Yea, even our wisdom (as to the Philipians) is to be from thence, even the wisdom, that swayeth there, to be from above, de sursum. If it be not, S. James is somewhat homely with it.

3 The Order,
Querere. Fir.

I.
Mat. 6. 33.

By this time, we know, what it is to seek, and what to set our minds. But, in the marshalling these, there is somewhat, that querere is called on first. 1. To teach us, that it is the first thing, we are to have care of ; Christi primum querere makes querere, to be primum, to stand first. That we then do it the honour, to make it our first act, our rising with him ; at this feast, the, rising of the year ; and on this feast, in the morning, the rising of the day. For, then He rose.

2. It is first called on, because (to say truth) there is more need of diligence, in this business, than ought else. Always, we have more ado, to quicken the affection, than to enform the judgment : And that did they, this day, know : who sought, before they had light, while it was yet dark. So much did they know, diligence to import, in this business. The greatest defect is in that point : therefore it needs first to be urged. For, though we see, yet we sit still and seek not.

III.

The thing referred to, or the Object
Qua sursum.
Psal. 24. 6.

And now to the Object. Of seeking we shall soon agree : Generatio querentium we are all (saith the Psalms :) even a generation of searchers. Somewhat we are searching after still. Our wants, or our man's desires find us seeking-work enough, all our lives long. What then shall we seek, or where ?

He (saith the Apostle) that will thus bestow his pains, let it be, where ? Above. On what ? The things there : Qua sursum he repeats in both ; tells it us twice over : 1. Qua sursum querite ; qua sursum sapite. Above it must be.

Jacg 9. 15.

And, of this also, we shall not vary with him, but be easily enough entreated to it. We yield presently (in our sense) to seek to be above others, in favour, honour, place and power, and what not ? We keep the Text fully in this sense : we both seek, and set our whole minds upon this. Altum sapimus omnes ; all would be above, Bramble and all, and nothing is too high for us.

Mat. 20. 21.

It is true, here ; for on earth, there is a sursum above : there be high places, we would not have them taken away ; we would offer in them, and offer for them too, for a need. And, there is a right hand here too, and some sit at it ; and almost none, but thinks so well of himself, as why not he ? Our Saviour Christ, when when it was phansied, that he should have been a great King upon earth, there was sung straight, for his right-hand place. Not so much as Good-wife Zebedee's two sons (that smelt of the Fisher-boats) but, means was made for them, to sit there.

But, all this while, we are wide. For, where is all this? Here upon earth. All our above, is above one another, here; and is Ambitions above; and further it mounteth not. But, this is not the Apostles; not the above, nor the right hand, he meaneth. No: not Christs right hand upon earth: but, that right hand, he sits at, himself, in Heaven. The Apostle saw clearly, we would err this error: therefore, to take away (as he goes) all mistaking, he explains his above, two ways. 1. Privative: Non quia supra terram. Hear, you, not upon earth: His above, is not here, upon earth. This is, where not? 2. Then l'ositive: to clear it from all doubt, where; he points us to the place it self, above, there above, where Christ is (that is) not on earth: Earth is the place, whence he is risen. The Angels tell us, Non est hic; seek him not here now, but in the place, whither he is gone, there seek him; in heaven. Heaven is a great circle; where, in heaven? In the chiefeft place: there where God sits, and Christ at his right hand. That place seek: there set your minds.

So that, upon the matter, the fault he finds, the fault of our [above] is; it is, not above enough: It is too low, it is not so high, as it should be. It should be higher, above the hills; higher yet, above the clouds; higher yet, higher than our eye can carry, above the heavens. There now, we are right.

And indeed the very frame of our bodies (as the Heathen Poet well observed) giveth thither, upward: Celumque iuris Jussit, and bids us look thither. And, that way, should our soul make; it came from thence, and thither should it draw again: And we do but bow, and crook our souls, and make them Curva in terras anima, against their nature, when we hang yokes on them, and set them to seek nothing but here below.

And, if Nature would have us no Moles, Grace would have us Eagles, to mount, where the body is. And the Apostle goeth about to breed in us, a holy ambition; telling us, we are ad altiora geniti, born for higher matters than any here: therefore, not to be so base minded, as to admire them; but to seek after things above. For contrary to the Philosophers sentence, Qua supra nos nihil ad nos, things above they concern us not; he reverses that: Yes (and we so to hold) Ea maxime ad nos, they chiefly concern us.

Come to the last now. And why this place, above? I shall tell you: For, there is Christ, and Him we seek, to day, if it be, Easter day with us; and if we seek where he is, he is above, certainly. But he implyeth a further reason yet: Because, in very deed, there, with him, are the things which we, of all other, seek for; and when all is done, all our seeking is to them referred, as to the end. We would not ever travel, but after our laborious toying course here, find a place of rest, and this we seek. But not this alone: but a seat of glory withal. Sit we would; but in some eminent place; not, at the left foot, but at the right hand; in light, and honour, as much as might be.

We seek rest: Specially, they that are tossed in a tempest, how do they desire a good haven, a harbour of rest! And sure, here we dwell in Mesoch, meet with much disquietness. None but, sometime, hath sense of the verse in the Psalm: O that I had wings like a Dove! then would I fly and be at rest. And the more our incoherency is prolonged; the more we seek it, find it how we may.

And, it is not the bodies trouble so much, but invenietis requiem animabus, to find rest to our souls; that is it. And, the soul is from above; and but in her own place; never finds it. Turn thee to thy rest, O my soul, that is worth all. But, both are best: and not after all our turmoils here in this world, to hear non in-troibunt in requiem meam, in another world, but to be cast into that place, where there is no rest day nor night: but enter into His rest, which (in the Epistle to the Hebrews) he so much beats upon.

And verily, if we seek rest; glory we seek much more. For, for it, we are content to deprive our selves of all rest, vvhich otherwise vve love vvell enough. And a restless course vve enter into, and hold out in it, all our life long, and all to vvinit, though it be but a little before our death. For, no rest vwill satisfie, or give us full content, unless it be on the right hand.

These two then we seek for; vvhere are they to be found? Not in qua supra terram: Not here therefore: but folly to seek them here. We are by all means to avoid their error, that sought, this day, to seek the living among the dead; a thing where it is not to be had.

Never seek, to set up our rest here, in this tumultuous troublesome place, this a vale of Achor right (as Hosee; this b Exod; as S. James) a wheele ever wherling about, quarens requiem & non invenit eam. Where, we shall soon be diseased with a Surcite postquam sederitis, after we sit a little, quickly disquieted again. The Prophet Micah tels us plaine, Non habetis hic requiem, here we cannot have it, this is not our rest.

Nor never seek for true glory here? Why? Locust est pulicem, & culicum. Is is, the place of fleas and of gnats, this. In the garden, the place of our delight, we meet with worms; and there be Spiders, even in the Kings Palace. This place of worms and Spiders, call ye this the place of glory, in dust and cobwebs?

Say it be: yet such is the nature of these two (such as they be) the rest, and the glory here, as they divide it still: have ye one, ye must quit the other. They that are in glory, have not the quietest life: And they that are most at rest, farthest off from being glorious. Rest is here, a thing inglorious: and glory a thing restless. Thus it stands with us: Issachars condition like some; Rest is good, though it be between a pair of panniers: If that like us, we must live in this estate, the most obscure of all the Tribes. But, if we will have a name among the great ones of the earth, if it be glorious, then farewell rest: We must take our lot among them, that live not most at ease, certainly. For, here they meet not, but are in sunder still.

But

7. At the right hand of God.
Joh. 31. 22.

Acts 14. 18.

Psal. 115. 1.
Luk. 1. 14.

But say yet, we could make them meet; be at all ease, and in all glory together? seated, and seated at the right hand both. (Now come we to weigh the word Dei :) The right hand (here) super terram is not the right hand of God, but of a man which shall wither, and within a certain of years (as the Prophets term is) fall from the shoulder. And so this rest, and this right hand, we can have no hold of either. It is said in the Acts, After two years, Felix went his way, and another came Governour in his place. And then the places were changed; some were diseased: and so is the case of all felicity here.

Upon the point then. Rest, and glory we seek not barely: but, we seek them so as they may endure: and our wish is, if it might be, even for ever. And this may be had: but, it will be had at no right hand, but ad dexteram Dei; Gods only. Then, seek them there. Not here, where either we shall seek and not find them; or find one from the other; or, if both together, yet have no hold of them, but soon lose them again. Seek, where we may; nay, where we shall be sure to find them; where, both will be had; and both together, and good assurance of both, even to eternity, as, at Gods right hand, a right hand that withereth not. If ye seek rest, let it be in his holy hill; if glory, Gloria in excelsis, where Christ is already; Set, so at rest; at the right hand, so in glory; at Gods right hand, and so, in both, for ever. There they be, there seek, there set your minds.

To withdraw our selves, to sequester our minds from things here below, to think of him, and of the place where now he is, and the things, that will bring us thither.

The Application
to the time.

It is a prerogative, that a Christian hath: to make it Easter, any day in the year, by doing these duties on it. They come no day amiss. But, no day so fit, as this day, the very day of his rising. Then, of very congruity; we to rise also. For, no reason in the world, if he rise, that we should lie still. Nor is it good for us, that he should rise without us, and leave us behind in the grave of our sins still. But, when, he, then we too.

Mar. 16. 6.
Luk. 24. 6.

Rising is not so proper to the day, but the two signes, or two duties (call them which ye will) are as proper. For, this day was (indeed) a day of seeking. I know whom you seek, ye seek Jesus that was crucified (saith one Angel :) Why seek ye the living among the dead (saith another?) To rise, when he rose; to seek him, when he was sought. This day, he was sought by men, sought by women. Women, the three Maries; Men, the two Apostles. The women, at charges; the Apostles at pains. Early, by the one, earnestly, by the other. So, there was seeking of all hands.

Luk. 24. 13.

And they which sought not, vvent to Emaus, yet they set their minds on him; had him in mind, were talking of him by the way. So that, these do very fitly come into the Agendum of this day: Thus to seek, and set our minds. At least, not to lose him quite, that day, we should seek him; nor have our minds farther from him, that day, they should be most upon him.

To the Sacrament.
Joh. 6. 50.
Hib. 9. 12.

The Church, by her Office, or Agendum, doth her part, to help us herein, all she may. The things, we are villed to seek, she sets before us; the blessed Mysteries. For, these are from above: the bread that came down from heaven; the blood that hath been carried into the holy place. And I add, ubi Christus: For, ubi corpus, ubi sanguis, Christi, ibi Christus, I am sure. And truly, here, if there be any ubi Christus, there it is. On earth, we are never so neer him, nor he us, as then and there. There, in efficacia; and, when all is done, efficacie, that is it, must do us good; must raise us here, and raise us at the last day, to the right hand: and the local ubi, without it, of no value.

Luk. 24. 30 35

He was found in the breaking of bread: that bread she breaketh, that there we may find him. He was found by them, that had their minds on him: to that end, she will call to us, Sursum corda, lift up your hearts: which when we hear, it is but this Text iterated, Set your minds, have your hearts, where Christ is. We answer, We lift them up; and so (I trust) we do; but (I fear) we let them fall too soon again.

Hib. 6. 4.

Therefore (as before, so after) when we hear, Thou that sittest at the right hand of the Father; and when again, Glory to God on high, all is but to have this. But especially, where we may Semire and Sapere qua sursum, and gustare donum celeste, taste of the Heavenly gift (as in another place he speaketh:) see in the breaking, and taste in the receiving, how gracious he was and is; was, in suffering for us; is, in rising again for us too, and regenerating us thereby to a lively hope. And gracious, in offering to us, the means (by his Mysteries and grace with them) as will raise us also and set our minds where true rest, and glory are to be seen.

That so, at this last and great Easter, of all (the Resurrection-day) what we now seek, we may then find; where we now set our minds, our bodies may then be set; what we now but taste, we may then have the full fruition of: Even of his glorious God-head, in rest, and glory, joy and bliss, never to have an end.

Preached before the

KINGS MAJESTY

AT

WHITE-HALL,

On the four and Twentieth of Aprill, being Easter-Day.

An. Dom. 1614.

PHIL. Chap. II.

Ver. 8. He humbled Himself, made obedient, unto death, even the death of the Cross.

9. For this cause, bath God also highly exalted Him; and given Him a Name, above every name.

10. That at the Name of Jesus, every knee should bow, of those in Heaven, and in earth, and under the earth.

11. And that every Tongue should confess, that Jesus Christ is the Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

H Or this cause, God hath exalted him (saith the Text;) Him (that is) Christ. And, for this cause are we now here, to celebrate this exalting. Of which his exalting, this is the first day: and the Act of this day, the first step of it: even, his rising again from the dead. Hac est clarificatio Domini nostri Jesu Christi, qua ab Ejus resurrectione sumpsit exordium (saith S. Augustine upon this place:) This now, is the glorifying of our Lord Jesus Christ, which took his beginning, at his glorious resurrection.

This, is the summe and substance of this Text, set down by that learned Father. By him also, is it likewise divided to our hands: Into Humilitas Claritatis meritorium; and, Claritas humilitatis premium. Humility, the merit of glory (in the first verse of the four.) And glory, the reward of humility (in the other three.) Which two, here and ever, are so fast linked together, as, there is no parting them. I cannot, but touch; and I will, but touch the Merit (in the first verse:) It properly pertains, to another day. And so, come to Opus diei.

The matter of this exultation, is called here, his exaltation.

And is, of two sorts. By God (in the ninth verse:) And by us (in the two last.)

By God; And that, is double: Of his Person: Of his Name. Two Super's, either, one. Super exaltavit Ipsum, his Person; there is one (in the fore part of the ninth verse.) And Nomen super omne nomen, his name; there is the other (in the latter part of it.) And this is God's.

Then

The Summe.

The Division.

2. Then cometh ours. For God exalting it Himself; He will have us to do the like. And not to do it inwardly alone: but even outwardly to acknowledge it for such: And sets down precisely this acknowledgment, how, He will have it made by us. Namely, two ways: By the Knee: by the Tongue. The Knee, to bow to it (verse 10.) The Tongue, to confess it (Verse 11.) And both these, to be general; Every Knee, every Tongue. And not in gross, but deduced into three several ranks: All in Heaven, All in earth, All under the earth: which comprehends all (indeed) and leaves none out. This acknowledgment, thus, but only insinuated by the Knee, is by the Tongue more plainly expressed: And this it is, That Jesus Christ, is the Lord, Lord of all those three. This, to be done, and so done, as it redound all, to the glory of God the Father.

Verse 5.

But then last, take the Uise with us: that, since in Him, His humiliavit se-ipsam, ends in Superelevation Deus; His humbling Himself, in Gods Exalting; That the same mind be in us: And the same end shall come to us. As his end was, so ours shall be, in the glory of God the Father.

Propter quod, For this cause.

I.
Verse 8.

I.

Propter.

Ely 22. 15.

Ester. 3. 1.

Nemem 4. 1.

2.

Propter quod.

Humiliavit.

WE touch first upon this word. It is the Axis and Cardo, the very point, whereupon the whole Text turneth.

First, Propter; A cause there is. So God exalts ever, for a cause. Here, on earth, otherwise, there is an Exaltavit, without a Propter quod. Some, as Sobna, Haman, Sanballat, some times exalted; no man knows, wherefore. With God, there goeth ever; with men, there should go, a Propter quod, before Exaltavit.

For a cause: for what? for this cause. And this now, casts us back to the former verse, where it is set down, Humiliavit: There it is, for His Humility.

Now, of all causes, not for that: if we go by this world, which (as the Proverb is) was made for the presumptuous. Not for that virtue of all others. A virtue (before Christ thus graced it) so out of request, as the Philosophers (look into their Eshicks) you shall not so much as find the name of humility, in the least of all their virtues. Well, this cast virtue, of no reckoning, is here made the Propter quod, of Christ's exalting. As, Respexit humilitatem, the ground, of His Mothers Magnificat. And he, that by him brought light out of darkness, at the first: will by him, bring glory out of humility at last. Or this book deceiveth us. With God, it shall have the place of a Propter quod; how poor account soever, we make of it here.

Luke 1. 48.

2 Cor. 4. 6.

1 Ipse.

But, this Quod, is a Collective, there be in it more points than one. I will but point at them.

Humiliavit ipse, He humbled. (He) which many times is idle, but here, a circumstance of great weight. He: so great a Person; being in the form of God, and without any disparagement at all, equal to God (as he tells us a verse before) He humbled. Ubi, Majestatem pramissit; humilitatem illustraret: That discourse of His High Majesty, was but to set out, to give a lustre to His humility. For, for one of mean estate, to be humble, is no great praise: It were a fault, if he were not. But, In alto nihil altum sapere: For a King (as David) to say, I will yet be more humble: for the King of Kings, for Him, to shew this great humility; that is a proper quod indeed. Humiliavit ipse.

Verse 6.

2 Sam. 6. 22.

2 Se.

Exod. 10. 16.

Mat. 27. 32.

Then secondly, that Humiliavit Ipse se. Ipse se: and not alium ipsum; that he was not brought to it by any other, but of his own accord, He humbled Himself. There is a difference between humilis, and humiliatus. One may be humbled; and yet not humble. Pharaoh was humbled, brought down, by his ten plagues. Simeon of Cyrene, angariatus, to humble his neck under the Cross. This was, alium ipsum. But Ipse se, is the true humility. For then, it is laudabili voluntate, not miserabili necessitate: of a willing mind; and that is, commendable; not of force and constraint; for that is miserable. For this cause, that He humbled Himself.

3 Obediens.

2 Sam. 15. 5.

And thirdly, humiliavit ipse se (Obediens.) It was not Absolons humility, in shew and complement; and his heart full of pride, disobedience, yea rebellion. (And yet it is a glory for humility, that even proud men take a pride, to shrowd themselves in her mantle: that pride wears humilitatis livery.) But it is not humile contritio, but humile Obedience, that is the Propter quod. Till it come to that, many bear themselves in tears and shew, low, ad humum, even touch the ground. But come once thither, to obedience; then, give lawes they must, but obey none, make others obedient (and ye will) but not factus obediens, not made themselves so. Christ was so made. And for this cause.

4 Factus.

And something strange it is, why Humiliavit ipse se Obediens, would not serve and no more; but (factus) must be added. Somewhat there was, in that. An Obedience there is, that cometh from the dictamen of natural reason: in some things we so obey; we will do it, because our reason so moveth us. That is, Obediens naturalis. But, some other there be, wherein there is no other reason, to lead us to do it, but only this, that it is enjoined us by a lawfull Superiour, and therefore we do it, and for no other cause. This is Obediens factus; and that in true proper terms, is the right obedience indeed. All look to the former; and very few obey thus. But even so obeyed Christ, & erat subditus illis. And for this cause then, that he was factus Obediens.

Luke. 2. 51.

And

And Obediens factus : (usque) is fifth. For the very size, the extent of our obedience is a matter considerable. For, if we come to any, it is Agrippa's, In modico, in some petty small matter. Or Saul's, in the refuse of the spoils little worth. And, that obedience is little worth, that is so shrunk up. The drawing out, the usque of it, is all in all. How far obedient ? until what ? Usque quò ? Which very Extent, or usque, is many times as much worth as the Obedience it self. This also will come into the Propter quod.

Now many Usque's there be, in this, of his. 1. Usque naturam hominis, Thither. His very humanity had been humility enough. 2. Usque formam Servi, is more : How ? Even to wash the feet of thy servants (said Abigail, and took her self to be very humble in so saying) Thither he came too.

What say ye to usque mortem (the sixth point ?) Mortem ? that will stagger the best of us. We love Obedience in a whole skin : Usque any thing, rather than that. And (to say troth) no reason in the world, Obedience should come to that. Death is the wages of sin, of disobedience. Factus obediens ? What, and factus reus too ? Obedient, and yet put to death ? Heaven and earth should ring of it, if the case were ours. Well, even thither came his obedience : Et, ne perderet obedientiam, perdidit vitam. And rather than to lose his obedience, lost his life. This is indeed, a great Propter quod.

Enough now : For, death is ultima linea (we say.) Nay, there is yet an Antem more behind, to make it up full seven. For, One death is worse then another. And his, was Mortem autem, the worst death of all : the death of malefactors : and of the worst sort of malefactors, Mortem Crucis.

Nay ; if he must die, let him die, an honest, a fair death. Not so : nay, Mortem turpissimam (said they of it, that put him to it) the foulest death of all other : usque mortem, mortem autem Crucis.

Died, and, so died. Ever the (So) the manner is more then the thing it self, in all of Christ. To be born (So) to be born, usque presepe, to the Crutch : To die, nay (So) to die, usque Crucem, to the Cross. Usque naturam hominis ; usque formam servi ; usque mortem malefici. 1. So great a Person : 2. Thus to humble : 3. Humble his own self : 4. To be obedient : 5. To be made obedient : 6. Obedient with an usque, so far : 7. So far, as to death : 8. And to a death, so opprobrious : These extensives, and intensives put together, will (I trust) make up a perfect Propter quod. And this, for humilitas claritatis meritum (in the first verse.)

Now, for Claritas humilitatis premium (in the rest.) And, will ye observe how they answer one another ? For humiliavit there, here is exaltavit : For Ipse there ; Deus, God here : For Ipse se, Deus ipsum. He humbled himself ; God, exalted him. For humiliavit usque, there : here is exaltavit super : For, factus obediens there ; here factus Dominus. For mortem Crucis, the death of the Cross there : here, is the glory of God the Father.

This exalting, we reduced to two : 1. Of his Person ; 2. Of his Name. Of his Person, in super-exaltavit ipsum : Of his Name (in the rest of the verse.)

To begin with his personal exaltation. Super-exaltavit, is a de-compound. There is, Ex and Super (both) in it. His exalting hath an Ex, whence or out of what : His exalting hath a super, whither or whereunto.

Ex, from whence ? from the two very last words, Mortem Crucis. His raising to life opposed to Mortem, the sorrows of death. The giving of his Name ; to Crucis, the shame of the Cross. This days (Ex) was from death. His humiliavit had been ad humum, to the ground : Nay further, into the ground : Nay further yet, in carcerem, into the very lowest parts of it. His exaltavit then was from thence, from death : and not the gates of death (then, he was not in :) nor the jaws of death (then, he was not quite down :) out from inferiora, and interiora, the lowermost, and innermost rooms of death. From under the Stone, thence ; from the Dungeon, with Joseph ; From the bottom of the Den, with Daniel ; From the belly of the Whale, with Jonas : (All three, Types of him) There is his Ex.

Now then, whither ? From Death, to Life : from shame to glory : from a death of shame, to a life of glory. From the form of a servant, in factus obediens ; to the dignity of a Sovereign, in factus Dominus.

But will ye mark again ? For, Non sicut delictum, sic donum (saith he, elsewhere.) So here, not as his humbling, so was his exalting : but more. That, of his humbling, was dispatched in one verse. This, of his exalting, hath no less then three. So the amends is large, three to one.

But, that is not it I mean : but this Super, is not thither onely ; but above and beyond it. From death to life : Nay, Super, more then so : Not to Lazarus life, to die again, but to life immortal : Ut vitam habeat, & abundantius habeat : That abundantius is immortality. From shame to glory : onely that ? Nay, Super, to the glory of the Father, (that is) glory, that shall never fade, as all here shall. So downward, it was but usque, had his stint, so far, and no further : upward now, it is, Super, no stint, but higher and higher still.

This day is the feast of the first fruits. On it, he had no more, but the first fruits of his exalting. He was exalted, but with Jonah's exaltation onely, from the lower parts, to the upper parts of the earth. But we shall follow him higher, to the exaltation of Elias, Super, above the clouds : Nay, Super, above the Stars, above the Heavens, and the heavens of the heavens : till we have brought him, from de profundis, to in excelsis ; from the lowest parts of the earth, to the highest place in Heaven, even to the right hand of God. And higher, we cannot go.

Will ye observe yet once more, a kind of Omen or preface, of both these exaltings ; and that at the very time of his humiliation ? For, even that his humiliation was acted, after the manner of an exalting (though in a meer mockery.) For, to all their disgraces, they added this, of scorn : They lift him up, upon his cross, for all the world as the Philistines did Samson ; set him aloft, between the two pillars, to make sport at him. This was his exaltation. And they gave him a Name too, Pilatus title over his head : And bowed their knees ; and cried, Ave Rex, (a kind of Confession.)

This, as they performed it, was grande ludibrium; but as God turneth it, it was grande mysterium. For, to earnest, God turneth both. A kind of strife there seemed to be: the lower they, the higher God: the more odious they sought to make him, the more glorious God: He exalted his Person, in stead of the Cross, to his own high Throne of Majesty. And instead of Pilates title, gave him a Title of true honour, above all the Titles in the world.

And this, for Super-exaltavit ipsum: And so, I pass from the exalting of his Person (the amends for Mortem.) And come to the exalting of his Name, the amends for Crucis, (in the latter part of the same Verse.)

Acts 13. 33.

He gave Him a Name. For, without a Name, what is exalting? What is his Nativity, without an Epiphany? For, to those two, may these two here well be compared. His Resurrection is a very Nativity. To it doth S. Paul apply the Verse of the Psalm, Hodie genui te, Acts 13. And this Name giving, is as the Epiphany; to make it apparent and known to the world. And indeed, why are things exalted or lift up, but that they may be in view, and notice taken of them? So that, they which be exalted, seem not so to be, till their so being be made publick, and, there go a Name of it abroad in the world.

And sure, when men are so high, as higher they cannot be (as Kings) there is no other way to exalt them, left us, but this; to spread abroad, to dilate their names. Which every noble generous spirit had rather have, then any dignity; though never so high. For, being in their dignities, how far will they venture; even to jeopard dignity, life and all: and all, but to leave a glorious Name behind them? That, To give a Name, is even to exalt his very exaltation it self; and to make him, that is at the highest, higher yet.

Super omne no-
men.

A Name he gave him: what Name? not (inter) among the famous names on the earth; but (Super omne nomen) above them all. Here is, Super upon Super: another Super to his Name, no less then his Person. That, above all persons; and this, above all names whatsoever. And now, by this time, his exaltation is compleat, and not one (Super) to be added more.

This Name, is named in the Verse, and it is the Name of Jesus. Of the giving first, and then of the Super of it.

Of the giving, three doubts arise: 1. How given him, and others had it also? 2. How given now, and he had it before, even in the womb of his Mother? 3. How given him of grace, and yet he deserved it? Propter quod.

Matt. 1. 21.

How is this Name said to be given him, (as some special dignity) and others had it besides, and before him? Jesus the Worthy, the son of Nun: Jesus the High-Priest, the son of Josedek (to say nothing of Jesus, the son of Sirach.) They had it (it is true) but not given them by God, as He, by the mouth of the Angel, Gods Deputy. But they, by men, had men to their God-fathers. As now, we have a Sect or Society of Jesus: but they gave themselves the Name: God never gave it them. He gave it here, for humiliavit, a vertue they little regard: For he that doth but smell of it, is eo ipso, not meet to be of that Company. Other manner spirits, they.

Zac. 8. 25.

I have before this, told you, of four main differences, between this Jesus, and all others. This one now, shall serve for all. All those Jesus, and every one of them, had need of, and were glad, to lay hold of the skirts of this Jesus, to be saved by him: otherwise, they had been falsely so called; lost men all. And so, will be willing, to resign this Name to him: that he may bear it (at least) with a main difference from them all.

Heb. 5. 9.

But what tell ye us of it, now, after the Resurrection? do not we know it was given him, being yet in the womb? It was so; but, by a kind of anticipation. For, it never had the perfect verifying, the full Christendome (as they say) till this day. Not yet full three days since, they upbraided him with it: Jesus, a Saviour, A wise Saviour, and cannot save himself! For, he seemed to perish then, to loose his life in their fight: but, now, this day taking it again, he shewed, He did but lay it down, he lost it not: He was now Jesus indeed, able to save himself; and able to save all those that trust in him for their salvation. So, it was never in kind till now: but now, it was.

He did merit it.

1 Cor. 7. 9.

But, if he gave it him, and ixaelaio, gave it him, of grace: where is the merit then, the Propter quod we spake of, what is become of that? Safe enough, for all this. That, which is otherwise due, it may be so chearfully parted with, as if it were a frank and free gift indeed. The Apostle elsewhere, hath taught us to ioyne debita and benevolentia in one: They will stand together well enough.

In many things, we suffer slander by the Church of Rome: In this among many; as if we pinched at Christ's merit, and were loth, he should be allowed himself to merit ought, because of this ixaelaio that foundeth all upon grace. Wherein, it is well known, take the most that can be made of it; and we say no other thing, then do their own Schoolmen. It is not gratia adoptionis, this; the grace of adoption (as in us) that is here spoken of: It is gratia unionis, the grace of union. And that grace Christ had. For, seeing, in the humanity of Christ, there was not, there could not be, any possibility of merit, to deserve the uniting it self, or the being assumed into the God-head: to be so assumed, and so united, was that grace, we term, the grace of union. Other grace, we know none in Christ. But being once so united, there was in him, to deserve, and deserve again, and that amply. Propter quod, might then be truly said of him, every way.

Super omne.

Above all names.

1 Cor. 15. 27.

Esay 43. 11.

This, for the giving. But now, how is this Name, said to be above all names? what, above the Name of God? We may say, with the Apostle, When he saith, God did give it Him, it is manifest, He is excepted, that did give it Him. But we need not so say; for, this is one of Gods own Names. I am (saith he) and besides me, there is no Saviour.

How is it then given him? Acceptit ut homo, quod habebat ut Deus. What, as God, he had; as Man, he received: with his Nature, his Name; and the chief of all his Names, the Name of a Saviour. For, Above all, it is; Above all, to him; Above all, to us.

To him: for though many Titles of the Deity, sound; and seem, to be more glorious; Yet he esteems them all, not like this: Why? For no other reason, but that, they had not, nos homines, and nostram salutem, in them. No Name he sets by, like that, wherein, with his glory, is joyned, our safety. And this, of all, he made choice of (as to him, above all) that we might accordingly esteem of him, that esteems it above all, onely for our sakes.

But howsoever, to him: To us sure, above all. For no Name, do we hold by, No Name under heaven, Above all to us given us, whereby we may be saved, but it. To us more worth it is, then all: yea (I may say) then the very name of God. For, God in him reconciles the world; without him, is enemy to it, and to us: So, with this Name, there is comfort in the Name of God: without it, none at all. The Name (sure) which we have use of above all. For it is the Name, which in the depth of all our distress, by sin or by misery, we even adjure him by, ut rem nominis implent, that he make good his own Name; shew, he bears it not for nought, and so, save us: That he would never so remember our wretched sins, as that thereby to forget his own blessed Name: That Name specially, which he of all other most esteemeth: and so, of all other will least forget. To him then, and to us both; it is Nomen super omne nomen. And, so let it be, even Suprema lex, salus; and supremum nomen, Jesus. To save, the highest law: And the Name of a Saviour, the highest Name. Let it so be, let it ever stand highest; and let no name whatsoever, get above it. And so, I come to the tenth verse.

That at the Name of Jesus, &c.

Verse 10.

To give him such a Name, is one gift: To give him, that for such an one, it should be reputed and taken, is another; For, given it may be, on his part; and not acknowledged on ours. So that, this is a new degree. At the Name of

That God, though he have so exalted it, yet reckons it not exalted, unless we do our parts also, unless our exaltation come too. At which words, comes in our duty: the part that concerns us. Thus to esteem it Super omne nomen, above all: And in sign we so do, to declare as much. And therein, he leaves us not to our selves, but prescribes the very manner of our declaration, how he will have it: Namely, these two ways: The knee to bow to it; the tongue to confess it.

Now, these are outward acts, both. So then: first we are to set down this for a ground; that the exalting of the soul within, is not enough. More is required by him: more to be performed by us. He will not have the inward parts onely, and it skills not for the outward members, though we favour our Knees, and lock up our lips. No: Mental devotion will not serve: He will have, both corporal and vocal, to express it by.

Our body is to afford her part, to his glory: and the parts of our body: And namely, these two, the Knee, and the Tongue. Not onely the upper parts, the Tongue in our head: but even the nether also, the Knee, in our leg. The words be plain, I see not how we can avoid them.

For the Knee, two things: 1. He would have it bow. 2. He would have it bow to his Name. Bow, first: For, what better way, or more proper, then by our humility to exalt him, who for his humility was exalted? Or what way more fit, to express our humility by, then by this sign of humbleness? For a special way it is of exalting, or making a thing high, by falling down, and making our selves low before it. Then secondly, That God careth for our knees, will be served with them. Negatively; he will not have them bow to Baal. Positively; he will have them bow to himself. Will ye believe him, if he bind with an Oath? I have sworn (saith he) by my self that every knee shall bow to me, Esay 45.23. And will ye make God forsworn? And it cannot be said, this is Old Testament: For even in the New, Rom. 14.11, these very words are applied to Christ, as meant to be fulfilled in, and to him.

But, this here in the Text, is more strong: that, it is assigned him (this honour) as a part of his reward, for Mortem crucis. And shall we rob him, or take from him the reward of his Passion.

We begin our Liturgy every day, with the Psalm: (and we had it from the Primitive Church, they did begin theirs with the same) Wherein we invite our selves to it: Come, let us worship, and fall down, and kneel before the Lord our maker. Shall we ever say it, and never do it? Is not this to mock God.

* They in the Scripture, They in the * Primitive Church, did so, did bow. And verily, he will not have us worship him like Elephants, as if we had no joynts in our Knees; he will have more honour of men, then of the pillars in the Church. He will have us to bow the Knees: And let us bow them in Gods Name.

Ezekias, 2 Chro. 29.30. Propheta Daniel, Dan 6.10. Esdras, El 9.5. Mica, Mic. 6.6. Christus ipse, Luc. 22.41. Apostoli, Petrus, Act. 9.4. Paulus, Eph. 3.14. Jacobus, Hegeſio & lib. apud Hiero. Stephanus, Act. 7. 63. Ecclesia idque, Ipsa Pentecoste Act. 20.36.21.5. * Euseb. b. 15. c. 5. Tertul. contra Marc. lib. 3. cap. 18. & De Corona Mil. cap. 3. Athanas. in vita Anton. fere in fine. *Basil. apud Oecum. To bow the Knee, and to his Name, to bow it. For, this is another prerogative. He is exalted, to whose Person Knees do bow: but he, to whose Name onely, much more. But the cause is here otherwise. For, his Person is taken up out of our sight: all we can do, will not reach unto it. But, his Name, he hath left behind to us, that we may shew by our reverence and respect to it, how much we esteem him; how true the Psalm shall be, Holy and reverend is his Name.

But if we have much ado, to get it bow at all: much more shall we have, to get it done to his Name.

1. There be, that do it not.

2. What speak I of not doing it? There be, that, not onely forbear to do it themselves, but put themselves to an evil occupation, to find faults where none is, and cast scruples into mens minds, by no means to do it

3. Not to do it at his Name? Nay, at the holy Mysteries themselves, not to do it: Where, his Name is (I am sure) and more then his Name, even the body and blood of our Lord Jesus Christ: And those, not without his soul: Nor that, without his Deitie: Nor all these, without inestimable high benefits of grace, attending on them. And yet they, that would be glad and fain, a Pardon for this life, or some other Patent, with all humility to receive upon their knees: This, so great, so high, so heavenly a Gift, they strain, and make dangerous, to bow their Knees to receive it: as if it were scarce worth so much. But, it hath ever been the manner in Christ's Church, whether we ^a offer to him, ^b or receive ought offered from him, in this wise to do it.

But, to keep us to the Name: This is sure, the words themselves are so plain, as they are able to convince any mans conscience: And there is no Writer (not of the Ancient) on this place, that I can find ^c (save he, that turned all into Allegories) but literally understands it, and likes well enough we should actually perform it.

Yet will ye see, what subtilties are taken up, to shift this duty?

All Knees are called for, and all have not Knees. Here are three ranks reckoned: and two of them have none. What is that to us? we have: To us, it is properly spoken, and we to look to it. And if this were ought, that the spirits in Heaven and Hell have no bodies, and so no Knees: Why, they have no Tongues neither properly, and then by the same rule, take away confessing too, and so do neither.

The Name of JESUS.

Esa. 43. 11.

But the Apostle, that in another place, gives the Angels tongues, (with the tongues of Men and Angels;) might as well in this place give them Knees: they have one, as much as the other. And in both places manum dicit, he speaks to us, after the manner of men: that we by our own language, might conceive, what they do. For sure it is, the spirits of both kinds, as they do yield reverence, so they have their ways, and means, to express it, by somewhat, ὑποκύνει, to the Knee. They do it, their way: we to do it, ours. And this is ours: let us look to our own then, and not busie our brains about theirs. But for us, and for our sakes they are divers times expressed in the Revelation, even doing thus, falling down before him.

Secondly, why to this Name, more then to the Name of Christ? There want not reasons why.

Christ is not, cannot be, the Name of God: God cannot be anointed. But, Jesus is the Name of God, and the chief Name of God (as we have heard.)

The name Christ, is communicated, by him to others, namely to Princes: So is not Jesus: that is proper. Ego sum, & praece me non est alius. And ever that which is proper, is above that which is holden in common.

Christ is anointed, to what end? to be our Saviour. That is the end then. And ever, the end is above the means: ever the name of health, above the name of any medicine.

But, when we find expressly in the verse, this Name is exalted above all names, and this act, limited, to it, in direct words; and so, this Name above them, in this very peculiar: Why seek we any further?

Thirdly, What? to the two syllables, or to the sound of them? What needs this? Who speaks of sound or syllables? The Text saith, do it to the Name. The name is not the sound, but the sense. The caution is easie then: Do it to the sense; have mind on him that is named, and do his Name the honour, and spare not.

4.

Fourthly, But it cannot be denied, but there hath superstition been used in it. Suppose there hath. And almost, in what not? In hearing of Sermons now, is there not superstition in a great many? What shall we do then? Lay them down? Abandon hearing as we do Kneeling? I trow, not: but remove the superstition, and retain them still; do but even so here, and all is at an end.

2 R. 8. 28. 4.

Indeed, if it were a taken-up worship, or some humane injunction; it might perhaps, be drawn with in the case of the brazen Serpent. But being thus directly set down by God himself; in us, there may be superstition; in it, there can be none. And, if it be in us, we are to mend our selves, but not to stir the act, which is of God's own prescribing. It was never heard in Divinity, that ever superstition could abolish a duty of the Text.

That we set our selves to drive away superstition, it is well: But it will be well too, that we so drive it away, as we drive not all reverend regard and decency away with it also. And are we not well toward it? We have driven it from our head; for we keep on, of all hands: And from our Knees; for, Kneel we may not: we use not (I am sure.) Sure, heed would be taken, that by taking heed we prove not superstitious, we slip not into the other extreme, before we be aware: Which, of the two extremes, Religion worse indureth; as more opposite unto it. For, believe this, as it may be superstitiously used, so it may irreligiously be neglected also.

Look to the Text then, and let no man perswade you, but that God requireth a reverent carriage, even of the body it self: And namely, this service of the Knee; and that, to his Sons Name. Ye shall not displease him by it, fear not: Fear this rather, for the Knee, if it will not bow; that it shall be stricken with somewhat, that it shall not be able to bow. And for the Name, that they that will do no honour to it; when time of need comes, shall receive no comfort by it. And so I leave this point.

The tongue.
Psal. 30. 12.
57. 8.

For, the Knee is not all: He further requires somewhat, from the Tongue. And, reason: That member of all other, the Psalmist calls our glory: a peculiar, we have more then beasts: They will be taught to bow, and bend their joynts: We have Tongues besides, to do something more then they. And indeed, the Knee is but a dumb acknowledgment; doth but signifie implicite: but a vocal confession, that doth utter our mind plainly. And so, is looked for, at our hands.

To confesse.

This he calls, ἑξομολόγησις. Three things are in it: First, λέγει: speak we must, say somewhat. And secondly, secondly, quæ; do it together; not some speak, and some sit mute. And thirdly, et speak out, not whispering, or between the teeth; but clearly and audibly. And this is ἑταυλόγησις. And it was the praise of the Primitive Church, this, that joyntly they did it, and aloud; that their Amen (as S. Hierome saith) was like a clap of thunder; and their Alleluja as the roaring of the Sea: And no praise it is to us; who, as our joynts are stiff to bow, so our voices are hoarse to confess. We can neither see the former, nor scarce hear the latter; as if (there being but two duties in the Text) we meant to suppress them both.

The Knee, and the Tongue: Why the Knee first? why begins he there? They be marshalled right. For, having by our Knee bowed, put our selves in mind of due regard of him in fear and reverence; we are then the fitter to speak of him, and to him, with that respect is meet: And, not be so homely with him, as in their gesture and speech both, some are: as if they were hail fellow, even familiar with God. And all (forsooth) as they call it, to cast out the spirit of bondage. From a heart possessed with the humble fear of God, from such an heart, Confession is ever most kindly: Faith being as the heart; and fear being as the lungs; (so the Fathers compare them:) It will get an heat, and an over-heat (our faith;) if by fear, as cool air, it be not tempered: But, faith and fear together, make the blessed mixture.

The Tongue, and every Tongue: as the Knee, and every Knee: they to bow all, and these all to confess. Every Knee. But for all that, not all alike. They, in heaven, cast down their crowns, and fall down themselves of their own accord: And confess him, singing, as at his birth, and in the Revelation divers times. They under the earth do it too, but not ultrò, are thrown down, and even made his foot-stool. So; down they go, though sore against their wills: And confess him too, though roaring, and as it were upon the rack. They, on Earth (as in the midst) partake of both. The better sort, with the Angels, get them to their Knees gladly; and cheerfully confess him: The rest (as Infidels, and some Christians little better) are forced to fall backward, and made in the end to cry, Vicisti Galilee, though they gnaw their tongues when they have done.

So, we see our lot: One way, or other, we shall come to it, all: if not now, in die illo: Which is the reason, that Rom. 14. 11. the Apostle applieth this place in Esay, to Christ sitting in Judgement, at the latter day. Exalted, he shall be, with our good wills, or whether we will or no. Either fall on our Knees now; or be cast flat on our faces then: Either confess him tamand, with Saints and Angels; or ululan- do, with Devils and damned spirits. For, the Father will be glorified in the Son, by the glorious Confession, of them that yield; or the glorious confusion, of them that stand out.

The Tongue, and every Tongue: that is, every Speech, Dialect, Idiom, Language, in the world, stand charged with this Confession. Omnis spiritus, every spirit to give breath; and Omnis Lingua, every Tongue to be as a Trumpet, to sound it forth. And, where are they then, that deny any Tongue the faculty here granted; Or bar any of them the duty here enjoined? That lock up the publick Confession (the chief of all other) in some one Tongue or two, and send forth their Supersedeas to all the rest? No, his Title here, hath more Tongues than Pilate's on the Cross: That had but three; this, hath every Tongue, what, where, whosoever, none except. A Prælude whereof was in the Tongues sent from Heaven, whereby every Nation under Heaven, heard, each in their own Tongue spoken, Magnalia Dei, the glad tidings of the Gospel. Acts 1. 6.

But, though thus many Tongues, yet one Confession, even this, that Jesus Christ is the Lord. And a blessed Confession is it (this) that Jesus (that is) a Saviour, that He, that such a one is the Lord: that not a fleece, or a flayer, but a Saviour, hath the place. 2. That Christ (that is) one which saveth and cureth, unctione, non punctione, with anointing, not with searing or pricking, that we acknowledge Him to be the Lord. Lord: before, by that he is Son: And now Lord again, by vertue of his Propter quod.

Lord, whereof? Nay not qualified, of such a Place, Barony, County, Seignior; but Lord in abstracto. But, if we will qualifie him, we may. Lord of these three ranks of Confessours (here in the Verse) and of those three places and Regions, that contain them: 1. Lord of Heaven, he gave the Keys of it: 2. Lord of Earth; He hath the Key of David (and, if of his, of every Kingdome else): 3. Lord of Hell; for, lo, the Keys of Hell and of Death, Apos. 1. 18. Of Death, to unlock the grave: of Hell, to lock up the old Dragon, and his crew, into the bottomless pit. A great Lord: For, whither shall one go, to get out of his Dominion. Math. 16. 19. Revel. 3. 7. Revel. 20. 3.

Well, if it be but to confess this, that is no great matter, we will not stick with him; who cannot say, Jesus Christ is the Lord? That can no man (saith the Apostle) say it, as it should be said, but by the Holy Ghost. For, confessing Him Lord, we confess more things by him, then one. For, two things go to it. 1. S. Peter gives us one: 2. S. Paul, the other. 1. Domine salva, pereo, saith S. Peter. Save Lord, I sink: A Lord to save. 2. Domine quid me vis facere? saith S. Paul. Lord, what service wouldest thou I should do? A Lord to serve. 1 Cor. 12. 3. Math. 14. 30. Acts 9. 6.

S. Peters, we like well; to succour and save us, when we are in any danger: He shall hear of us then. But S. Paul's Quid me vis facere? when it comes to that, then our confession fumbles, and sticks in our teeth: Nay, then, Quis est Dominus noster? we have no Lord (we) then. So, we play fast and loose with our confession; fast, at succour, loose at service; in, at one, out, at the other. Psalm 124.

But what speak I of doing his will? when, if he do not ours, in each respect; if we have not this or that when we would, we fall from confessing, and fall to murmuring. And it fareth with us, not as if He were Lord, and we to do his will: but as if, we (indeed) were the Lords, and he to do ours: As if there were nothing between us and him, but he to do our turns, and then Tu autem Domine, his Lordship were expired, and at an end.

Upon the point, thus it is: we confess it, the wrong way; the Lord to be Jesus; but not Jesus to be the Lord. O Lord be Jesus: but not, O Jesus be Lord. O Lord be Jesus, to save us: but not, O Jesus be Lord, to command us. So that, all our humiliavit still, is without factus obediens.

Ye see then; it is worth the while; to confess this; as it should be confessed. In this wise none can do it, but but by the Holy Ghost. Otherwise, for an Ore tenus onely, our own ghost will serve well enough. But that, is not it. Quid me vis facere? is it, that makes the Lord. He tells us so himself, and with a kind of admiration, that any should think otherwise: How call ye me Lord (saith he) and do not as I will you? As much to say, is, It is to no purpose, though you say Domine, Domine, double it, and treble it too, it will go for no confession, if a factis negant come in the neck of it: if S. Pauls Quid me vis facere be left out?

And this, is yet more plain, by the last words of all. Namely, that this confession is so to be made, as it redound to the glory of God the Father. Whose great glory, it is, that his Son is Lord of such servants, That men shall say, See what servants he hath! how full of reverence to his Name! how free, how forward to do his will! Herein is his Name much magnified. As on the other side, it must needs be evil spoken of, and that among the very Heathen, when, not a Knee, got to bow; when this syllable (Lord) comes out of our mouth, but no Quid me vis facere? to follow it. When they see, how unservice-like, our service is; how rude our behaviour toward him, and his Name, whom we term Lord (indeed) but use him nothing so. But, come hither into his presence, and carry our selves here, for all the world, as the fellow did before Augustus, of whom, Mecenas well said: Hic homo erubescit timere Casarem, And so we, as if we were ashamed, to seem to bear any reverence to all, to him, or his Name. It would not be thus, I am privie, there is no one thing, doth more alien those, that of a simple mind refuse the Church, then this; that they see so unseemly behaviour, so small reverence shewed this way. But sure, the Apostle tells us, our carriage there should be such, so decent, as if a stranger, or unbeliever should come into our assemblies, the very reverence he there seeth, should make him fall down, and say, Verily God is among us; to see us so respectfully bear our selves, in the manner of our worship.

This Confession that Jesus is the Lord, is to be, to the glory of God the Father: So we take it one way. Or, this Confession is to be, that Jesus is the Lord to the glory of God the Father: so another way. And both well. To confess: that He is the Lord, that all his Lordship is, not to his own glory; but to his Fathers. Think not then, that Gloria Filio, shall abate ought of Gloria Patri. The Son is Lord, to the glory of his Father, and not otherwise. Let that fear then be far from us, that in exalting the Son, we shall in the least minute eclipse the glory of his Father. Here is no fear of emulation, that it will prove the case of Jupiter and Saturn. No so blessed is the accord of this Father, and this Son, as the Father thinketh it some blemish to his glory, if so profound humility, to compleat obedience, he had not seen highly rewarded, with Super upon Super. And the Son will admit of no glory, that shall impair his Fathers in the least degree: For lo, He is Lord to the glory of God his Father. This, is the end of His (of Christs;) And the same may be the end of all Exaltations; that a Saviour ever may be Lord, hold that place: and hold it, and be Lord, not to his own, but to the glory of God, even God the Father.

The end of all: And, we must needs know and take that, with us; for which, all this here is brought. And it is a Lesson; even, his Disce a me: and it is a Pattern; even his Exemplum dedi vobis, to commend unto us, the virtue of the Text; the Propter quod of the Feast; even Humility: Hoc erit signum, it is his sign at Christmas: As his sign then, so his Propter quod now, at Easter. So, the virtue of both Feasts: I will offer you but three short points touching it.

It is no humble man is set before us here, it is the Son of God, and himself God: Es quomodo non humiliatur homo, coram humili Deo? How is not the son of man humble, and the Son of God is? Even for him, to love it; for his very Person.

And, in this virtue, he is not barely set out to us, but in it, and by it, bringing to pass the works of our redemption: Which, cannot but extraordinarily commend this virtue to us; in that it hath pleased God, to do more for us, in this his Humility, then ever he did, in all his Majesty: even, to save and redeem us by it. To love it then: if not for Him, yet for the works sake.

But specially (which is the third) for the Propter quod, in the Text: if not for the work, yet for the Rewards sake. That, as Christ was no loser by it, no more shall we: For, all this Glorie here, the way to it, is, by the first verse. Humiliavit, is the beginning, and the end of it is exalting. That, the mother; this, the daughter: all riseth from Humiliavit ipse se. Humiliamini ergo, saith Saint James: Humiliamini ergo, saith Saint Peter: and after it there followeth still, & exaltabit vos Deus, a promise of a like glorious end. And what saith the Apostle here? This mind (saith he) was in Christ; and it was our, a wife mind: That, we count it a wife mind, and worth the carrying, and carry it; and it shall carry us, to the same journeys end, it brought him: even to the glory of God the Father. This for Humility.

And what? Shall we not give some light trial, of our Obedience also, to aver our Confession, that, He is our Lord? It would be, by Domine, quid nos vis facere? (that is the true trial.) Say then, Domine, quid nos vis facere? And, he will answer us; Hoc facite in Mei memoriam. Will ye know, what I would have you do? Do this in remembrance of Me: In sign that I am Lord, do but this: Here is a case of instance, and that now; even at this very present, a proof to be made. By this, we shall see, whether He be Lord or no. For, if not this; but slip the collar here, and shrink away: Si rem grandem dixisset, in a far greater matter, how would we stand with him, then? We were wrong before, here is the sound and syllables (we spake of) here it is. For, all is but sound and syllables, if, not this.

But of us, I hope for better things, that by our humble carriage, and Obedience (at least, in this) we will set our selves, some way to exalt Him, in this His day of Exaltation: Which, as it will tend to his glory; so will he turn it to matter of our glory: and that, in his Kingdom of glory; or (to keep the word of the Text) in the glory of God the Father. That so we may end, as the Text ends. A better, or more blessed end there cannot be. And, to this blessed end, He bring us, that by his humility and obedience, hath not onely purchased it for us: but set the way open; and gone it before us; Jesus Christ the Righteous, &c.

S E R M O N

Preached before the
KINGS MAJESTY
AT
WHITE-HALL,

On the Ninth of April, being Easter-Day.

An. Dom. 1615.

JOHN Chap. II. Verf. XIX.

Respondit Jesus, & dixit, Solvite Templum hoc, & in tribus diebus excitabo illud.

Jesus answered and said, Dissolve (or, destroy) this Temple, and within three dayes I will raise it up again.

HE answered and said this, to the Pharisees. Who sought a Sign of him (the Verse next before.) A Sign they would have; And (he tels them) a Sign they should have. Themselves should minister him occasion to shew a Sign; the like was never shewen. For, destroy him they should (his body; so) and he within three dayes, would raise it again, from death to life.

The Occasion
A Sign.
Verse 18.

But this Answer of his, is a figurative speech, and runs under the terms of the Temple. The reason whereof was: they were then in the Temple; there, fell out this Question. And (as it appeareth in the Verses before) much ado there had been between them, and that a long time, about the Temple.

The speech,
figurative.

Now, his manner still was; the Place, the Time, the Matter in hand, ever to frame the tenour and terms of his speech, according to them. And so, now, being in the Temple, he takes his terms from thence; even from the Temple.

But he doth, (as I may say) Solvere Templum hoc, loose and undo this term for us: For (within a Verse) we are told, this Temple is no other, then the Temple of his Body. (Now the rest follows of it self.) The Solvere, is a taking him in sunder, his soul from his body: The excitabo, is the setting them together, and raising them up again. And both these, within three dayes, (the onely word in the Text, wherein there is no figure) interpreted.

Verse 21.

And this now was his Sign. And a great Sign it was. Great, even in their sense, if it had been, but of the Pile of Building (as they took the word Temple.) But greater far, far another manner Sign in his sense, in the true.

How a Sign in the true sense.

For, as for that Temple, Zorobabel, and Herod had raised it: and other great Persons, as great Buildings as that. But, the Temple of the body, if that were once down, all the Temple-builders that ever were, with all their care and cost could ne-er get it up more. Therefore, in his (in Christ) sense it is far the greater sign, then as they fancied it.

Indeed,

Indeed, so great a Sign, as he, that was in hell-fire, could not devise, nor did not desire a greater. If but Lazarus, if but one come from the dead: then, then regard him: that sign, out of question. Why, here is one come from the dead, and this day come, and a greater then Lazarus: I trust then, we will regard him, we will regard this sign, and not be worse then he in hell was. Let us then regard it.

The Division.

The ground of the sign (and of all here) is Templum hoc. About it, two main *Act*s, they shew forth themselves: The razing of it down, in Solvite; The raising of it up, in Excitabo. These in figure, Answerable to these, This Temple, is Christ's body. The razing it down, is Christ crucified and slain. The raising it up, is Christ restored to life.

Of which two (to divide it by the Persons) Solvite is their part: Excitabo, his. That, his Part by their Act (Solvite): This, his Resurrection, by his own, (Excitabo.)

Now, this (he saith) shall be done: And faith further, shall not be long in doing: No longer, then three days. And within the compass of the time limited, he did it: For, this is now the third day; and to day, by Sun-rising, it was done.

I.
II. III.
IV.

So upon the matter, there come to be handled these four points. 1. That Christ's body is Templum hoc. 2. The dissolution of it by death, in Solvite. 3. The raising it up again by his resurrection, in Excitabo. 4. The time to do it in, three days.

By which circumstance of three days, and this day the third of them, cometh this time, to claim a kind of property in this passage of Scripture. And that, two ways.

For first: at this Feast, were these words here spoken: (you may see, they were so, at the thirteenth verse before: at the Feast of Easter.)

And secondly: at this Feast again, were they fulfilled after: the Solvite, three days since; the Excitabo, this very day. So, at this Feast, the promise, and at the very same, the accomplishment of it. The accomplishment, once; the memorial, ever.

Being then, at this very time, thus spoken and done: Spoken, here now; done, three years after: Being (I say) spoken, and done, and at this time spoken and done; Never so fit as now.

I.
The two senses of Templum hoc
Verse 20.
Verse 21.

Solvite Templum hoc. Templum hoc, we begin with. It is a borrowed term. But we cannot miss the sense of it. For, both are set down here to our hand: the wrong sense, and the right. The wrong (the next Verse of all) for the material Temple. So the Pharisees took it, and mis-took it.

The right, (the next Verse after) for the Temple of his body. So they should have taken it. For so he meant it: Ipse autem dicebat, &c. But he spoke of the Temple of his Body. And he knew his own meaning best; and reason would, should be his own Interpreter.

Matth. 26. 61.
Mar. 14. 58.

The Pharisees sense could not be true.
Verse 28.

And this meaning of his, it had been no hard matter for them to have hit on: but they came but a birding, but to catch from him some advantage, and so were willing to mis-take him. As, this they caught as an advantage (we see) and laid it up for a rainy day, and three years after, out they came with it, and framed an Indictment upon it, as if he had meant to have destroyed their Temple.

But was it likely, or could it once be imagined, he meant to destroy it? It was Gods house, and the zeal of Gods house (but even a Verse before) consumed him: And doth his zeal now (like the zeal of our times) consume Gods house? What, and that so quickly? but a Verse between? But even very now, he purged it: And did he purge it to have it pulled down? That were preposterous. Now it was purged, and it down? Nay pull it down, when it was polluted: Now it is cleansed, let it stand. To reform Churches, and then seek to dissolve them, will be counted among the errors of our Age. Christ was far from it. He that would not see it abused, would never endure to have it destroyed; specially, not, when he had reformed the abuses: and yet more specially, not even presently upon it (they might be sure.)

But, that, which must needs lead them to the right meaning, was; that, these words (Templum hoc) he could not say them, but, by the manner of his uttering them, by his very gesture, at the delivery of this particle (hoc;) they must needs know what Temple it was, he intended. It was easie to mark, whether he carried his hand, or cast his eye up to the fabrick of it; or whether he bare them, to his body: Which one thing onely, was enough to have resolved them of this point, and to quit our Saviour of equivocation.

The true sense.
Chap. 13. 23.

We will then wave theirs, as the wrong meaning; and take it, (as he wisheth, who leans on his staff, and best knew his mind) of the Temple of his body.

I.
A Body, a Temple.
Verse 16.

But what resemblance is there, between a Body and a Temple? or how can a Body be so termed? Well enough: for I ask, why is it a Temple? what makes it so? As it not, because it is Domus Patris mei, (as he said a little before) because God dwelleth there? For, as that, wherein man dwells, is a house; so that, wherein God, is a Temple properly. That (I say) wherein he it place, or be it body. So come we to have two sorts of Temples; Temples of flesh and bone, as well as Temples of lime and stone. For, if our bodies be termed houses, because our souls (tenant-wife) abide and dwell in them; If, because our souls dwell, they be houses; if God do so, they be Temples; why not? Why not? Why know ye not this, (saith the Apostle;) that your very bodies (if the Spirit of God abide in them) are ipso, Temples they be, (such as they be?) But then they be so specially, when actually we employ them in the service of God. For, being in his Temple, and there serving him, then, if ever, they be Temples.

1 Cor. 6. 10.

Temple, living Temples in a Temple without life. A body then, may be a Temple: Even this of ours.

And if ours, these of ours (I say) in which, the Spirit of God dwelleth only by some gift or grace? 2. with how much better right (better infinitely) His body (Christs) in whom the whole Godhead, in all the fulness of it, dwelt corporally? Corporally (I say) and not Spiritually alone (as, in us:) By nature; by personal union: not (as in us) by grace, and by participation of it, only. Again, if ours; which we suffer oft to be polluted with sin, that many times they stand shut up, and no service in them for a long season together; how much more His, that never was defiled with any the least sin, never shut, but continually taken up, and wholly employed in His Fathers service? His, above all exception; His, without all comparison, certainly. Alas, ours but Tabernacles under goat skins; His, the true, the Marble, the Cedar-Temple indeed. Christs body then, a Temple.

But a Temple at large, will not serve: It must be Templum hoc, that very Temple, they took it for. And so we to proceed yet further, and to seek a congruity of His body with the material Temple (it was taken for) to which there is no doubt, His intent was to resemble it.

The Rabbins, in their Speculative Divinity, do much baffle themselves, to shew, that; in the Temple, there was a model of the whole world, and that all the Spheres in heaven, and all the Elements in earth were recapitulate in it. They were wide. The Fathers took the right, and bestowed their time and travel more to the point: to shew, how, that Temple and all that was in it, was nothing else, but a compedious representation of Christ, for whom, and in whose honour, was that and all other true Temples. And this they did by warrant from the Apostle, who (in Heb. 9) aimeth at some such thing.

Now the points of congruity, they found, were many, they may be reduced to these four. 1. Whether you look to the composition or parts of it. 2. Or, to the furniture, and vessels of it. 3. Or, to that was done in it. 4. Or, to what was done to it (that is) what, first, and last befel it. In all which, they hold, that Templum hoc might more truly be affirmed of Him, that was in the Temple; than of the Temple, He was in.

The last of the four (what was done to that Temple, what befel it, and so what befel the Temple of Christs body) that (I take) to be most proper to this Text, and to that we have in hand. (For, to go through all four, would take up a whole Sermon.) So, I take my self to the congruity only.

Mark then what befel either: by that shall you best find, that Fata mirusq; Templi, the destinies of both Temples were alike.

They began alike. The first news of the Temple was heard at Ephrata (which is Bethlehem.) So was it of Him; for there was He born.

Like, in their beginnings: and in their ends, no less. I apply to this Text, and content me with those two, He insists on Himself. Both were destroyed, both were reared again; that in all things, His body, and His Temple might be suitable.

That Temple was destroyed by the Caldees; down with it, even unto the ground. Imitated by them here: down with it, even into the ground. For they never left, till they had Him there: past Excitabo (as they thought) past rising any more. But, as the Temple, after it was so razed, had an Excitabo; was raised again up by Zerobabel: So was this too. Soluite, took place: but there came an Excitabo after, that made amends for it. And, as the glory of the second house, was greater than the first: So the estate He rose to, far more glorious than that, He was in before.

And mark (I pray you) if these two were not to be seen as brim, in the little glasses about it, as in the great Mirror it self. For, the Temple was as a great Mirror, and the furniture, as so many little glasses round about it. Take but the Ark (the Epitome as it were of the Temple.) The two Tables in it, the type of the true treasures of Wisdom and Knowledge hid in Him: they were broken first, there is Soluite: but they were new hewn, and written over again, there is excitabo. The Pot of Manna (a perfect resemblance of Him; the Urna, or the vessel being made of earth, so earthly; The Manna, the contents of it, being from heaven, so heavenly.) The Manna (we know) would not keep past two dayes at the most, there is Soluite: but, being put into the Urna, the third day it came again to it self, and kept in the Pot without putrifying ever after; there is excitabo. Aarons rod (the type of his Priesthood and of the rule of souls annexed to it) that Rod was quite dead and dry; but revived again and blossomed, yea brought forth ripe Almonds. In every and in each of them, His destiny whom they represented; Soluite and Excitabo in all.

But, the End is all in all; and in respect of that (of the end) well saith Ambrose, of His body, Verè Templum, in quo nostrorum est purificatio peccatorum. Truly a Temple He, no Temple ever so truly, as wherein was offered up the true propitiation for, and the true purification of our sins; and of us from them: which is the end of all Temples that ever were or shall be; and was but shadowed in all besides, but in this truly performed.

There, the only true Holocaust of his entire obedience, which burnt in Him bright and clear, from the first to the last, all His life long.

There, the only true trespass-offering of His Death and Passion (the Soluite of this Temple) satisfactory to the full, for all the trespasses and transgressions of the whole world.

There, the Mear-and-Drink-Offering of his blessed body and most precious blood.

And the Extra of this sacrifice, the fat of the entrails of it, that is the Love wherewith he did it; the desire the longing desire he had to it; that, that was the perfect Offering, that set at one all things both in heaven and earth. That, what ever was Sub figura in Templo illo, was really and in truth exhibited in Templo hoc.

And judge now, whether the Sign were not well laid by our Saviour in the Temple, which was it self a sign of Him. And whether, as He said in a place, Ecce major Templum hic: So He might not have said Ecce majus templum hic, when He was in the Temple; Behold a greater, a truer Temple now, in the Temple, than the Temple it self.

II.

Now to the second point, Solvite. ^a The saying it self, ^b The executing it after. The Solvite, and the

A solvite, be Solutum est.

Solvite. Death

a loosing.

* Phil. 4. 23.

2 Tim. 4. 6.

1. First, by Solvite (that is) dissolving is meant death. * Cupio dissolvi, ye know, what that is: And tempus dissolutionis mea instat, the time of my dissolution (that is, my death) is at hand. For, death, is a very dissolution: a loosing the cement, the soul, and body are held together with. Which two, as a frame or fabrick, are compaginate at first; and after, as the timber from the lime, or the lime from the stone, so are they taken in sunder. But death, is not, this way only, a loosing; but a further than this. For upon the loosing the soul from the body, and the life from both, there follows an universal loosing, of all the bonds and knots here: of the Father from the Son; and otherwhile, of the Son from the Father first: of Man from Wife, of Friend from Friend, of Prince from People: So great a solvite is death, makes all, that is fast, loose: makes all knots flie in sunder.

2. Solvite.
Violent.

2. And all this in natural death. But a further matter there is in solvite. For that is against nature, alibi solventibus, by the hands of other, that are the solventes (them to vvhom this is spoken.) This temple, drops not down for age, or vveakness; dissolves not of it self: Others (they to whom solvite is here said) they pull it down. It is then no natural, but a violent death, this. Well therefore turned (Solvite, destruy it) there is no destruction, but with force or violence.

3. Solvite.
Voluntary.

3. So violent though, on theirs, as voluntary yet, on His part. Not against His vwill quite, not by constraint: For, He Himself, that is to be dissolved, He it is, doth here say Solvite. He could have avoided it; if He vwould; He would not: In sign He would not (vve see) Himself saith Solvite. And solvite He must have said; He must have said it, or they could not have done it: It had passed all their cunning and strength to have undone this knot ever, but that He gave vway to it.

4. Gave vway to it (I say) that we take not this solvite otherwise, than He meant it. It is not of the nature of a charge, this; nor we, so to conceive it. Very expedient it is, that we know the nature of solvite templum.

2. Solvite templum. No commandment.
Rom. 2. 17.

Solvite templum is no Commandment (be sure) in no sense; He commands not any temple; nor that, they themselves meant, to be destroyed; It were sacriledge that, and no better. And Sacriledge the Apostle ranks with Idolary; as being full out as evil, if not worse than it.

But indeed worse: for, what Idolary but pollutes, sacriledge pulls quite down. And easier it is, to new hallow a Temple polluted; than to build one anew out of an heap of stones.

Psal. 127. 7.

And if, but to spoil a Church, be Sacriledge: (as it is granted:) yet, that leaves somewhat; at least, the nails and the roof (so it be not lead;) To leave nothing, but down with it, is the cry of Edom, the worst sacriledge, of all: and never given in charge by God, to any (we may be sure.)

1 King. 8. 18.
2 Chron. 6. 8.

For, God Himself, said to David with his own mouth, Whereas it was in thine heart, to build me an House; thou didst well, that thou wast so minded. Didst well? well done, to think of building; then, a sensu contrario, evil done, to think of dissolving. And, that which is evil, Christ will never injoyn.

But, vvhath is to be thought of solvite templum, I would have you to judge by these two (they be both in Text.) 1. To whom this is spoken. 2. And what is meant by it.

1. To whom
Solvite Templum is said.

Mat. 23. 5.
14. 15

1. To whom, this is spoken: Distingue tempora, is a good rule; So is, Distingue personas. Distinguish the persons then, give every one his own, it will make you love solvite templum the worse, as long as you know it. Solvite? To whom is this spoken? Who be they? The Pharisees. To them, is this speech directed. That, is made vwork, vwork for a Pharisee, to dissolve Churches. And so it was. For, as hot and holy as they seemed, vvith their broad Philacteries and long prayers, our Saviour saith, they loved the gold of the temple, better than the temple. So do their posterity, to this day. To the Pharisees then with them; to their marrows: that vwould fain hear Solvite, given in charge. The other person, is Christ: Christi vword and vwork both, is excitabo: excitator templorum He, a Raiser of them; a raiser of them when they be down (vve see here.) They vvill not let them stand vwhen they be up. Christ, He sets them up, for His part: When you vvill have them down, you must bespeak some Pharisee: And they vvill do it, leviter rogati. For, as His speech to them, is Solvite & excitabo; So, theirs to Him may seem to be, Excita & solvemus. Set up, as many as He vvill, they vvill down vvith them; first vvith templum hoc, then vvith templum illud; and so, one after another (if they may have their vvill:) they lack but one, to give the Solvite to them, and to set them on vwork. Distingue personas then. And they, to vvhom solvite is said, are but bad persons certainly, and fit for a bad business.

2. What is meant by Solvite Templum.

2. Will ye mark again, vvhath is meant here by it, by destroying the temple? What, but even the killing of Christ? Now the suiting and sorting of these two thus, hath but an evil aspect neither: but, this worse than the former, though. And, I wish but this one point vwell printed in all mens minds. Solvite templum: quid vult dicere? Solvite templum (id est) Occidere Christum: that he that goes about to dissolve the Church, it is all one, as if he vvient about to make away Christ. One of these is implied under the other. Enough (I think) to take off the edge of any that are glad to hear, and ready to catch solvite templum out of Christi mouth, but quite besides His meaning. For His meaning vvas (and it was one special end of Christi comparing His body to the temple;) to shew, He vwould have us so to make account of the temple, and so to use it, as vve vwould His own very body: And to be as far from destroying one; as vve vwould be from the other. This may suffice to let you know the nature of solvite templum once for all, that you be not mistaken in it.

3. Solvite templum hoc.
Not by way of commandment

3. Of solvite templum (I say:) But now, to come to solvite templum hoc, to the temple of his body. Concerning; that it should enter into any mans heart, to think, Christ vwould open his mouth to command, or to counsel His own making away; (that is, the committing the most horrible foul murder that ever was) God forbid. It was a sin, out of measure sinful, that, if ever any vv ere. And give me any Religion, rather than that, that draweth God into the society of sin: makes Him, or makes Christ, either

Author

Author or Adviser, Commander or Counsellor, of ought that is evil. Any (I say) rather than that.

1. How then? if no command, what is it? All that can be made of it (say the Ancient Fathers) is, but either, a prediction (in the title of the Prophets) Come down Babel; (that is) Babel shall be brought down: prediction. So soluite, ye shall destroy; to warn them, what he saw, they were now casting about, and whither their malice would carry them in the end, even to be the destroyers and murderers of the Son of God. Bar by way of Eccl. 47. 1. Ac. 7. 52.

2. Either this; Or (at most) but a permission; which, in all tongues, is ever made in this mood (in the Imperative.) So, we use to say; Go to, do and ye will; or, do what ye will with my body; when, we mean but sufferance, for all that, and no command at all. For all the world, this soluite to them, as Fac cito to Judas after. Quod facis, that, which you are resolved to do, and have taken earnest upon it; Fac, do it, and, Fac cito, Do it out of the way; which yet (it is well known) was nothing but a permission, and not a jot more. By way of permission. John 13. 17.

2. But, should such, so foul an evil, as that, be permitted though? No, nor that neither, simply; It is not a bare permission, but one qualified; and that with two limitations, Will ye mark them? 1. For first he would not suffer any evil at all (least of all, that) but that out of the evil he was able (able and willing both) to draw a far greater good. Greater, for good (I say) than, that was, for evil. And that was solutionem peccati, ex solutione templi. Permitted for a greater good.

For, we are not to think, that he would, thus down with it, and up with it again, only to shew them feats and tricks (as it were) to be wondred at, and for no other end. No, the end was the destroying of sin, by the destroying this temple. It went hard, Et ve tibi atrocitas peccati nostri, and wo to the hairpouness of our sins, for the dissolving whereof, neither the Priest might be suffered to live, nor the temple to stand; but the Priest be slain, and the temple be pulled down, Priest and temple and all be destroyed. But, sin was so riveted into our Nature: And again, our Nature so incorporate into his, as no dissolving the one, without the dissolution of the other. No way to over-whelm sin quite, but by the fall of this temple. The ruine of it like that of Samsons: That, the destruction of the Philistines; this, the dissolving of all the works of the Devil. It is S. Johns own term, Ut solveret opera Diaboli. Judic. 16. 30. 1 John 3. 8.

2. But, neither was this enough yet; Neither would he, for all this, have at any hand let it go down, but that withall he meant to have it up again presently. Never have said soluite, but with an excitabo straight upon it; which is a full amends; so that the temple loses nothing, by the loosing. Permitted, for another as good.

The world with us, hath seen a soluite, without any excitabo; Down with this, but nothing raised in the stead. But, that is none of his: Soluite without excitabo, none of Christ's. We see, with one breath, he undertakes, it shall up again, and that in a short time: There is amends for soluite.

And so now with these two limitations, under these two conditions; 1. One of a greater good by it; the other, of another as good or better in lieu of it; may Soluite be said permissive: and otherwise not, by any warrant from Christ, or from his example.

And thus, you have heard what he saith. Will ye now see, what they did: what became of this soluite of his? Soluite (saith he) and when time came, they did it. But he said soluite, that is loose; and they cried Crucifige, at the time (that is) fasten; fasten him to the cross: but that fastening was his loosing; for it loosed him and cost him his life, Which was the solutum est of this soluite. b Soluite the doing.

For indeed, Solutum est templum hoc, the temple of his body, the spirit from the flesh, the flesh from the blood was loosed quite. The roof of it (his head) loosed with thorns. The foundation (his feet) with nails. The side Isles (as it were) his hands both likewise. And his body, as the body of the temple, and his heart in the midst of his body, as the Sanctum Sanctorum, with the spear: Loosed, all. What he said, they did, and did it home.

Nay, they went beyond their commission, and did more than, solvere. A thing may be loosed gently, without any rigour: They loosed him not, but rudely they rent and rived him, one part from another, with all extremity; left not one piece of the continuum whole together. With their whips, they loosed not, but tore his skin and flesh all over; with their hammers and nails, they did not solvere, but fodere his hands and feet: With the wreath of thorns, they loosed not, but gored his head round about: and with the spear point rived the very heart of him: as if he had said to them, dilaniate, and not soluite. For, as if it had come è laniatâ, it was not Corpus solutum, but lacerum: his body not loosed, but mangled and broken (Corpus quod frangitur.) And his blood, not easily let out, but spilt and powred out (Sanguis qui funditur) even like water upon the ground. Well is it turned, destroy: It is more like a destruction, than a solution: More than soluite it was, sure. More than Soluite. 1 Cor. 11. 23. Mat. 26. 28.

Now, will ye remember? This was a Temple of flesh and bone, not one of lime and stone. Yet the ragged ruins of one of them demolished, will pity a mans heart to see them; and make him say Alas poor stones, what have these done? yet the stones neither feell their beating down, nor see the deformed plight, they lye in. But he, Sic solutus est, ut se solvi sentiret, the solution of his skin, flesh, hands, feet and head, he was sensible of all; he saw the deformity, he felt the pains of them all. The soluite of this Temple sensible.

So saw, and so felt, as with the very sight and sense, before it came, there befell him another soluite, a strange one: solutus est in sudorem, the orifices of the veins, all over the texture of his body, were loosed, and all his blood let loose, that he was all over in a strange sweat, stood full of great drops of blood. A Soluite, never heard of, nor read of but in him only. The soluite of this sweat. Luke 22. 44.

And yet another soluite. For, that soluite templum hoc might every way be true; in all senses verified) What time the Veile of his flesh rent, that his soul was loosed and departed: at the very same instant, the veil of the material Temple, that split also in two from the top to the bottom: as it were for company, or in a sympathy with him: That, it was literally true (this Soluite) and of the temple, that they meant. And so, two soluites of both temples, together at once. The soluite of the Veil. Mat. 27. 51.

The great solvite in his Passion.

Mat. 27. 51.

52.

* Dion Arc. p.

One more yet (and I have done with solvite;) and that is, a solvite in a manner of all; of the great temple of heaven and earth. For the very face of Heaven, then all black and dark at noon day, yet no Eclipse (the Moon was at the full) the Earth quaking, the stones rent, the graves opening, as they then did, shewed plainly, there was then toward, some universal solvite, some great dissolution (as the * Philosopher then said) either of the frame of nature, or of the God of nature.

Cast your eye thither, look upon that, and there you shall see solvite templum hoc plainly, and what it means. And, it had been enough, if they had had any grace, even to have pointed them to the time, when this solvite templum hoc, was fulfilled by them. And this for both solvite, and solutum est (their part:) which was his passion by, their Act.

III.

Excitabo the saying.

Now (to answer them two) to Excitabo, and Excitavit (his part:) his resurrection by his own. And first to Excitabo. Hitherto, we are not come; but now, we come to the sign: for the sign is in Excitabo.

Et Excitabo, And I will raise it up. Which is spoken (as it were) by way of triumph, over all, they could or should do to him. Go to, dissolve it, destroy it, down with it; when you have done your worst, it shall be in vain; Excitabo illud, my power shall triumph over your malice: I will raise it, I will up with it again.

Excitabo how
Solvite.

But to loose and to raise, these two are not opposite: Rather, to loose and to set together. Raising is opposed to falling; and resurrection to ruine, properly. But it comes all to one. Upon the dissolving of any frame, straight down it drops. This goodly Temple of our body (on the decking and trimming whereof, so much is daily wasted) loose the soul from it but a moment, and down it falls, and there it lies, like a log (we all know.) In opposition to this fall, it is said He will raise. But, He will do both: as it was loosed yet it fell; so will He set it together, yea He raise it again.

Excitabo illud. Three points there are in it: 1. The Act; 2. And the Person, in Excitabo; and 3. the Thing it self, in illud.

Excitabo, the act, as from sleep.
Psal. 16. 9.
1 Cor. 15. 20.
Dan. 12. 2.

1. The Act. The word he useth for it is iyasō in propriety, is a raising from sleep: And sleep (we know) is far from destruction. It is, to shew us first, what a strange metamorphosis He would make in death: turn it, but into a requiescet, and a requiescet in spe, and there is all. So made he his own; so will he make ours. This Day Christ is risen again, the first fruits of them that sleep; and the rest that sleep in the dust, when their time comes, shall do the like.

Jonah 2. 10.

2. To shew (secondly) they should miss of their purpose quite. They reckoned indeed, to destroy him; they were deceived; they made him but ready for a nights rest or two. They made full account, Death had devoured and digested him too: they were deceived, it was not so: Death had but swallowed him down (as the Whale did Jonas) upon the third day to cast him up again.

3. To shew (thirdly) not only that, this he would do, but, with what ease he would do it. With no more difficulty, than one is waked up, after a nights rest; with no more ado, than a knot that is but loose and untied, is tied again.

Excitabo, the person.
He Himself

But besides the Act, we are to look to the Person, in Excitabo. It is not, destroy you, and some other shall raise it; but, I; even I my self, and none but my self, will do it; Nec aliena virtute, sed propria, and by none others beside; but, by mine own proper vertue and power. An argument of his Divine nature. For, none ever did; none ever could do, that. Raised some were, but not any by himself, or by his own power; but by a power imparted to some Prophet by God for that time and turn.

Christ, by none imparted from any other, but by his own from himself: And let it not stumble any, that elsewhere, the Father is said to raise and exalt him: That is all one. Both will stand well. The same power the Father, doth it by, by the same doth it, he. There is but one power of both: Of both, or of either of them, it is alike truly verified. This for the Person.

Illud. The
same temple.
In substance.

Now for the thing: Illud. Templum hoc before, and illud here: Hoc and illud are not two, but one, and the same. Not Solvite hoc, & suscitabo aliud; down with this, and I will up with another in the stead. No: but idem illud, the very same again. The very same you destroy, that, and no other, will I rear up again. With us, with the world, it is not so; when we fall to dissolve a frame of government (suppose of the Church) it is not solvite hoc, & excitabo illud; no, but excitabo aliud. We raise not the same, but another quite another, nothing like it; a new one never heard of before. But let them keep their aliud, and give us illud again. Illud we love; It is Christ's excitabo, that: and if we follow Christ, in his raising, the same again, or not at all.

Not the same,
In quality.

But, though illud be the same again, in substance; yet not in quality the same for all that: but so far different, as in that respect, it may seem aliud, another quite. At least, well may it be now called illud, as it were with an Emphasis, as qualified far beyond that it was before, when it was but Templum hoc. And to say truth, if it be but the same just, and no whit better; as good save his labour, and let the first stand. For, it is but his labour for his travel, if nothing won by it.

Elsy 9. 10.

But if (though the same) yet not in the same, but in a far better estate, than before; (Cedar for Mulberry; Marble for Brick, as the Prophet speaks;) then, ye say some-what, and then we will be content, to have it taken down.

Agg. 2. 10.

And such was the estate of this Temple after the raising. And such was it to be: For, the glory of the second House was much greater than of the first. Which encrease or bettering is implied in the word excitabo.

It is (I told you) a Rising up after sleep. Now, in the morning, after sleep, the body riseth more fresh, and full of vigour; than it was over night, when it lay down. The Apostle speaks it more plainly: Templum hoc (saith he) at the loosing, it was in weakness, dishonour, mortality; Templum illud, at the raising it, is in power and honour, and to immortality. 1 Cor. 15. 43.

And sure, one special reason of the dissolving this Temple was, that as then it was, Solvite might be said of it; It was dissoluble. But, being now raised again, it is faster wrought; indissoluble, now: No Solvite to be said, not to be loosed ever any more. This for Excitabo illud. Now the last point, of the time. The sign is in that, too.

And when this? Within what time? Within three dayes. Which words, seemed to affect them most. IV. All their exception lay to them. He looked not like one that would build Churches. But (let that pass) The Time. were he never so likely, he takes too small a time, for so great a work (as they thought.) But, if we agree Three dayes. once of his power to raise from death, the time will slide, we shall never stick at it much, but agree of that quickly. He that can raise from the dead (ten thousand Churches will be built one after another, before one be raised thence;) To him, that is able to do that, forty six hours are as good as forty six years: all one. Nay, even forty six minutes; (but that it was held fit, he should lie longer in his grave than so, that there might be the surer certainty of his death.) Otherwise, years, dayes, or minutes, to him, are all alike. The sign is in both: but (to say truth) in Excitabo, rather than in the three dayes. For, to the power of Excitabo, Nullum tempus occurrit.

But, why three dayes, just? Neither more nor less? Because, elsewhere he saith, No other time, but Jonas: Why three, that, should serve him. No other, than Moses time, (forty dayes) in his fasting. No other than Jonas time (three) in his rising. Content to keep time with his Prophets before him. Far from the humour of some; that must vary (no remedy.) If Jonas three, they must four, or three and a half, at least. If Moses forty, they must be a day under or over; have a number, have a trick by themselves, beyond others still; Else, all is nothing worth. Far from them (I say:) and to make us far from them: By his example to keep us to that, which others before us, have well and orderly kept.

Now to the excitavit, of this Excitabo. Thus he said it should be, Et fuit sic, and so it was. He would raise it, dixit: And he did raise it, factum est. His dissolution lasted no longer than his limitation before-hand set. That, was not, post tres, but in tribus; not after, but within the compass of three dayes. And he came within his time: For, this is but the third day, and this day, by break of day, was this temple up again.

This then being the day, not only of Excitabo, but of Excitavit illud (of the saving it up;) accordingly a Our duty upon these. we, this day, to celebrate the Enchania, or new dedicating of this temple. A dedication was ever a Feast of joy, and that great joy. Every Town had their wake in memory of the dedicating of their Church. That we then hold it as a Feast of joy; that we be glad on it: as glad, nay more glad to see it up again, this day; than the third day since, we were sorry, to see it down in the dust. To Solvite, down with it (Edomus tui) belongs Jeremies Lamentation: to Excitabo (this dayes work) Zacharias joyfull shout, or acclamation, Zach. 4. 7. Gratiam Gratia, grace upon grace, and joy upon joy, and thanks upon thanks: Grace, joy, and thanks with an Emphasis; for, it is now illud, with an Emphasis indeed.

But, our joy will quickly quail if we no good by it. I ask then, what is all this to us? And I answer For our good. (with the Apostle) Multum per omnem modum. 1. For, first, this Solvite of his, is a Solvite to us: a Rom. 3. 2. loosing us, not only from our sins, the cords of our sins here, as Salomon calls them; but the chains, the ever-By Solvite. lasting chains of darkness, and of hell, there, due to them, and to us for them. Prov. 5. 22.

2. Then, this excitabo is not to end in him: What, we believe, he did for that temple of his body natural; the same, we faithfully trust, he will do further for another temple, the temple of his body mystical. For his mystical, as much as for his natural; for whose sake he gave his natural body, thus to be dissolved. Of which mystical body, we are parts (and the whole cannot be without his parts:) Every of us, members of this body for his part: Every one living stones of this spiritual Temple. Dispersentur illa, restaurabis de novo (saith Origen;) scattered we may be, he will gather us again; loosed, he will knit us; fall down and dye, he will set us together and set us up again. After two dayes he will revive us, and in the third day raise us, And we shall live in his sight, saith the Prophet Hosea, of us all. Hosea 6. 2.

And this, is to us all, matter of great Joy. For, to this Solvite in the end we must all come; Statusum est hominibus. There is an Act passed for the dissolution of these our earthly tabernacles. Loosed they shall be, Heb. 9. 27. Spiris from Flesh, Flesh from bone, each bone from other; No avoiding it.

All our care to be this; how to come to a good excitabo. Good (I say:) for, excitabo, we shall never need to take thought for: we shall come to that, whether we care for it or no. But to a good excitabo: Our moral duty. such an one, as he, as Christ, as this Temple is come to (that is,) to a joyfull resurrection (as we call it.) That, is worth our care: For, in the end, that will be worth all.

That, shall we come to, if we can take order, that while we be here, before we go hence, (our bodies) we get them Templified (as I may say:) procure, they be framed after the similitude of a Temple, this Temple bodies Temples. in the Text: For, if it be Solvite templum; at the dissolution, a temple; a temple it will rise again, there is no doubt of that.

Our bodies (as we use the matter many of us) are far from temples; rather Prostibula than temples; brothel-houses, brokers shops, wine-casks (or I wot not what) rather than temples. Or, if temples, temples the wrong way, of Ceres, Bacchus, Venus; or (to keep the Scripture phrase;) of Camot, Astaroth, Baalpeor; and not Domus Patris mei (as this here, he speaks of.)

But,

Ap.c.3.12
H.b.9.11

But, if this be the fruit of our life, and we have no other, but this; to fill and farce our bodies, to make them shrines of pride, and to maintain them in this excess; to make a money-change of all besides, Common-wealth, Church, and all: I know not well, what to say to it: I doubt, at their rising, they will rather make blocks for hell fire, than be made Pillars in the temple of God, in the holy places made without hands.

The moral
soluite of them.

Otherwise, if they prove to be temples here, let no man doubt, then, let them be loosed when or how they vwill, He that raised this temple (so they be temples) will raise them likewise; and that, to the same glorious estate, Himself was raised to.

The moral Excitabo.
Apoc. 20.6.

A course then must be taken, that while we are here, we do Solvere templa hac, dissolve these temples (of Carnos and Ashierosh;) and upon the dissolution of them, we raise them up, very temples to the true and living God: That vve down with Bethaven, this house or shop of vanity (as by nature they are;) and up with Bethel, Gods house, as by grace they may be.

That they may be Temples.

For, a soluite, and an excitabo, we are to pass here in this life: and this, this excitabo, is the first resurrection here to be passed: He that hath his part in this first, he shall not fail but have it in the second.

If then, temples they would be, that we so make them: for, to make them so, is the Excitabo of this life.

And so shall we make them, even temples: and no vway sooner, than if vve love this place (the temple) well, and love to resort to it, and to be much in it. By being much in it, we shall even turn into it. And sure, if ever vve have aliquid templi, any thing of a temple in us; then it is, when we are duely and devoutly occupied, and employed, they and vve, in His worship and service. Then are vve temples.

Temples, cor-
poris sui.

But, to be temples, is not all; we are further to be templum hoc, this temple: and this, vvas the temple of his body. And that are we, if at any time, then certainly, when, as if we were temples in very deed, we prepare to receive, not the Ark of His presence, but Himself, that He may come into us and be in us: Which is, at what time, vve present our selves, to receive His blessed Body and Blood: that body, and that blood, which for our sakes was dissolved; dissolved three dayes since, when it suffered for our sins. And this day raised again, when it rose for our justification.

Rom. 4.25.

Which, vwhen vve do; (that is) receive this body, or this temple: (for, Templum hoc, and Hoc est corpus meum are now come to be one: for, both Templum hoc, and corpus hoc, are in Templum corporis sui: and when the Temples of our body, are in this Temple, and the Temple of His body in the Temples of ours; then are there three Temples in one, a Trinity, the perfect number of all.) Then, if ever, are we, not Temples only, but templa corporis sui, Temples of His body; and this Scripture fulfilled in us.

This Feast a fit
time for it.

This are we, when we receive. Now, at no time, is this act of receiving, so proper, so in season, as this very day (so hath Christs Church thought it, and so practised it, ever) the very day of this His Excitabo; the day of His rising: And by means of it, of our raising: our raising first, to the life of righteousness (to the estate of Temples) here in this world: And after, of our raising again, to the second, the life of glory and blis (of glorious Temples) in the world to come; which is the Excitabo when all is done. What time, they and we shall be loosed: as now, from sin; so then, from corruption. And raised, and restored: as now, to the estate of grace; so then, to the state of glory, and glorious liberty of the sons of God. To which happy and blessed estate, may He raise us all in the end, that this day, was raised for us, &c.

KINGS MAJESTY

A T

WHITE-HALL,

On the one and Thirtieth of March, being Easter-Day,An. Dom. 1616.

1 PET. Chap. I. Ver. III, IV.

Benedictus Deus, &c.

Blessed be God; and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to His abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead.

To an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you.

THE Summe of this Text, and (if ye will) the name of it too, is set down in the very first word of it. It is a Benedictus. The first word is so. The first word Benedictus: and (if you look) the last word is [for you.] Give me leave to read it, for us; to put in our selves. Seeing to us, and for us, it was written. So, a Benedictus it is; from us, to God, for something coming from God, to, or for us. The Summe.

Something? Nay many. Benedictus is but one word, but the first word: the rest of the words, of both Verses, are for us all.

And, many they are: We reduce them to three: 1. Our regeneration which is past: 2. Our hope, which is present: 3. And our Inheritance, which is to come. 1. Regenerating, or begitting, is (of it self) a benefit: We get life by it, if nothing else. 2. But, to begin to an Inheritance, is more than simply to begin. 3. And yet, more than that, to begin, to Such an Inheritance, as this; of which, so many excellent things are here spoken.

Three then, in this; 1. To be begotten: 2. To be begotten to Inherit: 3. To be begotten, to Inherit, such an Inheritance.

But

Titus 3. 7.

But then, an inheritance is no present matter. All heirs be heirs, under hope, usq; dum, till the appointed time. So comes hope in. Therefore, first to hope. After, to the thing hoped for, the Inheritance itself. There is a resemblance of both these, in the two Seasons of the year. At this time, the time of Christ's Resurrection, and of our celebrating it, to hope; as to the blossome or blade, rising now in the Spring: To the Inheritance; that, as the crop or fruit to come after, at harvest: And the harvest of this crop (saith our Saviour) is the end of the world.

Mar. 13. 39.

We are not yet come to the point. Regenerate, wherto? to a lively hope: Hope; whereof? of an Inheritance: Inheritance, what manner one? Such as is here set down.

But, all these, whereby? Per resurrectionem, by the resurrection of Christ: All by him: All, by him. This By, is the main, here. This Διὰ the διὰ τὸν, that runs thorow all this Text. For, all arise from Christ arising from the dead.

Luke 1. 68.

Now, if from Christ rising, then from Christ, at this Feast. For this is the Feast of Christ's rising: And so, this the proper Benedictus, for this Feast. We had a Benedictus made by Zachary, S. John Baptists Father, for his Birih, for Christmass-day (known by the name of benedictus;) We have here now another, for his rising, for Easter-day, of S. Peters setting. And this it is.

The Division

For the Order, we will put the words in no other, for we can put them in no better, than they stand. Every one is in his due place, from the first to the last.

1. God first, and the true God the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. 2. Then his mercy, the same moving. 3. Then, Christ's resurrection, the means working. 4. Then our regenerating, the all producing.

Producing 1. hope (first) of the Inheritance: 2. then after the inheritance, we hope for. Of which, two points there are: 1. How it is qualified: Uncorrupt, undefiled, not fading. Every one hath his weight. 2. Then, how Seated: Even, in Heaven: There it is; there kept it is. And, which is the Capital chief point of all, kept, for us, there.

V. rfc 5.

Now then, for these. 1. For his Mercy, first. 2. For our Regenerating, by his Mercy. 3. For the Hope, of this inheritance; 4. but more, for the inheritance it self: Specially such an one, so conditioned, as here is set down. 5. For keeping it for us in Heaven (in this Verse:) 6. For keeping us for it, on earth (the next verse.) For these all: but above all, for the means of all, the rising of Christ (this day's work) the dew of this this new birth, the gate of this hope, the pledg of this inheritance. For these, owe we this Benedictus to God. And, this day, are we to pay it, every one of us. It is a Sin of omission, not to do it; he that doth not, is a debtor.

To God the Father, the Qui, and to Christ our Lord, the Per quem, by whom and by whose rising, doth this life when we will; we have hope of a better; beside our Inheritance on earth what shall, we have another kept for us in Heaven. Thus, every one naturally ariseth out of other.

VI. III. OF THE BLESSING.

The A.G.
Benedictus:
Blessed be God.

2.
The Party,
God.
Rom. 9. 5.
Bless God we may.

Heb. 7. 7.

Blessed be God. Yea, blessed and thanked, and praised; Benedictus, Magnificat, Jubilare, and all. All; But, here, blessed suits best: that the best and most proper return for a blessing. That we inherit, is the Blessing (Chap. 3. Ver. 9.) The hope is a blessed hope (Titus 2. 13.) But the Inheritance is the State of blessedness it self. Therefore Benedictus bene dicitur, Benedictus is said well. Said well, of God, who is above all blessed for ever: well also, of a Father; Benedictus, a fit term for him. And God, in the tenour of this whole Text, is brought in, as a Father, a Father begetting; begetting us first by nature; begetting us again, in it, by grace.

But thereby hangs a Scruple: For, vvhhat are vve that we should take upon us to bless God? S. Paul sayes it here: S. Paul seems to gain-say it, without all question (saith he) the less is bless'd by the greater. And is he less, or vve greater, that vve should offer to bless him? And, if not as God; not as a Father (the next vvord.) For, shall the Child presume to bless his Father? It becoms him not. He us, then; and not We, Him.

Ephes. 1. 3.

Yes, He us; and We Him, too. We have so many Texts for it, I make no doubt, but there is blessing both vvayes. Of the many, I remember that one of S. Pauls (Eph. 1.) Benedictus Deus qui benedixit nos, Blessed be God for blessing us. As if they vvere reciprocal, these: One, the Echo, the reflection of the other. Equal they are not. It vvere fond to imagine, the Father gives the child no other blessing, but the child can give him as good again. No: aliter nos Deum, aliter Deus nos; Otherwise, God blesteth us; and the Parent, who represents God, in begetting our bodies; and the Priest, who represents him, in begetting again our souls. Otherwise, we them. Gods is real: our but verbal. His cum effectu ever: Ours, if it be but cum effectu, that is all. His Operative; ours but Optative. What then? he that wisheth heartily, would do more than wish, if his power were according. Even that then, in want of power, to shew a good will (I know not how; but) we take it well ever. God doth, I am sure; as appeareth. by the goats hair of the Old Testament, and by the Widows mites in the New. And this is S. Peters, but expressing a good mind only. And, without all question, thus, the Greater may be blessed, even of the less; Not, quam potestatem habens, but tanquam vota faciens. So we may say Benedictus Deus: And let us then say it.

What

What say we then, when we say Benedictus? It is a word compound: Take it in sunder, and Dicere, How we may is to say somewhat, to Speak; and that we can: and bene, is (speaking) to speak well; and that we blest God ought. To Speak, is Confession: To speak well, is Praise: And praise becometh Him, and us to give it Him.

Put together in one word, and then, Benedicere to blest, in the phrase of ours, and of all tongues else, is; not so much omnia bona dicere, to speak all good of him, as omnia bona vovere, to wish all good to him. And that becomes him too; not only Laus, but Votum: specially where Votum is totum, where we have little else left us, but it.

And what good can we wish him that he hath not? Bonorum nostrorum non eget (saith the Psalmist) nor Benedictionum, neither. We can adde nothing to him by our Benedictus: Say we it, say we it not, he is blessed alike.

True, to him, we cannot wish; not to his person: But, to his name, we can: (Add he is blessed, when In his Name, his name is blessed;) We can wish his name more blessedly used, and not in cursing, and cursed names, as daily we hear it.

And, to his Word, we can: We can wish it more devoutly heard, and not, as a few strains of wit, as our In his Word, manner is.

Yea, even to his person, we can: There is a way, to do that, inasmuch as he, and his Church, are now In his Person as grown into one, make but one person: what is said or done to it, is said or done to himself: Bless it, and He is blessed, united to his Church.

In a word then: to blest God, is to wish, his Name may be glorious; to wish, his Word may be prosperous; to wish, his Church may be happy. By wearing of which name, and by hearing of which Word, and by, being in, and of which Church, we receive the blessing here upon earth, that shall make us for ever blessed in heaven. This we say, if we marke what we say, when we say Blessed be God.

God, and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. This is style novo the style of the New Testament; ye God, and the read it not in the old: No, nor in Zacharies neither. Between that of Zacharies, and this of S. Peters, it Father of our fell out, this. The Sun was yet under the Horizon, when Zachary made his: But (now) up, and of a good Lord Jesus height. And thereupon, this taken up by S. Peter, here: by S. Paul, 1 Cor. 1. Ephes. 1. and upon great Christ: the reason. Style of the

1. Blessed be God: Say that, and no more, and never a Jew, Turk, or Pagan, but will say as much. Blessed be God, we; Blessed be God, they. It is never the worse for that. But yet, seeing the world then was, still is, full of many Gods, and many Lords (1 Cor. 8.) It would be known, which God. For, we would not bestow our benedictus upon any, but the true God: neither they, nor we; I dare say. Which is then the true God? Pater Domini nostri Jesu Christi: and he that is not so, is a false fained God; is an Idol. Put them to it then, put this addition to; and neither Turk, Jew, nor Pagan will say after you: None, but the Christian. For, this is the Christian mans Benedictus. New Testa-

Now, ever since Idolatry first took head, it hath been held fit; they that are Gods chosen People of all the people upon earth, they should have some mark of severance, to distinguish, as theirs, the true God; so themselves, the true worshippers, from the false. So to settle our benedictus right; upon the right God, this is added.

2. For this cause: but, not for this alone. When we blest him, I dare say we would blest him, with his best Title. So hath it been ever. You shall observe in Titles, ever, upon the coming of a greater, the less is laid down, No more, the Lord liveth that brought thee out of Egypt; but, the Lord liveth that brought thy captivity from the North. And now, no more that neither; For, here, is one, that after it came, puts them down all, as being indeed the greatest of them all, the greatest that ever was; or that ever shall be. One, which when we adde, we set our benedictus at the highest. As his best

For, if this be to be God, to be bounteous, beneficial (as we seem to think, when we say, homo homini Deus;) In nothing, was God ever so beneficial, so bounteous; and so, in nothing ever so God, as in sending his only begotten Son into the world. In that, God, specially; and, for that, specially to be blessed. And because, a greater than his Son he hath not, and so a greater than this shall never come, therefore this shall never be laid down. This shall be his Title; for ever. For ever to have a place, and a chief place, in our benedictus. Jer. 23. 76. J

And yet there is another, on Christ's behalf, Our Lord: even to bring him in too. For, seeing all that which follows, comes not, but by the rising of Christ, and so by Christ; I see not, how (well) we can leave him out. All the good, that comes to us, as it comes to us from God, so it comes to us, by Christ. God, the Qui; Christ, the Per quem. God, the cause; from him cometh all, Christ, and all: Christ the means; by him cometh all, God and all. All things from God; and nothing from God immediatly, but mediante Christo. He, the cause mediate, the Mediatour, the Medium. No benefactus (and so, no benedictus) without him. John 3. 16.

This is most plain, in this here. Benedictus Deus, qui generavit Christum: first that did generate Christ; before Benedictus Deus, qui regeneravit nos, that did regenerate us. If he not generate, we not regenerate: then, no children; then, no Inheritance; then, all this Text void. For, in him, this Text and all other Texts are Yea and Amen. To bring

By this time we see, why this addition. 1. It is his Title of Severance: 2. It is the biggest Title of his Honour: 3. It takes in Christ, who would not be left out, in our Benedictus. Dixit Dominus Domino meo, The Lord said to my Lord, to take both Lords in; and leave neither out. And so shall we knit it well to that, which follows. Pal. 110. 2

From the Party whom we pass to the cause why. For, we say not this Benedictus, as we say many an one here, without any cause: Benedictus, for nothing: Nay, otherwhile a Benedictus, for a malefactus, for a shrewd turn; yea, and glad and fain too, No, here is a Qui, and in this qui, there is a quia. That doth it (that is) for doing it: that regenerates us (that is) for regenerating us. For, God is ever aforehand with us: Regeneravit is the Præter; that is past, before any Benedictus can come from us.

Pater, qui Regeneravit follows well, is kindly. For, Generation, it is Actus paternus, the proper act of a Father. But before we come to it, let us not stride over that, which (in the Text) stands before it, Secundum misericordiam. God did this, did all that follows, but upon what motive? According to what did he it, according to his mercy. And Mercy accords well with a Father: No compassion, no bowels like his. And as well, with regeneravit; for, of His own good will began he us. How else? When as yet we were not, what should move him, but his meer mercy? Well therefore said, regeneravit secundum: for generation is but secundum, but a second, not a first: Would ye have a primum, a first for it? that first is his Mercy, ever.

But the benefits ensuing are too great to run in the common current of Mercy. As they then are, so is the mercy that goes to them, Great: Therefore according to his great Mercy. Mercy, the thing; Great, the measure. And, great would not be passed by, lest we pass not greatly by it; lest we conceive, and count of it, as but of some ordinary matter.

But (indeed) multa is rather Multa, than Magna; a word of number, rather than Magnitudo. The meaning is: no single mercy would do it; no, though Great: there must be many. For, many the defects to be removed, many the sins to be forgiven, many the perfections to be attained: Therefore, according to his manifold Mercy.

According is well said. For, that indeed is the chord, to which this and all our Benedictus's are to be tuned. That, the Center, from which all the lines are drawn. The line of Christ's birth, in Zacharies Benedictus, through the tender mercies of our God, whereby the day-spring from on high did (lately) visit us. The line of Christ's resurrection, in S. Peters Benedictus, according to his manifold mercies, whereby this day-spring from on high doth now visit us. The line of all the rest, if we had time to go through all the rest.

At all times, mercy commeth in, at no time out of time (I trust;) we shall dye with it, in our mouths: let us make much of it while we live. Never pass by it, but say it; say it, as oft as we can; blessed be God: blessed be his mercy. God, that doth it: His mercy according to which he doth it. Doth it, and doth all else, at this and all other Feasts: at Easter, at Christmas, the fifth of November, and all. Blessed be He for His mercy: Yea, many times blessed, for His manifold mercies.

Mercy then first: Regeneravit secundum, the act, of this mercy, the second, that is Regeneravit. Regeneravit may be said, with reference to Christ. Generavit Christum, regeneravit nos; and not amiss. But, better and more properly, both to us. Generavit nos, begot us first, in Adam, to this: regeneravit nos, begot us again in Christ the second Adam, to the hope of a better life.

But, why is it not so then, qui generavit without Re? Why begin we not with that? Verily, even for that, even for our natural generation, we owe him a Benedictus. But, what should I say? Unless (beside our first generation) we be so happy, as to have our part in this second generation, the former (I doubt) will hardly prove worth a Benedictus. But, if this come to it, then, for both, a Benedictus indeed. Otherwise (as our Saviour said to Nicodemus) Nam, nisi, he be thus born again, by his first birth, be it never so high of noble, is a white the nearer this Inheritance following. For all our goodly generation, we so much boast of, it would go wrong with us, but for this. Well therefore may we all say, Benedictus qui regeneravit.

Now Re hath in it two powers, Re is, again, the second time: So, it suits well with Secundum, it is the second. For, two there be: 1. that old creation; 2. and the new Creature in Christ: And, two births: (We see it daily.) A child is brought into the world, but it is carried but again, to the Church, there to be born and brought forth anew, by the Sacrament of Regeneration.

But Re is not only again, but again (as it were) upon a loss. Not, a second only, but a second, upon the failing of the first. So doth Re imply, ever. Re-demption, a buying again, upon a former aliening. Reconciliation, upon the former falling out. Restitution, upon a former attainer. Re-surrection, upon a fall taken formerly. Regeneration, upon a former degenerating, from our first estate.

Our first would not serve; it was corrupt, it was defiled, it did degenerate. Degenerating made us filth: And, ira principis (much more ira Dei) mors est. So, children of death, death and damnation: and there left us, and all by means of the corruption and foil of our former degenerate generations.

Never ask then, Quid apud est re? Re cannot be spared. There was more than need of a new, a second, a re-generation, to make us children of grace again, and so of life: which he hath given us power to be made; by the washing of the new birth, the fountain which He hath opened to the house of Israel for sin and uncleanness, even, for the sin and uncleanness of the first. Will ye have it plainly? Benedictus Deus qui generavit ad mortem, regeneravit ad vitam: or qui generavit ad timorem mortis, regeneravit ad spem vite. That we, who that were begotten to the fear of death, or to a deadly fear; Us, He hath begotten anew, to the hope of life, or to a lively hope.

This act of regenerating is determined doubly: it is twice repeated. 1. To hope first: 2. then to the inheritance: ye may put them together, to the hope of an Inheritance. But, thus parted, they stand, because of our two estates, to serve them both: 1. Hope, in this life; 2. Inheritance, in that to come: Hope, while here, in state of grace; Inheritance, when there, in state of glory.

But

But because (as we said) an inheritance is no present matter : It is to come, and to be come to : From begetting, we step not straight to entering upon our inheritance ; but the state of being is a state of expectancy, and so a fit object for hope, Donec, till the time come : therefore we begin with that : Regeneravit in Spem.

There needs no great Benedictus for in Spem : Hope, is no great matter. For, what is hope ? What, but vigilantis somnium, a waking mans dream ? And such a hope indeed it may be : for, such hopes there be many, in the world. But, this is none such.

To shew, it is none such, it is severed by two terms : 1. Regeneravit, and 2. Vivam. They are worth the marking, both.

1. Regeneravit first : that it is Spes generata ; which implies, there is another, but inflata, but blown into us, or we sprinkled or perfumed with it. Such there is ; but, not this : but this is per viam generationis, and Generatio (we know) terminatur ad substantiam, brings forth a Substance. So, this, a substantial hope ; called therefore by S. Paul, the Helmet of hope (1 Thes. V.) the Anchor of hope (Heb. VI.) things of substance, that will hold ; that have metal in them.

2. Then mark Vivam. And vivam follows well, of regeneravit. For, they that are begotten, are to live ; to have life. Vivam also imports, there is a dead, or a dying hope : but, this is not such ; but a living.

Nay, Viva is more than Vivens ; lively than living. Where, Viva is said of ought (as, of a stone, or water) the meaning is, they spring, they grow, they have life in themselves. And, such is the Water of our regeneration : not from the brooks of Teman (in Job VI.) that in Summer, will be dry ; but the water of Jordan, a running river. There Christ was himself baptized : there, he began, and laid the Sacrament of our New birth ; to shew what the nature of the hope is, it yields : even viva, with life in it.

And indeed Regeneravit is a good Verb, to joyn with hope. There is, in hope, a kind of regendering power : It begets men (as it were) anew. And, Viva is a good Epithete for it. When one droops, give him Hope ; his spirits will come to him afresh ; it will make him alive again that was half dead. As Jacob, when he was put in hope to see Joseph alive, it is said, Revixit spiritus Jacob, his spirit revived in him : he shewed, Spes was viva, hope was a reviver.

Never so well seen (this) as this day, in them, that went to Emmans ; With cold hearts ; cold and dead (God wot) till they heard the Scriptures opened to this point : and then, Did we not (say they) feel our hearts warm (nay hot) within us ? Such a vital heat, they found and felt, came from this hope. For (to say truth) what is it, to give life, to them that have it already ; dum spiro, that are alive, that can fetch their breath ? it is not worthy (that) to be called spes viva : Spes viva (indeed) is, that which when breath and life ; and all fail, fails not : that then puts life into us, dum expiro, when life is going away : that when this life we must forgoe, bids, let it go ; when that is gone, shewes us hope of another.

This is Viva indeed. Nay, this is Vita ; for the hope of that life immortal, is the very life of this life mortal. And for such a hope, Benedictus Deus, Blessed be God.

And whence hath it this life ? the next word sheweth it, vivam per resurrectionem. The Vivens (as I may say) the vivacity, the vigour it hath, from Christ rising, and by his rising, opening unto us the gate of life at large. What life ? Any life ? this life ? No : vivam per resurrectionem. Not this (here) falsely enl's vita (as even the Heathen man called it ;) but, the other, the life by the resurrection, the true life indeed. Not to live here still, as we do : But to rise again and live, as Christ (this Day) did. That so, we mistake not the life, and take the wrong for the right. For, so shall we mistake, in our hope also, as commonly we do.

For, shall we do hope no wrong ? The truth is Hope hears evil without a cause. The fault is not hope's ; the fault is our own ; we put it where we should not, and then lay the blame upon hope ; where we should blame our selves, for wrong putting it. For, if you put it not right, this is a general rule : As is that, we hope in : so is our hope. a Ye lean on a reed, (saith Esay.) b Ye take hold by a cobweb, (Job.) c Ye catch at a shadow, (saith the Wise man.) And can it be then, but this hope must deceive you ?

We for the most part, put it wrong : for we put it in them, that live this transitory perishing life ; we put it in them, that must dye, and then must our hope dye with them, and so prove a dying hope. Miserable is that man, that among the dead is his hope (saith the Wise man.) The Psalms best expresseth it : Our hope is in the Sons of men ; and they live by breath, and when that is gone, they turn to dust ; and then there lies our hope in the dust. For, how can (ever) a dying object yield a living hope ?

But, put it in one that dyes not, that shall never dye, and then it will be Spes Viva, indeed. No reed, no cobweb-hope then ; but helmet, anchor-hope ; hope, that will never confound you.

And who is that, or where is He, that we might hope in Him ? That is Jesus Christus spes nostra, Jesus Christ, our hope : so calls Him S. Paul (1 Tim. 1. 1.) Such shall their hope be, that have Christ for their hope.

Yet, not Christ every way considered ; not, as yesterday, in the grave ; not, as the day before, giving up the Ghost upon the Cross : dead and buried yields but dead hope. But in Jesus Christus hodie, Jesus Christ to day, that is, Christus resurgens, Christ rising again ; Christ not now a living soul, but a quickning spirit.

In Christ's life then : But, not in his mortal life. They, that so hoped in him, to Emmans they went, this day, with Nos autem sperabamus, we did hope : Did, while he was alive ; but, now, now he is dead, no more hope now. And, for two dayes, as he was, so was their hope ; dead, and buried : and if he had risen no more, had been quite dead for ever. But, this day ; he revived and rose again : So did their hope too.

To this life we are regenerate, by the resurrection of Christ : Right. As to death generate, by the fall of the first Adam : So, to life regenerate, by the rising again of Christ, the second

And these two, Resurrection, and regeneration, match well. The Regeneration, of the soul, is the first Resurrection. And, the Resurrection of the body, is the last Regeneration. So doth our Saviour Christ term it (Mat. 19.) In the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit, that is, at the general resurrection. So was his own, his resurrection, his regeneration. This day have I begotten thee (the verse of the Psalm the Apostle applies to Christ's eternal generation (Heb. 1. 5.) But, so doth he, to his Resurrection also (Acts 13. 33.) For, then was Christ himself regenerate (as it were) begotten in a sort anew, and brought forth out of the grave, as out of the womb, the very womb, wherein he was born to the immortal, that is, to the true life.

By his resurrection : and if ye ask how, Esay tells us ; There goeth from his resurrection an influence, which shall have an operation like that of the dew of the spring ; which when he will let fall, the earth shall yield her dead : as at the falling of the dew, the herbs now rise, and shoot forth again. Which term therefore [of regenerating] was well chosen, as fitting well with his rising, and the time of it. The time (I say) of the year, of the week, and (if ye will) of the day too. For, he rose in the dawning : then is the day regenerate : and in prima Sabbati, that the first begetting of the week : And, in the spring, when all that were winter-starved, withered, and dead, are regenerate again, and rise up anew.

2 Inheritance.
Tom. To an inheritance.

We pass now to the Inheritance. But, as we pass, will ye observe the situation first. It is well worth your observing, that the Resurrection is placed in the midst, between our Hope, and our Inheritance. To hope before it ; before the resurrection, hope : but, after, to the Inheritance it self, to the full possession and fruition of it. So, from the estate of hope, by the resurrection (as by a bridge) pass we over, to the enjoying our Inheritance. And, that falls well with the feast, which is the feast of the Pass-over. The resurrection is so too ; pass we do, from spes, to res. So passed Christ : So we to pass. Every word stands exactly in his place and order.

An Inheritance accords well with according to his mercy. We have it not of our selves, or by our merits, by the merit of them ; but, of him, and by his mercies, and the merit of them : Else were it a purchase, and no Inheritance. It comes to us freely ; as the Inheritance, to children.

Well, with Mercy : and well, with Regeneration. For, the Inheritance is, of Children, pertains to the Children, either of generation, by Nature ; or of Regeneration, by Grace : By the former, he is Pater Domini nostri ; by the later, he is Pater noster.

But yet for all that, Ad hereditatem is a new point. Begetting is (properly) but to life, and nothing else : The greater part, by far, are begotten so. To Inherit, besides, not one of a thousand. Ask poor mens children : Ask younger brethren. But this (here) not in Vivam only ; but in Hereditatem also, and these are two. 1. To be begotten, vivam : 2. To be heirs, hereditatem. It is no Lazarus's resurrection, to rise again to the condition, he had before. It is Christ's ; rising, to receive an Inheritance withall.

Nor shall we need to doubt any prejudice to God, from whom it comes, by our coming to this Inheritance. Vivam and hereditatem (there) will stand well together. Here, they will not. Here, the Inheritance comes not, but by the death of the party in possession : But there, no prejudice to the Ancestor ; he dyes not, for the heir to succeed. There is Successio minorum sine recessione majorum. A succession, as of lights ; the second burns clear ; yet the first goes not out, but burns as clear as it.

Nor no prejudice to the Heir neither : To us, by Him ; nor to Him, by us. It is not, as here : One carries it from all, and all the rest go without ; Or, if they come in, his part is the less, No : it is of the nature of light, and other such spiritual things (as sounds, and smells) which be Omnibus una, & singulis tota. If there be a thousand together, every one sees, hears, smells as much, as he should do, if there were no more but himself alone. Such is this : not, erga aliquos vestrum, but erga vos.

And (as we said) one thing is to be born ; another, to be so, to Inherit : So say we again now : One thing, to be born to an Inheritance ; Another, to such an Inheritance as this here. For, in Inheritances, there is great odds ; one much better then another, even here with us : But this, better, incomparably better ; another manner Inheritance far, than any with us here. We would know, what manner one, and Saint Peter gives us a little overture, how it is conditioned, that we may know, it is worth a Benedictum. E Theologica negativa he doth it ; there is no other way to describe things to come, but by removing from them such defects, as (we complain) are incident and encomber all, we can inherit here.

Three they are : 1. Corrupti, 2. Contaminari, 3. Marcescere ; Corruption, Soil, and Fading ; to which nos nostraque, we and all ours are subject. Of which three, 1. Corruption refers, to the very being self : 2. Defiling, to the sincere and true being, without all foreign mixture : 3. Fading, to the beauty, the prime and flourishing estate, that each thing hath.

1 Incorruptible.

The Substance, that corrupts and comes to nothing : suppose, by death : (for, Corruption is contrary to generation.) The undefiled pure estate, that is, soiled, and embased, by some bad thing coming to it from without : (as it might be, by infection or sickness.) And though both these hold, the best estate long will not ; but lose the lustre by and by, and fade away of it self. Saint Peter enlarges this, after, in this Chapter, taking his theme from the voice in Esay XL. All flesh is grass, and all the glory of it as the flower of the grass. The grass it self lasts not long ; but, the flower of the grass, nothing so long, as the grass it self. Let there be no blasting to corrupt it ; no canker to defile it ; yet, of it self, it falls off and leaves the stalk standing.

Verse 24.
Isa. 40. 6.

It is (now) the time of flowers, and from flowers, doth the Apostle take this term, of Marcescere. It is properly the fading of the Rose. Streight, of it self, doth the Rose marcescere, and the violet livere, wax pale and wane. Their best, their flourishing estate they hold not long; neither the flowers, that are worn, nor they, that wear them either: they, nor we: but decay we do, (God wot) in a short time.

And, as we, so they; as the heirs, so the Inheritances themselves. Their corruptible hath not put on 1 Cor. 15. 53. corruption neither. They corrupt daily (we see) from one to another. One mans Inheritance corrupts, by another mans purchase; To them, that had them and have them not, they are corrupt. And, not that way alone: diverse other excheat, for want of heirs; confiscate, for some offences; rioted and made away, by unlawfulness; the heir stripped, and turned clean out: the Inheritance wasted, and quite brought to nothing. At least, if not they, to us; We, to them, corrupt: which comes all to one.

But say, they stand and corrupt not: another complaint there is: Their soil, their phacusa is but too 2 Undesiled. evident. They soil us; their soil we brush off, wipe, rub, wash off daily: in Summer, dust; in Winter dirt; These, and sundry like inquinamenta mundi: Nothing, in this region, but subject to soil. Why, the Inheritance it self, we call it soil; and how can it then, but soil us? or how can there be (here) any undesiled Inheritance.

But make them and keep them as clean as you can, take them, even at the best, yet fade they do sensibly: 3 Tbas faden Jona's worm, once a year, bites them by the root, and they wither. Every year, at least, they fall not. into a Adamasius, lose flowers and leaves and all; till they be regenerate by a resurrection, or rise again, Jonah 4. 7. by a regeneration, as it were: Till this time, the time of the spring come about, and bring them forth new again.

So, whatsoever we (here) can inherit, is subject to one, nay, to all of those. It corrupts, takes soil, fades. Is it not so? find we not, Saint Peter saith true? find we it not by proof daily? One or other, are we not still complaining of, specially of the fading? For, though they fade not of themselves; yet, to us, they fade. The fading, to us, even before themselves fade. We are hungry, and we eat: Eat we not, till that fades, and we are so weary of our fullness, as we were of our fasting: We are weary, and we rest; rest we not, till that fades, and we as weary of our rest, as ever we were of our weariness.

Yes indeed, so it is: and that so it is, is the very faithfulness of the creature to us. Thus by these defects, to tire us, and not suffer us to set our rest upon them, upon any Inheritance, here; but to chase us from themselves, and force us up to God the Creator, with whom there is an Inheritance layed up, in danger of none of these. But uncorrupt, that shall hold the Being, and none ever dis-beris or disseis us of it; 2. Undesiled, that shall hold the affay, and never be confused, by any bad mixture: 3. And that shall never fade or fall into any Adamasius, but hold out in the prime perfection, it ever had. And if there be, upon Earth, estate like this, it is now at this time: Now, all things generate anew; the Soil of Winter is gone, and of Summer is not yet come: Now, nothing fades; but all springs fresh and green. At this time, here; but, at all times, there: A perpetual spring; no other Season, there, but that. For, such an Inheritance, blessed be God.

But, where may this be? For, all this while, we know not that. Only, this we know; where ever it is, it In heaven. is not here; upon earth, no such seat. All (here) fading of the nature of the soil; corruption, contaminari, marcescere, are the proper passions of Earth, and all earthly things: But, in Heaven, it may well be. There, is no corruption and corrupt; Nihil inquinatum, nothing to defile there. And there, all things keep and continue, to this day, in their first estate, the original beauty, they ever had. There then, it is: and we thither to lift up our hearts, whither the very fruits of our bodies gives, as if there were somewhat remaining for us there.

It is thought, there is some further thing meant, by S. Peter. He writes to the dispersed Jewes. And that, by, in Calo, he gives them an Item, this Inheritance is no new Canaan, here on earth; Nor Christ, any earthly Messias, to settle them in a new Land of promise: No, that was for the Synagogue, ἡτις ἐστὶν θνητὸς ἐργάλατος θνητῆς, was it self mortal (is dead and buried since) and so had but mortal things to promise to her children, whom she did generate to mortality. The Church of Christ, the heavenly Jerusalem, hath other manner of promises, to her children regenerate by the immortal seed of the word, and Spirit of God: to them She holdeth forth things immortal, and heavenly; yea, heaven, and immortality it self. Gal. 4. 26.

In heaven then. There, it is first; and there it is kept: the being there, one; the keeping, another. For, Reserved in that there it is kept, is happy for us. Earth would not keep it; Here, it would be in hazard, there is great beaven. odds. For my part, I give it for lost, if, in this State, we were possessed of it. It would go the same way, Paradise went. Since it would be lost in Earth, it is kept in heaven. And a Benedictus for that too: as, for the regenerating us to it here on Earth; so, for the keeping, the preserving of it there, in Heaven.

Kept, and for us kept; Else, all were nothing: that, makes up all, that it is not only preserved, but re- For us. served for us, there. As Benedictus, the Alpha; so this the Omega of all.

But reserved (as the nature of the word is, and as the nature is, of things hoped for) yet under the veil: Rom. 8. 24. for, Spes quæ videtur non est spes. But, time shall come, when the veil shall be taken off, and of that, which is now within it, there shall be a revealing (as followeth in the next verse.) And so, all begins and ends, as the Bible doth. As the Bible, with Genesis; So this Text, with Regeneration: as the Bible ends, in the Verse 9. Apocalypse; So, this here, with a Revelation.

Only, it stayeth, till the work of regeneration be accomplished. Generation, and it, take end both together; and when generation doth, then shall corruption likewise, and with it, the state of dishonour, which is in foibles.

foulness, and the state of weakness, which is in fading; And in stead of them, incorruption comes in place with honour and power. And these three, 1. incorruption, 2. honour, and 3. power, make the perfect estate of bliss: To which, Christ this day arose, and which shall be our estate, at the Resurrection. That, as all began with a resurrection, so it shall end with one. Came to us, by Christ's rising now, this first Easter; and we shall come to it by our own rising, at the last and great Easter, the true Pasceover indeed: when, from death and misery, we shall pass to life and felicity.

Heb. 6. 18, 19,

Now, for this Inheritance, which is Bliss it self, and in the interim for the blessed hope set before us, which we have as an Anchor of our soul, stedfast and sure, which enreth even within the veil, where Christ the fore-runner is already seized of in our names and for our behoofs: For these, come we now, to our Benedictus.

For, if God, according to his manifold mercy, hath done all this for us; we also, according to our duty (as manifold as his mercy,) are to do (or say, at least) somewhat again. It accords well, that, for so many beneficia, one Benedictus, at least. It accords well, that his rising should raise in us; and our regenerating beget, in us, some praise, thanks, blessing at least: but, blessing fits best with Benedictus.

First then, dictus, somewhat would be said, by way of recognition, This hath God done for us, and more also: But, this, this very day. Then, Bene let it be: to speak well of him, for doing thus well by us; A verbal Benedictus, for a real blessing, is as little as may be. For the Inheritance, which is blessing, for the hope, which is blessed; for the blessed cause of both, Gods mercy; and the blessed means of both, Christ's Resurrection, this blessed day, blessed be God.

Pro. 11. 6. 12, 13
1 Cor. 10.

But, to say Benedictus any way, is not to content us; but, to say it, solemnly. How is that? Benedictus, in our mouth, and the holy Eucharist in our hands. So, to say it. To seal up, as he (in the old) his quid terribilius with calicem salutatis, the Cup of Salvation: So vve (in the new) our Benedictus, with Calice benedictionis, the Cup of blessing; which vve bless in his Name. So, shall vve say it, in kind; say it, as it would be said: The rather, so to do, because, by that Cup of blessing, we shall partake the blood of the New Testament: by which, this Inheritance, as it was purchased for us, so it is passed to us. Always making full account, that, from the Cup of blessing, we cannot part, but vvith a blessing.

Luk. 24. 30.

And yet, this is not all; We are not to stay here, but to aspire farther; even to strive to be like to God: and, be like God we shall not, unless our dicere be facere as his is; unless somewhat be done vvithal. In very deed, there is no blessing, but vvith levata et extensa manu, the hand stretched out; So, our Salvator himself blessed, Luk. 24. The vocal blessing alone is not full; nor the Sacramental alone, without Benedictio manus, that is the actual blessing. To leave a blessing behind us, to bestow somewhat, for which the Church (the poor, in it, so) shall bless you, and bless God, for you. In vvich respect, the Apostle so calleth it expressly (2 Cor. 9.) Euxoyia benedictionem, and by that name, commends it to the Corinthians. And, that is the blessing of blessings, when all is done: That is it, for vvich Venite Benedicti shall be said tous. Even, for parting vvith that here, vvich shall feed, cover, and set free, the hungry, naked, and them in prison. That, shall prove the blessing real, and stick by us when all our verbal benedictions shall be vanished into air.

2 Cor. 9. 5.
Mat. 23. 33.

So, for a treble blessing from God, 1. Our regenerating, 2. Our hope, 3. Our Inheritance, we shall return him the same number; even three for three. 1. Benedictus of the voice and instrument, 2. Benedictus of the Sign and Sacrament, 3. and Benedictus, of some blessed deed done, for which, many blessings upon earth, and blessing of God from heaven shall come upon us. So, as vve say (here) Benedictus Deus; Blessed He: He shall say, Benedicti vos, Blessed Ye. The hearing of vvich vvords, in the end, shall make us blessed without end, in heavens bliss. To vvich, &c.

KINGS MAJESTY

In the Cathedral Church at

D U R H A M,

On the Twentieth of Aprill, being Easter-Day,

An. Dom. 1617.

MATTH. Chap. XII. Ver. XXXIX, XL.

Qui respondens ait illis : Generatio, &c.

But He answered and said unto them ; An evil and adulterous generation seeketh a sign, but no sign shall be given unto it, save the sign of the Prophet Jonas.

For, as Jonas was three dayes and three nights in the Whales belly ; so shall the Son of man be, three dayes and three nights, in the heart of the earth.

He sign of the Prophet Jonas, is the sign of the Resurrection : And, this is the Feast of the Resurrection. Being then the sign of this Feast, at this Feast to be set up : Signum temporis, in tempore signi, The sign of the time, at the time of the sign, most properly, ever.

The words are an answer, of Christs (in this verse) to a motion of the Pharisees (in the last) They would see a sign. The answer is negative, but qualified. There is in it, a Non, and a Nisi : Non dabitur, none shall be given them. Indeed, none should : They were worthy of none. Yet saith He not, Non simply. His, Non, is with a Nisi, Non dabitur, nisi ; it is with a limitation, with a but : None, but, that. So, that : So, one shall be. In the Non, is their desert : in the Nisi, His goodness : that though they were worthy none, yet gives them one, though.

Gives them one : and one, that is worth the giving. Put Non and Nisi together, it is a Non nisi. If you speak of a Sign, None to it ; a Sign, instar omnium.

This Sign, is the Sign of the Prophet Jonas. Of him, diverse other wayes, and namely this : That as he was in the Whales belly, so was Christ in the heart of the earth. There they were either.

And, that which makes up the Sign ; three dayes a piece : Three dayes, and no longer.

And

And then, as Jonas cast up by the Whale; so Christ rose again from the dead; and both, the third day. So that, upon the matter, the Substance of this Sign, is Christ's Resurrection; and the Circumstance of it, is this very day.

The Summe. We will divide it no otherwise, than already we have: 1. into the Non, Non dabitur: 2. the Nisi, Non dabitur nisi: 3. and the Non nisi, Non nisi Signum Jona.

I. The Non, the denial first: Non dabitur eis. And the reason is, in Eis, in the parties. For, they, 1. an evil, and 2. adulterous, and 3. a generation of such (three brands set upon them: Eis, to them, to show them, no Sign to be given: none at all.

II. Then the Nisi: Non dabitur, Nisi. For though they were such, as little deserved any, yet Christ, of his goodness, will not cast them quite off. Non He will give, Law. So, one he will give: A Sign they shall have.

III. And that, no trivial, or petty Sign (to give it his due) but, in very deed, a Signum non nisi: Non nisi Signum Jona, that is, insigne Signum, a Sign signal: mark them all, None like it.

And that is, the sign of the Prophet Jonas, coming forth of the Whales jaws, half out and half in. In which Sign, there are (upon the point) three Signs.

1. The Parties first; as Jonas, so the Son of man (that is) Himself.

2. Wherein, the Place. That as the one was in the Whales belly; so was the other in the bowels of the earth.

3. Last, in time. Either, three days and three nights just, and but three days, and then forth again. There they were, and there (both) the same time: the Places diverse; the time, the same.

So, Jonas, the sign of Christ: and the Whales belly, the sign of Christ's grave. Jonas's three days, the sign of Christ's three days, 1. Good-friday, 2. Yesterday, 3. and to day.

Which three days, when we shall come to calculate them, they will give us three stands, and make (as it were) three signs in one; each day, his several sign.

The letter of the Text saith, there they were; 1. we are carried then, to ask, how came they thither. The Text saith, there they were, but three days: 2. We are carried then to ask, how came they thence.

1. Jonas's state before he came into the Whale: 2. His state while there: 3. His state getting thence.

Conform in Christ. 1. Good-friday, when, as Jonas went down the Whales throat, so Christ laid in his grave: 2. Easter-eve, while there he lay: 3. And this (which is now the third day) when, as Jonas cast up on dry land; so Christ risen from death, to the life immortal.

So have you (as in a sign) set forth 1. Christ's death, by Jonas's drowning: 2. Christ's burial, by Jonas's abode there: 3. Christ's resurrection, by Jonas's emergence again.

As Christ's Sepulchre, by Jonas's absorption: So Christ's resurgens, by Jonas's emergens. 1. Jonas going down the Whales throat, of Christ put into his Sepulcher: 2. Jonas's appearing again, out of the Whales mouth, of Christ's arising out of his Sepulcher. All; in Jonas, shadowed: And, in Christ, fulfilled.

In these three days, these three Signs: And, in them, three Keys of our faith, three Articles of our Creed, 1. Mortuus, 2. Sepultus, 3. and Resurrexit, 1. Christ's death, 2. burial, and 3. rising again.

And last, what this Sign portends, or signifies. That whatsoever it was, to them; to us, it is Signum in bonum, a Sign boding good to us-ward: A sign of favour and good hope, which we have by the resurrection of our Saviour. Specially, if we have the true Signature of it, which is true repentance.

The denial of a Sign. Non
dabitur.
Judg. 6. 36.
2 King. 20. 8.

TO ask a Sign, is (of it self) not evil; Good men, holy Saints have done it. Edom asked one of God and had it: He is painted with the fleece (that is, the Sign given him) in his hand. Exechias asked one and had it too: In the Sundial of Ahaz, the shadow went ten degrees back. Yet, this suit here is denied by Christ: and Christ denieth nothing that is good: Specially, not with hard terms as here (we see) he doth.

The reason, in Eis, the men.

Somewhat is amiss sure: and it is not in the Sign, or in the suit, but in Eis, the men: the suit, was not evil, the Suitors were. In three words, three brands set upon them: 1. Evil, 2. adulterous, 3. a generation of evil and adulterous.

They were Evil.
Verse 22.

1. Evil. There be marks of evil minded men, even in their very suit. They would see a sign: If they had never seen any before, it had not been evil: but, they came now, from a Sign; they had scarce wiped their eyes, since they saw one (the Sign of the blind and dumb man, made to see and speak) immediately before; It was Spirans adhuc, yet warm, as they say. That, they saw; and saw they not a Sign? A little before, even in this very Chapter, a withered hand was restored to another: What, could not they see a Sign, in that, neither? Go back to the Chapters before, ye shall have no less than a dozen signs, one after another: and come they now with a Volumus videre? They would have that shewed them, that, when it is shewed, they will not so see: A bad mind this, certainly.

Verse 10

Verse 38.

Now maliciously evil.

2. Nay worse yet: for ye shall note malice in them (which is the worst kind of evil.) For, if ye mark, this Volumus of theirs, is, with a kind of spite, with a kind of disgrace, to those he had shewed before. They would see one: as who should say; those were none, they had seen: that was none they saw, even now. Maliciously: If he shewed none, then he was no body; could not indeed shew any; and and so vilified him with the people: If he shewed one, then carp and cavil at it, as they did at that even now: Say, it was done by the black art. So, cavil out one; and call for another, to deprave that too.

3. Nay (which is worst of all) Evil and absurd men (saith the Apostle.) When is that? Vidi iniquitatem & contradictionem, saith the Psalmist. Ye shall see, how absurdly they contradict themselves.

But even now, they charged him, to work by the dive!: and here now they come, and would have him shew a miracle. The dive! cannot shew a miracle; a trick of force he can: Such may be done by the claw of the dive!: miracles not, but by the finger of God, by power divine. Him then, him, whom they even now had pronounced, to deal with the dive!; him come they to now for a miracle. So absurdly malicious, as they cared not, in their malice, to contradict themselves. To men, so evil, so maliciously evil, so absurdly evil, Signum non dabitur eis.

Well: howsoever they might err that way, the men otherwise to be respected, they were so virtuous men, so freight livers. See ye not their philacteries, how broad they wear them? Nor that neither (saith Christ,) but, evil, and adulterous too. As, of evil minds, so of evil lives, too. Ye shall come now, to the uncasing of a Pharisee. For, Christ lifts up their Philacteries, and shews what lurks under them.

For, by adulterous I understand not, as if he charged them, they were born of adultery, came into the world the wrong way: the seed of Canaan, and not of Juda: As, having nothing in them of the Patriarchs; So nothing less, than their children, of whom they bare themselves so much. This, is adulterina rather than adultera: children of the adulterers, rather than adulterous themselves. And, that was no fault of theirs: And Christ upbraideh no man, but with his own faults.

Nor, I understand it not, of spiritual adultery; though, that way, they might be charged, as leaving him the true Spouse, the true Messias; taking no notice of him, passing by him, went after such as had adulterate the truth of God, by devices of their own taking up: Not with Idolatry (perhaps) but (which is an evil, and differs but a letter) with idolatrie: For, to worship images, and to worship mens own imaginations, comes all to one. That, they were faulty of: (and I pray God vve be free.) But this, is mystical adultery, and I would make, as no more miracles, so no more mysteries, than needs I must.

For my part, I see no harm, to take the word in the native sense, without figure, for men given to commit that sin, the sin of adultery. For (for all their deep fringes) all was not well that way: as is plain by John VIII. Where, not one of them durst take up a stone, to cast at the woman taken in adultery: but flunk away one after another, till there was not one left. Christ toucheth upon that string: to shew, what heavenly men these were, that would have a sign from heaven, and none else serve them. Were not these meet men, to sue for a sign? Were not a sign even cast away upon them?

But, this is not all. For, this they were (saith our Saviour) not here and there a man of them; but the whole bunch was no better: not the persons only, but the Generation so: not a good, of them all. And such, you shall observe, there be: Not only, such men, but such Generations of men, and faults (suppose of lying, swearing, and such like) rooted in a stock; kept even intraduce (as it were) and derived down ab avio avivique, from the father to the son, by many descents, in a kind of hereditary propagation.

Solomon in his time noted four of them: 1. One, a generation unkind to their parents, and their children, so to them for it: 2. Another, pure in their own eyes: 3. A third, of high eyebrows: 4. A fourth, cruel hearted, whose teeth were as knives to shred the poor of the earth, shred them small.

Such were these: and adultery made way for such. For, ubi corrupta sunt semina, where a general corruption that way, no good to be hoped for; the Country will not last long. By this, Christ had said enough; and shewed, non dabitur eis, is a fit answer for these.

Now, this ye shall mark; the worse the men, the more importune ever, and the harder to satisfy. They must have signs, and signs upon signs, and nothing will serve them: As, no less than four several times were they at Christ. 1. Here: 2. In the XVI. Chapter: 3. Marke VIII. 4. Luc. XI. And still to see a sign. As oft as they came, this had been their right answer: to dispatch them, with a Non dabitur, and no more ado. Other answer let them have none: even absolutely none at all: For none they should have had.

Yet saith he not, None they shall have. He will be better to them, than they deserve: Christ will be Christ: Redit ad ingenium: Forgets now all, he had said ere while. And, an evil and an adulterous generation though they be, yet a sign they shall have, for all that. Not simply None then, but Non nisi, Non nisi; the Negative is qualified: so qualified, as upon the matter it proves an Affirmative. The Nisi destroys the Non: Non dabitur nisi (that is) dabitur. So, one they shall have: Though not now presently, at their volumus, at their whistling (as it were) but after, when he saw the time: And, though (perhaps) not such an one, as they would have phansied, yet such an one, as they rather need, and would do them more good: (that is) one for their want, not for their wanton desires.

And this is the reason, why none but it: For, no sign needed but it. For, without others, well they might be: without this, they or vve; could not vwell be. For, oportuit Christum pati, It behoved Christ, Christ ought to dye, and rise again.

None but that? Why afterward, between this and his Passion, he shewed divers others: and how then saith he, none but it? Signes (indeed) he shewed: yet not any of them so pregnant for the purpose, they sought, as vvas this. They sought a sign of the season, as by the XVI Chapter is plain: that this was the time, the Messias vvas to come. To put them out of doubt of that; to that point, none so forcible, as his death and rising again, figured in that of Jonas. That, and none but that. All he did else, the Prophets had done the like: Giving signs from heaven (which they here sought;) yea, even raised the dead. Put raise himself being dead, get forth of the heart of the earth, when once he was in, that paid their skill: never a Patriarch or Prophet of them all, could do that: Non nisi, None but he. So as, therein he shewed himself indeed to be the true and undoubted Messias, and never so else, in any sign of them all.

For signs being compounded of Power and Goodness (not power alone, but power and goodness, that is, the benefit or good of them, they be done for:) Never so general, so universal, so great a good, as by Christ's death, (as it might be Jonas casting in;) Nor ever so great, so incomparably great a power, as by raising himself from death to life (set forth in Jonas casting up again;) Those twain, by these twain, more manifest, than by any other. The sign of the greatest Love and power (love, to die; power, to rise) that ever was wrought.

This Nisi then, is a non nisi in a new sense: A none such, a signe paramount. All else nothing in comparison of it. I keep you too long from it.

This sign
Signum non nisi
a sign paramount.

The sign is laid in the Prophet Jonas, Sicut Jonas: and we are much bound to God, for laying it in him: they, and we both. And Jonas is a non nisi: such a sign, for us, and (besides) so many particulars of Christ, in him, as (in effect) no sign but he.

For them. Propheta peccator.

First, for them, for an evil and adulterous generation, no sign so meet to be given as he. For Jonas, and non nisi Jonas, was Propheta peccator, he trespasser or sinning Prophet, among them all. Sinners (I know) they were all: they confess as much themselves: But, for transgressing the express Commandment of God, in not obeying God's immediate call; therein, none of the rest to be tainted: He only was Propheta fugitivus, fled touch, was in the transgression; sent to Ninive, and went to Joppa; sent East, and went flat West: and was even taken with the manner (as we say) and arrested in the very flight. For an evil and an adulterous generation, this was a good sign (say I:) and so might they, if they knew their own good. For them, and for us, and (in a word) for all sinners; for he is Propheta peccator, and so Propheta peccatorum. And Christ is pleased to pick out his fugitive Prophet, his runaway, and make him (a Sinner, and such a sinner) his sign. As to come himself in the similitude of sinful flesh; so, to make sinful flesh his similitude, to come into a sign with. All, that sinful flesh might have hope in the Signatum, in him, of whom this was the sign. This, theirs, and ours.

Rom. 8. 3.

For us, Propheta gentium.

The next is ours, and we highly to bless God for it: that being to set his sign in a Prophet, he would do it in him; choose him out, to make him his pattern, who was Propheta Gentium, the Prophet of the Gentiles, sent to prophesy to Ninive, that were Heathen, as we and our fathers were. And in that a Non nisi too: For, none but he was so; never a Prophet of them all, sent to the Heathen: the rest, to the Jews, all. This sending of his, to the Gentiles, was, to us of the Gentiles, a gate of hope, that in former ages, and long before Christ came in the flesh, we Gentiles were not forgotten. Even then sent God a Prophet to Ninive. And what was Ninive? the head City of the Assyrians, the greatest Monarchy then in being, and so the principal place of all Paganism. That thus, in sign, we were not forgotten, a sign it was, no more should we be in signati; but Christ be to us, as Jonas to them, a light to lighten the Gentiles; and his salvation to the uttermost parts of the earth.

Hol. 2. 4, 5.

Luk. 2. 32.
Esa. 49. 6.

Primus Propheta.

Let us add this yet more, to our comfort. This Jonas, whom he thus sent on this errand to the Gentiles, what was he? Of all the Prophets, all, whose prophecies we have remaining on record in the Bible; the four great, the twelve less, of them all, all the sixteen, he was the first in time, Senior to them all. Plain by 2 Kings 14. that he prophesied long before any of them. For, it is there said, that his prophesy came to pass, in the dayes of Jeroboam the Second, who lived the same time with Uzzia in Juda. And, in Uzzia's time, the eldest of all the rest, did but begin to prophesy. So, his was done, before theirs was begun. Him, that was thus first in the ranck of them all did God send to us Gentiles; to us first, before any, to the Jews. A sign, we were not last; nay first in his care: in that, visited by him first, as to whom he sent the first of all the sixteen. And, I may say to you, this was to them an Item, as if God were now to turn Gentile, as looking that way, having a mind to them then, even in Jonas time; they to come in shortly, and the Jews to be shut out: and that, as they had then priority in sign, so should they no less, in signato, and the fulness of the Gentiles came in before the conversion of the Jews. This to us sinners, to us sinners of the Gentiles, was salutare signum, a healthful sign every way.

Rom. 11. 15.

These three are put, on the by. In the main point of the Text, and of the time, two more.

1.
Jonas Signum
Non nisi
As Piacularis
hostia.

He, and non nisi, none but he, had the honour to be a piacularis hostia (as it were) for, the casting him into the sea, served (in a sort) as a kind of expiatory sacrifice, as far, as to the temporal saving of the ship he sailed in. And therein, as a meet sign, he expressed Him, whose death was (after) the full and perfect expiation of the sins of the whole world.

2.
redivivus.

Then again Jonas, and non nisi, only he was propheta redivivus; that, his peculiar, above them all. He the only Prophet, that went down into the deep, into the whales belly, and came forth again alive. Dead he was not, but (lege viventium) after the law of the living, one thrown overboard, into the Sea in a tempest, to all intents, may be given for dead; and so (I dare say) all the mariners in the ship gave Jonas. That he came out again alive, it was by special grace, not by course of nature. For from the whales belly he came (for all the world) as if one should have come out of his grave; risen again.

1 Reg. 17. 23.

Among the Jews, it goes for currant, the Rabbins take it up one after another, that this Jonas was the Widow of Sareptas son, the child, whom Elias raised from death to life (1 Reg. 17.) If so: then well might he be a sign; A sign, dead in his cradle, once: as good as dead in the whales belly, now again:

In both, resembling him, whose sign he was; if both be true. But, one is most certain; and, to that, we hold us. And this is (indeed) the main scint, the scint of the Text, and of the Day.

One more, and I have done; and that is, of the time: precise three dayes and three nights; For, in this a Non nisi. For, none but he, so: just three, neither more nor less. For, I ask, why not the sign of Joseph, or of Daniel? ^a Joseph was in the dungeon, among condemned persons to dye; ^b Daniel in the Lions den, as deadly a place, as the Whales belly: yet neither of them, made the sign of Christ. Why? ^a Joseph was in the dungeon too long: Daniel, too short, but a night; not long enough, to represent Christ being in his grave. Only Jonas time, just. And the time is it here. Else might the others have been his sign well enough, for the matter, if that had been all.

But, the time is still stood on, and the dayes numbered: that His Disciples, that all might know, how long, he would be from them, and not a day longer. And this, not without good cause. This day, was but the third day: and, this day, they were at sperabamus, did hope; did, but (now) do not; their hope was fallen into a tertian: that, it was time, he were up again. This Sign set, that they might know for a surety, by this day at the farthest, they should hear of Him again. Luk. 24. 21.

Of which three. To verifie his being there three dayes, it is enough, if he were there but a part of every one of them: for, it is not three whole dayes. As, in common phrase of speech, we say, the Sun shone, or it rained three dayes past, though it did not so, all day long, but some part only of each. And if it rained at all, in every of them, we say true: It is enough. And so here, the first day of the three, Jonas was in the ship, and Christ on the Cross, till friday, somewhat before the Sun-set. All the second day, Jonas was in the Whale, Christ in his Sepulcher. The third day Jonas came out of the Whale, and Christ out of his grave, as it might be about the Sun-rising; for, this day, both Suns rose together.

To verifie the three nights: that do we, reckoning as did the Jews (and that, by warrant out of the Gen. 1) the evening and the morning but for one, so, drawing still the precedent night, and computing it with the succeeding day. So do they still: the night past, with the day following, as (in Genesis) they are taught; and we doing so, it will fall out right. Gen. 1. 5, 8, &c.

To the Scint then, of these three dayes. There is in each of them, set down a several state of Jonas; and so of Christ. 1. Their going thither: 2. Their being there: 3. And their coming thence. The Scint of these three dayes.

Thus fell it the first day: Jonas was at sea, in a ship: A great tempest came; so great, as the ship was upon casting away. 1. In their going thither.

Of tempests, some are of course, have their causes in nature; and, in them, art and strength will do good. With Jonas (here) it did not prevail a whit. Thereby, they knew it to be one out of course, of Gods immediate sending. Good-friday. Joh. 1. 4, 5.

God sends not such tempests, but bees angry. He is not angry, but with sin. Some great Sinner then, there is in the ship, and if the ship were well rid of him, all would be calm again.

To Jonas they went: Jonas was found to be the party.

Being found, rather then all should be cast away, he bid frankly, Tolite me & projicite, Take me, cast me into the sea. Jon. 1. 12.

Cast in he was; and the storm ceased straight, and the ship came safe home. And the evening and the morning were the first day.

Will ye see now, what was acted in Jonas, actually fulfilled in Christ? But (first) will ye note, what is (in the Old Testament) written of Jonas, is not only historia vera, but Sacramentum magnum; not a bare Story only, but besides the story, pregnant also with a great Mystery. Not only, a deed done, but further, a sign of a deed to be done, of a far higher nature; dico autem in Christo, I speak it as of Christ and his Resurrection: Of that history, this the mystery, this, the Sacramentum magnum. Eph. 5. 32.

Will ye note again; it is on Christi side with advantage. Sicut Jonas (saith this verse) but roce plus quam Jonas (saith the next); and both may stand; There may be a scint, where yet there may be a plus quam; all like in quality, where an exceeding in degree, though. Indeed, scint makes not a non nisi; plus quam doth; and we then, so to remember the scint in this, as we forget not the plus quam, in that. No more will we. Ver. 41.

And now, weigh them over well, and whithersoever ye look, ye shall find a plus quam. Plus, in the ship, in the tempest, in the cause, in the danger, in the casting in, in the coming out again: In every one, a plus quam. All that was, in Jonas, in Christ more conspicuous, and after a more excellent manner; in scint, then in signo. That so, in this, as in all else, Christ may have the prebeminence. Col. 1. 18.

To begin then. It is no new thing to resemble the Church, the Common-wealth, yea the world, to a ship. A ship there was, not a small bark of Ioppa, but plus quam, a Great Ark, or Argosy, wherein was imbarqued all mankind, having their course through the Main Ocean of the world, bound for the Port of Eternal bliss. And, in this great Carriack, among the sons of men, the Son of Man (as he terms himself) became also a passenger, even as did Jonas, in his small bottom of Ioppa.

Then rose there a tempest. A tempest it self, and the cause of all tempests (the heavy wrath of God, ready to seize upon sinners) which made such a foul sea, as this great ship, and all in it were upon the point to be cast away. The plus (here) is plain: take it, but as it was indeed literally. For what a tempest was there at Christi death! It shook the Temple, rent the veil, cleft the stones, opened the graves, put out the Sun's light, was seen and felt all the world over; as if heaven and earth would have gone together. But, the miserable storm, then, who shall declare? Cha. 27. 51, 52.

And, no marvel: there was a great plus in the cause. For, if the sin of one poor passenger (of Jonas) made such a foul sea: the sins of the great Hulk, that bore in it all mankind together in one bottom, what manner tempest (think you) were they like to raise? In what hazard, the vessel, that laden with them all? But one fugitive, there: here, all run-aways, from God, Maisters, Marriners, Passengers and all.

Now,

Now, the greater the Vessel, the more over the danger. With Jonas but a handful like to miscarry: In this, the whole mass of Mankind like to perish. So, in the peril, Plus too.

The storm will not be stayed neither, till some be cast into the sea: and some great sinners it would be: And here the scelus seems, as if it would not hold: here, the only Non sicut Jonas. For Jonas there, was the only finner; all besides, in the ship, innocent poor men. Here, Christ only, in the ship, Innocent, no finner; all the ship besides, full fraught with sinners: Mariners, and Passengers, grievous sinners, all. Here it seems to halt.

1 Cor. 5. 22.
1 Roy. 53. 6.

And yet, I cannot tell you neither, for all that. For, in some sense, Christ was not unlike Jonas; no, not in this point: but, like Jonas, as in all other respects, so, in this too. Not, as considered in Himself; for so, he knew no sin: But, Him that knew no sin, for us made he sin: How? By laying on Him, the iniquities of us all, even of all the sons of men, upon his Son of Man. And, so considered, he is not only Sicut, but plus quam Jonas here. More sin on him, than on Jonas: for, on him, the sins of the whole ship, yea Jonas's sin and all.

Luk. 23. 41.
Psal. 69. 4.
1 Pet. 3. 18.

For all that, here is another plus, though. For what Jonas suffered, it was for his own sin, and merito he passum might he say (and we both) with the Thief on the Cross. But Christ, what had he done? It was not for his own, it was for other mens sins, he suffered, He paid the things he never took. So much the more likely was he, to satisfy; the just, for the unjust; the Lord, for the servant: Much more, then if one sinner or servant should do it for another.

John 1. 12.
Joh. 18. 8.

Chap. 8. 26.
Mat. 3. 15.
Esa. 53. 7.

Yet was Christ, as was Jonas, content to be thrown in. Tollite me (said Jonas;) Sinite hos abire, (said Christ) let these go. Take me, my life shall answer for theirs; as it did. As content (said I?) Nay, plus, more. For, with Jonas, there was no other way, to stay the storm, but overboard with him. But, Christ had other ways; could have stayed it with his word, with his Obmutesce, as he did (the VII. Chapter, before) needed not to have been cast in: Yet, to fulfil all righteousness, condescended to it (though; and in he was thrown, not of necessity (as Jonas) but, quia voluit: and Voluit, quia nos salvos voluit; would have us safe, and his Fathers Justice safe, both.

Now to the effect. Therewith the storm stayed, Gods wrath was appeased, mankind saved: Here, the plus is evident. That of Jonas was but Salus phaseli, no more: This was Salus mundi, no less. A poor boat, with the whole World, what comparison? And the evening and the morning were Good-friday; Christ's first day.

1. In their bethcre.
Easter Eve.

To Jonas, now, secundo: He was drowned by the means. Nay, not so: God (before, angry) was then pacified: Pacified, not only with the ship, but pacified with Jonas too; provided a Whale, in shew, to devour him; indeed not to devour, but to preserve him; down he went into her belly.

There he was, but took no hurt there. 1. As safe, nay, more safe there, than in the best ship of Tharsis; no flaw of weather, no foul sea could trouble him there. 2. As safe, and as safely carried to land: The ship could have done no more. So that upon the matter, he did but change his vehiculum; shifted but from one vessel to another; went on his way still. 3. On he went, as well, nay better than the ship would have carried him; went into the ship, the ship carried him wrong, out of his way clean, to Tharsis ward: Went into the Whale, and the Whale carried him right, landed him on the next shore to Ninive; whither (in truth) he was bound, and where his errand lay. 4. And all the while, at good ease, as in a cell or studie; For, there, he indited a Psalms, expressing in it, his certain hope of getting forth again. So as, in effect, where he seemed to be in most danger, he was in greatest safety. Thus can God work, And the evening and the morning, were Jonas's second day.

Jonas 2. 2, 6.

The like now, in Christ: but still with a plus quam. Do but compare the Whales belly, with the heart of the earth, and you shall find, the Whale that swallowed Christ (that is, the grave) was another manner Whale, far wider throated than that of Jonas. That Whale caught but one Prophet, but Jonas; This, hath swounded up Patriarchs, and Prophets, and all; yea, and Jonas himself too. None hath escaped the jaws of it.

And, more hard getting out (I am sure; witness Jonas. Into the Whales belly he went, and thence he gate out again. After, he gate thence, into the heart of the earth he went, and thence he gate not: there he is still.

The Signifies, in this, by the letter of the Text. And, in Christ, the sign greater. For, though to see a Whale tumble with a Prophet in the belly, were a strange sight: yet, more strange, to see the Son of God, lie dead in the earth: and, as strange again, to see the Son of man, to rise from the grave again, alone. A double sign in it.

Col. 2. 15;

Psal. 16. 10.

The heart of the earth (with Iustin Martyr, Chrysostome, Augustine) I take for the grave: though (I know) Origen, Nyssen, Theodores take it for hell, for the place, where the Spirits are (as, in the body, that is the place of them.) And, thither he went in Spirit, and triumphed over the powers and principalities there, in his own person. But for his body, it was the day of rest, the last Sabbath that ever was: and then his body did rest, rest in hope, hope of what? That neither his soul should be left in hell, nor his flesh suffer in see corruption. For Christ had his Psalms too, as well as Jonas. David composed it for him long before (the XVI. Psalm, the Psalms of the Resurrection.) And so the evening and the morning were Christ's second day, Easter eve.

Easter day.
Jonas 2. 10. 33.

Now to Jonas's ultimo. Jonas his hope failed him not; the Whales belly, that seemed his tomb, proved his womb, or second birth-place. There he was: not, as meat in the stomach; but, as an Embryo, in the matrix of his mother. Strange! the Whale to be as his mother, to be delivered of him; and bring him forth into the world again. So, forth he came, and to Ninive about his business. Thither he went, to bring them out of the Whales belly too. And the evening and the morning were Jonas's third day.

Now the Whale could not hold Jonas, no more could the grave Christ, longer than this morning, after day

breake of day : But, forth came He too. And with a plus quàm, in respect of Ionas. It was in strict speech, with Ionas, no resurrection : For the truth is, he was never dead : never he, but passive. But, Christ, was John 19. 34.
dead, stark dead, indeed slaine out-right upon the Crosse, His heart pierced, His heart blood ranne out. Math. 27. 66.
 And, for dead taken downe, laid in, sealed up in His grave, a stone rolled on Him, a watch set over Him. Made sure (I trow) and rose for all that.

Another, Ionas rising, the Whale gaped wide, and strained hard, and up came Ionas. It was long of the Whale, not of him, or any power of his. But, Christ, by His own power, broke the barres of death, and Acts 2. 24.
 loosed the sorrowes of hell, of which it is impossible He should be holden.

A third, Ionas rose but to the same state, he was in before; but mortall Ionas still : When hee escaped, he drew his chaine after him, and by the end of it was plucked backe againe afterward. But, Christ left them, and sinners clothes and all, in the grave behinde Him; rose to a better, to ultra non morietur, never Rom. 6. 9.
 to die more, He.

And (in a word) the great plus quàm. Ionas was but ejectus in aridem : But, Christ was receptus in gloriam. And, in signe of it, the place whereon Ionas was cast, was drie land, or cliffes, where nothing grows. The place, wherein Christ rose, was a well-watered garden, wherein, the ground was in all her glory, fresh and greene, and full of flowers, at the instant of His rising, this time of the year. So, as He went lower, so Hee rose higher, then ever did Ionas, with a great Ecce plus quàm.

And yet, behold a greater than all these. For, Ionas, when he came forth, came forth, and there was all; left the Whale, as he found it. But, Ecce plus quàm Ionas hic, plus quàm indeed. Christ slew the Whale Venit 42.
 that devoured Him, in the coming forth; was mors mortis : He left not the grave, as He found it, but altered the property, nay changed the very nature of it, by His rising.

Three changes Hee made in it, very plainly : 1. Of a pit of perdition, which it was before, He hath made it now an habour of rest, Rest in hope. Hope of a new; not the same it was before, but a better, farre, with a great Plus quàm.

2. Made it againe (as the Whale, to Ionas, was) a convoy, or passing boat, to a better Port, than any is in our Tharsh here; even, to the haven of happiness, and heaven's blisse without end. This for the saule. Acts 2. 26.

3. And, for the body, made the grave, as a wombe for a second birth, to travell with us anew, and bring us forth to life everlasting; Made our terra venteris, the heart of the earth, to us as the belly of the Whale was to Ionas, which did not still retaine him. That, did not him, nor this shall not us; shall not hold us still, no more than the Whale did him, or the grave did Christ. There shall be a coming forth out of both. And, when God shall speake to the earth (as to the Whale, He did) the Sea and Grave both shall Apoc. 20. 13.
 yield up their dead, and deliver them up alive againe.

The very terme [of the heart of the earth] was well chosen. There is heart in it. For, if the earth have an heart, there is life in it; for, the heart is the fountain of life, and the seat of the vitall spirits, that hold us in it. So, there is (wee see:) for, the earth, dead for a time (all the Winter) now, when the waters of heaven fall on it, shewes, it hath life, bringing forth herbes and flowers againe. And, even so, when the waters above the heavens, and namely the dew of this day diffilling from Christ's rising, shall in like sort drop upon it, it shall be (saith Esaie, Chap. XXVI.) as the dew of the herbes, and the earth shall give Esaie 26. 19.
 forth her dead. Dead men as it doth dead plants now fresh and green againe, in the spring of the year. And so, the evening and the morning were Christ's third day, this day, Easter-day morning.

Thus many vvayes doth this sicut hold, and hold vvith a plus quàm. Were it not great pitie now, that Christ, vvhich is so many vvayes plus quàm Ionas, for all this should come to be minus quàm Ionas, in this last, the chiefe of all? For, this is the chief. Ionas, after he came out of the Whale, brought to passe that famous repentance, the repentance of Ninive : At Iona's preaching, they repented at Ninive; at Christ's Jonas 3. 5.
 they did not, in Ierusalem.

We shall mend this, if vve be as the Ninivites; repent as they. As they? Abste a se (saith Saint Augustine; but adds then) sed uinam vel se. As they? God forbid vve should be but as they : As Christ was more then Ionas, so Christians should be more then Ninivites. Well, in the mean time, I vvould vve were, but as they; but so farre on vvard, never plead for a plus, but be content vvith Sicut, and never seeke more : But, that, vve must : For, lesse (sure) vve cannot be, Christ to be plus quàm Ionas, vve to be minus quàm Ninivite, it vvill not fit, it holds no proportion. What this sicut portends. Psal. 86. 16.

The Sicut (ye see) and the plus quàm, both. Now, vvhat is the profit of this signe of the Prophet? This signe being of Christ's giving, Christ gives no signe, but it is signum in bonum, a signe for good, a good signe; and a good signe is a signe of some good. Of vvhat good is this a signe? Of hope of coming forth (sure.) Coming forth, vvhen? From a Whale. What is meant by the Whale? (the deliverance) (most vvhat) is, as the Whale is. And three Whales vve finde here: 1. Iona's Whale: 2. Christ's Whale: 3. and a third : And, hope vve have, to come forth of all three.

First, Jona's Whale; death it vvias not, it vvias but danger; but danger as near death as could be; never man, in more danger to scape it, than he; if not in death, in Zalmavelth, in the vale of the shadow of death, it vvias. Psal. 23. 4.

Of any, that hath been in extreme perill, vve use to say; he hath been vvhere Jonas vvias; By Jona's going downn the Whales throat, by Him againe coming forth of the Whales mowth, vve expresse, vve even point out the greatest extremity, and the greatest deliverance that can be. From any such danger, a deliverance is a kinde of resurrection, as the Apistle plainly speakes of Isaac, vvhen the knife vvias at his throat, he vvias received from the dead ὡς ἐκ νεκρῶν though yet he died not. This for the feast of the Resurrection. Heb. 11. 19.

And thus, was, Jonas a signe to them of Ninive. As he escaped, so they: he his Whale, they theirs (destruction:) which even gaped for them, as wide as Jonas's Whale. And, as to them a signe, this; so, to us. And, this use we have of it: When at any time, we are hard bestead, this signe then to be set up for a token. And there is no danger so deadly, but we may hold fast our hope, if we set this signe before us, and say, What, we are not (yet) in the Whales belly; why, if wee were there, from thence can God bring us though, as Jonas He did.

Jonas's Whale was but the shadow of death: Christ's was death. And, even there, in death, to be set up. And, we, no not in death itself; to despaire, but (with Iob) to say, yea, though He kill me, yet will I trust in Him. My breath, I may; my hope, I will not forgoe: expirare possum, desperare non possum. Here now is out second hope, to come forth, to be delivered; from Christ's Whales from death itself.

Iob 13. 15. But, if the Whale be, or betoken the death of the body; it doth much more, the death of the soul. So shall we finde another Whale, yet, a third. And that Whale is the red Dragon, that great spirituall Leviathan, Satan. And sinne, the very jawes of this Whale, that swoupeth down the soul first, and then the bodie, and in the end both. Jonas had been deep down this Whales throat, before ever he came in the others: The Land-Whale had devoured him, before ever the Sea-Whale medled with him. In his flight, he fell into this Land-Whales jawes; before ever the Sea-Whale swallowed him up. And, when he had got out of the gorge of this ghostly Leviathan, the other bodily Whale could not long hold him. And from this third Whale was Jonas sent, to deliver the Ninivites: which when he had, the other (of their temporal destruction) could doe them no hurt. Their repentance rid them of both Whales, bodily and ghostly, at once.
